Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, NOV. 7.—2 CHRON. XXI.

"WHATSOEVER a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—This is true even when the sower is as great a man as good King Jehoshaphat. Through his alliances with the evil house of Ahab, he had sown the wind: his descendants and people, for three generations to come, reap the whirlwind. Such is the great lesson of this and the following chapters His son, Jehoram, had married Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab. It is very probable that this marriage was the direct and natural outcome of that intercourse between the courts of Jerusalem and Samaria which we read of in 2 Chron. xviii., and which cost Jehoshaphat so dear. It is still more probable that it was contracted with his consent. We feel free, therefore, to believe that Jehoshaphat was responsible for it. It was a marriage that could have been defended as well, perhaps, as any of its kind. Who knows what Jehoram, with the advantage he has of such a godly upbringing, may do for Athaliah, when she is removed from Samaria and its almost heathenish atmosphere, to the court of godly Jehoshaphat? Further, if this marriage should strengthen the friendship between Israel and Judah, what good it will do! It may—who knows?—it may even bring about the re-union of the two kingdoms! No doubt men argued much in this style then, as they have done ever since. But what does history say? Jehoram's reign began with most horrible crime,—the coldly-plotted, ruthless murder of all his brothers, and of many nobles besides (ver. 4). It continued as it began, "he walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab," &c. (ver. 6). Worse still, he corrupted the whole nation of Judah,—and who can measure the magnitude of that evil?—see ver. 11. Through his sin, the kingdom was weakened (ver. 10), the land spoiled (vs. 16, 17), he was smitten with a horrible, lingering, and deadly disease (vs. 18, 19), and, finally, he died "without being desired" (ver. 20), and burial in the royal sepulchre was denied him. The secret of all is given in ver. 6: "For he had the daughter of Ahab to wife."

MONDAY, NOV. 8.—2 CHRON. XXII.

2.—Forty and two years, &c.—"This number is impossible, since Azariah's father was but forty when he died. We must read twenty-two for forty-two."

7.—The destruction of Azariah was of God.—"Divine Providence brought it about that his visit to Jehoram should fall exactly at the time of Jehu's revolt."

8.—The princes of Judah, &c.—"The nephews of Azariah, and grand-nephews of Azariah, on their way to Jezreel, to visit their cousins, the young princes of the house of Israel."

9.—So the house of Azariah had no power, &c.—"Rather, 'And there was no one of the house of Azariah that had strength to take the kingdom.' He had no grown-up sons."—Sp. Com.

The tale of retribution continues throughout this chapter. All the sons of Jehoram, one being excepted, are slain (ver. 1) by a wild and lawless band who accompanied the Arabian and Philistine invaders (xxi. 16). That single survivor reigns but for one year. He is a mere puppet in the strong hands of his wicked mother. "He walked in the ways of of the house of Ahab: for his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly. Wherefore he did evil" &c. (ver. 3, 4). Nor was Athaliah the only one who misled him. Others of the house of Ahab were his counsellors (ver. 4). They induced him to join his uncle Jehoram, of Israel, in war against Syria. The latter is smitten in battle, retires to Jezreel, and Ahaziah with him. By this means Ahaziah is thrown in the way of Jehu, the avenger, and perishes. Forty-two others of the house of Judah—the young princes and their escort—fell likewise.

But the results of that marriage are not yet exhausted. They flow on to another generation. Athaliah, seizing the supreme power, murders, as she thinks, the entire seed royal, and for six weary years the land is polluted and debased by this wicked woman. Let those who are tempted with strong temptations to worldly alliances, ponder well this fearful story. In marriage, above all things, we should be scrupulously careful to secure that "blessing which maketh rich, and addeth no sorrow thereto."

TUESDAY, NOV. 9.—2 CHRON. XXIII.

Here is an instructive lesson in Divine Providence. Athaliah, strong, able, and unscrupulous, appears to be firmly seated on her throne. There are no heirs, as she thinks, to claim the power she has usurped. Six years of quiet seem to have established her power, when, lo, in one short half-hour, all is changed. A child claimant, supposed to have been long dead, starts suddenly into view, and soon her dishonoured corpse tells that God reigns supreme. Thus He asserts Himself, judging the wicked even in this life, and preserving intact the royal line of David, according to his promise: "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Yet he passed, and lo, he was not: yea, I sought for him, but he could not be found."

3.—All the congregation made a covenant.—"We must understand by 'all the congregation' the select body of Levites and other trusty persons, collected from the various cities by the captains. (2) Jehoiada, it seems, brought these persous into the Temple, the captains also being present (2 Kings xi. 4), and, producing Josiah before them, bound them by an oath to support his cause. This was the second step in the revolution."—Sp. Com.

11.—Speaking of the Jewish coronation ceremony, Kitto says: "After the king had been anointed, the officiating priest, or prophet, gave the king what the Jews called the kiss of majesty or greatness, but what we should call the kiss of homage. This was upon the forehead, or between the eyes. It is recorded that Samuel so kissed Saul; and although the act is not afterwards historically mentioned, it was probably retained, as there is a distinct allusion to it in Psalm ii. 12, 'Kiss the Son lest He be angry.' The crown was then placed upon the king's head."

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 10.—2 CHRON. XXIV.

Joash: his goodness and declension.—"He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all the days of Jehoiada, the priest (2)." This was during a period of twenty-three years at the least (see 2 Kings xii. 6)—more probably of twenty-five or thirty years. After Jehoiada's death he yielded himself weakly to the influence of the nobles (17), and so countenanced idolatry which brought wrath upon his people. He murdered the high priest himself, the son of Jehoiada, who had been more than a father to him,—murdered him within the sacred Temple Court, and at the very time when he was speaking in God's name as his prophet. His sins brought down the scourge of a Syrian invasion (23, 23) and led both to his assassination, and to a dishonoured burial (25); for to be refused interment in the royal sepulchre was equivalent to a severe public judgment upon the king whose remains were so treated.

This history warns us against trusting to merely moral influences in matters of religion. Joash seems to have leaned more on Jehoiada than on God. He had no root in himself. Life's trials test us all. Woe to him whose religion is the product only of strong compulsion from without, and not of a vital impulse from within. Compare Isa. xxix. 13; John iii. 3—5; and 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. It warns us, too, against the "hothouse system" of education. For twenty-five or thirty years Joash had lived a protected life, sheltered by the strong personality of Jehoiada. Would it not have been far better for him in the end if he had been less sheltered, if he had been more gradually introduced to the great stress of trial?

May we not justly connect the outbreak of idolatry at the close of Joash's reign with its establishment in Judah previous to that reign? These nobles had, no doubt, been reared under its influence. They had followed Jehoiada and Joash from political, not religious motives. The old leaven of evil remained in them secretly, until at last it broke forth to the awful ruin of the king, and the degradation of the people. Little did Jeohshaphat think, when he made alliance with Ahab, what stupendous mischief he was doing!

THURSDAY, NOV. 11.—2 CHRON. XXV.

4.—But slew not their children, &c.—"This intimates in a remarkable manner the previous prevalence of the contrary practice, and that Amaziah would have followed it, had not his attention been called to the prohibition in Deut. xxiv. 16. The custom of including the unoffending family in the doom of their parents was formerly prevalent throughout the East. Mohammedanism has checked, if not suppressed it, in Western Asia, but in the pagan East frightful examples of it still occur."—Kitto.

5.—Three hundred thousand choice men.—"The numbers given in Scripture are only high with reference to modern European circumstances, in which warfare is a distinct profession, which can never as such be followed by proportions of the population as large as this. . . . The number seems to us small rather than large."—Idem.

10.—They returned home in great anger.—This was to be expected. To be hired, and then, after the war-march had begun, to be dismissed, was to suffer loss and great insult: loss of expected spoil and glory, and insult; for rejection at such a juncture, and at so great a cost, implied the greatest possible distrust. In revenge, the Israelites ravaged the Jewish frontier country from Samaria southwards to within fifteen miles of Jerusalem (13). It seems very strange that the Jews should have suffered in following the policy chosen for them by God. It should be remembered, however, (1) that Amaziah did wrong in engaging the Israelite mercenaries without first seeking God's counsel; (2) that a great triumph over Edom was granted to him; and (3) that his grievous pride, and lapse into idolatry (14, &c.) probably restrained God from bestowing upon him that full reward for obedience which was hinted at in the words, "The Lord is able to give thee much more than this." Amaziah fell between two stools. He served God, and then turned to serve idols. How could he reap the full blessing of the righteous! How like is he to many wavering professors of our times—people who in their better moments have dared, with more or less heartiness, to obey conscience at much risk or loss, but who have soon turned back to some form of sin. Their conscience spoils them for the world: their sin spoils them for the service of Christ. "Ye cannot serve two masters."

FRIDAY, NOV. 12.—2 CHRON. XXVI.

This chapter gives us the history of Uzziah in three parts. Part 1 (1—15) reveals him as pious, wise, and prosperous. He sought God, &c.: and as long as he sought the Lord, God made him to prosper.—This is the general summary of the verses that follow, that tell of his military successes (6, 7), of the tribute paid him, and of his growing power (8); how he fortified his capital, and how he encouraged industry by building towers of refuge, and cutting cisterns for his shepherds and their flocks that inhabited the Trans-Jordanic downs of Gilead to the east, the wilderness pastures to the south and south-east, and the maritime plain to the west of Judah (10). They tell, too, of his organising and equipping the military power of Judah (11—15). He is the picture of an energetic, wise, and able king. He was marvellously helped till he was strong.

Part 2 (16—18) pictures him in his pride—pride begotten of success. So great is his folly that any child might reprove him. Neither his wisdom nor his great experience avail to save him from the insanity of pride.

Part 3 (19—23) shows us Uzziah humiliated—alone in his royal lazar-house; alone, also, in his grave, which was near to the royal sepulchre, yet separate therefrom.

Lesson: (1) Pride may feed and grow even on the blessings of God. Uzziah sought God; God blessed him. Uzziah exalted himself upon that blessing of God. So great spiritual blessings, even when received in unthankfulness, may feed pride, and help to bring ruin to the life. (2) If wise, experienced Uzziah fell a victim to pride, we, too, are in danger. "Be not high-minded, but fear." (3) The awful nature of pride. Behold, so great a king, leprous, dethroned, imprisoned. Read Psalm lxxxviii., supposed by many to be Uzziah's lament. Pride is the sin of devils. Spiritual pride is probably our most dangerous foe. "There is pride of race, and pride of place, and pride of face: but the most devilish of them all is pride of grace."

SATURDAY, NOV. 13.—2 CHRON. XXVII.

2.—He did . . . right . . . according to all that his father Uzziah did.—"Uzziah's single act of impiety is not regarded as destroying the generally good character of his reign."—Sp. Com. Though God chastises his people for their follies, often very sorely, he makes much of what is good. He does not cast them off for ever. Howbeit he entered not, &c.—"While in other respects Jotham imitated his father, he did not follow him in his impiety."—Sp. Com. The people did yet corruptly.—"For the general character of the corruption of this date see Isa. i.—v."—Idem.

3.—Ophel (margin, the tower).—All commentators are now agreed that Ophel was the name given to the southern swelling of the Temple hill—the "long, narrowish, rounded spur or promentory which intervenes between the central valley of Jerusalem (the Tyropæon) and the Kidron, or valley of Jehoshaphat."—Groves. Keil calls it "the southern slope of the Temple hill."

4.—And in the forests he built castles and towns.—"The anxiety of Uzziah and Jotham to fortify their territory indicates a fear of external attack, probably from Samaria and Syria. The faithless trust put in fortifications was rebuked by the prophets of the time (Hos. viii. 14; Isa. ii. 15)."—Sp. Com.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

LETTER from WESTERN AUSTRALIA, and CASE PRONOUNCED INCURABLE in SOMERSET.

I have just received a letter from Mr. F. HANN, of WILLIAM-STREET, PERTH, W.A., in which he says:—"Your valuable medicine for Consumption was brought prominently before my notice in my visit to England. My brother, of Montacute, Som., had been given over as incurable by three medical men, and was discharged from the hospital as incurable. Your medicine was instrumental in prolonging his life."

[On referring to particulars of his case I find that the brother referred to was for nearly two years in correspondence with me on and off, and got thoroughly well; since which time he has recommended many to adopt my treatment. I heard in August that he continues in good health, and he says: "I shall ever be grateful to you for the benefit I then received."]

The writer goes on to say:—"So valuable a medicine should be widely made known here, where there are numbers suffering from Consumption. I am very anxious to introduce it at Perth, for their good, and especially for the benefit of friends."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

The Christian:

A WEEKLY RECORD OF CHRISTIAN LIFE, CHRISTIAN TESTIMONY, AND CHRISTIAN WORK.

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED "THE REVIVAL."

No. 876.] LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1886. REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. [ONE PENNY, POST FREE, 1½d.

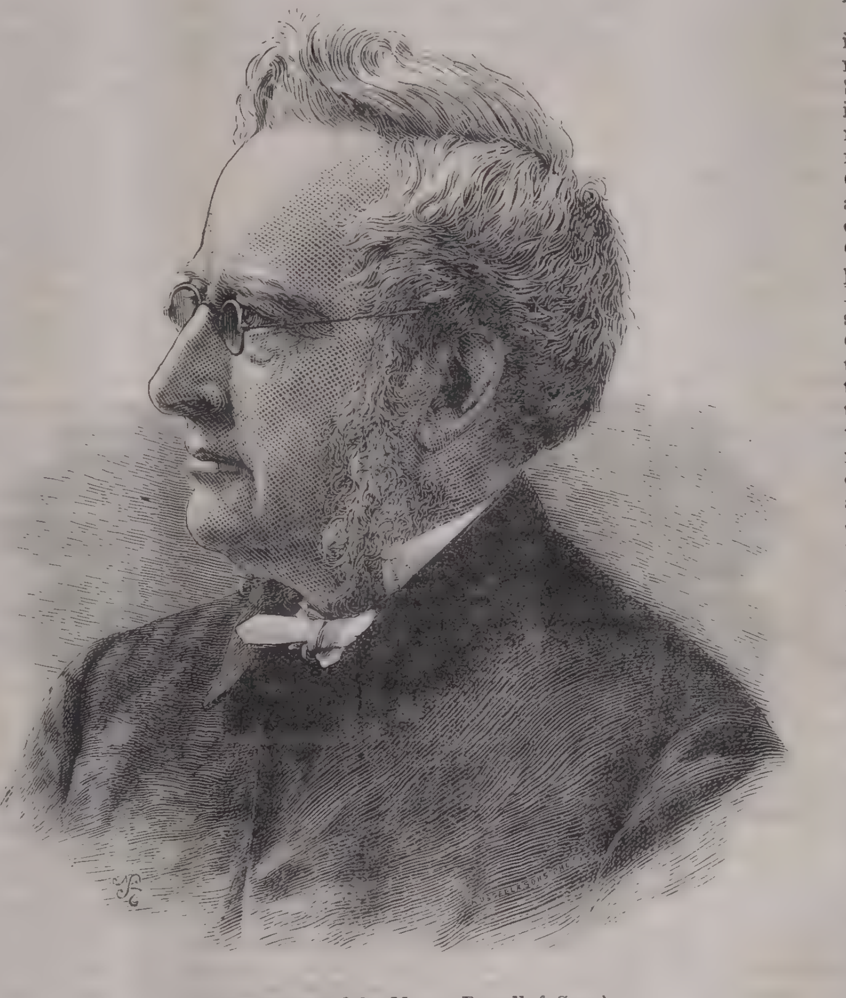
THE LATE REV. CLARMONT SKRINE.

ON the morning of Monday, Oct. 4, 1886, the much esteemed pastor of Emmanuel hurch, Wimbledon, had a very sudden ransition from the Church of Christ on arth to the Church of the redeemed and lorified. Mr. SKRINE was the youngest son f Mr. Henry Skrine, of Varleigh Manor Estate, ear Bath, where he was orn in 1820.

He entered Christ-hurch, Oxford, in Janury, 1838; but before ompleting his Univerity course he was offered n ensignship in the 78th Highlanders. This reginent he joined in Edinurgh, and accompanied t to Ireland. In 1842 e embarked for India. Vhilst in Poonah he was ttacked by cholera, and n the following year by Scinde fever, when servng under Sir Charles Napier. This so affected is health that he was bliged to leave India. n exchange into the 7th Foot was arranged, which regiment Mr. Skrine joined at Portsnouth, and with it served n Ireland during the errible famine years, 847-8. In 1849 he reired from the Army with he rank of Captain.

Previous to this he had een converted to God, nd had for some time ctively engaged in Sunlay-school and other Christian work. After eaving the Army, Mr. Skrine remained for a ew years as a lay worker; but, receiving what he considered a listinct call to the Chrisian ministry, he entered King's College, London, s a theological student. Having passed he necessary examination, he was ordained n 1855 by Archbishop Sumner.

Mr. Skrine commenced his ministerial work at Linton, in Kent, of which parish e had the entire charge, the vicar being then on his deathbed. From Linton he went to Trent, Barnet, having accepted the incumbency of Christ-church. Nine years later he removed to Southborough, where he laboured for a year in connection with the late Rev. S. Langston. In 1866, Mr. Skrine came to London to take charge of St. Peter's, Charlotte-street, Pimlico, and here he officiated until 1873, when he was invited to Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon, as successor to Rev. F. Whitfield.



(From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons.)

It was at Wimbledon, during the past thirteen years of his life, that Mr. Skrine especially found a field of ever widening and increasing ministerial work. It is there that he lives in the hearts and memories, not only of his own congregation, but of all who enjoyed intercourse with him, and where his work is seen in the lives of men, women, and children, who as living stones in the spiritual temple show the fruit of his faithful ministry.

While a staunch member of the Episcopal Church, Mr. Skrine was at the same time most catholic in his sympathies. He was never governed by a narrow sectarianism, but his aid was freely given to all, if the object was for the glory of God. Rev. R. Bird, preaching in Mr. Skrine's pulpit on the Sunday evening after his death, said: "What cared he for denominations or sects? Any true disciple of Christ could depend on his hand and heart for help."

In addition to preaching three extempore sermons every week, Mr. Skrine was often engaged in prayer-meetings, Bible readings, temperance meetings, and open-air Gospel addresses. He also occasionally visited other places to speak at Conferences, and take part in similar meetings. He was well known as a speaker at the Mildmay Conferences, which he attended from their foundation, having been an intimate personal friend of the late Rev. W. Pennefather. He had been a deep student of prophecy, and it was joy to him to confer with others, or to expound the deeper teachings of the prophets and the Apocalypse. Our Lord's Second Coming was a subject much in his thoughts, and he lived in constant waiting for His return.

As a total abstainer of over twenty years' standing, Mr. Skrine's warmest sympathies were with temperance work, and his influence in this direction was very widely felt. His life was faithfully devoted to the Lord's work, and through his instrumentality the Spirit of God has given life to many souls, and cheered and instructed them in their Christian course.

The personal character of Mr. Skrine was rare in its beauty. He so reflected his Lord and Master, that after communing with him one always went away cheered and strengthened, and it was impossible to be in his society without feeling the influence of a nature so delightful and full of grace. It may truly be said of him, "The memory of the just is blessed."

His last public ministration in his church was on Sunday, October 3, the day before his death. He preached twice, as usual, to very full congregations with great spiritual power and energy. In the afternoon he was in the Sunday-school, and gave a short opening address to the children, and also presided at the prayer-meeting held after the evening service in the Iron Room adjoining the church. All through this day an indescribable brightness and peacefulness distinguished his manner and appearance, though none about him then realised that the face of their loved pastor was already reflecting some rays of the glory in which he would so shortly stand. About seven o'clock on Monday morning, with one brief sigh, he expired. Truly, not even the shadow of death could for one moment have been experienced by this beloved servant of God, so painless and instantaneous was his decease. He died, as he had always wished to do, in harness, and his last day was one of earnest and most faithful labour for the flock he loved so well.

As a pastor, he was not only respected but genuinely loved by his people. How deeply he was loved by personal friends, and by his family, it is not easy to tell. His death was felt as keenly by many persons who worked with him as if they had lost a near relation; such was the influence of his personal character and his spiritual walk. Mr. Skrine leaves a widow and a large family of sons and daughters, some of whom are in India and Australia. The suddenness of his call has overwhelmed them with grief; for to lose such a husband and father, literally "in a moment," was a separation of which none had conceived the possibility. The source of their comfort is the knowledge that the absence of their dear one is his presence with the Lord, which for him is "very far better" (see R.V.)

Never was there a more real link of love between pastor and people than that which existed between Rev. Clarmont Skrine and the congregation of Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon. His humility, simplicity, sympathy, and reality, together with his plain and faithful teachings and exhortations, have left a mark upon the hearts of numbers of persons which the longest life will not obliterate from their memories, and the influence of which will be handed down to future generations.

Reference is made in a previous part of this sketch to Mr. Skrine's intimate acquaintance with the late Rev. W. Pennefather, of Mildmay. Some account of the origin and continuance of this friendship is given in the "Life and Letters of Rev. W. Pennefather," a short extract from which, in Mr. Skrine's own words, will help to convey an impression of his own character. Mr. Skrine, in there writing of Mr. Pennefather, said:—

> "I never met with one who so habitually led others to God in prayer. I never remember seeing him on any business, or in any engagement to which we went together, without being invited to join him in prayer. A remarkable occasion occurs to me. When we were on our way to a large meeting of the London clergy at Fulham Palace, at his suggestion we turned aside in the avenue, and between the trees we bent in earnest prayer for grace. This habit told much on my own poor ministry, and seems continually brought to my mind, to show me where my strength is, and what the Lord would have his servants do 'in everything.'"

It was Mr. Skrine's custom to be much occupied in prayer, both alone and with others, as opportunities offered: it was a setttled custom with him; and as he had profited by Mr. Pennefather's example, so large numbers have profited by his example in this respect.

"WE DON'T WANT SPECULATORS."

Much stir has lately been caused in some of the American churches through the promulgation of speculative views as to future probation, by one engaged in mission work. We cannot too highly commend the following wise counsels on this point from an editorial in the New York Independent:—

Millions and hundreds of millions are perishing for lack of religious knowledge. We are plainly commanded to teach them God's Word and will; to teach them the way of salvation; to teach them all about a better life here and hereafter; in a word, to teach the plainly revealed truths of the Bible. Let no time be wasted in speculations. Prompt and hearty missionary work of the good, well-tried, old-fashioned sort is now wanted. We want labourers in the field in all quarters, and we want them now. We don't want speculators, although they may be, in many respects, very wise and good men.

We want men to present the truths of God, which are so plain that a wayfaring man can understand them—men who will say very little about mint, anise, and cummin, and a great deal about the most weighty matters which should interest every human soul. No man, without the plainly revealed Word of God to back him, has any right to stop the wheels of religious work by thrusting his "views," "thoughts," and "speculations" into the pulpit at home or in the mission fields, or on any occasion, unless he can see plainly without a doubt that he has a Bible warrant for so doing.

If a live heathen wants to know what has become of his dead ancestors, let the prompt reply be: "I cannot say more than that 'the Judge of all the earth will do right,' and that 'there never can be, in this world or the next, any just cause for complaining of God's dealings with any human soul," and there stop. If a distressed Pagan mother wants to know what has become of her dead child, let the precious words of Christ be quoted, who said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." No man, preacher or layman, at home or abroad, can safely go further in either case. The unrevealed ways of God in the future world are past finding out. Let missionary boards ask the help of men to enter the open fields of the world in order to preach the Gospel to every creature, leaving all their speculations about the dead and future probation behind them. We want no new machinery. We want workmen as missionaries who are not ashamed or afraid to teach as Christ taught, and who will not insist on teaching some other way.

PENCE PLEASURES.

"If I were only rich, how much good would I do in the world." So spake I once; I have grown wiser now, and learned the value of "little things." God has not entrusted me with wealth, but He has given me an intense yearning over my fellow-creatures, and taught me the inestimable joy of ministering to others' comfort, if it be only by a penny gift.

Do I hear my rich reader laugh, and say, "Not much comfort to be purchased with a penny"? Wait, and let me show you only a few of the possible pleasures thus obtainable. You have ample leisure, maybe, though but a scanty purse; send a penny letter, full of tender, loving, sympathetic interest, to one of the many weary "wrestlers with the troubled sea" of life, and thus minister comfort. Send your copy of The Christian to cheer and enliven some distant fireside, and I will guarantee the pleasure you will give.

Do you live in a city? Remember that in many places "penny dinners" are provided for hungry little ones, so for this small coin the famishing mouth can be filled. Did you ever watch the countenance of a ragged urchin at the unexpected gift of a penny? Wondrous are the little books now published for one penny, deserving a wide circulation, if only to help to stem the tide of "penny dreadfuls;" and, oh! remember, that for one penny a neat copy of the New Testament may now be had.

But you will not need me to remind you further; a loving heart will speedily suggest the various little acts of kindness so cheaply purchased—the juicy orange to moisten the fevered lips, the bunch of violets to remind the long-tried invalid of Him who did not forget to adorn this earth with these beauteous messengers of his love. Read the "Life of Sarah Martin," and take a lesson from the wonders wrought by the poor young Norwich dressmaker, then go and do likewise. Remember, still further, the value of the kindly smile, the word of sympathy, without which the worthiest gift may become valueless, but with which the poorest among us may daily enrich others, for "a word fitly spoken, how good is it."

KASHMIR MEDICAL MISSION.

In the report of this work we have a graphic account of the terrible earthquake in May last year, by which 3000 persons perished. We are told, also, of the efforts made by the Medical Mission staff at Srinàgar on behalf of those who were ready to perish from this calamity. For a fortnight two members of the Mission were engaged in ministering such relief to the injured as they could give, in bringing others to the hospital on the river bank at Baramulla. In the following December, whilst on an itinerating mission, scores of those sufferers, then restored, were met with, who gratefully replied, when asked, "Is it well?" "Yes, sahib; God bless you!" "God be praised!" &c.

During the year there have been 641 in-patients, and 14,540 visits to the out-patient department have been registered; thus much has been done to bring the religion of life and love to the hearts of the people. The mission church and school attached to this branch of C.M.S. labours are doing good work; the people are willing to attend the one, and there is much hope with regard to the scholars in the other. The hope is expressed that "a girdle of medical missions might be planted round the enfeebled citadels of Islam," in the belief "that the gates which have been barred against reason will open at the voice of Christian philanthropy."

EARNEST WORK IN A BIG CITY.

At the present time earnest work is imperatively called for, in dealing with the vast multitudes of those "in city pent," who form what is known as the residuum of the population. It cannot be overlooked that we are face to face with a state of things, with regard to thousands rendered desperate by want, which, in the interests of the more fortunate portion of society, must be remedially dealt with, with firm yet gentle hand.

The "Bitter Cry" of twelve months since has become intensified in the interval. We have just had a further revelation of the wretchedness and wickedness and woe into which so many of our brethren are sunk, from the pen of one who has lodged for a night in "Lock's Fields," Southwark. The question that should shame us all into action has been asked, "Can such a sight be possible in the year of Our Lord 1886?" Again, we have Mr. Spurgeon joining with the Bishop of London, Cardinal Manning, and others, in insisting that the authorities must formulate some scheme for relieving the distress of thousands upon thousands of men, women, and children, whose array, gaunt and spectral, must strike terror into the hearts of the community at large, if it do no not awaken sorrow and pity, and call for the exercise of a true charity. "Earnest words must be spoken," and "earnest work" must be done, if that element which is a real and potent danger in all our big cities is to be transformed in some slight degree. Christianity must face the problem of how to deal with those of our large populations who are ever sinking lower and lower, first preyed upon, and then preying upon others, in the back slums of our civilised life.

We have before us a little book whose title we have put at the head of this notice. It is invaluable both as a record of "earnest work in a big city," and as an evidence of what may thereby be accomplished. The city, we should say, is Manchester, and the work is that which during the past fifty years has been done by the Manchester City Mission. It is most encouraging to know on the highest authority "that the tone of feeling amongst working men in Manchester respecting religion and religious teachers is wonderfully improved compared to what it was fifty years ago." This is a very important fact, and the causes of it are well shown in this little book.

The Mission has twelve departments of Christian effort, the first and not the least important being that of house-to-house visitation. To visit each home in Manchester once in two months, one hundred missionaries are required, about eighty being already employed. An urgent appeal is made for help to enable the committee to complete their organisation in this respect. Then there is the holding of short services during the breakfast and dinner hours in workshops and factories. One week's record of such gatherings numbers no fewer than 435, remarkable success being met with in this department.

Another department is that of rescue work, in which about 150 workers are engaged. In one year about 3000 have been spoken to, 2000 induced to attend the meetings, and 219 either returned to friends or sent to Homes or situations. There is official authority for the statement that the number of fallen women on the streets has been reduced by about one-half, that is by about 3000, as a consequence of these efforts.

Temperance work is now being pursued with more directness, energy, and system than ever, with the result that about 2000 pledges were taken during 1885, 797 drunkards reformed, and 392 "still standing true." Then comes the evangelistic work, in which about 500 missionaries and volunteer workers are engaged; the visitation of hospitals, workhouses, and lodging-houses; the holding of cottage meetings; the average number per week is sixty-eight, with an average attendance of about twenty-five. As to ragged school work: eleven of the thirty-five ragged schools established in Manchester are under the immediate direction of this Mission, with 200 teachers, about 3000 scholars, and 2600 members of bands of hope.

Altogether we have here a most complete account of Christian effort to bring to the poor and outcast the message of the Gospel and the knowledge of Jesus Christ—to give them that which alone is able to minister true comfort and peace. Such a record of earnest effort should be an incentive to Christians everywhere; we commend it to the attention of all with this object. The offices of the Mission (of which Mr. J. Wakefield MacGill is the secretary) are at 100, Corporation-street, Manchester.

SAD NEWS from the MISSION-FIELD.

The monthly prayer-meeting in connection with the London Missionary Society was held on November 1, at the Mission-house, Blomfield-street. Rev. J. Ossian Davies presided. He read Micah iv. 1—4. It might have been, he said, that the Hindus and Chinese should have been praying for us to-day. We have to thank God that Paul came in our direction instead of going to the East. Time was when the Christian Church was opposed to Missions, but she has become less Pagan. We are the trustees of the Gospel; we must not be monopolists. Our motto must be "to give light and save life." We need men ready to do or die for the Master. Let us pray for them. We must take a representative view of the Pagans. Their souls are as precious as any others, and they are dying in tens of thousands.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson said that he had some unfavourable news. He read extracts from a private letter from Port Moresby, New Guinea, giving a sad account of the lack of spiritual life in the Europeans there, and its blighting effect on the mission. The writer said God was ignored, and public worship sneered at. Mr. Thompson further mentioned that a Roman Catholic mission had been commenced in the centre of their district. He also read part of a letter from Rev. J. D. Hepburn, from Shoshong, South Africa, respecting the mission to the Batanana at Lake Ngami, where a promising church had been established. Mr. Hepburn writes that on visiting it he found an utter reversion to heathenism. The Matabele had made several raids on this tribe, and although they had been repulsed, the people had been much impoverished by the destruction of their property. They attributed this to Christianity, and they determined to resume their old heathen rites.

Special prayer was made on behalf of these missions, that God would bring good out of this evil.

WOMEN'S WORK.—A correspondent writes:—I never read about working girls who are underpaid, and so led into sin, without thinking there could be no better or more practically useful Christian work for ladies than to gather young girls who leave the Board-schools into training classes for service. Good servants are everywhere in demand, and the supply of young girls abundant; but their want of training and home life prevents their entering on service, and after a year's "liberty" in factories or such work, they become too wild for such a regular life. I believe many ladies would turn their attention to this if it were suggested to them.

SERVICE.

We are set free to serve. God said six times to Pharaoh, "Let my people go, that they may serve Me." We, too, are redeemed out of the spiritual Egypt to serve God—"Made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness" (Rom. vi. 18—22). "That we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve Him" (Luke i. 74).

I.—CHARACTERISTICS OF GOD'S SERVICE.

1.—Loving service. "I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love" (Hos. xi. 4). "I love my master . . . I will not go out free . . . he shall serve him for ever" (Ex. xxi. 5, 6).

2.—Whole-hearted service. "No man can serve two masters" (Matt. vi. 24). "Present your bodies a living sacrifice . . . your reasonable service" (Rom. xii. 1). "There shall not an hoof be left behind: for thereof must we take to serve the Lord our God; and we know not with what we must serve the Lord, until we come thither" (Exod. x. 26).

3.—All-including service. "Whatsoever ye do do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not nnto men . . . for ye serve the Lord Christ" (Col. iii. 23, 24) "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward" (Matt. x. 42). "Under the charge of the sons of Merari . . . the pillars . . their sockets, and their pins, and their cords" (Num. iii. 36, 37). (Such little things to look after, but it was God's work as much as any seemingly more important. His field of service is wider than our field of vision).

4.—Holy service. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord" (Isa. lii. 11). "The Levites were purified . . and after that went the Levites in to do their service" (Num. viii. 21, 22).

5.—Joyous service. "Serve the Lord with gladness" (Ps. c. 2). "My servants shall sing for joy of heart" (Isa. lxv. 14).

6.—Satisfied service. "Mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble (Isa. lxv. 22).

For only work that is for God alone
Hath an unceasing guerdon of delight—
A guerdon unaffected by the sight
Of great success, nor by its loss o'erthown;
All else is vanity beneath the sun,
There may be joy in doing, but it palls when done.
F. R. H.

7.—Rewarded service. "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love" (Heb. vi. 10). "Your work shall be rewarded" (2 Chron. xv. 7; Jer. xxxi. 16). "If any man's work abide . . . he shall receive a reward" (1 Cor. iii. 14). "Come . . . inherit the kingdom prepared . . . inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me" (Matt. xxv. 34—40.

II.—CHARACTERISTICS OF GOD'S SERVANTS.

1.—Obedience. "His servants ye are to whom ye obey" (Rom. vi. 16). "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it" (John ii. 5). "Thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall appoint" (2 Sam. xv. 15). (It is not enough to be working for the Master, we must be working at his word).

2.—Gentleness, patience, meekness. "The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves" (2 Tim. ii. 24, 25).

3.—Love. "By love serve one another" (Gal. v. 13). "Let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth" (1 John iii. 18).

4.—Expectancy. "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord . . . Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching" (Luke xii. 35—40).

THE IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY is carrying on an active agency for Christ in that distracted country. A series of successful meetings has been concluded in the town of Newry. Two evangelists have conducted nightly meetings for seven weeks. The meetings, writes Rev. W. Wylie, Presbyterian Minister, have been large, earnest, and profitable. Many persons profess to have got blessing. The ministers of many of the churches have co-operated with the evangelists.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

II.—THE SALE OF THE BIRTHRIGHT.

Genesis XXV.

Brothers were these two men, yes, twin brothers; but brothers could not differ more widely. Before their birth their difference was foretold. At their birth it was evident. From their birth it began to broaden and increase. The linked hands of the brothers, reaching across the tiny rill of their earliest infancy, were soon parted, as the stream of life widened between them, and they passed to their destiny along its opposite banks.

They differed in appearance. Esau was rough, ruddy, and hairy. He would give the impression of great bodily strength, capacity for vast physical fatigue, and a temperament which would incline him to exciting and hazardous pursuits. Jacob was the reverse: smooth in skin, dark in feature, slight in build, no match for his burly brother in physical force, but more than his match in guile.

They differed in pursuits. Esau was a cunning hunter, a man of the field and chase. Had he been living now, he would have been foremost in all manly, daring, out-door sports. Nor would it be difficult to find his duplicate to-day amongst our high-born youth; with handsome face, generous disposition, and open hand, quick to resent and quick to forgive, perfect in dress, polished in manner; a rare shot, a splendid rider, an expert in all manly exercise, and certain to marry well, as Esau did, and found a strong and noble house. Jacob, on the other hand, loved the home life. The violent exercise and hazards for which Esau pined, as an imprisoned eagle for its rocky, storm-beaten crags, had no fascination for him. And while Esau was away, he was content to dwell among the flocks and herds of the camp, content with the peaceful occupations of an uneventful pastoral life. Each man to his taste!

They differed most in character. There is much in Esau which makes us like him; and we should have been certainly more quickly attracted to him than to his brother. If he was impetuous, he was generous. If he was rash, he was frank. If he was singularly wanting in religious fervour, he was a good son. If his heart doted on the pleasures of the chase, he was splendid company, and every inch a man. But, for all this, he was decidedly sensual—Scripture calls him profane—i.e., he was a slave to his senses; he hailed anything that would thrill him with pleasant though transient excitement; he was willing to purchase pleasure at any price, though he had to pawn the most priceless jewels of his spirit; he was, indeed, too enamoured with the claims of the passing hour to care for unseen realities, or to seek the eternal harvest which lies beyond the bitter sowing times of patience and waiting and pain. Alas! that he should have had such a host of imitators!

Jacob was a "plain" man (a "quiet" man, R.V.); but under that calm exterior there were depths and depths. Amid all the craft and duplicity of his nature there was immense capacity for religious fervour and religious faith. He could understand, as Esau never could, the meaning of the birthright, with all its spiritual glow and glory. He could draw aside the veil of the unseen, and weigh its promises, and compare its treasures with the shows of earth. He could dream angel-haunted dreams, that threw a mystic ladder over the abyss of space, linking all worlds. And while Esau was occupied with pleasure, Jacob would feel within him the strange stirrings of a nature which could not be satisfied with anything within the narrow limits of his tents, but which yearned for that spiritual heritage which was summed up in the word "birthright."

Let us consider the Birthright, the Barter, and the Bitter Cry.

I. The Birthright.—What was it? It was not worldly prosperity, for though Esau lost it, he had an abundant fortune; 400 armed retainers followed at his heel; the great country of Edom owned his sway, till, after a life of splendid and unbroken prosperity, he went down to the grave in peace and a good old age. There is nothing in the brief record which we have of him, to make us think that he lived a broken or disappointed life. All that this world could give was his. The sunshine of worldly prosperity touched with golden light all the wavelets that broke upon the beach of his life. The exceeding bitter wail of momentary disappointment was soon forgotten in his satisfaction at having lost nothing which he really cared for, while so much was still left to him that his soul loved. Whatever the birthright was, it evidently was not worldly prosperity, for of this Esau, who lost it, had more than Jacob, who won it.

It was not immunity from sorrow. When Jacob had secured it, it seemed as if the mystic box of Pandora had been opened in his home, for every human ill was let free into his life. Staff in hand, he tears himself from home, and seeks a distant country. A hireling in a kinsman's house he spends the best years of manhood's prime. Halting on his thigh, he bows before Esau, buries his favourite Rachel, chafes over the open sores of his home life, is bereaved of his children, and moans that the days of the years of his pilgrimage have been evil and few. Few have trodden a more rugged path, or bound about their brows a crown more set with thorns. It was a sad and weary life that breathed itself out in that hieroglyphed chamber in the land of the Pharaohs, when for the last time he gathered his feet into his bed, and was gathered unto his people. Whatever the birthright was, it evidently was not freedom from pain and grief, for of these Jacob, who won it, had infinitely more than Esau, who lost it.

The birthright was a spiritual heritage. It gave the right, which ever belonged to its possessor, of being the priest of the family or clan. It carried the privilege of being the depositary and communicator of the Divine secrets. It constituted a link in the line of descent by which the Messiah was to be born into the world. The right of wielding power with God and men; the right of catching up and handing on, as in the old Greek race, the torch of Messianic hope; the right of heirship to the promises of the covenant made to Abraham; the right of standing among the spiritual aristocracy of mankind; the right of being a pilgrim of eternity, owning no foot of earth, because all heaven was held in fee—this, and more than this, was summed up in the possession of the birthright.

It was a fair heritage, but a fairer one is the birthright of every reader of these lines. You have been born into a world, which has been trodden by the feet and wet by the tears of the Son of God. You have been born of a race whose redemption has been purchased at the exceeding great price of his precious blood. You have been born of a nature which has been taken up by Him, who passed by that of angels. And such a birth carries with it rights, given by the matchless grace of God, which as much outshine the birthrights of the old world as the regalia of England does the crown of Alfred.

Your birth gives you the right to be translated from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son; the right to claim of the Holy Ghost the second birth; the right to be forgiven and saved; the right to become the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty; the right to stand side by side with the Son in his glory, joint heirs with Him of all that is his; the right to be more than conquerors over all the power of your foes; the right to be delivered from sin, and to join the jubilant throng that stands on the shores of the sea of glass mingled with fire.

This is your glorious heritage. It cannot be purchased, or won by might of arm. It is a birthright for those who, having been born of woman, have also been born of the Holy Ghost. Ushered into the heart amid tears and storms, yet will its bright hope cheer the spirit amid the stern discipline through which it will pass to its reward, and that hope shall not be ashamed. And surely it will be the standing marvel of eternity that a destiny so bright was ever put within the reach of the fallen children of this sin-cursed earth.

II. The Barter.—One day Jacob was standing over a caldron of savoury pottage, made of those red lentiles which to the present day form a dish highly relished in Syria and in Egypt. The appetising odour soon filled the air, enticing enough for a full, to say nothing of a hungry man. At that moment, who should come in but Esau, faint with hunger. He did not know the name: his active life left him little time for such trifles as domestic cookery, but the sight and smell were quite enough to convince him that Jacob's preparations would be marvellously suitable to stay the cravings of his hunter's hunger. "Give me some of that red—that red," he cried impatiently.

Now Jacob was not wholly a selfish man, but it suddenly occurred to him that this would be a good opportunity of winning the right to be the spiritual leader of the clan. So, knowing well how little his brother counted on his rights, he made the extraordinary proposal to exchange the mess of pottage for the birthright.

Esau closed with the proposal. "Behold," said the bluff hunter, "I am at the point to die, and what profit shall this birthright do to me?" On the one hand was the birthright—a myth, so far as he could see, a vision of the far future, wholly unseen and spiritual. On the other hand was this pottage, right before him, and very tempting to his hunger. So he made over his birthright to Jacob, and Jacob gave him bread and pottage of lentiles, and he did eat and drink, and went his way—not, I think, without some qualms of conscience; and thus Esau despised his birthright.

We cannot exonerate either of these men from blame. Jacob was not only a traitor to his brother, but he was faithless towards his God. Had it not been distinctly whispered in his mother's ear that the elder of the brothers should serve the younger? Had not the realisation of his loftiest ambition been pledged by One whose faithfulness had been the theme of repeated talks with Abraham, who had survived during the first eighteen years of his young life? He might have been well assured that what the God of Abraham had promised He was able also to perform, and would perform, without the aid of his own miserable schemes. But how hard is it for us to quietly wait for God. We are too apt to outrun Him, to forestall the quiet unfolding of his purposes, and to snatch at promised blessings before they are ripe.

And as for Esau, we can never forget the beacon words of Scripture: "Look diligently, lest there be any profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright" (Heb. xii. 16). Yet let us, in condemning him across the ages, look close at home. How many are there amongst ourselves, born into the world with splendid talents, dowried with unusual powers, inheritors of noble names, heirs to vast estates, gifted with keys to unlock any of the many doors to name and fame and usefulness, who yet fling away all these possibilities of blessing and blessedness for one brief plunge into the Stygian pool of selfish and sensual indulgence!

The strongest and bravest men in build and muscle are often the weakest in resisting the appeals of momentary passion. Esau is mastered by the fragrance of a mess of pottage, Samson by the charms of a Philistine girl, Peter by the question of a servant. There is no strength apart from the strong Son of God.

And the appeals to sense come oftenest when we are least expecting them. When we say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction comes. The foe creeps through the postern gate. The arrow penetrates the joints of the harness. The moment of crisis is the moment when we come in from the dangers of the chase to the home which promised us immunity from attack. "Watch and pray always, that ye may be able to escape."

These appeals, moreover, come in the most trivial things. One mess of pottage; one glass of drink; one moment's unbridled passion; one afternoon's saunter; a question and an answer; a movement or a look. It is in such small things, small as the angle at which railway lines diverge from each other to east and west, that great alternatives are offered and great decisions made. When we fail in some such thing we often comfort ourselves with the reflection that we could and would do right in some all-important crisis. We cannot pray in a bedroom, but we could burn at a stake. We cannot speak to an individual, but we could preach at a Pentecost. We little understand ourselves. We do not see that trifles are the truest test of character, and that if we cannot run with footmen, we certainly could not contend with horses, and if we have been wearied in the land of peace, we certainly shall stand no chance when we are called to battle with the swellings of Jordan. There are no trifles in Christian living. Everything is great, because the mightiest events impinge on the smallest pivots, and the greatest harvests for good and ill spring from the tiniest seeds.

Had we been at Esau's side, how eagerly should we have laid our hand upon his shoulder, entreating him to pause and consider, before he bartered the spiritual for the physical, the eternal for the temporal, the unseen for the seen. Will it pay? Is it wise? Will you get an equivalent for that which you forfeit now for ever? And such questions are asked still of all Esaus who are tempted to barter their peace, their manhood, their heaven for one mess of the devil's pottage. It steams. It smells savoury. It promises to do more good to you than all the Bible put together. The tempter whispers, "Thou shalt not surely die. Bow down and worship me, and all shall be thine. Give me that which thou hast, and I will give thee this and much more." Then it is that a still small voice asks, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the world and lose himself? How much less will it profit him to lose his all for one small mess of pottage, which will only secure a brief respite from the cravings of appetite." Learn to master appetite in Christ's strength; this will serve thee better far, than warding off its urgency for a time, leaving it to return with whetted hunger, like a pack of wolves which have tasted blood. Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

III. THE BITTER CRY.—When Esau saw that God had taken him at his word, and had taken away from him the birthright of spiritual primacy, "he cried with an exceeding great and bitter cry." But that cry came too late to alter the consequences of his rash act. "He found no place of repentance" (no way to change his decision), "though he sought it carefully with tears."

No place for repentance! On many hearts those words have rung the knell of hope. As the heart-broken sinner has reviewed a blighted past with bitter tears and cries, the adversary of souls has whispered that he has sinned too deeply for repentance, and wandered too far to return, and he has backed the insinuation with these terrible words—no place for repentance.

And is it so? Is it possible for a soul on this side of death to reach a position where tears and prayers will strike against the brazen heavens, and rebound only an echo? It cannot be. It is possible that a man should become too callous and hard to desire salvation: this is the sin unto death, this is the sin that hath never forgiveness, and it has no forgiveness because the sinner does not desire or seek it. But it is impossible for a man to desire to repent and not find a ready help in the grace of the Holy Ghost. It is impossible for a man to seek forgiveness with bitter tears, and not obtain it. It is impossible for a man to knock at the door of mercy, and not find it open at last, though after long delay: "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men." In point of fact, these desires and tears and prayers are blessed symptoms that the work of grace and forgiveness has begun within the soul. They are not of man, or of the will of the flesh, but of God. And when God puts his hand to the plough in a human spirit, He never looks back.

But the repentance mentioned here is not repentance to salvation, but the power of reversing the past. Esau could not undo what he had done. He had long despised his birthright. That act of surrender was not a solitary one, but the outcome of a state of heart. It simply revealed thoughts that had been long admitted guests in the inner chamber of his being. But when once this temper had taken effect in a definite promise, asseverated by an oath, God held him to it—yea, nature and righteousness and conscience held him to it too, and he could not alter it by his tears or bitter cries.

The sinful past is irrevocable. Eve might bitterly regret her choice, but as she stood with Adam outside the cherub-guarded gate, with the faded rose in her hand of which Rabbis tell us, her bitter regrets could not replace the apple on the tree, or reinstate her within the golden bowers of Paradise. Peter went out and wept bitterly, but those tears of uncontrollable anguish could not recall the words of denial, or blot from his memory that look of pain. The Virgins might beat their breasts in bitter self-reproach; but no complaints, however pitiable, could reverse the decision of the Bridegroom's lips.

We all know this. We remember bursts of passion which have broken hearts, sundered ties of love, clouded sunny skies, withered hopes, and shattered promising prospects. We would give worlds to blot out the record, and to make them as if they had never been. But it is impossible. We cannot bring back the shadow on the dial. We cannot reverse the writing of the faithful chronicler. We cannot find a chance for altering the decisions which had been long floating in solution in our minds, but which had one fatal and irrevocable crystallisation in word or act. There is no place of repentance, though we seek it carefully and with tears. You cannot undo.

But though the past is irrevocable, it is not irreparable. In the garden of Gethsemane our Lord said mournfully to the chosen three, "Sleep on now, and take your rest," but He instantly added, "Arise, let us be going." In the first sentence, He taught the irrevocableness of the past, they might as well sleep, for any good that watching could now do. But in the second sentence, He taught that there was still a future before them, with new chances and opportunities and hopes.

So shall it ever be. God Himself cannot undo the past. But He can and will forgive. He will not mention the past, but give us a fair fresh start. He will even "restore the years that the canker worm has eaten." He will give us new opportunities of showing how truly we repent the decisions of the past, and how loyally we desire to serve Him in the decisions of the future. He will not even mention the thrice denial, but He will give us three opportunities of saying how much we love Him, as He thrice bids us tend his flock. "The King is dead," that is the proclamation of the irrevocable past. "Long live the King," that is the announcement of an available future.

HOME FOR COMMERCIAL YOUNG MEN.

DEAR SIR,—It has often been urged upon committee of Metropolitan Y.M.C. Associations, to establish lodging accommodation for young men who have to leave comfortable homes in the country and start life in London; there can be no question as to the immense importance of providing such young fellows with a "home away from home."

The committee of the Southwark Association have endeavoured to meet the want by taking large premises, 26 and 28, Newington Causeway; they have left nothing undone to make this new venture as much like "home" as possible, at the most reasonable charges—bedroom accommodation, with parlour and use of reading-room, &c., 5s. 6d. weekly; board according to requirements.

GEO. F. ASSITER, Gen. Sec.

26, Newington Causeway, S.E.

FEMALE MISSION TO THE FALLEN.—The twenty-eighth annual report gives accounts of the work done by the local committees in the different districts of London. 310 young women were sought out by the missionaries; 275 were placed in various Homes, while some few emigrated, these being chiefly preventive cases. Many sad, though interesting, particulars are given of some of those who have been brought within the sphere of this rescue work. The results have been most encouraging; not a few of those rescued are bright and happy Christians. The committee appeal for increased support.

THE HAVRE SAILORS' HOME.

"Go to the Sailors' Home, 63, Rue la Dauphine." This advice is given to each of the thousands of English-speaking sailors who annually enter the port of Havre. The history of this Home, what it is, and what it is doing, are well described in a little book just issued from this office. Moved by the sad stories she was constantly hearing of the troubles in which English sailors so often fell, through falling a prey to the land-sharks which abound in that town, Mrs. Bernal, the wife of the British Consul, about three years ago, established a Home, or boarding-house, for sailors. This succeeded so well that it has been transferred to a larger building, situated as above stated, and is now under the immediate control of Lady Beauchamp, while cordially supported by the Consul and Mrs. Bernal, and Rev. Manthekaas, Norwegian Minister in Havre, Mrs. Hanmer Griffith, and others.

What it is may be stated in a word—it is a Home in which sailors returning from sometimes long voyagings and tossings may find temporary rest and refreshment for body and mind, in which they are well cared for, and their true interests considered, in the interval before they are paid off. They are often entitled on entering port to large sums of money, the safe keeping of which depends very much on what sort of place the men go to. It is very gratifying to notice that of £3156 13s. 3d. received by the treasurer from sailors during the year, no less than £2765 11s. 2d. was remitted by Consular orders, or otherwise, to their families. A case is mentioned in this report in which half the crew of a ship arrived from India, after a voyage of three years, entered the Home, "and the same day they were paid off we shipped them away to their homes, with their moneys sent forward in sums amounting to upwards of £70, £80, and £90 respectively. Those who went to boarding-houses lost their money in a few days, and had to ship off again, taking a month's advance to pay their debts with.

Of the good work done in this Home we have already said something. The number of inmates during the year was 696, many of these, for a day or two only, leaving for their homes as soon as possible after being paid off. For the accommodation of boarders, as we learn from a long article which recently appeared in The Times on this "Model Sailors' Home," there is a charge for officers of 30fr. per week, and for seamen of 25fr. per week, with an equally moderate tariff for meals and lodging for those who only stay a night or two. There is a temperance-bar, and reading-rooms, well-furnished with newspapers, books, &c. It is scarcely necessary to add that the spiritual welfare of these brethren is not neglected. Meetings are held three times a week, at which both boarders and men gathered in from the outside hear the story of redeeming love.

Sailors' bags, containing books and healthy reading matter for the voyage, are greatly appreciated by the sailors, and more of these are asked for. With regard to these, one sailor wrote that "one tract has been such a blessing to my soul that I have read it ten times over." We need add nothing more to ensure the sympathy of our readers for this work. We may, however, quote the following sentences from a note recently received from Mrs. Hermans that will emphasise the great need for such a shelter in this dangerous port: "Theatre Gaiety was opened last Thursday; 700 tickets were sold, none less than 3 francs each. The street was lined with carriages. The place is flourishing, and our poor sailors are being led captive."

THE WIDOWS' FRIEND SOCIETY, which assists poor widows (living in inner London) to earn a livelihood when they have a definite object in view; and sustains twelve pensions to aged Christian widows, has removed its office from 11, Lawrence Pountney-lane, to 27, King-street, Cheapside. It is supported by voluntary contributions, and funds are needed. Mr. M. Kenchington is the secretary.

FOR GOD, HOME, and NATIVE LAND

BY MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD.

THE National Women's Christian Temperance Union of the United States has now been organised nearly twelve years. Its work is well known, being non-sectional, non-sectarian, and comprised under the general divisions of Preventive, Educational, Evangelistic, Social, and Legal work, besides the Department of Organisation. Its auxiliaries have been, confessedly, the chief factor in State campaigns for local option, statutory prohibition, and constitutional amendment. It began the movement for Scientific Temperance Education in the public schools, having been instrumental in securing laws to that end in seventeen of the States, besides the only temperance legislation ever won from Congress, by which all the territories and the district of Columbia are brought under the same beneficent statutes; and nearly one half the children of America who are of school age are to be regularly taught the effects of alcholics and other narcotics upon the human system. The National W.C.T.U. has united northern and southern women in a common work for God, and home, and native land, thus sweeping away the alienation of years, and replacing it by sisterly affection, tender and devoted.

It has founded a publishing house and a temperance paper (The Union Signal), which are to-day exercising an influence exceeded by no similar agency in the nation. Over thirty million pages were printed by the Women's Temperance Publication Association this year.

The National Union's Departments of Heredity and Hygiene, which strike at the very root of the alcohol delusion, are of great practical usefulness in the homes of the people; its work among the children in Sunday-schools, Bands of Hope, and Kindergarten; its efforts to influence college students, and to train and organise young women for a philanthropic life; its evangelistic work for the non-churchgoing class, for railway employés, soldiers, sailors, lumbermen, miners, especially for the drinking men of all classes—all these have proved the breadth of its comprehension and the tirelessness of its zeal. Its efforts to reach the pauper and the prisoner, to establish reformatories and homes for the wretched victims of inebriety and their suffering children, and its Temperance Flower Mission, must appeal to every true heart.

It has permeated public sentiment by its steady advances upon the Press through monthly and weekly temperance bulletins, and its countless lectures and conventions, until the outlawing of the saloon and the protection of the home have become the watchwords of the people, and will soon be the war-cry of Governmental leaders.

It has sought to purify the holidays of the people, coming with its sisterly influence to the fairs, celebrations, encampments, and expositions; and, by its unrequited toil, providing refreshments, keeping alcoholic poisons off the grounds, and circulating pure water and pure literature. It has battled for the maintenance of the American Sabbath, sought to introduce the pure juice of the grape at sacramental tables, and to secure a day of prayer for temperance in the Week of Prayer.

It has circulated countless petitions, and addressed synods and conferences, Teachers' Associations, and Medical Societies, as well as Legislatures, State and national, always for one object, and with one plea: "We beseech you to refrain from the use of alcoholics, and to outlaw the liquor traffic."

In recent years it has bravely championed the cause of social purity and the White Cross movement, which seeks to instruct the young manhood of the nation to uplift and preserve it from the ways that take hold upon death, to redeem outcast women from a slavery worse than that of chains, and, by better laws, to secure protection to women and girls from the outrages of brutal men.

It has sent forth its call to all civilised lands for a union of womanhood against the brain poisons which are the greatest foe of home, and a World's W.C.T.U. is the result, which has its organisers in Japan, Scandinavia, and Germany. It has already enlisted Australia and the Sandwich Islands.

It is a fact not readily believed, that for the first eight years of its work, the income of the National W.C.T.U. averaged but a thousand dollars a year. The present income is from 8000 to 10,000 dollars per year, but this is so far from meeting current needs that it is with difficulty the Society keeps out of debt; indeed, it has not always done so, but, during most of the period since the crusade, has had arrears that were a source of continual anxiety to its leaders. Meanwhile, almost no donations or bequests have been received, save from five or six persons, who have given from 500 to 1000 dollars per year for a few of the later years, and one who has for several years given 1200 dollars annually. It seems impossible that philanthropic people, knowing the record of the National W.C.T.U., and how little money it possesses, can read this record with indifference.

They will ask themselves the very natural question: "Where could I put my money with reasonable hope of a larger return in results for the helping of humanity or the advancement of Christ's kingdom?" They will also ask: "In what way are my gifts to be employed?" We answer: "In making more efficient the lines of work enumerated in this letter, many, indeed all of which are sadly crippled for lack of money to pay for printing, for the expenses of organisers, &c. Besides, we greatly need a building of our own. We pay rents for offices, publishing house, &c., and can never be adequately accommodated until we have a Home in brick and mortar for the crusade idea of Christianity and temperance, A building is planned, with Gospel Temperance hall, restaurant, reading-rooms, offices, and accommodations for our publishing interests, but not a penny has yet been subscribed for its erection. We want a training-school for temperance workers, whence they can go forth equipped for service. Some of our leaders have started a Temperance Hospital in Chicago, out of which a Temperance Medical College is to grow, but we are crippled for funds to carry it on.

Aside, however, from this embarrassment, the success of our Society in the twelve years of its history, has been such as to illustrate once more the blessed truth, that Christian work is wrought, "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

HUGUENOT SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The third part of Vol i. of the Proceedings of this Society contains papers on "The Field Preachers of Antwerp in 1566, with an Account of the Erection of Protestant Temples in that City." The subject opens up many phases of Netherland history. The movement was one for religious liberty, and really led up to the establishment of the Dutch Republic. The Report of the President (Sir H. Layard) tells of the rapid progress of the Society since its foundation (April, 1885), and urges all who have information to send it to the Acting-Secretary, Mr. A. G. Browning, 3, Victoria-street, S.W. The meetings for next session begin on November 10.

RETREATS FOR HABITUAL DRUNKARDS.—The Inspector, Mr. H. W. Hoffman, in his annual report, states that two new retreats have been opened during the year, in addition to the four already licensed. The first, at Wansford, was only open a few months. The second, at High Shot House, Twickenham, accommodating ten male patients, was opened by Mr. H. Branthwaite. The licensees agree that the act would be more useful if applicants could be admitted without appearing before a magistrate. At Old Park Hall, Walsall, employment is given to patients, who cannot afford to pay the usual fees, as an experiment. There have been no deaths at the retreats, or prosecutions instituted for offences against the Act during the year.

POPPIES.

THE wind-blown harvest stooks of ripened grain
Looked dull and dead beneath the drifting rain;

And flocks of brown and russet withered leaves
Swirled through the stretching avenues of sheaves.

Beneath the spell of an autumnal day
All living things looked chill and dusk and grey;

And 'mid my dreams and pensive fancies, born
Of sadness on a drear October morn,

I thought of that weird mystery of death,
That withers all things with its icy breath,

Taking from life its beauteous roseate bloom,
And shrouding love's sweet eyes in mourning gloom.

My soul asked of herself why death should be?
But silence sank around her like a sea;

And no response came from the mist-hid land
Where God hides all his wherefores in his hand.

Then, as the train whirled past a little fold,
Hemmed in by thinning hedgerows bare and cold,

I saw a clump of poppies, crimson clad,
And suddenly my heart was light and glad,

Through those wild flowerets' sacrificial red,

"Thy sins, through Christ who tasted death for thee, Though they are scarlet, white as wool shall be."

GIRLS IN DRURY-LANE.

IN The Contemporary for May last there is an article styled, "From Thirteen to Seventeen," in which the writer gives an appalling account of the manners and conduct of "troops" of young girls, who spent their Bank Holiday at Hampstead Heath, where the writer happened to be. He says:—"Quite young, none apparently over sixteen or seventeen. I can safely aver that language more vile and depraved I have never heard from any grown men or women in the worst part of the town. The quiet working-men, among whom they ran in and out, looked on in amazement and disgust. One of them said, 'God pity the husbands of these by and by.'" The writer goes on to say that something must be done to try and take them out of the streets.

In that part of London that lies between Drury-lane and St. Clement's, many of the girls literally live in the streets. The same scenes and language may be seen and heard every evening, when schools are closed and work is done. To meet this evil, and help these poor girls, and gather them in from the lanes and alleys, "The Working Girls' House" was opened a little more than a year since. It was opened, in fact, at the request of some of these girls themselves. There is a large room for sewing and music classes, temperance meetings, &c.; over a hundred members have joined this part of the work. There are a Bible-class on Sunday afternoons, Gospel addresses, and occasional tea-parties and entertainments.

The girls come trooping in. They purchase and make their own clothes; they also learn a little cooking and house-work. The upper part of the house is furnished to receive a few friendless girls of good character, where they are kept until places are procured for them. The number of girls, who have come quite young and utterly alone in the City, shows the deep necessity for this and other "Working Girls' Houses." Since March last six definite cases of rescue have been received and helped; those not fit for service have been placed in Homes, where they are being trained and well cared for.

But help comes in slowly; this year the subscribers are not numerous enough to keep up the work; the workers appeal for help. Must they, for want of funds, send back the girls to the street corners, with all their foul, contaminating influences? The House is managed by a committee of ladies, who help in the work and take the different classes. Miss King, 73, Drury-lane, is the lady in charge.

NOTES FROM FRANCE.

Through the mysterious, and yet clear guidance of God, I have been taken into foreign lands almost every year, from one cause or another. This winter a sudden fever, caught in Mentone by one of my daughters, brought me to France. That interesting country is everywhere open to the Gospel in these days, and every effort to spread it has some fruit to show. We ourselves continue the Bible distribution in hotels, of which thirteen in Paris got those blessed Books for their bedrooms; and twelve in Bordeaux, amounting to 1000 Bibles. If funds were plentiful, the number of hotels provided with Bibles, in Roman Catholic France, might be multiplied. In every town we get some society of Christians to watch over the books, and it is most refreshing to hear how many bless those silent teachers at the close of a busy and exhausting day. Miss Hornbuckle, 3, Alexandra-villas, Brighton, is always willing to receive help for this mission work, and give information about it to those who wish to make inquiries.

I want to draw attention to a good evangelistic work in Pau, begun fifteen years ago. Many English who go to those lovely regions every winter, may be glad to know of it. At Jurançon, a little town close to Pau, there are about 400 Spaniards settled. Señor Marin, a fellow prisoner of Matamoros, settled there, after his expulsion from Spain. Work is better paid in France, and the Spaniards are strong and industrious, and the little settlement seems prosperous. Marin began to evangelise them, as they had no Spanish priest to teach them, and only imperfectly understood the French curé. Four or five families formed a little nucleus of a Protestant congregation, but Señor Marin died some years ago, and the work was nearly given up. Miss Whately encouraged Mme. Pozzy, the wife of the Pasteur Evangélique de l'Eglise Libre, to try to continue it through an evangelist, Señor Torribio, who with his wife live at Jurançon, and collect the people on Sundays and week-days; Sunday-school for children, mothers' meetings, spiritual meetings, &c., are held. Their great wish is to open a week-day school for girls. The boys come on Sundays, but the girls are kept away by the nuns, who instruct them in the day-schools.

If one had means for a better schoolroom, and the salary of a teacher, a prosperous girls' school might be begun, and much result be expected in future, from these Spanish children when they return home as grown up. Many of these families, &c., turn to work during harvest times, on the Spanish side. Anyone who wishes to help this Spanish mission work in Pau, can communicate either with Mme. Pozzy, au Presbytère, Pau, or Miss Hornbuckle, Brighton.

It was pleasant to hear the hymns sung in Spanish, that rich and beautiful language, and see the expression on the faces of these hard-worked mothers, who did not know how to read but knew them all by heart. Several of them had babies worthy of a Murillo's brush, and one longed to know those lovely babes growing up in the Saviour's knowledge from infancy. A few pounds given for that object would be well laid out, and as the work is begun, it is only needing to be kept up faithfully by those who are sitting in full Gospel light.

KINGSTON AND SURBITON Y.M.C.A.—A special mission to men has been held in connection with this Association by Mr. Swann Hurrell. The members, under the direction of Mr. E. W. Stringer, the secretary, worked hard to make the mission known. On Saturday, October 16, a prayer-meeting was held at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, when the missioner gave an address to Christians on "True Manliness." The services commenced on the Sunday at the Albany Hall. The attendance was good throughout, and several open-air meetings were held in the town. The mission closed on October 26 with a thanksgiving service, when the hall was filled with both sexes. After Mr. Hurrell had given an address to the converts, Messrs. E. W. Stringer, W. H. Parslow, and Jays testified to the blessed results of the services.

GRAY'S-YARD RAGGED CHURCH.

Dear Sir,—Nearly a year ago your readers were reminded by Mr. Denham Smith of this work amongst "the casuals." They may like to know how it has fared with us since. This Mission being now well known all through the country, by the class of persons who attend, it is not surprising that our numbers have increased. We now sometimes have in the course of the Sunday as many as 600 persons. The sight is a terrible one, and I confess that after fourteen years' familiarity with it, I often wince before it. The tales to which I am compelled to listen after the services are indeed "strange tales"—tales which I could not, dare not repeat; they often come from those whose consciences are pricked when hearing "the old, old, story" of the Gospel told out. Certainly God has been in our midst, and it has been the sure knowledge of this that has sustained the helpers of this work week by week. I care not to attempt to number up conversions, although I believe there have been many, but would rather rest satisfied with never-failing promises, such as Psalm cxxvi. 5, 6, and 1 Cor. xv. 58, which refer to a day yet to come.

As regards supplies, our difficulties have been many and increasing. I have been more than once told that we are only wasting money on such a set of people, and that we had better shut up the place. Others think we might keep the doors open for Gospel work, but withhold the food. Yet, notwithstanding the various opinions expressed, we have held on our way, though it has been in a sort of "hand to mouth" fashion, and if funds come in, we hope still to go on. I feel persuaded that to stop the food would be to stop the work, for it is for the food alone, and not for the Gospel, that the greater number come. Many a one who has received everlasting benefit has told me that he came simply because he had been told he could get a meal there, and that nothing but hunger had brought him. Increased numbers have added to our responsibility, and the work is much hindered for lack of means. We have not a farthing in hand, and, worse than this, our account at the bank is considerably overdrawn. We now require weekly something like £2 10s. for food; then there are expenses for rent, &c. In addition to all this, we shall require £80 for our usual New Year's Breakfast, when about 1800 people come. Mr. A. G. Fraser, 4, Inverness-terrace, W., would thankfully receive any sums sent to him.

It has been considered necessary for me to leave the work for a time for rest and change, but I will gladly also receive communications as under until Christmas.—Yours truly,

1, Carleton Villas, Philip Gough.

RESCUE WORK IN NAPLES.

It has been laid upon the hearts of some in Naples to open a "Home" for those who would be willing to leave a life of sin, and to earn honestly their daily bread by domestic work. It is thought prudent, however, to wait until another £100 has been received in addition to a small amount already subscribed. A most suitable and Christian widow has agreed to give her services as matron when required. About two years ago a girl of eighteen years was rescued from a legalised house of prostitution by a resident in Naples, and has given satisfaction to her employers. This encourages the friends interested to try and rescue others, but a Home must be open to receive them. A medical man in Naples says he has often been implored by the girls to try and help them out of their life of misery and shame. Surely our readers will lend a helping hand.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.

Winter is about to set in, and we plead for our large family, divided indeed into eight homes, and occupying eighty-eight rooms, but numbering in all 117 souls. Most of these old folks have already passed threescore years and ten, while not a few are octogenarians. Winter to them is a trying time. They must be much shut in, and need the warmth and cheer of good fires to help them through the coming months. To supplement their own scanty means we require forty-four tons of coal, so as to provide each room with half a ton for winter use, and thus save much suffering and distress. Ten tons are supplied annually by individual kindness, leaving us to provide thirty-four tons.

Five of these "Homes for the Aged Poor" are at Minford-gardens, West Kensington-park; two are at St. George's-road, Notting-hill; one is at Walterton-road, Paddington.

The inmates are provided with a room rent free, their weekly incomes being derived from pensions, small annuities, and in some cases they are supported by their children. Many of them have seen better days, and through no fault of their own are reduced to poverty; with others, work was bread, and now that the power to work has been taken away, nothing but charity can help them. Their spiritual needs are not forgotten. In all the Homes religious services are held, and many happy instances of patience in suffering and contentment in poverty may be witnessed. With a goodly number we have reason to believe that "it is light at eventide;" with others, we have the hope that this rest in their declining years may prove a means of blessing to their souls, so that, when this life is ended, they may enter the better home above, and see the King in his beauty. A report, and all information as to the Homes, may be obtained on application to Miss Harrison, 5, Grand Acre-terrace, Anerley, S.E. C. E. Harrison.

MISSION WORK IN BERLIN.

We have moved to our new house and Mission-hall. We opened it on October 5, and many friends from Berlin and Charlottenburg were present to encourage us in our work. Several Christian friends have enabled us to build the hall, which will comfortably accommodate about 400 people, but we still need about £300 to have it free of debt. . . . Besides the hall we have convenient rooms for Sunday-school, Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, &c., and we expect great blessing. Best of all, our believing people are full of earnest zeal for the Lord, to spread the knowledge of his salvation among our fellow-men.

Mrs. Rohrbach has commenced her work among the women, in her mothers' meetings, which are well attended, and are means of much blessing to the people. We have about 200 children in our Sunday-schools, and the Bible-classes and prayer-meetings are seasons of much spiritual quickening. Last Sunday we closed our tent services in Charlottenburg, and we want now to hire a small hall in order to continue the work there. Of course, with the increase of our work our expenditure increases, and it is marvellous how the Lord has hitherto supplied all our need.

READING.—A four days' mission has been held under the auspices of the Reading Women's Christian Total Abstinence Association. Meetings for women only in the afternoons, and public meetings in the evenings, were held at the New Town Hall. Amongst the speakers were Mrs. Ormiston Chant, Miss Macpherson, Mrs. Anderson, and Dr. Kate Mitchell. The local ministers took great interest in the work, and the attendance was large, especially at the closing meetings. The mission was very successful throughout, and a good number of pledges were taken.

For the Young.

A GALILEAN PICNIC.

An Address to Children, in the Agricultural Hall, Oct. 24.

BY REV. DR. J. THAIN DAVIDSON.

"There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?"—JOHN vi. 9.

(Concluded.)

I HAVE something else to tell you, and this is for the encouragement of the teachers. One morning, lately, I received by post a white cardboard box. I thought somebody I knew had got married, and was sending me some bridecake, so I gave it to my little girl, saying, "You open it, and see who has got married." When it was opened, however, there was a gold watch, without any name connected to it. I was very much astonished, as you can imagine; but by and by, when I opened my letters, I found one from a minister in the far North of Scotland, whom I had never heard of before. He said in his letter that an old lady, one of his parishioners, had told him that about thirty years ago, next month, I preached a sermon—I could have been little more than a boy then—from the text, "Jehovah-Jireh, the Lord will provide." And that sermon, he went on to say, was blessed to the conversion of that woman, who from that day to the day of her death, a few weeks ago, traced all her comfort and hope to that sermon. So when she was about to die she desired that I should have her gold watch as a memento of her. I did not want a gold watch, so I gave it to someone else. But there is the fact: I had never before heard of that woman, yet, after all those years, I learnt that that sermon, preached when I was little more than a youth, was blessed to her soul's salvation. There is not one but can do something to make the message of salvation known.

Another lesson is, never forget to thank God for your food. Jesus Christ gave thanks to God. He did not employ any chaplain to do it, but He said it Himself. Benjamin Franklin, when a little boy, lived far away in the country, and his father used from time to time to receive casks of preserved meat and so forth for the supply of his family. One day, when one of those casks of salted provisions came, he said to his father, "Had we not better say grace over the whole cask, and so save trouble?" Perhaps the idea was not quite commendable, but at any rate the story shows that little Benjamin remembered from whom all these mercies came.

Then, never allow a morsel to be wasted. "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost," said our Saviour. There was a wonderful amount of bread left, but no fish, and those twelve basketsfull of crumbs must be saved for the poor. I am always grieved to see food wasted, though so often we find bread thrown into the streets. I think I never saw such abject poverty as in Palestine; the people there are very poor. After we had dined, these poor Arabs would come and not only pick up the crusts and morsels of bread that were left, but even orange skins and such things they would eat with avidity, as if they were just starved. "Waste not, want not," is a very good motto.

And, oh! do not waste time—those precious hours that can never be recalled. How many have to regret the waste of time. Even Queen Elizabeth, in her dying moments, would have given everything she had for hours which then she felt had been wasted. "Millions of money for an inch of time!" she exclaimed; "how I have wasted my time!" See to it, then, that you use these hours which God has given you to good purpose.

But the great lesson of all is contained in those words of our Lord, "Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." We have something more than our body to look to and feed and nourish. "Man cannot live by bread alone." In one sense he can. Give me plenty of bread and fish, and this body of mine can live very well on that. But I am something more than body. This soul of mine cannot live on bread and fish; it must have the living bread from heaven. And none need be without that bread. There is not one here whom Jesus has not promised to receive if you will only trust Him, and give yourselves to Him. Take Him, then, as your Saviour, trust Him as your Friend, serve Him as Master, and worship Him as God. And if you do this, He will make you truly happy, both in this world and in the world to come. You will then be perfectly secure for this life. There will always be some meal in the barrel if you trust the Lord. And when this little life is ended, you will be taken to that happy home in the world beyond, where there are no more hunger and no more thirst; no more sorrow and no more sin; where God shall be your exceeding great reward.

LETTING JESUS IN.

This is a text which even the very little children can repeat, and which many of them already know; yet it is one of the most wonderful texts in the Bible. It begins with a word that calls attention: "Behold," as much as to say, "Here is a wonderful sight; stop and look at it: here is something worth seeing."

Yes, and it is worth seeing. Have you children ever seen a beautiful picture, or a photograph of it, which illustrates this text? It shows a door which has long been shut, for the ivy is growing over it, and the weeds are tall in front of it, and at this door Someone is standing. He has a light in his hand, and there is a crown of thorns on his head, and He is knocking at the door, listening to hear if anyone is coming to open it, and his face is so loving and yet so sad. You wonder as you look how anyone can keep Him waiting. What is the door which you see in the picture, and of which this little verse tells you? Most of you will say at once, "It is the door of the heart." Yes, the door of your own heart. But some may say, "I don't understand that; has my heart a door? and how can I open or shut it?" Your little heart, your love, is like a house, large enough to hold a great many things and people. There is a place in it for father and mother, and sisters and brothers, and many friends; a place, too, for the books you like and the little treasures you prize so highly. But it is a house that should have a place in it, the largest place of all, for Someone better even than father or mother—Someone who has died that He might have you always with Him now that He lives in glory: that wonderfully tender Friend who stands in the picture waiting and listening.

I wonder how many of you have opened the door to this Friend, this loving Jesus, and have asked Him to take possession of all the house, have given Him your love and trust. Some have shut the door tightly; they are afraid that if they let Jesus in, He will turn out some of the things there—some, perhaps, that they dearly love. He will only turn out the bad things—the naughty tempers, the cross looks, the selfish ways, these which often make you very miserable and very unhappy. I have heard people say, "I don't want to let Jesus in yet, because He would make me dull and gloomy." No, no; that is what Satan is trying to make you believe; but when Jesus comes, He comes to make you glad and happy. He brings a light with Him which will shine even when you are in trouble and sorrow. I have known many children who have let Jesus in, and they could tell you how happy He makes them, and how He brightens all their lives. One wrote to me, "It is so nice to think that whether I am writing a French verb or a Latin exercise, I can do it all for Jesus."

How does He knock at the door? In some quiet time at mother's knee, some words your teacher spoke in the Sunday-school, when that little voice we call conscience has spoken more loudly than usual, have you not said to yourself, "I wish I loved Jesus"? That was when He knocked, and waited for you to let Him in. Then, perhaps, some little friend of yours was taken ill, and died, or one of the dear ones at home was taken to the Father's house above, or you yourself were very ill. These were times when God knocked again, but you did not open to Him. Now, again to-day He knocks in these words; will you keep Him waiting still? Will you not rather say to Him—

O come to my heart, Lord Jesus, come,
There is room in my heart for Thee.

AMONG FLEMISH WORKPEOPLE.

DEAR SIR,—I have lately received from Pastor de Jonge, of Brussels, a letter communicating his decision to devote himself entirely to the work of evangelisation, which he has successfully carried on for some years past in the working-class districts of Brussels. Pastor de Jonge has gained the affection and esteem of those amongst whom he labours, and is aided by an efficient staff of earnest workers, some of whom are evangelists and students from his town training-school, whilst others are young people, members of the Dutch Church of which he is pastor. The effort originated in a mission started in connection with the Monthly Tract Society's kiosk at the Brussels Exhibition of 1880. It was for a time conducted by an undenominational committee in Brussels, in correspondence with one in London, but subsequently, with the full approval of the London Committee, M. de Jonge undertook the entire responsibility. Of late almost the whole pecuniary support of the mission has devolved upon M. de Jonge's countrymen, the Dutch, aided by a small annual grant from the Foreign Evangelisation Society. It was one of the dying requests of the late Miss Esther Beamish, who knew Belgium so well, that this noble work should be sustained by her friends in England. Pastor de Jonge writes:—

"The Lord has blessed us in a most striking manner. He has permitted us, in three different places, to carry the blessed Gospel to the poor neglected Flemings of this Romish city. But the extension of the work has constrained me to make a change in my position. As you know, I am the pastor of the Dutch Church. But the work of evangelisation, commenced by English brethren in 1880, and which has since devolved upon me, has been so blessed by the Lord, and has become such a power in Brussels, that I can no longer divide my strength between my flock and the work of evangelisation. I must choose. Either I must continue to be a pastor, and let the work drop, or I must resign my pastorate, in which another brother can succeed me, and trust to the Lord for my livelihood."

I have only to add that Pastor de Jonge is solely responsible for rent and other expenses of his mission, and that if any of your readers should feel it laid upon them to assist him, they can do so through Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, S.W., the treasurer of the Foreign Evangelisation Society. The worthy pastor, whose address is 31, Rue de Berlaimont, Brussels, will also be very glad to have a call from any English Christian passing through Brussels. Meetings are held every evening in one or more of the mission rooms. M. de Jonge regretfully states that during the past summer he has not had the visit of a single English Christian. I may also add that he holds Flemish services weekly in some of the mission halls of the Belgian Evangelical Society, recently described in your columns; the work referred to by Mr. Wood is carried on in French amongst the French-speaking population.

Yours in the Lord's service,
JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

EDINBURGH GRADUATES IN VIENNA.—Drs. G. P. Smith and Rainy (Principal Rainy's son) addressed a meeting in the Scotch Church, giving an account of their conversions, and details of the wonderful work among the Edinburgh medical students during the last two winters. This new departure was very acceptable to their hearers.

MISS MACPHERSON'S PROTEGÉS.

To my Dear Young Friends in Canada.

Ve have left dear Canada, and crossed the great tlantic, for the thirty-sixth time, to do for other ttle children, by God's help, what we have done or you. I ask your prayers that the coming vinter may be our fullest and best in the Home t Hackney, where many a happy time we have ad together with kind friends, reading the preious Bible. Often we long to see you each one, nd talk and sing again together our loved hymns bout Jesus and his love.

The time spent at the Stratford Home was ery restful; many an old boy and girl paid us a isit during the months of August and September. 'he elder ones who are holding on to the narrow vay find that the trials of life are much lightened y having Jesus as their never-failing Friend nd Counsellor. Others, who have grown up to e young men, do not endeavour to keep their ituations, so, like a rolling stone, they gather othing in the Post-Office Savings Bank. Last vinter several spent their savings in taking a rip to England, but all had to regret it, and vith difficulty they got back again to Canada, eir money having been spent in the foolish ustom of "treating" their old companions. mongst the 210 who arrived at Stratford this ummer, 50 were the youngest, sweetest little ets for adoption; only 20 of them now remain, ntil the right home opens up for them.

We know many of you, if able, would like to end a loaf of bread to feed these little pets; we ook up to God for every bit of bread, and every arment, continually asking Him to keep us om going into debt. We believe in "Ask, and e shall receive." In London, where we live, ere is great want of employment, hence much isery from lack of food and shelter. Those of ou who remember to pray, do not forget us day y day. Your letters are always a great cheer. ext to hearing that you have become Christians, e have great joy in knowing that you are growg up useful members of churches where the ospel is fully preached; also attached to the unday-school, and fitting yourselves to become achers of little children.

Miss Webb, who went to China in 1885, is etting on with the language; Mr. Fred. Auvache also doing the same in India. Mr. Jackson nd Mr. Saunders returned with us from Canada, nd will prepare to go to the heathen. May any more be "called" and "chosen" to follow em. Meanwhile, pursue your education steadily uring the winter. It is the diligent whom od calls into his vineyard. Should trouble efall you, remember my sister, Mrs. Merry, or r. William Merry, will gladly give you counsel; you are lonely, tell Jesus; if tempted, tell esus. He can help you, and He is ever ready forgive the penitent child.

Let me give you some notes on Bible searching at may be helpful to you:—

CHRISTIANS—WHAT THEY ONCE WERE.

Under the power of the devil (Eph. ii. 2).
Fulfilling the desires of the flesh and mind (Eph. ii. 3).
Christless, friendless, promiseless, hopeless, Godless (Eph. ii. 12).
Guilty before God (Rom. iii. 19).
At enmity with God (Rom. viii. 7).
Loving darkness rather than light (John iii. 19).
Serving divers lusts and pleasures (Titus iii. 3).

SAVED THROUGH THE BLOOD OF CHRIST—

Given as an atonement (Lev. xvii. 11).
For the remission of sins (Matt. xxvi. 23; Heb. ix. 22).
For our justification (Rom. v. 9).
For our redemption (Eph. i. 7; Col. i. 20; Rev. v. 9; 1 Pet. i. 18, 19).
For our cleansing (1 John i. 7; Rev. vii. 14).
To bring us nigh to God (Eph. ii. 13; Heb. ix. 12).
To make us conquerors (Rev. xii. 11).

CHRISTIANS—WHAT THEY NOW ARE.

Alive unto God (Rom. vi. 11).
A new creature (2 Cor. v. 17).
Accepted in the beloved (Eph. i. 6).
Forgiven (1 John ii. 12).
Cleansed and justified (1 Cor. vi. 11).
Sons of God (John i. 12; 1 John iii. 1).
Heirs of God (Rom. viii. 17).
Beloved of God, called to be saints (Rom. i. 7).
Partakers of the heavenly calling (Heb. iii. 1).
Raised together, and sitting in heavenly places with Christ (Eph. ii. 6).
Blessed with all spiritual blessings (Eph. i. 3).

Now, my dear Canadian friends and children, who have passed through our Homes, as age is increasing, and my ability to come and see you is lessening, may I ask you to keep up the connection between us by taking a copy of The Christian week by week, at your own charges? The rate is two dollars a year, with a monthly copy of The Herald of Mercy. Address: Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., London, England. For more than twenty years I have been a contributor to its pages, and so long as I am spared to work for the Master you would be able to follow the work in the dear old Homes, as well as God's work throughout the world. You and I would thus keep in harmony until we meet, I trust, with Jesus in the everlasting home above.

In The Christian, also, you would read letters from time to time from those now in China, India, and Africa, who are labouring among the heathen. They have aided us in your training, and are showing you an example of my desire, before God, that when you are converted, many of you may be called into fields of usefulness in spreading the Gospel.—I am, yours ever faithfully in the Master's service,

Annie Macpherson.

WORK AMONGST PRUSSIAN JEWS.

Two Jewish brethren, Messrs. David Baron and Henry Barnett, working in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, are now making a three months' tour through North-east Prussia, preaching to their fellow-countrymen. From Mr. Baron's diary we glean the following particulars:—

They commenced work in Stettin on Sept. 17. In that port there are from 2500 to 3000 Jews, mostly of the wealthy rationalistic class, and they have a magnificent "Temple." During the day many shops were visited. The reception accorded to them varied, but opposition was most frequent. Some were disposed to argue, and a few accepted copies of the New Testament. During the day they distributed fifteen copies, but of these eight had to be in German, as the receivers did not know Hebrew. The following day, while visiting, they were inveigled into a house, where two Jews, after asking them about the New Testament, attacked them, but they escaped without serious injury. Although it was the Jewish Sabbath most of their shops were open. Many of the Jews listened, and they were enabled to preach Christ to them. On Sunday the 19th, after service they went to the house of an influential Jew. His room was full of Jewish neighbours, who conversed freely, but said they only looked for a higher civilisation and the brotherhood of man.

The next day Mr. Baron went to Greifenhafen to visit the Jews there. The Rabbi taunted him with the fact that the drunkards and criminals were the Christians. He distributed five New Testaments, and returned to Stettin the same evening, where the co-workers had the joy of hearing one Jew say that henceforth he would be a Christian.

They left Stettin on the 21st for Stargard, travelling with some Jews. The President of the Synagogue received them kindly, and directed them to the Rabbi. Some opposition was met with in the evening, but thirteen gladly accepted New Testaments. The morrow was market-day, when groups of merchants gathered round them, who accepted copies of the New Testament and tracts.

They left that town in the evenings, and have since that time visited Stolp, Marienburg, Dantzig and Elbing. At Stolp, their supply of German Testaments was insufficient, and they purchased others at a Jewish shop. Work at Dantzig was commenced on September 24. Many corn merchants from Russia were in the town, and they had to endure much opposition, being threatened with expulsion, but some listened attentively, and were anxious to hear the Gospel.

CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.

During the Christmas and New Year season of 1885-6 about 600,000 illustrated letters were distributed. For every class the C. L. M. letters are now prepared. The new Occasional Letters supply a need not always met by those issued in sets, which are directly evangelistic. One of these, enclosed in its Christmas envelope, with an added word or two from the sender, will often brighten a lonely Christmas and cheer a solitary sick-bed.

But the largest distributions of the C. L. Mission are those of the letters for general use, commonly known as the "G. U." Letters. These letters being adapted for distribution among policemen, sailors, soldiers, miners, servants, &c., and for general parochial and district purposes, have carried the Yule-tide message far and near, while illustrated letters for children and young people, for the aged, &c., are on the catalogue.

Helpers are specially desired who will organise for single Institutions, or departmental distributions for factories, infirmaries, &c., and especially for the large London Unions. The mode of organisation is so simple that an invalid from her sofa can arrange on a larger or smaller scale with little exertion. Secretaries will everywhere be thankful for promises of such co-operation.

District and village organisers are also much needed. Many C. L. M. helpers of early years have been removed. As the general subscriptions are devoted exclusively to the free grants of letters and Scripture-cards, distributed through the Secretaries, it is earnestly hoped that new friends may be raised up. A few shillings will supply a small institution with the "Letters from the King;" and for the Christmas Postal Service every form of supply is welcome.

In all parts of the world, by means of these simple messengers, the good news of life through a crucified Saviour will be proclaimed. Among the snows, to the scattered lumberers of Canada, and in the ports and camps of Egypt and the Mediterranean; in islands of the Pacific, and in the wards of City hospitals and infirmaries; in garrisons of the Punjaub, and amongst English sailors in Japan; in solitary attics, and amongst the employés of busy factories; among railway servants in India and Burmah; to the Chinese of American laundries, and to the telegraph workers who link England with America; in remote villages, and amongst the sad outcasts of street and dock; in foreign cities and mountain châlets; to the deep-sea fishermen, and to the toilers of South American regions, the same tidings will be sent forth with the individuality of personal persuasion. But the widest and most carefully organised distribution is of no avail without the Breath of Life, by which the humblest instrumentality may become the power of God unto salvation. In the world-wide Christmas Letter Mission Prayer-meeting of Christmas Eve will you join?

Full particulars of the C. L. Mission work, and a paper on "Hints to Workers," may be obtained by application (with addressed postal wrapper) to Miss Bewes, Central Secretary, 67, Ladbroke-grove, London, W. A "specimen packet," price 3d., a "letter and card packet," price 1s. 6d., or a "complete sample packet," price 4s., may be obtained, post free, by application to the publishers of the Mission, Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, 6, Kirby-street, Hatton Garden, E.C. The Hon. Treasurer is Miss E. Steele Elliott, 66, Mildmay Park, N.

We have received from Messrs. Hazell & Co. specimens of the literature sent out by the Mission. The letters are printed in clear bold type, and the Gospel message is given in the form of a personal appeal. A special series is addressed to children, and is more fully illustrated. Some seasonable greetings in verse are also provided, printed on note paper, with envelopes to match. The Christmas cards are neat in design and colouring; all bear a text of Scripture.

THE JESUITS IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—It is not only in Europe that the Jesuits are showing renewed activity, nor in Glasgow only that they make use of the law to get children under their influence. From a report of the work of the missionaries of the Bala Society, on the West Coast of India, I translate the following, in order that sympathy, prayer, and watchfulness may be quickened.

In the region where these beloved brethren labour, there are very numerous Romanist communities, dating back their origin to the Jesuit missions of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. They have little to distinguish them from the heathen around them, and used, till lately, to be under the care of men of the Carmelite order; but quite recently they are showing great activity; the Jesuits have once more appeared on the scene, and to-day Mangalore is the seat of a Jesuit bishopric, with convent and fully organised schools. They seek in every possible way to hinder the work of the evangelical missionaries—nor is this, from their standpoint, to be wondered at.

Mr. Schmolk, the superintendent of the girls' boarding-school at Chombala, gives the following sad case:—"A widow, who about six years ago, came out of heathenism, had her two girls in our school. This poor woman fell into sin. Seduced by a Roman Catholic, she gave birth to an illegitimate child. This necessitated her being excluded from the fellowship of the Lord's table. She at once threw herself into the arms of the Jesuit Mission, who sent her to the Nunnery at Mangalore, where she was readily welcomed. Presently I received a demand to give up the two girls, aged respectively fifteen and twelve. For nearly a twelvemonth I resisted all these demands, but was at length summoned to the District Court at Tellicherry, and required to produce the children. All that I could urge and prove as to the mother's immorality and unfitness for the charge of two girls went for nothing. It was decreed that by October 14 (last) I should deliver the poor girls to the custody of whomsoever the mother should appoint. I have had, accordingly, to deliver them to three nuns. Never have I been so utterly heartbroken as when I had to obey such an order from a British Court. The poor girls themselves, especially the elder, who had but lately been received at the Lord's table, cried to us, who were helpless in the matter, to save them from that which to them seemed so terrible. The elder one, poor Naomi, said, 'Oh! pray for me, pray for me, and if you hear that I have denied the Saviour, never believe it.'"

EVANGELISATION IN BAVARIA.

I noticed in your report of the recent Mildmay Conference that Bavaria was mentioned as hardly being touched by the Gospel. You will be glad to learn that a door has now been opened here. A few Christians of Bambery had been long and continually praying that God would send his servant, Dr. Ziemann. He came some time ago, and we were anxious about his reception, as the greater part of the population are Catholics, and only 4000 Protestants scattered amongst them. But God did above all we expected. A Catholic landlord gave his hall free of charge for the meeting, and refused to take any pay for light and attendance. Catholics, as well as Protestants, representing the highest as well as lowest station of life, came in such crowds, that the hall proved far too small. The Gospel declaration was listened to from beginning to end with deep attention; a solemn impression has evidently been made. There is quite a stir about it in the town; even a Catholic newspaper gave an account of the meeting, without one word of opposition.

There is a little colony of English Christians, but no one to hold services or give otherwise spiritual ministrations. Perhaps some one willing to serve God may feel inclined to settle for a little while in this picturesque old town. E. v M.

SERVANTS IN FAMILIES.

A FRENCH OPINION.

Some months ago, passing through Paris, we bought a copy of Le Petit Journal, in which we found the article of which the following is a translation. It is reproduced here because much of it would apply to English no less than to French domestic life:—

The serious problem of domestic life has just been studied afresh, but this time by a man whose position has enabled him to see near at hand the great dangers of an organisation without any control or guarantee.

M. Bouniceau-Gesmon, Juge d'Instruction in Paris, has had possession of all the papers in connection with several recent celebrated criminal cases . . . and he has written a book, "Domestiques et Maîtres," of which the fourth edition has just appeared. The book is he work of a moralist and reformer.

It was, however, impossible not to blame the imprudence and selfishness of hose mothers who abandon their children to depraved domestics, and who continue their life of fêtes and pleasures whilst the poor little creatures are ruined (flétris).

After a summary of the iniquities of the criminal cases, the author exclaims:—"Sad mothers of families indeed, and quite unworthy of the name, are those women who dote upon worldly pleasures and fêtes, which are as unsatisfactory as infatuating, and who, in order to gratify their coquetry and vanity, regard their children as a weariness to be got rid of, and do not hesitate to sacrifice duty to pleasure, by removing them out of their path, giving them up without surveillance to the first girls they find, whom they get to know by chance, upon the commonest information!

"God knows the number of these unnatural mothers, who in our days have their heads turned by the attraction of luxury and the seduction of the world! To these women, without moral education, the husband is only a discordant note in their lives, and the children only playthings to be amused with at certain times, and to be put aside at will. Try to speak to them of duty, sacrifice, and devotion! Away with it! It is a language unknown to their heart!

"'What! shut ourselves from the world, and bury in the insipid calm of domestic life those charms which nature has bestowed, and condemn ourselves to pass our youth prosaically bent over a cradle, as sentinel, to preserve the treasure it contains from the approach of, and contact with, vice!

"'Is not the servant who arrived yesterday from the registry office there to replace the mother and to keep good watch? And cannot one in all security shine, sparkle, and whirl, smilingly sinking in the arms of an elegant dancer to the sound of the orchestra, amid the dazzling lights?'

"What does it matter, that during this voluptuous intoxication, debauchery sits at the pillow of the child, ruining it for ever by its impure contact? Has not the mother triumphed in the enjoyment of general homage and adulation? has not the cup of pride been satisfactorily emptied?

"I must say, however, that careless depravity is an exception; but it is enough that there have been instances to make it desirable that a remedy should be sought."

In the families of the middle-class in Paris, the servant is not sufficiently considered; she is and remains a stranger. This girl, who comes from no one knows where, and upon whom devolves the care of the house and children, is held' in perpetual suspicion; when not regarded even as an enemy.

M. Bouniceau-Gesmon would have her to be part of the family, that she might have her interest in it, and he believes this to be possible, even in Paris.

The first condition in order to this is to train one's own servants:—"In order to have good servants, care is needed not to follow the blind routine of the majority, which consists in taking them when their habits are formed, and when often already grown old in the vices of their profession. And instead of waiting until they have run from one house to another, by which they have only learned the half of what they ought to know, take them when quite young, and train them, adopt them, so to speak, and ameliorate their physical and moral condition, in exchange for their service and attachment, which, indeed, is the duty of every upright man who understands the laws which morality and social order impose on us. Recreation should be provided for them at home, and they should share in the joys of the family; and when thus taken young into one's service, they should be treated as the children of the house, and become their companions, the most assiduous care being given to their religious and moral education.

"Then, if domestics are to become attached to those who employ them, their interests must be considered, and their wages progressively increased; if there are several servants in a house, their place should be appointed, and if their qualities accord with this position, then their lives should be made as agreeable as possible, and their future provided for. The best plan would be that masters and servants should uuite in forming a society, so as to assure a retiring fund to provide pensions for old and good servants who can no longer work. There are very few masters in France, who have any regard for the security of their homes, who would refuse their mite to this work, which might become rich immediately. Is it not just that a good servant who has served well all her life should have an assured retreat in her old days? And would not the hope of this, after say twenty years of service, encourage a servant to good conduct?"

It appears to us that the money which falls to the State through lack of heirs, and which amounts to several hundred thousands of francs annually, and which, being an extra supply, cannot be reckoned in the necessary budget, might be, if not the whole, yet in good part used as pensions for such persons. Nothing could be more rational and justifiable than such a use of this money, for is not the accumulation the result of the combined labour and economy of the family? And, the family becoming extinct, is it not just that the treasure amassed by it, and thus become a windfall, should return to the social family, of which the individual family is in reality the personification?

BLIND IN CHINA.—Mr. W. H. Murray, the Peking agent of the National Bible Society of Scotland, has returned home on furlough afte fifteen years' service. He has made long journey in North China and Southern Mongolia. His chie labours, however, have been confined to the city o Peking. He has been a great advocate of Melville Bell's system of visible speech, which h adapted to the Chinese. He also inaugurated school for blind boys, and taught them the Braill system. A "working woman" has offered £100 provided that nine other persons will give a simila sum before the close of the year, or that eightee persons will give £50 each. Mr. W. J. Slowan Secretary of the Bible Society in Glasgow, will b glad to receive responses to this challenge on Mr Murray's behalf.

A MISSIONARY FAREWELL.—The Committe and friends of the Christian Vernacular Educatio Society for India met on Friday, Oct. 22, at th office, 7, Adam-street, Strand, to bid farewell t Dr. Murdoch on his return to India. The Earl o Northbrook presided, and said a few words o kindly farewell. Rev. William Gray, of th C. M. S., Rev. John Sharp, of the B. and F. Bibl Society, Rev. James Johnston, and Mr. Henr Morris, Hon. Sec. of the Society, spoke in recogni tion of Dr. Murdoch's great services during mor than forty years, and several brethren commende him and his work to the protection of the Lord Dr. Murdoch left England in the Dacca, on Thurs day, Oct. 28. The chief work of this Society, o which he is the Indian agent, is training nativ Christian teachers, and preparing healthy nativ literature with a thoroughly Christian tone. special effort is being made at the present momen to give an impetus to the latter department o labour.

MR. AITKEN AT NORWICH.

Mr. Aitken, writes a correspondent, has lately concluded a mission at St. Michael's Coslany, Norwich, and we have reason to thank God for a very blessed season of refreshment and revival which has been vouchsafed to us. During the second week of the mission the church was crowded at the evening services, and there were also large attendances at the morning meetings, when addresses were given upon subjects of a very practical character connected with the Christian life—service, temptation, worldliness, the prize of our vocation, and Holy Communion, being the topics treated in these addresses.

In the evenings a very solemn feeling seemed to prevail, during the second week especially, and many remained behind each night for counsel and direction, while night by night Mr. Stephens held meetings for the deepening of spiritual life amongst Christians in the Mission-room after the sermon in church was ended. Mr. Stephens has also had large gatherings of children and young people, in which a very deep and manifest impression seemed made upon his youthful auditors. He seems to have an astonishing faculty of fascinating the young. His bright face and cheery tones seem to win their confidence at once, and make them feel as if they had found a real friend in him. Mrs. Crouch has daily addressed gatherings of women only in the Mission-room, and her labours have been, we believe, much blessed of God.

Our hearts are full of joy and praise at the many answers which have been granted to our prayers. Between 300 and 400 gathered round the Lord's table at the thanksgiving services on Friday. Mr. Aitken has proceeded to Birmingham to conduct a mission at Aston Parish Church.

EMIGRANTS' HOME, BLACKWALL.

I have lately paid several visits to this Home, and I should like to give my testimony to the marvellous order which prevails, and the comfort and cleanliness which invariably call out grateful acknowledgment from the emigrants. For some years a fruitful work for the Master has been carried on quietly and unobtrusively, but with precious results in the winning of souls. The atmosphere of the Home is one of peace, and all who visit it become conscious of a quieting influence, which reaches alike the Christian workers and the roughest of the poor fellows, who are under a roof given up, in small as well as great matters, to the guidance of the Lord.

One must be present at one of the Gospel meetings held every evening to appreciate the value of such a Home for those on the eve of embarkation; hundreds of souls have been born again, and backsliders brought back to the fold by the stirring Gospel message faithfully given in those little meetings. Last week 450 emigrants,—men, women, and children,—were in the Home for several days. Lord Radstock and other Christian friends preached the Gospel with very good results. I have seen the testimony of men and women from far-off lands, the whole current of whose lives has been changed and purified by the knowledge of Christ, gained often the night before embarkation. Their letters overflow with gratitude and thankfulness to the workers at the Home.

Left-off clothing, both for children and adults, will be very useful, as well as toys, books, &c., for children. Many of the large families who are constantly passing through the Home are insufficiently provided with clothing for their long journey, especially those coming from Ireland. It would be a great kindness if any of your readers would enable Mr. Wilké, the Superintendent of the Home, to supply their deficiency.

A Worker.

A BOON FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

During recent years, much, but not too much, attention has been directed to the dangers which beset young women when travelling without friends or protectors, and to the many traps that are laid for alluring the inexperienced to destruction in all great centres of population. Many efforts have been made to remove and counteract these evils, and amongst the varied agencies engaged, none has been more successful than Y.W.C.A.'s.

In connection with these organisations, a society named the "Traveller's Aid" was started in 1885, and since that time it has accomplished much. Its local secretaries meet girls on their arrival in towns, where there is a branch, and will assist them to obtain employment. An agent visits all the London railway stations regularly, and a second, who speaks several languages, engaged in conjunction with the Society for the Protection of Jewish Girls, visits the boats arriving at St. Catherine's and Blackwall Docks to offer help to any young women who need protection. A lodging-house has been opened near one of the large railway stations, and others are in contemplation. Placards giving the addresses of Y.W.C.A. Homes and that of a lady resident in the place, have been hung in the waiting-rooms of many railway stations in the United Kingdom.

It is, however, when landing from the steamers at continental and colonial ports that protection is most necessary. To meet this need, in addition to such agencies as have been mentioned, handbills have been issued, warning young women not to accept offers of help from unknown persons, nor to go to any address given them by strangers. This warning is printed in English, French, and German, and below the warning addresses in a number of towns are given, to which the young women may safely go. These papers are hung up in packets on board the steamers, so that passengers may take copies away with them. The lists of names are varied, according to the route and destination of the boats.

We would commend the organisation to those interested in young women, and would urge our readers to provide any whom they may know about to travel with the addresses of the local secretaries in the towns to which they may be going. These may be obtained from the secretary, Miss E. Dimock, 16a, Old Cavendish-street, W., who would also arrange to meet girls at the railway stations, if due notice of their arrival be given.

RICHARD WEAVER IN ST. GILES.

A noticeable feature of Mr. Weaver's five days' mission here last week, was that all the meetings were well attended by the rougher class of men inhabiting the network of dingy streets and squalid courts and alleys of St. Giles. We are happy to record the blessed fact that many souls found peace in believing God's message of redeeming love so powerfully delivered evening after evening by the veteran evangelist. It is hoped that he may visit St. Giles again for a longer mission early in the coming year.

Mr. George Hatton's presence at two of the meetings was welcomed with much joy by his people, who sorely miss their pastor in his protracted absence from his loved labours in their midst. The earnest band of workers by whom he is surrounded were to be seen after each meeting dealing with numbers of anxious inquirers in the rooms at the rear of the chapel.

WESTBOURNE GROVE Y.M.C.A.—On Tuesday, Nov. 3, the first annual meeting of this branch was held in the hall, Queen's-road, Mr. J. D. Allcroft in the chair. The report read by the Secretary, Mr. Wild, showed that there were eighty-one members and eighty associates. During the year a good work has been carried on amongst commercial young men, and many have been gathered into the fold of Christ. Two very stirring addresses were given by Mr. W. Hind Smith and Mr. Oscar Owers. The hall was crowded to overflowing. During the evening a selection of sacred pieces was rendered by the "Kildare Mission Choir."

THE McALL MISSION.

Pasteur Theodore Monod, of Paris, sent this year to Glasgow to give an account of how the McAll Mission influences his countrymen, gave a quaint address in the Christian Institute to an audience composed of all denominations. He knew that when we sent missionaries to China, we liked to secure a native to hear his mind on the subject. So he had come in his native costume—which he was sorry was not more curious or attractive—to give the French side of the story. To tell the truth, he and a few other ministers with whom Mr. McAll held a small conference in 1871, thought he might do pretty well for an Englishman, with his evangelical halls in Paris. Mr. McAll had shown that they themselves did not understand the way to the hearts of gay Paris. Speaking a peculiar French, he had found a way with loving, broken words and kindly hand-clasps, to the hearts of men, women, and children. The truth is not only accepted, but seized by his listeners, and they are saved, not by the sign of the cross, but by its power. For the first time financial difficulties hamper the Mission's progress, and a few outlying stations have had to be abandoned meantime. They are loath to lose one of the 80,000 worshippers, but unless money comes in they must.

Mr. McAll's labours are telling on him, and, to curb expenses, he has quietly parted with his paid assistant, to burden himself still more heavily. Scotland has been faithful in helping, both with prayers and money; would it be too much for her to give Mr. McAll a Secretary? Converts from the Mission are full of love and zeal; the missionary in wild Corsica has the full confidence of the people, one man coming to consult him about an enemy he desired to shoot! After one, two, three prayers, the missionary soothed the man, and the enemy was not shot that time.

If Mr. McAll's broken French is as expressive as Pasteur Theodore Monod's gestures, spiritual difficulties in the McAll Mission should pass away as surely as financial ones should do after hearing that quaint address.—Christian Leader.

In a letter on this subject, Miss Louisa Cavendish, 19, Chester-street, Belgrave-square, writes:—The McAll Mission has studded the great city of Paris, and some of the more important provincial towns, with centres of Christian light, and, in so far as it is possible to form an estimate of results, they have been almost without precedent in the annals of mission enterprise. For the first time for centuries the Gospel can be preached without hindrance in that land of superstition and infidelity, and an open door, surpassing all expectation, is found in the general willingness of the people to listen to the simple story of the love of God in Christ. What wonder, then, that the zealous agents of the Mission, yielding to earnest solicitation, have pushed their efforts far and wide.

This most blessed work is crippled by a deficit of some two thousand pounds; it is compelled to withdraw from fields already occupied, and in other ways obliged to narrow its sphere of usefulness. Should it be so? Ought not Christians in England rather join with helping hands in Scotland and America to relieve the devoted servants of Christ of wearing anxiety; to prevent the abandonment of newly-conquered outposts, and to multiply the means of scattering the bread of life among the millions of spiritually destitute who lie at our doors? I write to ask Christians of all denominations to interest their friends in the work. What is specially asked is, that those who have the opportunity will aid by means of drawing-room meetings.

On November 11, Mr. S. R. Brown, one of the most successful of the Mission's evangelists, will arrive in England; he will be prepared to address meetings, and to give every kind of information. As Hon. Secretary of the London Ladies' Auxiliary, I shall have much pleasure in supplying information, and rendering assistance in arranging for meetings.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain portrait and biographical sketch of Mr. Ira D. Sankey; with a new song composed by him.

The friends of the McAll Mission are requested to join with the workers in Paris in observing Friday, 12th inst., as a day of special prayer on behalf of the work and its needs.

The interest in the annual concert of prayer arranged by the Evangelical Alliance is growing yearly, as evidenced by the fact that the number of copies of the Programme now issued, from the Alliance office alone, amounts to about 70,000. In addition to this it is translated and circulated in many languages, including Greek, Turkish, Arabic, Japanese, Chinese, and others, besides various European languages. The document is also reprinted in English by tens of thousands, both in this country and in America. See page 16.

We understand that Mr. John M. Scroggie has arranged with Mr. Samuel McKenzie that the latter should go out as an evangelist under his charge. Mr. McKenzie has been very successful in Campbeltown, N.B., where he has been a missionary for some years. He has also had remarkable blessing in several places where he has conducted evangelistic meetings.

We welcome into the journalistic brotherhood The British Weekly—latest born of a prolific race. Without being able to discover any specially vacant niche for it in the temple of literature, we recognise in its first issue signs of a vitality that will carve an ample niche for itself. It has made a distinct mark in its census of attendance at public worship. How far the churches themselves are responsible for their powerlessness, as a rule, to attract the multitude, we do not undertake to say. That the masses can be drawn to hear the Gospel, and held too, was fully proved by the two missions of Messrs. Moody and Sankey; and is proved to-day in many a theatre, music and mission hall.

Our young contemporary is radical in its politics. It is a "believer in progress," because it believes "in the advancing reign of Christ." We are sanguine as to the power of democratic rule to bring in the Millennium speedily; but if The British Weekly will help to educate the British workman in the principles of godliness, and righteousness, and holiness, it will do far more than justify its existence. The editor of the new paper, we may add, is Rev. W. R. Nicoll, who so ably conducts The Expositor. We heartily wish him bodily health and mental vigour for his fresh task.

It may have been discourteous, and even unmannerly, of Mr. F. N. Charrington to insist on unburdening his soul within the charmed precincts of the Mayoral Mansion after the Lord Mayor had commanded him to be silent. But if temperance and other reformers are to wait the convenience and inclination of the do-nothing politicians and functionaries of the day, they may as well retire into a monastery and let the world run headlong into the deep sea of drink and destruction. We honour our brave friend, Mr. Charrington, for his outspoken, though rude, protest against the callousness and indifference with which so many of our public men regard the drink curse. If the People's Palace in the East-end is to be a revived Cremorne—as it inevitably will if it is licensed to deal in intoxicating drink—far better that the site should be left open. It would then at least be a good playground for the children of the teeming East.

The Pall Mall Gazette suggests that the trustees of the Palace should pledge themselves to settle the questions of the drink and of Sunday opening by a plébiscite of those for whom its benefits are intended. No true friend of the people will be satisfied with less than that. We do not ourselves think that would be sufficient to induce Christians or teetotallers to subscribe to the scheme.

An Irish contemporary says, with reference to the subject of Bishop's palaces :—

> The days of prince bishops are gone, and palaces had much better go with them. Divines are now required exercising a personal ministry, reigning over the hearts of both clergy and people by spiritual forces, which make far greater demands on the powers of the episcopate than were required in the dead times of the Church.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol recently suggested that an increase of the episcopate might be provided for out of existing episcopal incomes if the bishops were relieved of the expenses attendant upon keeping up palaces. It is beyond doubt that an important factor in the influence which the late Bishop Fraser gained in Manchester was his residence in a moderately-sized house in the city. From all the references to, and discussions about, bishops' and archbishops' palaces, it is striking to turn to the simple declaration of Jesus: "the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

Last year, when the Faith-Healing Conference took place at the Agricultural Hall, we remarked that a gentleman from Australia had been received without credentials. Mr. J. W. Wood is now established in connection with a large Hall and Home at Brighton, the gift of a lady, and vested in three trustees—herself, himself, and another. Mr. Wood appears to be the proprietor of a monthly paper called Thy Witness, published in South Australia, to which he writes from Brighton. His September letter makes it evident that he is busily propagating a delusion similar to that of the Agapemone.

We regard it as demoralising. Here is an extract :—

> Forty years ago the Son of man came in judgment by his Spirit, judged and cast out that wicked one; the devil, who had been secreted in the flesh since the fall of Adam, and during the Gospel dispensation has been suppressed by Divine grace, is now cast out and destroyed by the brightness of his coming in the Spirit of glory.

It is abundantly taught in the paper that "the redemption of our body" ("for which," said Paul, "we groan within ourselves, waiting") has already been attained by those who have received the testimony of these "chosen people." Therefore, now, the flesh in them is no longer, as Paul described it, in antagonism to the Spirit, but reconciled. In those, therefore, who have received "the testimony" its actings must be holy!! It is not necessary to indicate the enormities possible to a delusion such as this.

We have received several letters on this subject. One correspondent says that Mr. Wood denounces the teachings of the Agapemone. We shall be glad to be shown wherein his own teaching differs from it as to its essential error.

The Expositor (in addition to Dr. Maclaren's valuable expositions of the Colossians, and Dr. Davidson's first article on Job) had, in its October number, a powerful paper by the Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, in which a Christian woman and a wicked woman, as sketched by St. Peter, are contrasted. "A meek and quiet spirit," describes the one; "Having eyes full of an adulteress," is the loathsome picture of the other. Of this he says :—

> The eye once "full of an adulteress" may be filled with dust, but the ineradicable image has been carried to, and abides for ever in, that "inward eye" which is the "bliss" or bane, the heaven or hell of "solitude." This is a solemn argument for youth, when the vapour of imagination and passion are beginning to condense into habit; for that portion of manhood during which habit is becoming insoluble density. Let us beware of the lust of the eyes. Far from us be the questionable book, the shameful chronicle of the newspaper; the prurient picture, the dangerous stimulant of visible objects: the thought which the tender conscience knows should be sternly challenged before allowing it to pass into the citadel of the soul. Be ours the prayer, "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity;" and "Quicken Thou me in thy way."

On the other hand: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." The note of "The Speaker's Commentary" is well worth remembering :—

> Emphasise the pronoun. The Hebrew, "according to the tenor of his way," means the path specially fitted for the individual's character. Instead of sanctioning a rigorous monotony of discipline, under the notion that it is "the right way," the proverb enjoins the closest possible study of each child's temperament, and the adaptation of his way of life to that.

So that each generation moulds and forms the next for good or ill. And habits of either kind tend to permanency of character. On the one hand are men who, from incessant habit, "cannot cease from sin;" on the other, men who to old age walk in the way of righteousness and peace in which they were trained from infancy.

A remarkable article appears in the current Expositor, on St. Paul, by the Rabbinical Reader in the University of Cambridge. The logic of Dr. Schiller-Szinessy's position, as a non-believing Jew who has come to such an appreciative view of the work and writings of the Apostle of the Gentiles, is incomprehensible; nevertheless the article possesses a very unique interest. The writer holds that the Apostle was called Saul and Paul "simultaneously" by his parents, and is convinced that he is the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, which, by another hand, was translated into Greek. On the subject of the Israelites, this month's Leisure Hour says that Jews, or men of Jewish descent, edit all the great journals of Paris, including the Débats and Figaro, and fill the chief places in the Government.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS

From this World to that which is to Come.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

"I, writing of the way
And race of saints, in this our gospel day,
Fell suddenly into an allegory
About their journey, and their way to Glory,
In more than twenty things which I set down.
This done, I twenty more had in my crown;
And they again began to multiply,
Like sparks that from the coals of fire do fly."

THE PAPACY:

Its Position, Policy, and Prospects.

BY

Rev. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.,

Author of "History of Protestantism;" "The Papacy: Its History, Dogmas, Genius, and Prospects;" "Egypt and its Future," &c.

Reprinted from "The Christian" of September 30. Revised and extended. Printed in LARGE TYPE.

"If our statements be true,—and we stand to every one of them,—we are verily arrived at a CRITICAL AND SOLEMN CRISIS; and it is only the part of folly to shut our eyes to it and ignore it. We are persuaded that most earnest Christian men will take a different view of the part it becomes them to act, at this hour, to their country and their Church. We are in the midst of a great revolution; we are in the thick of a great battle. There is advance, great and rapid, along the whole line of the Roman Church; and along the whole extent of our Empire at home and abroad: and we can bestir ourselves not an hour too soon. We do not despair. We hear the voices that still cry, 'The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!' It is not against us only that Rome fights. She makes war on that Great King who sits on the 'Right Hand of Power': and He will overcome her. The modern Babylon is as certainly doomed as was the ancient Babylon: and the cry shall yet go up to heaven, 'Babylon the Great is fallen! is fallen!'"

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

NEW EDITION. JUST READY. Seventh Thousand.

The Veil Lifted:

OR,

The Romance and Reality of Convent Life

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

AUTHOR OF

"Personal Experiences of Roman Catholicism."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The style in which the narrative is written is at once simple and elegant, bearing in its natural form of expression, almost on every page, the impress of truth. There is no raving, no exaggeration, nothing that savours of dark and mysterious insinuations; nothing but the expression of deep regret that, under the sanction of the religion of Christ, such a system should be tolerated."
Berwick Warder.

"Convent life is death to all the finer feelings of our nature, and an outrage upon the plainest teachings of the blessed Gospel which has come to us to make us free. And here is a chapter on 'Righteousness by Works,' which is, of course, the great aim of the miserable bondage of the poor prisoners. The book is elegantly written, with a feeling and a pathos becoming such a dismal subject. Ye lovely maidenhood of England, beware of the fearful convent!"—The Christian World.

NEW EDITION. JUST READY. Tenth Thousand.

Personal Experience of Roman Catholicism.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

Author of "The Veil Lifted."

"This is a very interesting book. It would be so if it were a romance, it is so life-like, and of such important practical bearing; but it is much more so because it is not a romance, but a piece of actual life. It is a plain and veritable account of a most important crisis in a young person's religious experience—a temporary perversion to Roman Catholicism and (happily) a genuine recovery from it. Its exposure of the secrets of priestly denominination over the conscience, and of the practical working of the Confessional is . . . effective and invaluable."—The Freeman.

"Now, more than ever, ought books like this to be diligently circulated, for not only is Rome as busy with her wiles as heretofore, but in what was once a Protestant Church we have converts and the Confessional too. As for the book of Miss Richardson, we can answer for the accuracy of many of its details."
Evangelical Christendom.

"Any of our readers who may have friends or neighbours journeying Rome-ward, will do them a great kindness, and perhaps save them from much suffering, by giving them a copy of this pleasantly-written book."
The Christian World.

Price Sixpence, post free.

Babylonianism:

OR,

The Devil's Travesty of the Kingdom of the Son.

By ROBERT BROWN,

Author of "Jesuitism," "Gospel Truths," &c.

"An interesting comparison of the salient principles and practices of Popery, and those of the 'Babylonian Mother,' showing very clearly why the Apostle applied the name of Babylon to Rome."—The Rock.

A Four-page Tract, suitable for general distribution, 1s. 6d. per 100, post free.

"We fervently hope our Protestant friends will scatter broadcast the important tract which lies before us; setting forth as it does the true character and bloodthirsty aims of the Papal Church—for good assuredly will thereby be done. The price of the publication is only 1s. 6d. per 100."—British Protestant.

Popery and Protestantism

Brought to the Test of God's Holy Word in the form of a Catechism.

By Rev. THOMAS PHILLIPS.

Twenty-fifth Thousand. Tinted covers, 3d.

"Sets forth the distinguishing features of the two forms of faith in a manner at once simple, lucid, and comprehensive. The conclusion in every case is condemnatory of the Creed of Rome."
Carnarvon and Denbigh Herald.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.

The COMMITTEE earnestly APPEAL for the sum of £500. Shall the year close with the Mission in debt? Reader! do help for the Lord's own sake!

The Object of the Mission is the Glory of God and the Salvation of Immortal Souls.

The Means used are—
(1) The Preaching of the Word.
(2) Personal Conversation.
(3) Circulation of the Holy Scriptures.
(4) Distribution of Gospel Tracts.

"Our People" (who are always afloat, and therefore cannot share with those ashore the means of grace) are—
(1) Sailors of all Nationalities.
(2) Emigrants and Passengers.
(3) Soldiers going on Foreign Service.
(4) The Boys of the Training Ships.
(5) Bargemen, Watermen, and others employed on the River.

Temperance Work is not forgotten—
Sixteen hundred Pledges have been taken during 1885-6.

DONATIONS are URGENTLY WANTED, and will be received by the Society's bankers, Messrs. Lloyds, Barnetts, and Bosanquets (Limited), 62, Lombard-street, E.C.; or may be sent direct to the Secretary, who will also be glad to receive parcels of books, magazines, tracts, cards, cuffs, and mufflers; these latter for distribution during the winter months. All parcels should be addressed, carriage paid, to

Rev. HENRY BLOOMER, Secretary.

THE LORD'S SUPPER AT 8.15.

The "Rest" is ten minutes' walk from Shadwell and Aldgate Stations. Tea and Coffee from 5.30 to 6.15.

ON THE DEEP SEA.

FIVE YEARS AGO a visit paid to the North Sea Trawling Fleets proved, by God's Providence, the commencement of a new and happier epoch for the Deep-Sea Fishermen. Until the year 1881 thousands of our countrymen had toiled—not only in all weathers, at all seasons, and in daily perils of their lives, but —in complete isolation from all Christian or moral influences.

TO-DAY seven Mission Smacks cruise in the North Sea, serving as Church, Dispensary, Temperance Hall, and Club.

Two of these vessels were equipped at a cost of £4,550, and presented to the Institution by generous donors. The remaining five were originally private property, and merely lent for missionary purposes, and although a considerable portion of their purchase money has been defrayed during the current year, a sum of £6,000 still remains to be cleared off before they are free from mortgage and registered in the names of Trustees as the unencumbered property of the Mission.

Moreover, SEVEN VESSELS CANNOT MEET THE REQUIREMENTS OF TWELVE FLEETS, and all persons on shore who revere our beloved Queen (which every one DOES) and sympathise with the storm-tossed smacksmen (which every one OUGHT to do) are invited to contribute towards a special fund, to be styled the "Queen Victoria Purchase and Endowment Fund," in order that these Mission Smacks may be sent forth as at once a Memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee and as Heralds of Mercy from the King of kings, ministering healing and comfort to the bodies, and peace and gladness to the hearts, of the fishermen.

Sums received for this object will be paid to a special Deposit Account opened in the names of Trustees at Messrs. Gurney & Co.'s Bank, Great Yarmouth, and at Messrs. Lloyds, Barnetts and Bosanquets (Lim.), Lombard Street, E.C.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.—CASE of MR. J. TUNSTALL (SECOND NOTICE, by SPECIAL DESIRE).

This patient, whose recovery was little short of marvellous, is a very warm friend of mine—with great faith in my treatment—and stands out in striking contrast to those who (though professing to be grateful for great good received) are not willing, for the encouragement of others, and benefit to their fellow-creatures, for any reference to their case to appear in print.

It is now some five years, I think, since first I treated this case. It was one of very obstinate and aggravated character, but after long correspondence with me, and long course of my medicine, it was entirely subdued. He was raised from a mere shadow.

Writing me, September 10, he says:—"You published my case in a Christian paper some time since (about a year and a half ago). It did good, as I am so well known; if you could publish it again, it would do more. It is wonderful what your treatment did for me; I am better in health than I ever was in my life. I have been engaged, since then, in Sunday-school work at our Congregational church, and THIS IS A JOY TO ME. I cannot thank God sufficiently for so blessing the means."—Yours gratefully, JOHN TUNSTALL, 89, Coventry-street, KIDDERMINSTER.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

J. S. FRY & SONS BRISTOL LONDON & SYDNEY

The Pall Mall Gazette of November 3 contained two very significant indications of our progress Romewards. The first, "Anglican Prayers for the Dead," reports that—

> St. Matthias', Earl's-court, was crowded yesterday, All Souls' Day, on the occasion of a service in connection with the Guild of All Souls, many of those who had died during the year being mentioned by name. Six candles burned on the altar in addition to the sanctuary lamps, and the vestments and hangings were black. The preacher was Rev. S. Hollings, chaplain to the Sisters of Bethany, who took as his text Ezekiel xviii. 4, "Behold, all souls are mine." In the course of a long sermon he quoted from the opinions of the Fathers, and said that the English Church, like the Greek, rejects the doctrine of purgatory as commonly held at the Reformation, when Sir Thomas More spoke of departed souls as never resting; but in view of what Catholic Fathers had gathered out of Holy Scripture it was evident that she thought suffering after death for many souls highly probable. The Church's attitude on the point was very restrained, but they, the members of the Guild of All Souls, should pray for their departed loved ones, and plead the Holy Eucharist for them. Sermons and celebrations on behalf of the guild were held in nearly a hundred churches. [The italics are ours.]

We are not sufficiently well informed to know what is meant by pleading the Holy Eucharist, but we conclude that it implies the anti-scriptural idea of the Lord's Supper being a sacrifice, and is an additional error to that of praying for the dead.

We learn that the Congregational body in America is now agitated by the question whether there is a probation after death. If this notion should gain ground, praying for the dead may be expected to follow.

The other item of information supplied by The Pall Mall Gazette is entitled "The Pope's Love of England," and is to the effect that Lord Denbigh (who is a pervert to Rome), speaking at Rugby, Nov. 2, said that he recently had some conversation with the Pope, and it would be very interesting to the country to know what his Holiness said :—

> I have the greatest opinion of England. I feel grateful to her, and have the greatest respect for her laws and Constitution; for I see she is just, and therefore liberal. She is strong, and all the Catholics under her rule have greater liberty and freedom than they have in any other parts of the world. For that I thank and respect her, and I wish to help her to the utmost of my power wherever my influence can extend throughout the whole world. Not only can I help her in Ireland, but in the colonies and India, and I wish to do it to the utmost of my power; but I must know what I am doing. I have no accurate means of knowing now what is doing in England, nor what the English Government wishes. I have no representative; if I had a representative of England at my Court I should know what was going on and know what to do; but until I have that it is impossible for me to act.
> His lordship went on to say he found his Holiness really knew very little of what was going on in Ireland, and that he had no means of knowing except through the Irish themselves. He (the speaker) had mentioned this matter to a number of prominent statesmen, and he hoped and trusted some good would come of it. [Our italics.]

So that a reconciliation with Rome is on the tapis, it would seem, in the minds of "a number of prominent statesmen." Yet some advanced Christian politicians can see no Romeward tendency, but the reverse.

We counsel those who think Romanism is less inimical to the weal of the community now than formerly, to read the remarkable correspondence in last Saturday's Globe on "The Priest in the Family." Next week we shall give a summary of the letters.

The prospectus of the National Agricultural Hall Company, Limited, Kensington, offers as a prominent attraction that the buildings are licensed for the sale of drink. It is humiliating to see noble earls and other distinguished gentlemen on the directorate using the liquor traffic as a means of personal enrichment.

It is very gratifying to learn that the long-talked of project of union between the Waldensian and Free Churches of Italy has been discussed and adopted by the Waldensian Synod, many pious peasants voting warmly for it. The project has been modified, but it is hoped it will be accepted by the Free Church. Those who have travelled in Italy know how much the progress of Evangelical Christianity in Italy has been retarded by party names.

It is a perilous thing to appropriate to ourselves words which exclusively and personally belong to the Lord Jesus Christ. We have at various times heard all of the following thus appropriated and misappropriated: "Thou art my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased." "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me." "The man who is My fellow." "This is my servant, in whom My soul delighteth."

There is great danger in going beyond Scripture. A dear young Christian lately wrote from a place where he was entirely shut out from the fellowship of other believers, that he was "on honeymoon with Jesus." There is but a narrow border between spirituality and sensuousness. It is one of Mr. Prince's errors to speak of himself in his diary as the bride of Jesus. But Scripture never speaks of the individual soul, but of the corporate Church, as the Bride. A recognition of this would save many at the present time from very mischievous error.

Humanitarianism is one of the snares with which Satan as an angel of light is deceiving benevolent and earnest souls in this generation. Looking with the eyes of Christian civilisation upon the wrongs and sorrows on every hand, an "enthusiasm of humanity" takes hold of them, and they seek without God to remedy the abounding evils. Angels sang at the birth of Jesus, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, goodwill toward men." The "enthusiasm of humanity" would have the second and third, but overlooks the first. There can be no peace on earth, nor God be well pleased in men (R.V.), unless glory be first given to Him. Temperance and Purity Associations will succeed, Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations will prosper, only as the Keystone knits the arch together, only as God is honoured, and Jesus is glorified, and the Holy Spirit given.

M. Renan appears to have reversed the practice followed by some of the unclean writers of the French school, and which a French critic has described as giving a cup of tea after an emetic, by sending forth after his poetic and imaginative attempts at Biblical exegesis a shameless volume, which the Parisian journals assert "tramples under foot all the sovereign laws of virtue." It is not necessary to be a Roman Catholic to take strong exception to the Abbess around which the sceptic has hung the filthy rags of his hopeless unbelief. For even if it were the destiny of mankind to perish like the brutes, it still would be better to live moral and noble lives; and there can be no excuse for a would-be teacher and philosopher proclaiming what a writer in the journal Liberté calls "an orgie of sensualism as the last consolation and final joy" of life. When, however, a man begins by denying the Eternal Light, it is too often the case that the journey is only a continued descent into deeper and deeper gloom. In M. Renan's case, what is more natural than that he should sink down into that disgusting so-called "realism" which is the characteristic of the literature of despair?

It was stated recently at a Roman Catholic Mission in Liverpool, that in the prison in that city during 1885 there were 13,676 Romanists, whereas of all the other denominations, "putting them together and calling them Protestants," there were only 7648. Taking into account the fact that the Roman Catholics form so small a proportion of the population, the painful fact speaks for itself; and even admitting that intemperance has much to do with the terrible state of things, it may reasonably be asked how it is that Romanism appears to be so inefficacious in regulating even the outward lives of its followers.

The picture given during the same mission of the condition of Romanism in the great seaport is one not likely to cheer those people who are looking for the "conversion of England" to Rome:—

> The spiritual condition of a large portion of the people is most deplorable: men and women, both married and single, living in a total neglect of all religious practices: Catholics merely in name. . . . The Easter communicants had in ten years increased only 1753, though considerable church accommodation had been provided in that period.

Commenting upon these facts and figures, a Liverpool Roman Catholic paper says :—

> The loss to the Church in the large cities and towns of England far exceeds the handful of converts that each year enter the fold. As in Liverpool so in Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, Glasgow, and, more than all, in London, there are thousands of Catholics who never hear Mass from one year's end to another, who for ten, twenty, or thirty years have never approached the Sacraments, and who, if they have not lost the faith entirely, live more like heathens than Christians.

Judging from all this the moral results of the teachings of Rome appear to be but small.

Canon Liddon has, in his sermon upon "Personal responsibility for the gift of revelation," pointed out that there are two kinds of indifference to religious truth, that of ignorance and that of knowledge, and he has added, that perhaps the listlessness of ignorance ought not to be branded as properly indifference, for where a man has never been brought into contact with truth he has no relations towards it; and he urges that the callousness or contemptuousness of the heathen or very ignorant with regard to spiritual subjects is, therefore, far less criminal than the indifference of Christendom, "if, indeed, it be a crime at all, for it has never had the advantages which are apparently required to produce genuine indifference."

Much of the indifference of the present day, however, is quite deliberate, for a man cannot reasonably shelter himself behind that ignorance which it was in his power to dispel. Hence the petition in the Book of Common Prayer for pardon for "ignorances," a prayer which might properly be included in our daily petitions; for what Christian can say he knows all he ought to know, or has had opportunities of learning, of God's love and Christ's sacrifice?

CONFERENCE ON RESCUE WORK.

On Wednesday last week, the third of the annual conferences convened by Mr. E. W. Thomas was held in the Lower Exeter Hall; the object is to enable workers to benefit by each other's experience, and by bringing them into contact with one another, to prevent the waste of power occasioned by overlapping.

The morning and afternoon sessions were for ladies only. Mrs. F. A. Bevan presided. The subject for consideration was, "The Education of the Present Day, with its Religious, Moral, and Social Results." Mr. Thomas gave an opening address. In the great majority of cases, he said, failure was traceable either to some neglect in culture or to hereditary taint. Mrs. Carpenter spoke of the perils of young girls employed in public laundries, and of the evils attending crowded dwellings, giving some details from her own observation. Mrs. Walshaw How spoke of the necessity for teaching other occupations beside laundry work in Homes. Several speakers referred to the difficulty of finding employment suited for young women and girls who were not suited for domestic service. Miss Macpherson laid great stress upon spiritual and moral training, which, she said, was essential to success. Amongst others who spoke were Mrs. R. C. Billing, Mrs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Mrs. Major Malan, and Mrs. Durley.

At the afternoon conference Mrs. Bevan read a paper, prepared by a lady, on "The Future of Young People," especially considered in relation to the education they are receiving. The writer regretted the absence in too many cases of that motherly instruction which was sure to tell upon young girls. The want of the dame-school element was the root of much evil. The words of a kind old woman to a girl sometimes have a great effect, and those who hold Bible-classes for girls know they do not always speak in vain. Books will never do the work; it is the loving, warning voice that is wanted.

In the evening, Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, said he believed this to be emphatically woman's work, and it should be done chiefly by women. The sad feature is that these poor ones are lost earlier than they used to be. The question of Homes was a very difficult one. To take a girl from luxury and submit her to the discipline and almost drudgery of a Home was a tremendous test. One great difficulty is the rapid increase of population. If we could by emigration lessen the number of women working for a mere pittance we might reduce the mass of sin around us.

Mr. E. W. Thomas read a paper on "Rescue Work in Relation to Time and Eternity." Rescue work, he said, deals with a problem which has deteriorated every State in ancient and modern times. There are many tributary streams; love of dress and freedom from legitimate restraint drag many down. Nor must it be overlooked that there are numbers who sacrifice themselves to get bread for their unhappy children. The remedy is divinely set forth. Workers must, in the spirit of Christ, consecrate themselves to this work, and, in all things, forbearance and charity should be observed. It is incumbent on us to labour to show them their danger in God's sight and in the light of eternity.

Mr. George Holland said that in his work in the East-end he had had to do with some 50,000 poor children, and he knew the value of Homes. He would sometimes have five or six girls come after a meeting. We not only want the Homes, but we want ladies to labour among the young girls, influencing them with the Gospel. Some are lost as early as twelve or ten. Ladies might take a few young girls, and act the part of guardian to them. He had 250 girls thus parented. He strongly advocated the provision of places of vening resort for young people, industrial classes or lads, &c.

Mr. Stephen Bourne (Central Vigilance Society) having advocated the promotion of emigration, a general discussion followed. Mr. Christien specially called attention to the men who live on the degradation of women, and urged that efforts should be made to increase the stringency of the law against them.

THE NEEDS OF PORT SAID.

A more undesirable city to live in could scarcely be found, and most of its inhabitants look forward to withdraw to some more favoured part of the world as soon as they are able to do so. Where circumstances detain travellers within its precincts, or seamen who happen to be either sick or poor, their case is truly pitiful. The hospital is a place too shocking in its arrangements to be described, and the only lodgings available are haunts of vice, which travellers of experience tell us exceed in shamelessness every other port.

Mr. G. A. Eoll, who has for many years made sailors his care, and, through his knowledge of many European languages, is able to converse with almost every one he meets, now resides and labours at Port Said. He has had considerable experience in treating the sick, and is keenly alive to the necessity there is for caring for the bodies of those to whom he preaches the Gospel. The man who could suitably take charge of a "Strangers' Rest" at Port Said must have special qualifications for so arduous, and, at times, so thankless a service. Mr. Eoll, having amply proved his ability, it only now remains to obtain the ground and erect the building. A suitable plot in a favourable position for the work, three hundred metres in area, is to be obtained for £800. The premises proposed to be erected thereon will cost £1500 besides. The accommodation required includes a room and hall for holding meetings, library and reading-room, &c. A young man who has gained experience in Bible-carriage work, and has commended himself to those Christians with whom he has been associated in Bristol, is now going out to assist Mr. Eoll, especially in visiting English ships; and the immense numbers of British sailors constantly passing through the Canal will find him immediate and abundant occupation.

Impressed with the great and urgent need there is for such an institution, I am permitted by Messrs. J. and R. Cory, of Cardiff, to mention that they have each promised £100 towards it, and that they will be glad to receive further contributions from merchants, shipowners, and others, towards the purchase of the ground and erection of the proposed building. An equal sum to that already named has been promised to Mr. Eoll for this object.

SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE.—On Sunday, October 31, the first month of these services was concluded at the Kensington Town Hall. The addresses have been given by Captain Lowe. The numbers attending have been most encouraging. Mr. Chadwick will be the preacher during the month of November.

SCATTERING THE SCRIPTURES.—The Society for distributing Scripture Truth has published a Scripture Roll in French, entitled, "Paroles de notre Seigneur Jésus Christ" (1s.), in which our Lord's sayings are arranged in sheets, one for each day of the month. It is printed in large type, and we are glad to hear that numbers have been hung in some of our railway waiting-rooms used by travellers for the Continent, and in those of France, Switzerland, Canada and the United States. They have also brought out a large type book, "The Coming and Kingdom of Christ" (6d.), which contains in each opening some passages of Scripture and a hymn relating to the verses. There are thirty-one of these selections. The book is a suitable gift for people whose sight is failing. They may be obtained of the Secretary, Mr. F. Woodhouse, 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne.

NORTH-EAST LONDON MISSIONS.

How well the writer remembers a small meeting in a small room in a poor street in North London sixteen years ago. The object was to transfer a small Gospel Mission from the care of one labourer to another. The retiring worker was Mrs. Weitbrecht, the widow of a missionary who had spent many years in India, and who was then leaving the locality. The incoming labourer was a young man quite unknown, and the impression was that so raw a youth was somewhat rash in stepping into the place of so ripe a Christian. However, the old saying is true that "God removes the workers, but carries on the work;" and never was the saying more true than in the rise and progress of "the North-east London Gospel Missions," under the superintendence of William Chorley, the young man referred to.

On Tuesday week, as he read his annual statement, on the occasion of the anniversary held at the Devon's-road Mission Hall, Bow-common, we could not but exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" Branch after branch has been added, till now there are six Mission-halls, with all the usual accompaniments of Gospel work—temperance work, open-air work, Sunday-schools, bands of hope, night-schools, &c. These are situate at Kingsland, Cubitt Town, Stoke Newington, Millwall, Old Ford, and Bow Common.

Then there is a Holiday Home for Children at Brigadier-hill, Enfield, which has received 400 children; and as these children spend a fortnight there, the benefits are incalculable. And after listening to all these details, to be told that the whole had only cost £1745, showed that the management was good. But on this hall in which we were assembled there is a debt of £100, incurred in converting it from a comfortless cooperage into a comfortable hall. Some £63 is also owing for other branches.

Mr. Frank A. Bevan said a pleasing feature was that these missions were planted in the poorest localities, where we must go to the people, or they would never hear the Gospel message at all. It is perfectly overwhelming to think of the need which exists, notwithstanding all that is being done. There was scarcely a Sunday that he did not read The Christian, and he never did so without having two conclusions forced upon him: (1) How terrible is the need! (2) How much is being done! These missions must be multiplied. In visiting Norway he was struck with the scant religious provision made compared with this country; in some districts there was only a fortnightly, and in others a monthly service. Of such a mission as this he could honestly say that an immense deal has been done for the money spent.

Mr. J. R. Metcalf, the resident evangelist, gave some particulars of the work. 1046 meetings had been held during the year, 186 being in the open-air. At their children's service, last Thursday night, 223 were present. 40,000 tracts had been distributed.

Mr. R. C. Morgan was glad the children were looked after. One child is worth half a dozen grown people. A child and a judge were converted at one of Mr. Hammond's meetings in America, but the child, so far as service was concerned, was worth more than the judge, for he became a missionary.

Mr. G. Kirkham offered some counsel on open-air work; and the other speakers were Mr. John Kirk (Ragged-school Union), Mr. Griffith, Mr. Luck, Miss Messer, and Mr. Francis E. Paynter. The meeting was crowded, and the tone good throughout, auguring well for the future of these thriving Missions.

NORWICH.—The Bible Flower Mission has entered upon its tenth year, under the direction of Mrs. Robert Adcock (Bracondale), and has removed to the recently opened Y.W.C.A. rooms, which are in a more central position. The report includes a list of institutions visited, and an enumeration of articles distributed when flowers are scarce; these consist chiefly of woollen garments, such as shawls, caps, crossovers, comforters, cuffs, stockings, vests, neckties, &c., and it is significantly added that these items are named for the guidance of contributors.

GLASGOW PRISON-GATE MISSION.

The following extracts are taken from the last report of this Mission:—

During the past year the work of the Mission has been carried on with steadiness and vigour. A larger number of women have been received, and their average stay has been longer—about three months. We feel it a great help that our larger premises afford sleeping accommodation for all whom we receive, thus protecting them while with us from the temptations of the public houses. There is a marked improvement in the tone and behaviour of the women, which we attribute to the more settled family life of a residence in the Home. 293 passed through the Home during the year.

Gospel meetings are regularly held on Sabbaths and on two evenings in the week, and on most Saturday evenings a suitable entertainment has been given. We continue to pay the women a daily wage, thus fostering habits of industry and independence.

We have a debt of above £1000 on the new premises, which we would very much like to see cleared off. Besides having for our main object the salvation of these women, we work towards the lessening of crime, and consequently towards the emptying of prisons and poor-houses; we feel, therefore, that we have a strong claim upon the sympathies of the public. The treasurer is Mr. W. R. M. Church, 75, St. George's-place, Glasgow.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

The work of these brethren in the Grand Circus, Manchester, began on October 16, and continued until the 31st. During this time the meetings increased in numbers and power, the last Sunday night being the most remarkable of all. The inquiry-room was too small to deal with all the anxious souls, so that many were dealt with in the Circus. On Monday, November 1, closing meetings were held in Cavendish Chapel. A large congregation gathered in the afternoon, and listened with delighted attention to Mr. Fullerton's beautiful allegory illustrative of the text "The King hath brought me into his chambers." In the evening, the body of the large chapel was reserved for those who had been dealt with in the inquiry-room during the Mission, and about 1500 such persons were present. Solos were sung by Mr. Manton Smith; words of encouragement were spoken by him, by Mr. MacGill, of the Manchester City Mission, and by Revs. W. J. Woods, Prof. Turner, of Lancashire College; and the writer. Testimonies were asked from those who had received blessing through the services, and it was very touching to hear so many, with beaming faces, tell out in simple words what Christ had done for them. Mr. Fullerton's final message was based upon 2 Cor. xiii. 11, and was wise and practical in character, and delivered with much earnestness and feeling.

On Tuesday morning about forty city missionaries, who have had much to do with the success of the work, met for conference and prayer. It would be interesting to relate some of the incidents told at the meeting. Conversions of the most remarkable character have taken place; prayers have been answered in the most extraordinary way; five members of one family have been saved; backsliders have been reclaimed; and many Christians have been quickened to a better and holier life. Not the least important result is that future evangelistic work in the city will be regarded more favourably because of the quiet, earnest, solid character of this mission. Mr. Smith's dinner-hour addresses at some of the large works have done good service, and the women's meetings, conducted by Mrs. Fullerton, have proved a blessing to many. The Sunday morning services and the Bible-readings were conducted in Coupland-street. Baptist Church, and were times of great refreshing to all.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

The Secretaries of the London Missionary Society (14, Bloomfield-street, London-wall, E.C.) have issued a circular on this subject, in which they state:—

The Presbyterian Churches of England, Scotland, and Ireland have agreed to set apart the week commencing Sunday, November 28, as a time of special prayer and preaching on behalf of Missions to the heathen. The Church of England has adopted St. Andrew's Day (November 30) and the week following for the same purpose. It has been suggested that all Christian churches in this country, and, so far as possible, in the mission-field, might, with great appropriateness, join their Episcopalian and Presbyterian brethren in setting apart this season for united prayer for Missions. Such a union of Christian men of all denominations in common supplication for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the heathen world could not fail to have the happiest results. It would be a most impressive testimony to the abiding faith of the Church of Christ in the power and promise of the Holy Spirit as the agent of the world's renewal. It would direct the thoughts of Christians everywhere, with special earnestness, to the evangelisation of the world, as the great work with which the Church of Christ is entrusted. It would stimulate many hearts to more frequent and fervent prayer, and to more systematic effort for this great object; and, above all, it would prove an appeal well pleasing to God and rich in spiritual results.

In view of the very great importance of the subject, we invite you to join, if possible, in this general movement. We would venture to suggest that attention be directed to Foreign Missions in the pulpit and in the Sunday-school, and that your congregation should be invited to unite in special prayer for the conversion of the heathen world.

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

Rev. R. P. Ashe in a letter to Mr. C. H. Allen expressing his desire to join the Anti-Slavery Society, writes:—

Living, as it were, in the very heart of the gigantic wrong, one can feel, so to speak, the agonising throbbing of the horrible life which sucks its nutriment from the bitter tears and poured-out blood of countless unhappy thousands. Here in Buganda is one of the most prolific sources of the traffic in human blood so horrible as to beggar utterance—vast tracts of peaceful, glorious regions given up to the freest scope of the vilest passions of the basest of men. The slaves in this country are reckoned by thousands—torn from home and father and mother to be the living chattels of a degraded race; death, mutilation, every wrong which man can inflict or which humanity can endure is their miserable lot. The time has come, and more than come, for Europe to speak, and to say once for all that this "open sore of the world" shall be bound up. Such reckless, bloody tyrants as this murderer Mwanga should not be endured for a moment longer than it takes to rid the countries which they raid of such a scorpion scourge.

I am writing this within a few yards of a market where, among other commodities, human chattels can be purchased. What are English cruisers doing in the Indian Ocean? It is here in the interior that the horrible raids are made. After myriads of mothers and fathers are murdered and vast tracts desolated, raided, a thousandth part, perhaps, of the spoil falls eventually into the hands of the Arabs, from whose hands the British cruisers deliver one or two slaves. . . . Even if British cruisers rescued every single slave that was taken from the continent of Africa the stopping of the trade would be no nearer its consummation, for the wrong is so frightful and so growing. While guns and powder (for the former of which England is largely responsible) come pouring into the interior such arch raiders as Mwanga on the Victoria Lake, and Kabba Rega between the Victoria and Albert Lakes are enabled to push their gigantic raids further and further. I know of no more sorrowful sight than the unhappy captive children, torn from home and country, fresh from the sight of a murdered father, and torn from their mother's side; and I have seen it.

THANKSGIVING.

We thank Thee, O Father, for all that is bright—
The gleam of the day, and the stars of the night;
The flowers of our youth, and the fruits of our prime,
And blessings that march down the pathway of time.

We thank Thee, O Father, for all that is drear—
The sob of the tempest, the flow of the tear;
For never in blindness, and never in vain,
Thy mercy permitted a sorrow or pain.

We thank Thee, O Father, for song and for feast—
The harvest that glowed, and the wealth that increased;
For never a blessing encompassed earth's child,
But Thou in thy mercy looked downward and smiled.

We thank Thee, O Father of all! for the power
Of aiding each other in life's darkest hour;
The generous heart and the bountiful hand,
And all the soul help that sad souls understand.

We thank Thee, O Father, for days yet to be;
For hopes that our future will call us to Thee—
That all our Eternity form, through thy love,
One Thanksgiving Day in the mansions above.

Will Carleton.

MISS ROBINSON'S INSTITUTES.

A Correspondent, who is acquainted with the good work carried on by Miss Robinson, desires to supplement the account recently given in The Christian by calling attention to the financial difficulties attendant upon the work. He says:—Apart from unusual and unforeseen causes of expenditure, a sum of about £3000 is required each year over and above the ordinary sources of revenue. Miss Robinson has for some years past required large sums of money for special objects. Last year the Institute at Alexandria was erected at a cost of many thousand pounds, and this year the middle portion of the Soldiers' Institute at Portsmouth had to be entirely rebuilt, the timbers and brickwork of the old partition walls having given way. On the Alexandria Institute accounts there is a balance due to Miss Robinson of £2000, and for the repairs to the Institute at Portsmouth a balance of £3083 is payable to the contractor.

When it is remembered that the ladies at the Institute all give their services gratuitously, and that Miss Robinson has from time to time paid considerable sums of money out of her own private means (this year £350), she is, I think, justified in asking for a liberal response to her appeal for pecuniary aid.

MILLWALL JUVENILE AND ADULT MISSION.—The sixth anniversary services of this Mission, in Tobago-street, Millwall, were held on Sunday, October 31, and a public meeting was held on Monday evening in the People's Hall. Major Welby presided. The report read by Mr. H. White, the secretary, stated that seven meetings are held on Sundays, and classes and services on every week-evening. There is a night school for working lads and girls on Tuesday and Friday evenings. Rev. J. Billington, Mr. J. Kirk (Ragged-school Union), Mr. F. Sedgwick, and Mr. Warner addressed the meeting, Mr. Kirk in his speech characterising the Mission as a "perfect hive of good work." The Chairman emphasised the importance of Christians putting aside non-essentials, and keeping to Christ as the only means of meeting the atheism and irreligion growing in our midst.

STEWART MEMORIAL SOLDIERS' HOME.—This Soldiers' Home and Coffee Tavern at Dorchester was opened on October 29. It was previously a public-house, but was closed and given for the purpose of a Home by Mr. Robert Williams, of Bridport, and had been, mainly by the exertions of Mrs. Everitt, altered and enlarged for the purposes of the Home. After the opening at two o'clock a sale of work took place in aid of the funds, and in the evening a public meeting was held in the Corn Exchange. Colonel Marshall presided, and in his speech told several incidents in the life of the late Major-General Sir Herbert Stewart, as did Mr. Archibald Forbes, who spoke later in the evening. Rev. Dr. Adams, Major R. Williams, and Mrs. Everitt also spoke, the latter urging her hearers, and especially soldiers' wives, to more earnest work in the cause of total abstinence from strong drink, which had ruined so many soldiers. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman. There is a public hall in the Home, and also reading and recreation rooms, and a library for the soldiers.

WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER,

JANUARY 2—9, 1887.

In issuing the programme of subjects for the coming Week of Prayer, the Evangelical Alliance states:—

Never was prayer more needed than at the present time. The state of the Church and the state of the world alike call for fervent and abundant supplication. We have come on "perilous times." We see "distress of nations." There is much of insubordination and lawlessness in various countries. In nearly all lands there is much suffering, on account of the stagnation of trade. In Europe there have been ominous threatenings of war. Most nations are called to solve political problems of great perplexity. As Christians, we must call to mind the promises given to prayer, and the special promises given to united prayer. "Call upon Me," says the Lord, "in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me." While there is much cause of anxiety, which should make us feel that only God can be "a very present help in trouble," there are also signs of the times which are greatly fitted to cheer and encourage us. Among these none are more remarkable than the quickening of the missionary spirit, the amount of blessing which is graciously granted to the evangelising of the nations, and the "great and effectual doors" which are so wonderfully opening to us. Therefore, with fervent supplication, let us mingle hearty thanksgiving to the Father of mercies and God of all comfort.

SUGGESTED TOPICS.

Monday, Jan. 3.—Praise: For rich spiritual blessings; for the long-suffering grace of God; for manifold temporal blessings, private and public; for many tokens of the mighty working of the Holy Ghost, both at home and abroad; for the increase of missionary zeal among Jews and Gentiles; and for new openings for the spread of the Gospel in many lands. For the preservation of peace among the nations of Europe. Ps. cxi. Luke i. 67—79. Deut. xxxii. 1—14. Ps. cxvi. 1 Chron. xvi. 1—34. Ps. cvii. 1 Chron. xxix. 9—20.

Tuesday, Jan. 4.—Humiliation: For personal sins, family sins, and national sins; for the spread of unbelief, and of atheism, in various quarters; for the fearful extent to which "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life" still prevail; for the large amount of intemperance, licentiousness, and all immorality; for the formalism of many, and the cold indifference of others; for unseemly divisions and lack of love among those who are brethren in Christ. Ps. li. Jerem. xiii. 15—27. Philipp. ii. 5—16. Ezra ix. 1—15. 1 Cor. v. Jude 1—16. 1 Cor. ii. 1—10.

Wednesday, Jan. 5.—Prayer for the Church: That the people of God may know their high calling and responsibility; that they may be filled with the Spirit, bring forth the fruit of the Spirit, and labour aggressively for the conversion of souls. That grace may be given to all pastors, teachers, and preachers, to proclaim the Word in its simplicity and fulness, and that the Lord may open the hearts of men to receive it. That believers may walk in fellowship and holy love, remembering that they are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Jno. xvii. 14—26. Ephes. i. 1 Thess. i. 1 Kings viii. 22—36. Jno. xv. 12—21. Luke vi. 17—36. Ephes. iv. 1—16. Matt. vi. 5—34.

Thursday, Jan. 6.—Prayer for Families: That family love may be sanctified—husbands and wives walking together as fellow-heirs of the grace of life, and training their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. That the young may be early drawn to Christ and kept from the evil that is in the world. That great grace may be given to all teachers of youth; that the blessing of God may rest on all universities, colleges, and schools. For all Christian Associations of young men and young women. For the afflicted. For the better observance of the Lord's Day, and the more extensive study of the Word of God. Deut. vi. 1—15. Prov. iv. Ephes. vi. 1—18. 1 Chron. xvii. 16—27. 2 Tim. i. 1—14. Coloss. iii. 12—25. Isa. xii.

Friday, Jan. 7.—Prayer for Missions: That the Church of Christ may recognise the glory of the commission to "preach the Gospel to every creature," and may feel it a privilege to make sacrifices that it may be fulfilled. That far greater zeal for the Divine glory, and far more pity for the perishing, may be imparted by the Holy Ghost to all the people of God. That faithful labourers may be greatly multiplied; that all converts may be comforted, and made useful in seeking the salvation of souls. That the hearts of the unconverted may be opened to receive the truth; and that the time may soon come when, as is written in the holy prophets, the Spirit shall be "poured out like floods upon the dry ground," and "the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." Acts ii. 29—41. Isa. xliv. 1—8. Matt. ix. 36—38. Rom. xi. 25—36. Isa. xxxv. Eccles. xi. Isa. xlii. 1—16. Acts x. 34—48.

Saturday, Jan. 8.—Prayer for Nations: For the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the nations. For rulers and all in authority; for just and equal laws; for righteous administration. That all forms of lawlessness may pass away, and men live quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty. For peace between nations; the removal of international and class antipathies and jealousies. For the abolition of slavery, the opium trade, and all immoral traffic. For the protection of women. For the blessing of God to rest upon all efforts to remove the curse of intemperance. For the cessation of persecution for conscience sake, and of all oppression. For God's ancient people Israel. Ps. lxvii., xcvi. Joel ii. 23—32. Rom. xiii. 1 Thess. v. 12—24. Zeph. iii. 14—20. Rom. xiv. Matt. vii. 1—12. 1 Peter ii. 13—25. Hosea xiv.

THE PROPOSED CONFERENCE ON EVANGELICAL PREACHING.

Sir,—Pray give me space in your columns for a few remarks touching this proposal. Why should we hold such a conference? Have we lost the measure of light concerning the Gospel we once possessed? Have professedly evangelical ministers ceased to glory in the Cross? Has it really come to this, that we need to meet, and after Conference decide what we shall preach? Is "the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God" so obscurely revealed in the Word of God, that we are at a loss definitely to say what it really is? What was the Gospel at Pentecost? "Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent Him to bless you in turning every one of you from his iniquities." What was the Gospel of Paul? "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." What was the Gospel of John? "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." What was the Gospel of the Reformation—of Luther and Calvin and Knox, of Wesley and Whitfield, of Brainerd and M'Cheyne. What is the Gospel of Spurgeon and Moody? What is the Gospel which the Holy Ghost always owns, by accompanying it with saving power? What is the Gospel which the Holy Ghost is using at home and abroad, in China and India, in the slums of London and the isles of the sea?

The men who have done anything permanently to overthrow the kingdom of Satan, and to build up the kingdom of God's dear Son; the men who are sent of God to sinners "to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God," are the men who know themselves, and preach to others, Ruin by the fall, Redemption by the blood of Christ, and Regeneration by the Spirit.

But why should a Conference on evangelical preaching be desired at this special time? To say the least, it seems inopportune to make such a proposal, ere have died away the echoes of the utterances of our American visitor, who denied or ignored all that is reckoned by multitudes to be the truth of God, evangelical and saving.

Men talk of brotherly kindness and charity towards those whose views on some doctrines may differ from them. Be it so! But surely ministers of Jesus Christ should have charity for their Lord that bought them, and zeal for his truth! I frankly confess it is to me a problem in faith and morals difficult to solve, how men, who profess to be evangelical ministers of Christ, could crowd to hear prelections delivered by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, marked indeed by great intellectual ability, but filled with denials of those things which are most surely believed among us.

Evangelical truth was rescued by our Puritan fathers in England and Scotland, from the grave in which it was buried by priestly tyranny and pharisaic rites and ceremonies. The Owens and Goodwins, the Howes and Charnocks, the Baxters and Rutherfords, spent their lives in proclaiming the glory of free grace. They were zealous for evangelical truth, and counted not their lives dear unto them, that they might preserve it pure, and hand it down to us. They indeed were men, as remarkable for their intellectual ability, as for their faith and charity. They had true charity towards all men, but they had burning charity towards the Lord Christ. They had sympathy with Paul when he said, "I would that I myself were anathema from Christ for my brethren's sake." They had sympathy with him when he said, "If we, or an angel from heaven, should preach unto you any Gospel other than that which we preached unto you, let him be anathema." They understood John when he said, "If there come any unto you, and bring not the doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed."

No! we do not need a Conference to teach us what we shall preach. If any man be in doubt, let him ask God to be pleased to reveal his Son in him, that he may preach Him among the Gentiles; and then let him not seek to confer with flesh and blood, but rather go "into Arabia." Let him be alone with God, and ask Him to give "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

But though we do not need any Conference as to what we shall preach, we do greatly need to confer concerning the cause of God in the land and in the world. It may well be questioned whether the Church at home is holding its ground, in proportion to the population. It admits, I think, of no question that the Church of God is making no advance upon the heathenism of the world, viewed in the light of its increasing populations. In the face of such facts, we all, who are loyal to Christ, are surely called solemnly and prayerfully to consider what shall be done to awaken the churches from the sinful and Christ-dishonouring apathy and slumber in which they lie. With your permission, I would desire in another number to add something on this subject.

Belfast, Nov. 4. H. M. Williamson.

A NEEDFUL CAUTION.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow a constant reader to suggest that Christian workers, writing details of their work for publication, whether with the object of rousing an interest in, and gaining pecuniary assistance for it, or with a desire to glorify their Master, whose blessing has made it to prosper, should be very careful that they are guilty of no breach of confidence towards those who have trusted them with the secrets of their hearts—secrets which if known in their own neighbourhood, might bring upon them sore trial, if not persecution unto death.

The indiscretion is, perhaps, frequently due to some friend, to whom a private letter has been written, and who deems its deep interest an excuse for publishing what was never intended for the public. It should be remembered that The Christian has a world-wide circulation, and may be read by those who would consider it a duty to use this information to hinder the work of grace.—Yours faithfully, A Constant Reader.

LORD CAIRNS AND SUNDAY ENTERTAINMENTS.

Sir,—At the inaugural entertainments of the Liverpool Sunday Society, when a lecture and concert were given in the Rotunda Hall, Alderman Samuelson, who presided, quoted the late Earl Cairns as one who favoured the movement in which the Society was engaged. Rev. Canon Lefroy could not believe that so earnest an evangelical worker as Lord Cairns held the views attributed to him, and wrote to his lordship's daughter, Lady Lilias Sherbrooke, to ascertain whether or not Mr. Samuelson was correct. The following is the reply of her ladyship:—

49, Montague-square, W., October 26, 1886.

Dear Canon Lefroy,—Will you allow me, through you, most emphatically to contradict the statement which appeared in The Liverpool Courier of yesterday with reference to my father, the late Earl Cairns. At a meeting of the Liverpool Sunday Society Mr. Alderman Samuelson is said to have stated that the movement of the Sunday Society had been encouraged by Lord Cairns. Permit me to say that he was, in reality, one of the strongest opponents of this movement, which he considered as contrary not only to the mind of God but to the welfare of the whole population.

The last occasion on which he spoke in the House of Lords, ten days before his death, was to oppose Lord Thurlow's motion in favour of opening the Natural History Museum at South Kensington on Sunday afternoons. On this occasion, Lord Shaftesbury, being ill, Lord Cairns moved his amendment, of which the final clause ran thus:—"This House is of opinion that the time has arrived when the national collection should be opened on week-day evenings, but not on Sundays."

I venture to write this to you, and to ask you to publish it, if you think well, lest any person should be misled by the statement quoted above, although I feel sure that this contradiction will not be needed by those who knew anything of Lord Cairns' own life and principles. Believe me, dear Canon Lefroy.—Yours very truly,

Lilias Sherbrooke.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE.

SIR,—The remarks of your correspondent in your last issue are so valuable to me that I thank him for them. Such assistance as he renders is always most welcome. My Commentary is spoken, not written. Hardly a sentence has been done by my own hand. Every word is taken down by a shorthand writer, and the books printed from his transcriptions. Undoubtedly, the reference to the "Speaker's Commentary" was larger than it ought to have been. Your correspondent, however, has evidently not seen the corrected version of vol. iv., or he would have seen that his criticism had been anticipated, and the occasion of it removed. May I take this opportunity of saying how pleased I am with the friendly and appreciative spirit by which your reviews have been characterised? Not a word of bitterness have I noticed, or a trace of petty criticism.—Faithfully yours,

Nov. 6. JOSEPH PARKER.

WOMEN PREACHERS.

SIR,—May I add a brief word to the letters on this subject?

Holding at the time that women should not in general preach, I went, some years ago, to a meeting at a workmen's hall. Sitting with the rest of the auditors, I was surprised to receive a request from the lady speaker that I would go on the platform and sit by her; but I complied. Still, I felt I presented the appearance of countenancing more than I quite liked. After a hymn, the lady turned to me, and, without any previous notice, asked me aloud to pray. This was another step rather sudden and startling, but I meekly complied; and I was led to pray with much liberty and earnestness. Then, after a little more singing, came "the address." The female preacher held the attention of the hall full of persons for about three-quarters of an hour. She spoke quietly, tenderly, profitably, and for the glory of her Saviour; so that one could fully expect that the Holy Spirit would bless.

Since this practical lesson, I have concluded that if it is a reality, if God has raised up a woman to preach, then let us regard the action as of God, and give Him thanks. But I view the calling as exceptional, and still hold that publicity is not in general the sphere of a woman's loving labours.

Wimbledon. J. VAN SOMMER.

THE ISLAND OF ACHILL.—An appeal having been made on behalf of Achill Island, Ireland, we have made inquiries, and do not deem the necessity to be such as to call forth a special response from the public at the present time. We believe that the relief works in progress there will meet the case.

DUBLIN.—We have just had a most successful week of meetings here, addressed by Mrs. Ormiston Chant, in connection with the Women's Temperance Association. The audiences on every occasion were large and enthusiastic. The earnest, eloquent appeals, coming from a heart filled with love to God and to her fellow-creatures, have reached many hearts. We trust that Mrs. Chant will revisit Dublin at no distant date.

MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.—Superintendents, secretaries, members of committees, and workers generally are invited to spend Friday next, November 12, from 11.30 a.m., at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, Pimlico, in definite waiting on God for (1) a fuller measure of grace and power in their service for Him, and (2) that He would be pleased to give his stewards grace largely to consecrate of their means to his service, in helping the many institutions and individual labourers in the service of the Gospel at home and abroad.

PERSECUTION IN RUSSIA.—The little bands of disciples in Russia, though very closely watched by the police, meet here and there like the Scottish Covenanters of old at their conventicles. A friend who lately took part in one of these secret gatherings for worship says it was heart-melting to witness the hunger for the Word of God and to listen to the earnest pleadings in prayer of one after another, in the Russian, French, German, and English tongues. The same witness says that in the upper classes it is mostly women that compose the Christian circle, and that these Russian sisters are a reproach to many of their sex in more highly favoured lands in opening their mouths for Jesus. In spite of the persecution, they are constantly engaged in evangelistic work, privately and quietly, one by one; and the leaven is surely permeating all classes of society. Many of the peasantry are rejoicing in the light.—Christian Leader.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW.

THERE is a bright and a dark side to most things, but with regard to freedom from care, what class can equal the domestic servant? The master and mistress may find it difficult to provide for their families, but food, warmth, and wages come regularly to the servants. And should any real hardship happen in a family, there is, for the servant, an easy change to a fresh place of service.

That is the bright side of the picture. We wish there were no shadows to darken it. But perhaps in no position of life is there more temptation to evil, especially to young women. The absence of any necessity to take thought for the supply of their own wants leads to liberty of thought. And when there is no counteracting of right principle to balance this, it is in itself a temptation. Then there is the love of dress and display, rather encouraged than checked by their parents; the carelessness of mistresses in sending out young girls at any time of the day or of the night; the almost uncontrolled freedom of manner between men and women servants, sometimes extending even to the gentlemen of the family. Thus, girls who wish to do well are often placed in most perilous circumstances, and such as stand the ordeal are deserving of much respect and confidence.

But what about those who fail? Surely we should be tender towards them, and, while they are comparatively new to sin, should hold out the helping hand, and draw them back to virtue. Just then, also, the sinner catches a glimpse of the wages of sin, and the heart softens under the message of the love of Jesus, and sometimes the hour of humiliation becomes the season of reconciliation with God. It is seldom that we wholly lose our reward, and very often, as in the case of H——, we gather a jewel for our Lord's crown. She was no careless "rolling stone," but, after being a sufficient time in her first place, she remained for three years in her next, valued by her mistress, who thought no evil of her to the end. The kind feeling shown towards H—— by her mistress was fully reciprocated by her, and when she found it necessary she should leave her comfortable home, it was on the plea of indisposition. She spared her kind employer the pain of knowing that it was by the ill conduct of one of her own nearest relatives that her faithful servant was unfitted to retain the situation in her household. H—— had heard of the Homes of Hope, 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, and, resolving that nothing should induce her to continue in sin, she sought counsel and assistance there.

She was admitted at once, and for some months remained determinately in the Home. We say determinately, for she was not without many inducements to leave. She had tried to shelter her seducer by unjustifiable falsehood, but he continued to pursue her, with solicitation to leave the Home, promising to provide for her and his child. It was all in vain. She had tasted of the bitterness of guilt, and resolved never to return to it. Then he offered to buy her a sewing machine, and procure her plenty of work. But she had done with him for ever, and continued steady and obedient at the Home.

We have still happier tidings to give of H——. She was taught that no reformation, no steadiness in well-doing could wash away the least sin of her life. In the personal conversations with the Secretary and matrons, in the family prayers of the household, and the often recurring services held at the Homes, the same lesson was taught. The invitations of the Gospel were brought home to her heart by the Spirit's power, and her peace and joy in believing was as one rejoices when finding great spoil. Her friends rejoiced with her, and especially that God in his infinite compassion had thus brought good out of evil. H—— is once more a respectable and valued servant. But she now stands in a strength not her own, and, we believe, remembers continually in her prayers the Homes of Hope in Regent-square.

There is want of loving Christian teaching on this subject. The difficulty of giving such instruction and warning is great, but much may be done by the teacher of older girls, in schools and Bible-classes, who should take the young women one by one, as opportunity may offer, and tell them of the hidden dangers, and pray with them on those very subjects. Especially should instruction be given to young servants as to their conduct towards gentlemen in the families where they enter service. But if the domestic servant is endangered by those who ought, as her superiors, to protect her from evil, still more so is she imperilled from the constant, unrestrained intercourse with young men—fellow-servants—of her own rank. The mistress is responsible to God for her care over the souls of her servants. So painfully has this danger been forced upon our attention, that we have formed the deliberate opinion that no family should feel themselves entitled to employ menservants unless they place over their kitchens and servants' halls a motherly housekeeper, who shall exercise the same guardianship of the young female servants that the mistress herself exercises with regard to the protection of her own daughters.

ROME AND GERMANY.—The thirty-third general assembly of German Roman Catholics, lately held at Breslau, took high ground as to the temporal power of the Pope, and the regaining of the position they held before the May laws were made. The Pope has sent an Encyclical to the Bishops of Hungary which claims freedom of the Church from State control, denounces civil marriages, proclaims the illegitimacy of unions with Protestants, and sounds, we are told, like a summons to a conflict with the State.

BIRMINGHAM Y.M.C.A.—Last Thursday evening, Rev. F. W. Macdonald delivered a lecture on Social Purity, in the lecture-hall of this Association. Rev. Canon Wilkinson presided. The lecturer then referred to the many evils this sin brings in its train, and after dealing with the question from the chivalrous point of view, said that he took the Christian view, and believed that Christianity was the most effective moral force. It had saved the human race from physical and moral collapse, towards which the old Greek and Roman civilisation had hastened. Paul's advice in the Epistle to the Ephesians should be acted upon.

UNITED KINGDOM BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION.—Miss Buller, Wood Basset, Southampton, in writing with respect to this organisation, calls attention to the removal of the office from Berners-street to Fitzalan House, Arundel-street, Strand, W.C. Well-to-do people, she says, usually possess many half-worn things of all sorts that they cannot use, and would often be glad to clear out some, did they know where they might be well bestowed. "Con Amore," Miss Buller's little serial, published by Mr. Charles Caswell, Birmingham, in January, May, and September (1s. a year, post free; single copies, 4d.), gives many hints as to how the Society may be helped.

RAGGED-SCHOOL TEACHERS' CONFERENCE.—A Conference, convened by the Ragged-school Union, was held on Wednesday, November 3, at King Edward-street Ragged-school, Spitalfields. Professor Leoni Levi read a paper, in which he enforced the importance of teachers not only being well acquainted with their Bible, but of acquiring the art of teaching, so that they might present the truth clearly. They had also to inculcate habits of industry and thrift, cleanliness, good manners, and pure language. Mr. Charles Montague described the work of the King Edward-street School, and Rev. J. H. Ridette, Mr. Orsman, and Mr. John Kirk and others took part in the Conference.

CENSUS OF WORSHIPPERS IN LONDON.—The British Weekly publishes the results of a census of the worshippers at the morning and evening services at the churches and chapels of London on Sunday, October 24. Out of a population of over four millions about 460,000 were present in the morning, and about 410,000 in the evening. At St. Paul's in the morning 1662 were present, and in the evening 3403; at Westminster Abbey in the morning 1721; at Archdeacon Farrar's in the morning 1730, and in the evening, 1362. Mr. Spurgeon heads the Dissenters by a great distance, his attendances being 4519 and 6070. He is followed by his pupil, Mr. Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, who returns 1696 and 1381; and by Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, with 1325 and 2415.

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE WEST.

The annual meeting of the members and friends of the Y.W.C.A. was held on Saturday evening in Princes Hall, Piccadilly. With the exception of the gallery, the spacious building was crowded in every part, the great bulk of the audience consisting, of course, of young ladies.

After tea the chair was taken by the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, who delivered a brief but stirring address. Adverting to the work carried on by the Association, he said a great deal of it could not be tabulated; the real results would not be known until that day when the secrets of all hearts would be revealed. They intended to go forward extending their efforts. Most touching was the tribute he paid to the memory of the late Mr. Samuel Morley.

Mr. J. Keeble said that since the last annual meeting 534 had joined the institute, making the total membership 1,204. The Association, he showed, furnished its members with weapons which enabled them better to fight the stormy battle of life. Considering that the Association was situated in one of the busiest and most populous parts of London, the members enrolled were far too few, and it was their duty to publish its benefits among the class for whom it existed. To young women coming from the country to London without friends, and who were beset by temptations, the Association was invaluable.

Rev. Marmaduke Washington bore warm testimony to the value of the Association. Dr. Gilbart Smith said he had watched the development of the work with great interest, and there was reason for great thankfulness to God that it had prospered so well. If all the members worked with the heart and will of Miss Ely, the resident superintendent, the membership would be largely increased.

UXBRIDGE.—The unusual subject of "Travels in Russia" was the topic of an interesting lecture in the Friends' Meeting House, Uxbridge, on Thursday evening, by Mr. W. C. Braithwaite, B.A., of London. His lecture was largely an account of personal experiences.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG MEN (Nov. 14 to 21).—Next week is set apart, by common consent, by Young Men's Christian Associations the world over (there are now 3250), for special prayer for the conversion of young men and for the whole-hearted consecration of those who already believe. In England, on the closing Sunday, it is arranged to take collections at all meetings, for the work of the National Council.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special services at Zion Chapel, Middlesborough, commencing Nov. 14.——For blessing on special services to be held at the Victoria Hall, New Brighton, from Nov. 14 to 21, on behalf of young men.——For the mission in Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, Nov. 13—23, conducted by Rev. W. Mowll and Captain Dawson.——For blessing on special services at Blue Ribbon Army Mission, North Malvern, commencing Nov. 13, by Mr. Opie Rodway.

PARENTS' PRAYER-MEETING.—It may not be generally known that on Thursdays the noon prayer-meeting at Aldersgate-street is set apart, week by week, for prayer for parents and children. The meeting is held from twelve to one o'clock; Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's Churchyard, presides. A brief address, encouraging to faith and to expectant prayer, is given this week by Rev. Peter Carmichael, M.A., B.D., the recently settled co-pastor at Park Church, Highbury. Parents are earnestly invited to attend.

BRECON FAIR attracted so many visitors that the streets were well nigh impassable. A bold attempt was made to stem the tide of blasphemy, drunkenness, and debauchery that surged through the streets. The London Open-air Mission sent down Mr. Stephen T. Crocker, evangelist, of Bristol, who during the two days of the fair was indefatigable in conducting open-air services and distributing tracts. Christians of all denominations heartily supported the evangelist. The Mayor of Brecon willingly granted a splendid site in the heart of the fair, and the superintendent of police, who was appealed to by an infidel to stop the speakers, ordered the disturber away, and remained an interested hearer. Members of the Y.M.C.A. distributed tracts kindly sent to the secretary.

THE REVISED OLD TESTAMENT.

An invalid lady in a country village writes that she and her husband have, in their daily reading of the Old Testament, compared the Revised with the Authorised Version, and marked in their Bibles all the alterations as far as 2 Samuel. They have been greatly struck with the beauty and value of many of the changes made.

For instance, Psalm xxxvii. 39, 40, Revised Version, reads: "The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord: He is their stronghold (Nah. i. 7) in the time of trouble. And the Lord shall help them, and deliver them: He shall deliver them, from the wicked, and save them, because they have taken refuge in Him." Then in Psalm xl. 7, "In the roll of the book" (of course it was a roll in those days). Again in Genesis ix. 2 we have "teemeth" instead of "moveth," and in Leviticus xx. 25, "teemeth" is used instead of "creepeth." It gives such an idea of life; on the sand of the sea shore, and in a field, you see them teeming with life.

Then in Psalm xxvii. 14 and Psalm xxxi. 34, "take courage" is so full of meaning; and in Psalm xxix. 9, "strippeth the forest bare," so exactly the effect of lightning. You see trees with their bark stripped off by lightning.

Again in Genesis xlvii. 8, "How many are the days of the years of thy life?" How the reply corresponds, "Few and evil have been the days of the years of my life." Connect this with verse 28, "So the days of Jacob, the years of his life were an hundred and forty-seven years." In Exodus xv. 27, we have "twelve springs of" water; Exodus xxviii. 43, and other passages, speaks of the "tent of meeting;" and we read about the "bruised corn" in Leviticus ii. 14—16. "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him." All these little changes are valuable, whilst we can thank God that after so many years his Word remains the same.

Our correspondent is very anxious that a Concordance of the Revised Version should be prepared.

BIBLE VAN WORK.—Mr. Charles Clements has visited forty towns and villages this year, and sold £510 worth of Testaments. In one day, at Wigan, 1000 penny Testaments, 460 Bibles, and 100 Portions were sold. He would be glad to receive tracts or small books for distribution during the winter. His address is 18, Shelmerdine-street, Rochdale-road, Manchester.

SPEZIA MISSION.—The Church connected with the Spezia Mission has recently been blessed by the spirit of finding souls one by one, a blessing which has resulted in three very interesting conversions. Each of these cases has been the fruits of efforts made by the native members of the Church. May the Holy Spirit be poured out upon the churches in Italy and throughout the whole world, so that mission work may become more and more the living and powerful testimony of God's people.
John Shaw Anderson.
Spezia, Italy.

LYNCOMBE, BATH.—A third mission of twelve days duration has been held in St. Mark's parish by Rev. William Haslam, and it has been a time of the deepest and truest blessing. The morning addresses to Christians were largely attended, and were a channel of help and enlightenment to many. The evening services towards the end of the mission were crowded to excess. At the praise meetings many stood up to testify of blessing received, and many evidences have been given of a change from "death unto life." Meetings for women were held in the parish-room by Miss M. Lovell, and afterwards by Mrs. Haslam.
E. Wemyss-Whittaker, Vicar.

NATIONAL REFUGES FOR DESTIUTE CHILDREN.—The thirty-fourth annual distribution of prizes in connection with these Refuges took place last Friday afternoon in the Albert Hall. About 600 children, from the Homes in London and the Arethusa and Chichester training ships, were present. Major J. W. McKenzie presided, and presented the prizes, which included a large number to former scholars who had kept their situations for a year. The work was started as a ragged-school in 1843, and to-day 1000 children are supported and trained to earn their livelihood. The occasion was made an holiday for the children, who spent several hours in the Colonial Exhibition.

REDEMPTION'S STORY.

"Go ye into every land,"
'Tis the risen Lord's command,
Spread the tidings far and wide—
Pardon through the Crucified!
"Lo, I'm with you to the end;
Simply on my power depend."
  Tell Redemption's wondrous story,
  Tell how Christ hath won them glory.

Touched by new-creating love,
Heathens unto Jesus move:
Idols to oblivion given,
Superstition's fetters riven;
See a mighty praising band
Marshalled for Emmanuel's land.

Islam's sons by love divine
Drawn, shall in Christ's kingdom shine
Hindu, Zulu, Kabyle, all
At the upraised cross must fall;
Islanders beyond the sea
Unto Christ shall bow the knee.

Jesu's name o'er earth be sung
By each people, tribe, and tongue!
Shining as the stars of heaven
Heralds see, to whom was given
Witness-bearing for the Lord,
By the blood-washed throng adored.

DR. VALENTINE.—A large and enthusiastic meeting was recently held at the Barclay Church, Edinburgh, to bid farewell to Rev. Dr. Valentine, Mrs. Valentine, and Miss Christie, on their leaving for the Indian mission field. Rev. Dr. Wilson presided. Sir William Muir spoke of the work Dr. Valentine had been enabled to accomplish in Jeypore. Dr. Valentine made an appeal for young men to go to the mission field. Dr. Wilson presented some handsome volumes to the departing missionaries.

BAND OF KINDNESS.—There is a very interesting Society here with the above title, comprising a number of young people who are very earnest Christians, and are being much used, in many ways, in the Lord's vineyard. It is proposed on Friday, November 12, the week of our Christian Conference, to have a gathering in the Strangeways Conference Hall, at 7.30 p.m., of young people who are endeavouring to help God's work in any way, for the purpose of prayer, testimony, and conference. We should be very glad to see any young Christians from a distance, and provide them with a home for the night if we hear from them in time.—Yours sincerely,
Gilbert R. Kirlew.
Boys' Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester.

MR. SPURGEON AND THE ORPHANS.—On Tuesday week, previous to his annual health visit to Mentone, Mr. Spurgeon met the children and friends of the Stockwell Orphanage at that Institution. After taking tea, and witnessing some athletic feats of the boys in the play-room, the company met again in the dining-hall, where Mr. Spurgeon gave a greeting to the boys and girls of the orphanage who were present. Addressing his helpers he said that money was needed from all quarters. Some of their subscribers had gone to heaven, but the best Friend of all did not die. A good spirit reigned in the Orphanage; still, they had troubles such as arose in every family. Addressing a word to the assembled children, Mr. Spurgeon said he hoped they would show their gratitude for the benefits they enjoyed by being obedient and making home happy.—Christian World.

Ben Jonson's Mission.—This Mission in Stepney is greatly hampered for want of room, especially in the Sunday-school work. By removing a brick partition, the available space would be nearly doubled. Gas is also required in place of the lamps now used. The cost would be small—about £15, but the neighbourhood is very poor. Mr. James Taylor, 28, Cressy-place, Stepney-green, E., is the Superintendent.

Gospel Work in Savoy.—A well qualified lady has responded to an appeal for evangelical work at Evien. She would require board and lodging, for which she is willing to help in the education of pupils, or as may be desired, so that a considerable part of her time can be given to Gospel work. Mr. B. Greene, Hotel Faucon, Lausanne, Switzerland, wishes to hear of an independent lady who would go to Evien for the winter, and receive this lady as a companion in the Lord's work. Further particulars may be obtained from him.

The Book World.

HIMSELF. By CARRIE S. MATTHEWS. 1s. Nisbet & Co. A charming little volume, setting forth the fulness there is in Christ to meet our needs in reference to sorrow, sin, temptation, sickness and eternity.

THE TWILIGHT OF LIFE. By JOHN ELLERTON, M.A. 1s. 6d. Cassell & Co. Suited in type as well as in matter to be of great comfort and help to aged readers. The chapters it contains are wise, weighty, and well-written.

RIPPLES IN THE TWILIGHT. By J. R. MACDUFF. 2s. Nisbet & Co. Under this original title, Dr. Macduff has issued a collection of thoughts "didactic, descriptive, meditative, with no link of connection between them." As he says none have before been published, those who enjoy his larger works will welcome these "ripples," which will cool many a fevered heart, and are certainly caused by the Spirit's moving on the waters of a sanctified and cultured mind.

HOW TO WIN. A BOOK FOR GIRLS. By FRANCES E. WILLARD. 4s. Funk & Wagnalls. In the introduction, Miss Cleveland, sister of the American President, says: "There is no good girl who reads this book who will not wish hereafter to be a better girl." That is exactly our opinion of this most refreshing and original volume. With chapters on almost everything that can touch a girl's life, it is, perhaps, best in those on "The Beautiful," "The Law of Habit," "How do you treat your Laundress?" and "Novel-reading." Miss Willard has written a book that ought to create a revolution in girl-literature as well as in many a girl-life.

THE CHRIST OF GOD. By HORATIUS BONAR, D.D. 1s. Nisbet & Co. Like all the productions of Dr. Bonar's pen, this work is full of the marrow and fatness of Gospel truth. It touches with delicacy of thought and expression some of the most momentous themes of revealed truth, and is admirably adapted for wide circulation in these days of doubt and unbelief. We wish for this new edition a large and rapid sale. It is worth many times its cost, and cannot fail to profit saint or sinner who reads thoughtfully its lucid pages. We must, however, take grave exception to the closing pages of the chapter on "Israel's Messiah," for the reasons stated in our article on "The Judge of all the Earth," in last week's issue.

THE BOOK OF REVELATION. By ISRAEL P. WARREN, D.D. Funk & Wagnalls. The principal part of this so-called Exposition appeared in The Christian Mirror, and for its value might well have been limited to the area thus covered. The principle of interpretation adopted is that the sole purpose of the book was to comfort the Church in view of the persecution to which it was subjected under Pagan Rome, so that the definite fulfilment of the descent of Christ from heaven to earth as depicted in Rev. xix., was accomplished in "the conversion of Constantine to Christianity." The thousand years of chap. xx. lay, according to the author's view, "between Constantine, who put an end to Roman persecution, and Othman I., who let loose the horrors of Turkish persecution." The book cannot be said to contribute much light to the discussion of the subject.

THE BIRD'S NEST, AND OTHER SERMONS FOR CHILDREN OF ALL AGES. By Rev. S. COX, D.D. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. As Dr. Cox frankly avows that he has not the gift of interesting children, he will not mind being told why he fails. Children like simple language; he uses too many hard words. On one page, e.g., are argue, dogma, creed, harmony, wrest, imperfection. Children care not for reasoning; he reasons (not always logically) a great deal. Little folk like explanations here and there, but exposition they think very dry. They like illustrations and pointed anecdotes. These are far too scarce. Above all, children love to hear how their sins may be at once forgiven, and the fear of death and judgment for ever removed. On these all important points Dr. Cox strikes sadly uncertain notes. About the Saviour's moral excellence as boy and man he writes with feeling and force, but of Christ the Lamb, the Priest, and the Intercessor, he seems afraid to speak. In one sermon—the Children's Charter—he assures all children on the first page that Christ has saved them, while at the close, addressing those "who are no longer children, and have fallen from their early innocence," he says that Christ is as willing to save them as to bless little children. Such a salvation will satisfy neither young nor old. It is not the "glad tidings" proclaimed by Christ and his Apostles, but another and a very melancholy gospel.

A WORLD OF GIRLS. By L. T. MEADE. Cassell & Co. In this story of school-girl life, the consequences of an unkind and unjust feeling, wilfully cherished, are well worked out. The plot is interesting, and the motive of the story good. The children, however, are scarcely child-like; many of their speeches are too correct and their thoughts too mature to be natural in girls of twelve and thirteen. The graceful illustrations are by M. E. Edwards.

THE QUEEN OF THE FAMILY. By Mrs. HORNIBROOK. 5s. Nisbet & Co. The story of a young girl who, left without a mother's influence, and living with her fond father and brothers, develops a strong and often ungoverned will. How the power and love of God gently lead her to become a beautiful, noble woman, through many changes and sorrows of heart, we leave girl readers to find out for themselves. The illustrations are far below the average.

IN THE TIME OF ROSES: A Tale of Two Summers. Told and illustrated by FLORENCE and EDITH SCANNELL. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. Luxurious in every way. The monochrome illustrations are superb, and the whole tone of the volume, from a literary point of view, is one of gracefulness and refinement. It is a love-tale, which begins in the island of Capri and ends in wedding-bells at an English village. To all who like this sort of fiction the present volume will commend itself as a pleasant companion for a spare half-hour. It is not a book for quite young girls.

THE CLEVELANDS OF OAKLANDS; or, Cleansing Fires. By Mrs. LUCAS SHADWELL. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. Mrs. Shadwell's ideal of Christianity, her men and women, her aims and ends, are of the highest and noblest. This beautiful story is even better than predecessors from the same pen. It tells of one who is noble, true, and good, but who cannot believe in the Divine Sonship of the Redeemer. By degrees he is led to see the error of his unbelief, and to come out boldly as a disciple of the Saviour. There is a tender story of love and prayerful trust underlying the chief theme, and altogether the book is one we can fully recommend.

THE JEWISH ALTAR. By JOHN LEIGHTON, D.D. Funk & Wagnalls. An inquiry into the spirit and intent of the expiatory offerings of the Mosaic ritual, in the course of which the author ably, but of course unsuccessfully, endeavours to prove that the Mosaic ritual was not "in the least in the shape of a pointing finger, directing the eye to Gospel facts;" its object was simply "to drill and prepare Israel for Gospel facts and Gospel times." All that is argued on the former part of this proposition is only applicable to an extreme and forced system of allegorising, much to be deprecated; but when the writer asserts that Dr. Bonar's Commentary on Leviticus is a fanciful production, and all similar methods of treating the subject are unjustifiable and absurd, we must declare his case "not proven." The latter part of the book, which treats of the principles established by the Levitical economy, is much more to the purpose, and contains some very useful suggestions and hints.

THE DAWN OF MANHOOD. By JOHN CLIFFORD, D.D. 3s. 6d. Christian Commonwealth Co. Twelve sermons to young men, which as literary productions are of high order, fully sustaining the author's reputation as a preacher and writer of great ability. Their aim also, as specially directed to the counsel of a class so numerous and so exposed to danger in our City life, evokes warm sympathy with the preacher. Starting with the thought that ideal manhood is only realised in Jesus Christ, the principles which lie at the root of true Christlikeness are discussed, and earnestly applied. Many valuable lessons are taught in a style both easy and strong. The preface, however, contains a fundamental error which is manifest throughout the book. The author there asserts that it is a serious mistake to introduce young men to the "mystery" of the Incarnation, the Sacrifice, and the Resurrection, before they have "mastered the secret of a true penitence, and the severities of a holy self-discipline." This is said to be "an old mischief we are suffering through the defect of our fathers." We are still convinced, however, that the starting-point of true manhood is reconciliation to God by the blood of Christ, and that the true pathway of moral progress lies by the Cross. To urge any other way than this, as though an imitation of Christ should precede faith in Him as the atoning sacrifice, is altogether contrary to New Testament teaching, and as unsound in policy as it is in doctrine. It is a serious error to make the life of our Lord of greater importance than his death, but it is a prevailing feature of "modern thought."

SHORT SERMONS. By Rev. JAMES S. SWAN. Elgin: James Watson. Our age wishes short sermons, and Mr. Swan supplies them. He is robust and unconventional in his methods of presenting truth, and delivers his message in a forcible manner. He thinks for himself, and is thoroughly in earnest. These qualities should win for him an appreciative circle of readers.

The Monthly Interpreter, which was started two years ago as a rival to The Expositor, has expired. It is stated that the editor, Rev. J. S. Exell, has undertaken the editorship of The British and Foreign Evangelical Review, in succession to Dr. Sinclair Paterson.

Amongst other publications which have been prompted by the Queen's Jubilee, is a small narrative entitled THE QUEEN (Partridge & Co. 1d.), giving, in a popular form, a record of a life that, by its quiet, unobtrusive goodness has endeared her to the nation.

THE LAW RELATING TO PROTESTANT NONCONFORMISTS AND THEIR PLACES OF WORSHIP. By Rev. REGINALD WINSLOW, M.A. Stevens & Sons. The author has collated the law affecting Dissenting bodies, and gives the result in these chapters, citing his authorities in footnotes. There is a good index, and some of the legal forms referred to in the text are given as an appendix.

THE GROWTH OF CORN. By Rev. P. BARCLAY, M.A. 4d. Alexander & Shepheard. These chapters, based on the parable recorded in Mark iv. 26—29, and dedicated to "those who till the ground," are evidently written by one who is not only familiar with his Bible, but with the various pursuits of a farmer's life. From the operations of nature he draws many spiritual lessons and analogies, which will readily be appreciated by the tiller of the soil.

While all are agreed that emigration should be encouraged as a means of relieving our growing population, much diversity of opinion exists as to the best method of compassing this desirable object. Perhaps the best is to inculcate a knowledge of the capabilities and advantages of our colonies. We have received the ILLUSTRATED HANDBOOK OF VICTORIA (John Ferres, Melbourne), published in connection with the Colonial Exhibition. It gives a large amount of information respecting the Colony, its climate, manufactures, agriculture, prices, and other matters likely to interest an intending settler. At the end are a number of engravings to show the character of the land and its productions. We hear that copies have been sent to all literary institutions and public libraries of the kingdom.

ALMANACKS FOR 1887.—Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. send us quite a budget of almanacks. The BAND OF HOPE, BRITISH WORKMAN, ANIMALS' FRIEND, and BAND OF MERCY sheet almanacks (1d. each) are equal to former issues. The two former, with their daily texts, and the other two with much useful information respecting the treatment of, and the prevention of cruelty to, animals, are well known. From the same publishers we have also received EVERYONE'S ALMANACK and the "SEEKING AND FINDING" ALMANACK (1d. each), the latter giving texts for each day, arranged topically, but without the reference. A blank space is left, in which to enter the reference when found. It would be a constant incentive for young people to search their Bibles to supply them with one. From Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster comes SPURGEON'S ILLUSTRATED ALMANACK (1d.), which contains several short articles by the Metropolitan Tabernacle Pastor. The daily texts are, as usual, selected by Mrs. Spurgeon. THE DAY OF DAYS' TABLET ALMANACK (7, Paternoster-square. 1d.), although published in book form, is so arranged that the calendar pages may be cut out and used as monthly tablets.

MR. ARNOT IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

From the last received letters from this young and devoted missionary we extract the following. Writing in January last he says:—

I am well, and have got, I may say, to the end of my journey, as I am now virtually in the Garenganje country. As to what may be my future field of work I am not anxious, but am full of thoughts. Indeed, I have been passing through all this beautiful country—with rivers and mountains all new to the world—in a sort of dream. The Garenganje is one of the largest Central African empires, full of people, and I go amongst them feeble and poor. It seems that my way looks more plain to remain and not return at once from this country. This prospect is greatly beyond my fondest expectations. To be able to remain now, and begin work at once, seems almost too good news. Still, I am troubled and don't know what to say, nor to which hand to turn. Nothing but Christ I would know—Christ and Him crucified; but how am I able to show Him forth? It does seem to be true, that the Lord chooseth the weak things, for I see plainly that He hath brought me here—it is too evident.

On February 8, he wrote:—Am now at Molenge's town in the Garenganje. Thank God, I have got here at last, in the best of health and spirits. I am loaded with kindness from these simple people. They all cry, "Stay with us, don't return; we will build for you, and hoe for you." My heart is full of praise to God. Surely He has been most gracious to me in permitting me to be the first to tell of Him in this great country.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—The work has been started at Belfast, Burton-on-Trent, Sheffield, Yarmouth, Ashford, Shorncliffe, and is soon to be commenced at Southampton, Hastings, and another parish in Nottingham.

MR. SPURGEON.—In The Sword and Trowel Mr. Spurgeon furnishes a portrait of himself, with an explanation for its appearance, and provides much excellent reading matter. In his "personal notes" he says:—"Within five weeks of his time of vacation the Editor has had a wretched breakdown, which makes him feel that the sooner he goes the better. When this magazine reaches the reader, their friend Mr. C. H. Spurgeon hopes to be packing up for a journey to the land of the sun, where he may gather strength with which to bear the winter's winds and fogs."

EAST LONDON SUFFERING.—In connection with the Clapton-park Tabernacle we have a Good Samaritan Union. By means of twenty-four district visitors, some 3000 families are visited regularly each month. Cases of destitution and sickness are reported to the Good Samaritan Union Secretary, who arranges for members to go and nurse the afflicted poor who cannot afford to pay for attendance. All render their services gratuitously. The prospect for the approaching winter is sad indeed. We shall soon have to turn a deaf ear to the cry for help, unless our funds are replenished and increased. Gifts of cast-off clothing, provision, or money will be thankfully received, and may be sent to the Hon. Secretary, Good Samaritan Union, Clapton-park Tabernacle, Blurton-road, E. Thomas Jackson, Minister.

GLASGOW UNIVERSITY CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—There has recently been formed in Glasgow University a Students' Christian Union, under the name of the Glasgow University Christian Association. The object of this Society is the promotion of religious life and fellowship in the college. In connection with the society there are held weekly prayer-meetings, occasional Sunday evening services, and meetings at which papers on Biblical subjects are read. The need for such a union of students for Christian fellowship and work has long been felt. Large numbers of Freshmen come up every year, and the promoters of the Association are desirous to become acquainted with all of these who are in sympathy with its principles and object. It would greatly help them in this if ministers and others who know of such would introduce them by communicating with the Secretary, Glasgow University Christian Association, The University, Glasgow.

Gleanings.

EVANGELISTIC.

Rev. Thomas Waugh's mission at Bootle Liverpool, has been greatly blessed of God.——Sam Jones and Sam Small are attracting enormous audiences in Toronto.——Special evangelistic services in connection with Langholm Home Mission have been held in the Temperance Hall.

A remarkable Gospel Mission has just been concluded in Sinclairtown, in Fifeshire.——Mr. George Clarke has been conducting successful evangelistic services in Dr. Walter Morison's church, Westbourne-grove.——Rev. Charles Davey and Rev. R. M. Irvine, at the close of their mission in Drury-lane, labour in connection with Dr. Dykes' church, Regent-square, proceeding thence to Marylebone, where they will work in connection with Dr. Fraser's church and mission.

Rev. G. C. Grubb is holding an evangelistic Mission at Brunswick Chapel, Upper Berkeley-street, W.——Rev. J. T. Oliver has conducted evangelistic services at Barnsley, when many professed conversion.——It is expected that Mr. Moody will go to Chicago this fall, and devote three months to establishing permanent missions throughout the city, on the plan of the McAll Mission in Paris.——Dr. L. W. Munhall, of Philadelphia, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Towner, has conducted a four weeks' Mission in Germantown, with wonderful results; nine churches, representing six denominations, united in the effort.——The evangelical churches of Philadelphia have divided the city into six sections; every family will be visited, and services held in each section.——Mr. Thomas Moremon, a blind evangelist, has held a fortnight's mission at Hannam, near Bristol.——Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have conducted a very successful fourteen days' mission in New-road Chapel, Peterboro'.

TEMPERANCE.

The Scottish Temperance League's New-Year Tract will be from the pen of Rev. Dr. Macfadyen, Manchester.——The Bristo Gospel Temperance Mission, Edinburgh, is continued with encouraging success. A coffee supper is occasionally provided for the poor.——Mr. W. Forbes has held a four days' Temperance Mission in Northwich.

A correspondent of The Church of England Temperance Chronicle asserts, from personal experience, that the better hotels in Germany and Austria are freer from the drink nuisance than hotels in England.——In Belgium, the consumption of ardent spirits has doubled in fourteen years. The Lancet asks, "What demon can be in possession of Governments that leads them so to foster misery and crime?"

A drinking bar is to be set up in Boston that will cost 20,000 dollars.——A gang of anti-Prohibitionists in Pennsylvania are trying to break up Prohibition meetings by violence.——A firm of Genoa are about to send abroad a floating exhibition of wine, liquors, and other native products. In the saloon will be exhibited the wines and liquors, and there will be a bar for the tasting.——A very encouraging report was presented at the annual meeting of the St. Pancras Total Abstinence Association last week.

British India, says The Freeman, is fast becoming a drunken country. Strange that a Christian nation, not content with a large revenue from the opium trade, should in India seek to increase its revenue by encouraging the sale of intoxicating drinks. Can nothing be done to put a stop to the evil?——Mr. Handel Cossham, M.P., speaking at a temperance meeting at Wilton, said he employed about 1500 people, and he believed that within a week after the people of England ceased to drink wages would go up 25 per cent. at least.

The City of London Total Abstinence Union held a series of meetings at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. last week.——A United Gospel Temperance Mission has been held at Shoreham, in which the different denominations co-operated heartily; a number of pledges were taken.——Before the ports of Japan were opened to the Christian nations of the world, there were only eleven drinks known in the country; now, The Pall Mall Gazette says, there are more than two hundred, and many horrible vices peculiar to highly civilised nations are becoming common in Japan.——In New South Wales, public-houses are closed entirely from eleven on Saturday night to six on Monday morning.——At a recent police-court case in Woolwich it transpired that at the local workmen's club "the men not only get drunk, but keep drinking all night long, and on the Sabbath," and the police cannot interfere.——The Pall Mall Gazette attributes the unprecedented success last week of Mr. W. Peall as a billiard player to the fact that he is a total abstainer from smoking and drinking.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Baptists in America have set apart the second Sunday in November as "a Bible day;" collections will be made for their Bible Society's work.——The Ladies' Association for the Religious Improvement of the Highlands and Islands maintains 69 efficient aid schools, in 33 of which female teachers are employed to give industrial instruction.——Judges in Alleghany County, Pa., refuse to naturalise avowed Anarchists, Nihilists, and Socialists.

Rev. A. W. Jephson, of St. John's, Waterloo-road, S.E., has recovered penalties from the overseers of the parish for not handing over to him legal rewards for information which led to the conviction of disorderly houses. His object is to stimulate the overseers themselves to take the necessary action in suppressing these places.——Baron Huddleston has expressed a strong desire that the Legislature would empower judges to order the flogging of those convicted under the Criminal Law Amendment Act.

It is stated that a site on the Thames Embankment has been secured for the new Wesleyan Central Hall.——Mrs. Fawcett, in a recent article, regrets that domestic service is often made so unattractive that many reclaimed girls say nothing will induce them to return to it.——The Scotsman has scandalised many people in Scotland by a recent article arguing against the supernatural character of Christ.

Complaints are made in Melbourne of the growing practice of Sunday photography.——Rev. J. B. Gribble is lecturing to large audiences in Australia on "The Exposure of Aboriginal Slavery."——The emigration office at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition has been opened some five months; it has given personal information to over 7,000 applicants, and placed in the hands of inquirers more than 12,000 pamphlets on British colonies.

Rev. Dr. Carey and family have sailed for India. He will not return to Delhi, but will take up medical mission work at Patna.—Bishop Coxe, of New York, calls the Jesuits "the burglars of the universe."—Sunday week was Hospital Sunday in Birmingham; over £3000 was paid in the following day.——The Home Mission Union of Glasgow is a united effort to reach the non-church-going classes; 200 ministers of different denominations have joined in the scheme.

The Princess of Wales has become Patroness of the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, and has given £50 towards the erection of a New Building for this Institution. Lord Blantyre has promised £1000, and several other English and Scandinavian gentlemen and ladies certain sums, so that the fund now amounts to about £3000.——Miss von Finkelstein will deliver her last lecture in Exeter Hall, on Friday, November 12, her subject being "Bedouins of the Desert."

We hear of the starting of a "Christian Kingdom Society," to be composed of "those who are anxious to put the Christian spirit into daily life."——An Irish judge has made the novel experiment of releasing on bail two convicted leaders of a lawless mob, in order to give them a chance of "being ringleaders in keeping the peace." If the district remained free from agrarian crime for three months, they would receive no punishment.——A branch of the Y.W.C.A. has been opened at Ballater, N.B.

Miss Frances Willard gave the address of welcome to the recent Rock River Methodist Conference at Evanston. This is the first time that a woman has been invited to welcome an ecclesiastical body.——Messrs. Armour Brothers, of Chicago, have recently founded in that city a mission church and school, which promises to bestow great benefits upon the needy public. The buildings are nearly ready for occupancy, and include a nursery, a kindergarten, a library, bathing-rooms, and a free dispensary.——The American Methodist Missionary Society's income for the past year will fall little short of a million dollars.——The New York Y.W.C.A. have an employment bureau that has given help and situations to many women.

The Presbyterian Alliance will hold its next meeting in London in 1888.——Dwight Hall, at Yale College, the gift of Mr. Albert B. Monroe, was lately dedicated; it is to be a centre of Christian activity in the College.——Mr. Byramjee Jejeebhoy has offered 40,000 rupees to the Deaf and Dumb Institute at Bombay, as an endowment, on certain conditions.——In Chicago there are thirteen Sunday theatres and five Sunday newspapers in full swing.——Judge Jones, of Minneapolis, has presented the Women's Christian Association of that city with a Home for Aged Women and Worn-out Ministers and their Wives.——Rev. Joseph Cook has gone on a Canadian lecturing tour, but will return to Boston for the Christmas holidays and the Monday lectures in Tremont Temple.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

Years.	Temperance Section.		General Section.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, NOV. 14.—2 CHRON. XXVIII.

THIS chapter presents a remarkably full description of a reckless and wilful transgressor. One is struck with the strange infatuation of this high-handed offender. Heedless of the memory and teaching of his father, he yields first to the seductive symbolic idolatry of Israel (2). This prepares him for the degrading and horrible rites of the Canaanitish nations. He burns his very children in the fire! (3) He makes sacrifices for the sake of his sins and idols, such as few men even dream of making for the true God, for Him who plentifully rewardeth every service done to Him. Though his idolatries, with their awful and most costly rites, bring him nothing but shame and sorrow (5, 6, 9, &c.), he still goes on in sin, seeking new gods, and multiplying his idols (23—25). All this to his ruin (23).

This blind infatuation always goes with reckless and wilful transgression. The covetous, the drunken, and the lustful are but blind fools, as Ahaz was. They sacrifice their children (and many another sacred possession as well), to their idols, as Ahaz did to his; and, like him, they continue their sacrifices, though misery is the only result. Happy would it be for us did we but serve our God as such men serve their sins.

Observe the working of unbelief in the day of trouble (19, &c.): Tilgath-Pilneser came unto him and distressed him, but strengthened him not. From 2 Kings xvi. 7—9, we learn that Tilgath-Pilneser brought him great relief at first, by capturing Damascus, and killing Rezin, its king. So, when men in their unbelief reject God and seek help from men only, like Ahaz, they often seem to prosper. But the prosperity is really disaster. For Ahaz, this temporary relief from Syria and Israel meant the taking of Assyria's yoke, and the loss of the Temple treasures in payment of tribute (24), and, worse still, a new inroad of idolatry (compare 21, 23—25, and 2 Kings xvi. 10, &c.).

The episode recorded in 8—15 is one of great interest, and should be compared with Lev. xxv. 39—46. But are there not with you, even with you, sins against the Lord your God? (10). See Matt. vii. 1—5. Israel's declension was even more hopeless than Judah's. It ill-became her, then, to play the judge. Surely these words search in every-one.

MONDAY, NOV. 15.—2 CHRON. XXIX.

1.—His mother's name was Abijah.—Is it not likely that this mother's name is given because to her Hezekiah owed all? It is certain that his father was no help to him. All the more likely, then, that his mother was. If she trained her son for God, as she probably did, God both honoured her in that son, and also by this mention of her name in his Book.

Hezekiah both restores Judah to prosperity and reforms her life. But note that reformation comes before restoration. This is perhaps the most remarkable fact in the story. The young king does not wait to establish his power, as more prudent and worldly-wise folk might have advised. He saw, with the clearness of vision proper to true Godliness, that national sins had brought national sorrows (6—9). He puts his army, his national defences, his treasure, and his commerce in the background. Righteousness exalteth a nation; therefore he is in haste (3—20) to reopen the Temple and purify it, and to re-establish the public worship of his people.

There is great instruction in the nature and order of the public rights observed: see 20—31. 1. Sin-offering (21—24).—Seven bullocks, seven rams, seven lambs, and seven he-goats. This seems to speak of perfect atonement, seven being the symbol of perfection. The sin-offering was for "the kingdom," i.e., royalty; "the sanctuary," i.e., the priests, the Levites, and the Temple; "and for Judah," i.e., the people (21). 2. Appropriation of the sin-offering.—"And they laid their hands upon them" (23). See Lev. iv. 4, 15, and 24. 3. Burnt-offering—the type of entire devotion to God (27). 4. Gladness and praise.—"When the burnt-offering began the song of the Lord began also" (27). 5. Humble and reverent worship.—"They bowed their, heads and worshipped" (30). 6. Freedom of access and full acceptance.—"Now ye have consecrated yourselves unto the Lord, come near, and bring sacrifices and thank-offerings" (31). Here, then, we have, standing in vital connection, atonement, appropriation, consecration, joy, worship, and liberty.

TUESDAY, NOV. 16.—2 CHRON. XXX.

1.—And Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah.—"He aimed at uniting once more the whole people of Israel, if not into a single State, yet, at any rate, into a single religious communion. Israel was now in a condition approaching to anarchy. Since the downfall of the house of Jehu, a succession of usurpers had borne rule for short terms. Four Assyrian invasions—perhaps more—had swept over the country within the space of thirty-five years. The end was approaching. Hoshea, the king, contemporary with Hezekiah, ruled as an Assyrian feudatory. Under these circumstances, Hezekiah designed to invite the revolted tribes to their old spiritual allegiance."—Sp. Com.

2—4.—On the second month, &c.—"The law allowed individuals to keep the Passover on the 14th of the second month, instead of the 14th of the first, in case of absence on a journey, or temporary defilement (Num. ix. 10, 11)."—Idem.

6.—Turn again unto the Lord God.—"We need not suppose that the Ten Tribes had at any time wholly laid aside the worship of Jehovah. But they had overlaid it with idolatrous rites, and mixed it with Polytheism (2 Kings xvii. 7—17), thus practically turning away from the God of their fathers."—Idem.

12.—In Judah the hand of God was to give them one heart to do, &c.—So also, in xxix. 36, it was God who "had prepared the people." This reminds us of Ezek. xi. 19, 20: "And I will give them one heart," &c. Also of Ps. cx. 3, 4; Phil. ii. 13.

14.—They took away all the altars that were in Jerusalem.—Observe the deep wisdom of Hezekiah's method of reformation. He was for construction before destruction, for the establishment of the true before the overthrow of the false. His first care was to purify the Temple, restore its service, rouse the people to seek God, and to teach "the good knowledge of God." That done, the people themselves spontaneously destroy the altars. Here is the secret of succesful reformation: Be more anxious to teach the truth than to attack error.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 17.—2 CHRON. XXXI.

1.—The people, full of the truth they had heard, and fuller still, probably, of the great gladness of that wonderful Passover time, start off in bands to traverse the whole land, and destroy every trace of idolatry. Doubtless there was much that was tumultuous in this movement; but the clear instructions that had been given (xxx. 22), and the solemn reality and depth of this religious reformation, would protect it from most of that excess and dangerous reaction which is apt to follow such agitations.

2.—That they might be encouraged in the law of the Lord.—I.e., that the priests and Levites "might be encouraged to devote themselves wholly to their proper work, the service of the sanctuary, and the teaching of God's law, and not engage in secular occupations. Compare Neh. xiii. 10—14."—Sp. Com.

10.—Azariah answered . . . Since the people began, &c.—I.e., "There has been an abundant harvest and a corresponding plenty in the incoming of firstfruits and tithes; the people have testified their gratitude to Him who has crowned the year with his goodness by their liberality towards his servants."—Jamieson.

21.—And in every work that he began, &c.—A firstrate text for exposure in all places where work for God's people is being done—in Sunday-schools, vestries, places of worship, and studies. We are so apt to think that because Christianity is voluntary it may, therefore, be done as we please. Hezekiah did God's work, as the best men of business do theirs—"with all his heart." Therefore "he prospered."

THURSDAY, NOV. 18.—2 CHRON. XXXII.

8.—With us is the Lord our God, &c.—"The faith which these words express would, one might have thought, not have wavered. But, alas! for human infirmity! we learn, both from Kings (2 Kings xviii. 14), and from the inscriptions of Sennacherib, that within a little while this noble confidence died away, and was succeeded by despair and submission. Like Rehoboam (xii. 9), like Joash (2 Kings xii. 18), Hezekiah was content to purchase his safety. 2 Kings xviii. 15, 16, tells us at what price. He stripped the Temple, and emptied his treasuries, to obtain what proved a mere temporary relief."—Sp. Com.

25.—But Hezekiah rendered not again, &c.—His sin seems to have been a God-forgetting, self-exalting ostentation. When visited by the Babylonish ambassadors (see 2 Kings xx. 13) he received them in a spirit of vanity, which is all too natural to most of us, but which led him to great self-display, while it silenced his testimony for God. To man's view, this was merely a little weakness, a thing to be smiled at and excused; to God it was a great sin, calling for sharp chastisement. "Pride of heart," say Henry and Scott, "is a sin for which we ought in a special manner to humble ourselves." Hezekiah's sin was that his heart was lifted up. After destroying other idolatries he began to idolise himself. What need have great men, and good and useful men, to study their own infirmities and follies, and their obligations to free grace, that they may never think highly of themselves! The aggravation of his sin was that he made so bad a return to God for his favours to him, making even those favours the food and fuel of his pride." The stories of Uzziah and Hezekiah teach that good men have no greater foe, if any so great and dangerous, as pride.

FRIDAY, NOV. 19.—2 CHRON. XXXIII.

1—10.—The story of Manasseh's sin, repentance, and restoration is a precious illustration of how God saves "to the uttermost." The frightful nature and variety of Manasseh's sin gives the story a peculiar value as an example of Divine mercy. He rebuilt the high places, re-established the Baal-worship, erected altars dedicated to that worship in the very Temple itself, and hesitated not to immolate his own children (3—6). He gave ear to the dark secrets of sorcery; and, as though all this were insufficient, he dared to erect an idol in the house sacred to Jehovah (6—8). Further, he seduced his people, until they did worse than the ancient Canaanites, whom Israel had dispossessed on account of their sins (9). All this, too, in spite of a good early training, as well as of distinct rebukes and warnings given by God through his prophets (2 Kings xxi. 10—15). The narrative, as given in the Kings, adds (16): "Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem," &c. Tradition says that he caused Isaiah to be sawn asunder.

11.—The King of Assyria.—This seems to have been Esarhaddon (B.C. 681—668), who had previously recovered possession of Babylon, and who was the only Assyrian king who held his court there. Took Manasseh among the thorns.—"Rather, 'which took Manasseh captive with rings;'" i.e., led him away, as the Assyrians were wont to do, with a ring through his nose as though he were an ox being led to the shambles. To such ignominy did sin bring Manasseh!

12, 13.—The words describing his penitence are very strong, suggesting long-continued tortures of conscience, and much agony of remorse. How quickly God heard him! The worst sinner may take heart when he sees Manasseh passing through the gates of grace. If ever there is a praying sinner, even though he be like Manasseh, a gracious listening Saviour is not far off. See the power of repentance and prayer. Here was a captive for life, as it seemed. Yet before long he is more than set free—he is re-established on his throne.

20.—They buried him, but not with honour. As Henry and Scott well say: "Penitence may recover comfort sooner than credit."

SATURDAY, NOV. 20.—2 CHRON. XXXIV.

2.—He did that which was right, &c.—"Happy and wise are those who seek the Lord and prepare for usefulness at the time when others are pursuing sinful pleasures, contracting bad habits, and forming ruinous connections. None can express the anguish prevented by early piety."—Henry and Scott.

3.—In the twelfth year he began to purge Judah.—"The call of Jeremiah so nearly coincides with the commencement of Josiah's reformations (Jer. i. 2), that we can scarcely regard the two facts as unconnected. At any rate, Jeremiah's first prophecies (ii. and iii.) appear to have been coincident with Josiah's earlier efforts to uproot idolatry, and must have greatly strengthened his hands."—Sp. Com.

14—33.—This episode is a grand historical illustration of the vitality and might of the written Word of God. Kitto thinks that the roll discovered in the Temple was "an autograph copy of the law written by Moses." So that the very parchment, apart from its message, had a peculiar sacredness in the eyes of the finders. All his days they departed not, &c.—Their reformation was more formal than vital, outward rather than real. "It did not reach the deep-seated, wide-spread corruption which tainted rich and poor alike."—Stanley. "Judah did not turn to God with her whole heart, but feignedly" (Jer. iii. 10). He speaks of "backsliding Israel" and "her treacherous sister Judah" (iii.). The people hankered after idols, and were only restrained by Josiah. They rested in this merely outward conformity to God's law. It was Jeremiah's special mission, during his early ministry, to rebuke their formality, and rouse them to seek and maintain vital godliness. See Jer. vii. 3, 4, 21—24.

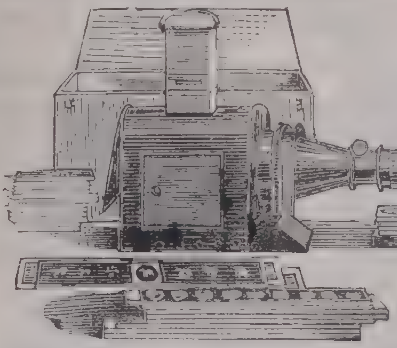
J. THEOBALD & COMPANY'S SPECIALTIES.

THE EXHIBITOR'S ACME LANTERN AND SLIDES, for Lectures, Schools, Evening Parties, &c. A challenge to the world. Unequalled anywhere. Beyond all chance of competition.



Knowing the need there is for a thorough good Lantern and Slides at a moderate price, we have prepared, in immense quantities, the following at a price which is only about half that charged by ordinary opticians. Compare prices and see. Our set consists of a best Lantern, which will burn any kind of mineral oil, and gives a light equal to 90 candles, fully three times the amount of illumination given with ordinary lanterns. Shows a 10 to 12 feet diameter picture on the screen. It is fitted with a special improved French patent lamp, having three large flat wicks, glass fronts, silvered reflector, double condensers, best quality 4-inch diameter double front lenses, and rackwork brass front. This lantern is made so that gas apparatus can be added at any time without alteration.

With the Lantern is given 6 dozen 3¼ inch diameter slides, illustrating Nursery Tales, Scripture Views and Travels (customers should say which they prefer), 72 Comic Figures on long slides, 12 changing Comic Slides, including a Good Night, 2 Moving Panoramas, 2 Conundrum Slides, and Lecture Book complete. Price £5 10s. By other makers' Catalogue the above set would cost £10 10s.

A pair of Lanterns as above, 3-wick lamp, 4 inch condensers, with dissolver complete, comprising 8 dozen slides, Nursery Tales, Scripture Views and Travels (customers can have the Scripture slides omitted, and extra Nursery Tales in place if requested), 23 superior Moving Comic Slides, 2 Revolving Slides, 72 Comic Figures, 6 Panorama Slides, 3 Conundrums, 6 Levers, Good Night, Welcome, Sliding Frame, and Lecture Book complete (fit to exhibit anywhere), £13. This set is really worth £20.

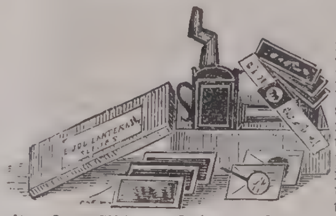
The above sets can be had with the new 5-wick Lanterns, fitted with apparatus also for showing opaque objects, such as Photographs, Views, &c., for 42s. extra each Lantern; or without the opaque apparatus, 34s. each Lantern extra.

We urgently request that the Coupon below be cut out, and sent with all orders to save any mistake.

Specially prepared Chemical Oil, 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

CHRISTIAN COUPON.
Entitles holder to Acme Lantern and Slides at above special prices.
(Signed) J. THEOBALD & COMPANY.

OUR CELEBRATED BIJOU MAGIC LANTERNS AND SLIDES.



SOME people having tried in a feeble way to imitate these Lantern sets, which we have sold in such immense quantities for years past, by copying our description, we have this season altered our Slides, and given such quantities and value for money as defies all competition. We manufacture both Lanterns and Slides; other houses do neither, and therefore cannot possibly sell so cheaply.

Nothing is so amusing, entertaining, and instructive for the long winter evenings as a Magic Lantern, so long as Lantern and Slides are of good quality, and show well. This we guarantee in every set we sell. Compare our sets with those of any other house.

Our No. 1 Set contains a best quality English-made Magic Lantern, fitted with best condenser and focussing Lens, best Mineral Oil Lamp, with rackwork adjustment, glass chimney, metal chimney, brass nozzle, with improved ventilation to lantern, slide holder, and silvered reflector, and the following large assortment of slides: 36 comic figures, 3 complete nursery tales, comprising 36 pictures (no other house in the world gives more than 1 nursery tale, as these are most expensive, costing 2s. each), 2 Chinese fireworks slides, 2 comic moving slides, 2 movable lever slides, 2 moving panorama slides, and 1 revolving slide, man swallowing rats, making 81 pictures in all, and candidly worth a guinea. The complete set in box, 10s. 6d. This set shows pictures 3 feet in diameter.

No. 2 Set, a similar assortment, but both Lantern and Slides larger size, 14s. 6d.; shows 4 feet diameter.

No. 3 ditto, but much larger, a very excellent set for a present, specially recommended. Price, 21s.; shows 5 feet diameter picture.

No. 4 ditto, a very superb set, showing pictures 6 feet in diameter. Price, 33s.

No. 5, ditto ditto 7 feet, 50s.

To avoid all confusion we earnestly beg every person to cut out the Coupon and send it with their order, as these are special sets offered for this season.

Specially prepared Chemical Oil, showing much more brightly and with less smell than ordinary oil, 9d., 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

CHRISTIAN COUPON.
Entitles holder to Special Sets of Bijou Lanterns and Slides at above prices.

THE LATEST MUSICAL MARVEL!

THE NEW PATENT CONCERT ROLLER ORGAN.

THE CONCERT ORGAN IS STRONG, DURABLE, AND ELEGANT.

Its Musical Effects are such as will commend it to all, and it will meet with the highest appreciation from people of refinement and cultivated taste.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF MUSIC IS REQUIRED.

The Tone is of surprising power, very rich, and blends beautifully with the human voice in Singing. At the top of the Instrument is arranged the Swell, by which the most beautiful variations can be given to the music. It plays thousands of tunes, both Sacred and Secular.

The ROLLER ORGAN is constructed of walnut wood, highly polished, and elegantly decorated with gilt. Its dimensions are 14 inches long, 12 inches wide, and 9 inches high; and it weighs, when packed for travelling, 16 lbs.

Carriage Paid to any Address in Great Britain or Ireland.

For centuries the treasures of written music have been accumulating, until the world is rich with gems of composition that give expression to every sentiment of the human soul. The martial strain that fires the heart to deeds of daring; the Love Note thrilling with tenderness; the Song of Joy; the Solemn Psalm; the merry music of the festal hour—touch all hearts alike, yet hitherto have been freely enjoyed only by the cultured few: but the invention of the ROLLER ORGAN changes all this, and the great mass of mankind can now enjoy the pleasure and derive the elevating influences of the best music properly performed.

The Tunes for the ROLLER ORGAN are arranged on compact little wooden rollers, so as to avoid the trouble, inconvenience, and loss by wear and tear, occasioned in handling loose music sheets, as in more inferior instruments.

The ROLLER ORGAN should not be confounded with the Orguinette, as it is very superior to anything of that kind or name, and has full-sized Cabinet Organ Reeds, and is as loud and melodious as a regular cabinet organ.

A HOUSEHOLD TREASURE.

THE CONCERT ROLLER ORGAN.

NO HOME SHOULD BE WITHOUT ONE.

IMPORTANT MUSICAL TESTIMONY.

"Office of the Music Trades' Journal,

"We have received a sample Roller Organ from Messrs. Campbell & Co., Musical Instrument Makers, 103, Trongate and 90, Argyle-street, Glasgow. We were extremely pleased with this marvellous instrument.

"We are pleased to have had an opportunity of hearing and judging of the tone and the execution of the various melodies performed, as nothing but a personal inspection could have induced us to give such a favourable verdict on the merits of the instrument as we are now enabled to. The different songs which the Organ performs may be played and used as an accompaniment to the voice, if desired, whilst other tunes can be used for dancing purposes. The tone is extremely agreeable."

N.B.—Please to make all Post Office Orders payable at the General Post Office, Glasgow, to JOHN CAMPBELL, but be careful to address all Letters with Orders to Messrs. CAMPBELL & CO., Musical Instrument Makers, 103, Trongate, Glasgow.

MR. IRA D. SANKEY.

AFTER a two months' sojourn in Great Britain, Mr. and Mrs. IRA D. SANKEY sail from Liverpool to-day (Thursday, November 18) in the ss. Adriatic, bound for New York. This will be a fitting time at which to present our readers with a portrait of the evangelist, and some brief account of the wonderful work which, in the good providence of God, he has been enabled to accomplish.

"Give me the writing of a nation's ballads, and he who will may make its laws." This famous saying has passed into a proverb, and may well serve as the text for a sketch of the life mission of our illustrious leader in Gospel song. That which influences and touches the secret springs of a nation's heart will do more to shape its life and character than all the statutes that can be heaped up in its legislative archives. And so, as we believe, the man who sets a people to singing does more to plant the foundations of Christ's kingdom firmly in the hearts of that people than could be accomplished by tomes of theological lore. Mr. Sankey, by natural endowment and a combination of favouring circumstances, has achieved this, not in the experience of one nation, but of a whole world. For it is no exaggeration to say that the Sacred Songs and Solos which are so closely associated with his name as composer and compiler have belted the entire globe with a girdle of never-ceasing song. If the man who explores a new continent is worthy of being embalmed in grateful memory as a benefactor to his race, then he who opens up a new continent of spiritual experience, and brings into common use a new and powerful instrument in Christian service, must be regarded as a signal gift from God to the Church at large. And this, as it seems to us, is what Mr. Sankey, by the grace of God, has done for the Christian world of the nineteenth century.

(From Photograph by Messrs. W. & D. Downey.)

Many of our readers will have heard of the somewhat dramatic way in which Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey became acquainted and associated in Gospel work. It was at Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, on the occasion of a Y.M.C.A. International Convention, that they first met. "You are the man I have been looking for these eight years," said Mr. Moody to the singer, after he heard him sing. Mr. Sankey was then about thirty years of age, but he had been unconsciously in training all those years for the call that then came to him so suddenly. He was born at Edinburgh, Pa., in August, 1840. His father was the Hon. David Sankey, for many years a member of the Legislature of that State, serving in both Houses with distinction and honour. He afterwards filled the position of president of a bank, and was otherwise a man active in public affairs. He was a thorough and consistent Christian, and was attached to the Methodist Episcopal Church till the time of his death, which happened in 1884, while his son Ira was singing the glorious Gospel of God's grace in the great meetings held in London during that year.

Ira David (which is his full Christian name) developed from early childhood a great fondness for music. We have heard him describe, from recollection, the feelings that thrilled his youthful spirit when he first attended a church in which an organ and other instruments were used in the service of praise. He could scarcely be induced to leave the place. When quite young, he could play on several instruments. His mother related to the writer, a few months since, how this penchant went at first in the direction of "Jews' harps," of which he accumulated a remarkable assortment. By and by these had to yield to the fascinations of a violin; and we may presume it, too, was deposed in due time in favour of the Cabinet organ, an instrument which has proved so serviceable to him in the serious work of his life.

His first ten or twelve years were spent on a large farm, and then the family residence was moved to the town of New Castle. The fact of his being reared in the country no doubt accounts in large measure for the wonderful chest development and purity of voice that have been important physical factors in his successful career. As a boy, he was full of spirit and the love of adventure. This, on one occasion, brought him so near to being trampled under the hoofs of a steed, that happened to be hitched near by the parental home, that his mother, fearing the worst consequences, insisted on the migration of the household to a more secluded part of the town. While profoundly thankful for the exemplary behaviour of that judicious quadruped, we can detect in the youthful exuberance of the child the beginnings of that geniality and liveliness of disposition that are so pleasantly familiar to all who have made Mr. Sankey's intimate acquaintance in later life.

Brought up under the best spiritual influences, Mr. Sankey dates the conscious definite acceptance of Christ as his Saviour in his fifteenth year, when he joined the Church of which his parents were members. In the succeeding years, he held various positions of trust and responsibility in connection with the church and congregation. He became leader of the choir, superintendent of the Sunday-school, class-leader, and ultimately president of the Y.M.C.A. in his town. It was in this last-named capacity that he was delegated to the Indianapolis Convention, where he met the great crisis of his life. Here it may be mentioned that though fortune has since led him to sojourn in many towns and cities, both in America and Europe, he has remained loyal in heart and in interest to the home of his youthful days and the scene of his earliest efforts in Christian work. In grateful remembrance of what God has done for him, he has recently secured for the citizens of New Castle one of the most convenient and comely buildings, devoted to Christian objects, to be found in the States. An engraving and detailed description of it appeared in these columns last year. It embraces spacious premises for the purposes of a Y.M.C.A., besides a Public Library and excellent Gymnasium, which are devoted to the mental and physical improvement of the citizens. Still more recently, we believe, he has gifted a valuable building site to the church in connection with which he first learned to love and serve the Lord Jesus Christ.

In 1870, at Mr. Moody's earnest solicitation, Mr. Sankey resigned a lucrative appointment in connection with the Internal Revenue of his native state, and went to Chicago to assist in the Christian work which the former evangelist had been carrying on in that great and growing city. Previous to this, however, he had achieved quite an extended reputation as a singer, and leader of Christian song, and was in much request at conventions and other religious gatherings throughout Pennsylvania and the neighbouring States. The call to Chicago proved to be the beginning of his real life mission. For some time the two evangelists had been labouring together very successfully, when there occurred the great Chicago fire, that destroyed the church and Farwell Hall, where the meetings were being held. In the latter building, indeed, a meeting was in progress on the memorable Sunday evening, as Mr. Moody has often told with graphic effect, when the fire alarm was sounded that heralded such a terrible disaster for the queen city of the West, as it then was; leaving thousands of people burnt out of house and home.

So mysterious and inscrutable are the ways of God in his providence, that out of that event, which proved a disaster to Chicago, came a train of circumstances fraught with untold blessing to multitudes on this side of the Atlantic. No one can assert what would probably have happened if the work of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey in Chicago had gone on uninterruptedly; but at least we are safe in saying that the advent of the two evangelists to Europe was accelerated by the sudden snapping of the threads of their American plans. In June, 1873, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, accompanied by their families, landed in England, not knowing what the near future might bring. Their expectation was to evangelise on this side the sea for a comparatively brief period, returning to resume operations in Chicago when the city had sufficiently recovered from its fiery ordeal. They did not return till more than two years had elapsed—two years that were not only eventful in their own career, but fruitful and epoch-making in the history of world-wide evangelism.

The story of the labours of Mr. Sankey and his fellow-evangelist during the thirteen years that have since intervened, must be so fresh in the memories of our readers that any detailed narrative is needless in these pages. Beginning at York, and going northwards into Scotland, and afterwards through Ireland and part of England, the work took root and increased both in volume and intensity, with the lapse of weeks and months and years, till the names of the evangelists have long since become household words, not only in the places and lands they have visited, but all over the civilised portions of the habitable globe. Histories of the movement have been written, and others will no doubt be written, telling, in part, of the signs and wonders that have accompanied their ministry of Gospel speech and Gospel song. The latter, as everybody knows, has been Mr. Sankey's special field. He has shown what can be done through the medium of a consecrated voice, in conveying religious truth to the minds and hearts of the people. One striking proof of the blessing that has attended his work is to be found in the fact that to-day he has countless successors.

He is not exclusively a singer, however. No one has been more active in the work of the inquiry-room, and many souls have been given to him for his hire, during these years, through his exercise of the gift of personal converse and speech, as well as directly through the Gospel proclaimed in song. To this unity of purpose, of spirit, and of endeavour, on the part of both evangelists, may be attributed the fact that God has so manifestly given them favour with the people wherever they have gone.

Of Mr. Sankey's musical gifts and abilities our limited space will not permit us to speak at length. Though not learned in the culture of the schools, or the technique of the art, he has nevertheless shown no small skill in the composition of melodies that touch and stir the popular heart. Not a few of the songs that have been largely used to the awakening and conversion of souls are of his own writing. A special gift possessed by Mr. Sankey is that of discrimination and judgment in the choice both of hymns and tunes that have proved to be channels of rich spiritual blessing to the people. Among composers he has had a wide field for this choice in the productions of Mr. Bliss, Mr. Stebbins, Mr. MacGranahan, and many others less known on this side of the Atlantic. The hymns written by Dr. Bonar, Miss F. R. Havergal, Fanny J. Crosby, and other sacred poets, have been freely pressed into the service.

At the same time, ample account must be taken of the wonderful charm of his magnificent voice, the sympathetic and magnetic qualities of which have never, in our judgment, been equalled, not to say excelled, in the case of any singing evangelist. Added to this, there is his studied clearness of enunciation, which enables the listener to grasp the sentiment of the song as readily almost as if the words were simply spoken. These, in brief, as it seems to us, are some of the main elements that explain his phenomenal success as an exponent of the Gospel in song.

Reference has already been made to the hymn-book, Sacred Songs and Solos, which has become so popular, and has found its way to the most remote regions of the earth. It has grown from very small beginnings. When Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey first came to this country they had no intention of themselves publishing a book of songs. For a considerable time they used in their meetings a book already published in London. The demand created by the singing of Mr. Sankey's solos, however, made a fresh compilation imperative, and the Songs and Solos have gradually expanded from sixteen, in its earliest form, to four hundred and forty-one in its latest. It is safe to say that no hymn-book ever published has met with such remarkable acceptance, or been so widely circulated. The hymns have been translated into a great many languages, so that in the service of praise and the work of the evangelist the book is to-day a bond of union among Christians of different nationalities and denominations, second only in extent and importance to the Bible itself.

A good deal has been said by advanced critics respecting the quality of the music as viewed from the severely classical standpoint. It must be remembered, however, that the book was prepared solely and simply for use in the work in which the evangelists were engaged, and was never intended to compete with productions of a more artistic sort. Music of an elaborate and "high class" description, much as it is admired and appreciated by Mr. Sankey, would not answer the purpose he had in view. It is this very quality of simplicity, allowing the sound to be subordinated to the sense, which has made the Songs and Solos a channel of untold blessing to countless thousands. Mr. Sankey may be well content with the popular verdict of his generation.

We lately announced that Mr. Sankey was engaged in writing the story of these hymns that have become so famous in connection with his work. He has frequently been urged to do so, and the record is sure to be one of deep and lasting interest. In response to his recent invitation, conveyed through these columns, he has received from all parts of the country incidents and statements of fact which will be of the utmost value to him in compiling the contemplated work. It will be some time, however, before it can be completed, and those of our readers who are in possession of such incidents may still forward them to our care.

As these lines are being read the evangelist will be on his twelfth voyage across the Atlantic. On his return to America he will rejoin Mr. Moody in Christian effort. We are glad to say that, in point of health and in the preservation of his voice in all its power and richness of quality, he was never better prepared for work than now. Our readers, we are sure, will earnestly wish for him many years of happy and successful labour for his Master in the department of service which he has so eminently made his own.

SHADWELL.—The twenty-fourth annual report of the London City Mission Station and Schools at Love-lane is a very encouraging one. It furnishes details of the missionary's visitation of the poor, Sunday evening services, with an attendance averaging over two hundred, men's Bible-class with ninety members, &c. Altogether, about 600 meetings have been held during the year, and a goodly number have, it is believed, experienced a real change of heart.

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE EAST.

A six days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Nott, at St. Mark's Hall, Victoria-park, E. For some time past a number of the girls employed at Messrs. Bryant & May's factory, and the like places, have been gathered nightly in this hall. Owing to the character of these girls, any endeavour to bring them under religious influences is extremely difficult; but the mission has been attended with very encouraging results. A number of girls have professed to give their hearts to the Saviour. Some few Sundays ago several of these girls were induced to attend the evening service at church for the first time in their lives.

A Temperance Society has been started with thirty-one members. At the first meeting about seventy girls sat down to tea. Mr. Doherty, who has interested himself much in this work, took the chair, and Mr. D. Brown gave a short address. It is earnestly hoped that this effort will prosper, as drink is one of the chief sins of these girls. The Branch of the Y.W.C.A. at Victoria Park now numbers forty-one members. Miss N. Rowlandson is the Superintendent.

MR. SANKEY'S PRESENT VISIT.

The two months' visit of the evangelist to Great Britain, now terminated, was undertaken strictly for purposes of rést and some private business. He received a large number of pressing requests to hold public services in different parts of the kingdom; but under the circumstances he felt compelled, though with much regret, to decline these, with two or three special exceptions.

In the course of his stay he visited some friends in Campbelltown, Argyllshire. As he had not been there on any previous occasion, he yielded to a generally expressed desire to address a meeting, which was held in the U. P. Church, and was crowded to overflowing. For nearly two hours he held the interested attention of the "eager throng," as he sang a number of favourite songs, both new and old, and related incidents in connection with them. Many of the ministers in the town were present, and several took part in the interesting proceedings. On the following evening he spoke and sang to a large gathering of young women, met in the new hall of the local Y.W.C.A.; a goodly number of them were deeply impressed, and rose for prayer.

Later on Mr. and Mrs. Sankey paid a brief visit to Lady Cairns, at her Scottish home, Dunira, near Crieff. In conjunction with the Bishop of Sodor and Man, who was also a guest of Lady Cairns, the evangelist conducted a largely attended service, many of the people coming from long distances all around. Before leaving Scotland Mr. Sankey visited Edinburgh, renewing some old and happy acquaintances, but he did not speak or sing at any public meeting.

While visiting friends at Bristol he acceded to the urgent invitation of the Y.M.C.A. to attend their annual meeting, held in the new and spacious hall which was erected largely as the outcome of the work of the two evangelists in that city, and which was opened by Mr. Moody prior to his departure for America. The meeting overflowed into a neighbouring church; in both places Mr. Sankey spoke and sang to deeply interested congregations.

Many friends in London would fain have heard his well-remembered voice again in public, during this visit, but he was not able to comply, with the exception of giving a brief talk and one or two songs last Sunday afternoon at the Polytechnic, by request of Mr. J. E. K. Studd, whose guest he then was. We are glad to be able to give in this issue one of the new songs that Mr. Sankey has recently composed, and feel sure it will be found helpful to Gospel singers.

BRUNSWICK HALL, POPLAR.—The anniversary services in connection with this hall were lately held. A free tea was given to the poor mothers. At the annual meeting, Mr. George Fuller, General Superintendent of the Mission, in an outline of the work, said that it had been greatly blessed. During last winter some 800 full meals were given to the poor.

MR. CHARLES JAMES, of the Gospel Purity Association, has concluded another successful lecturing campaign in different parts of Wales. He has received an invitation to lecture for several Young Men's Christian Associations in Canada during his forthcoming visit to America. Any of our Transatlantic friends who would like a lecture from Mr. James should write to him at the office of the Gospel Purity Association, 31, Paternoster-square, London, till the end of December, and after that care of Mr. T. M. James, Brewer Village, Maine.

BRITISH MUSEUM LECTURES.—The series of lectures on the "Ancient Civilisation of the East" which Mr. St. Chad Boscawen, the Assyriologist, is now delivering at the British Museum, on Wednesday afternoons, has proved so attractive that he has been specially requested to give a supplementary series for the benefit of clergymen and students He commenced on Monday last a course of four afternoon lectures, on successive Mondays, on the "Chaldean Creation and Deluge Legends." Students at theological colleges and schools will be admitted at reduced rates. The lectures begin at two o'clock.

THE PRIEST IN THE FAMILY.

A very noteworthy correspondence, to which we briefly alluded in our last issue, has been appearing in the columns of The Globe, commencing with Saturday, Nov. 6. A gentleman, under the signature of "A Staunch Churchman," wrote in that number detailing and commenting on letters that had passed between himself, on the one hand, and Rev. C. H. Moore, "administrator of the Pro-Cathedral," and Cardinal Manning, on the other, respecting the reception of his wife into the Romish Church. "My sole object in seeking publicity," he said, "is to enlighten husbands and fathers as to the methods by which the Roman Catholic propaganda accomplishes its objects. I was not even aware that my wife had seen a priest until after her formal reception. I do not contest the right of anyone—man or woman, married or single—to follow the dictates of conscience in matters of religion. What I protest against is a system of secrecy, of intrigue, and of deliberate deception being employed to make converts."

Having failed to get satisfactory explanations on certain points from Mr. Moore, the active agent in the transaction, the aggrieved husband addressed himself to Dr. Manning, as the head of the Romish Communion in this country, putting the following queries, among others, to which he desired authoritative replies:—

> Is it in accord with the principles of your faith for a priest to receive into the Roman Catholic Church the wife of a Protestant, without previously informing her husband?
>
> Is it sound Roman Catholic doctrine that when "conscience and a higher law" step in, all other considerations have to be put aside, including the duty of a wife to cleave to her husband?

To these questions the Cardinal replied as follows:—

> It is lawful for a Catholic priest to receive the wife of anyone of any religion without requiring the consent or making previous communication to anyone; and it is right, when called upon to receive anyone of years of discretion, if the liberty of conscience of that person is interfered with by anyone, to do so.
>
> According to law, human and divine, a higher law suspends a lower, for they can never be at variance. The law of conscience is higher than any law of affection.

In closing his letter to The Globe, the writer said:—

> The operation of this code of priestly morality has completely estranged husband from wife, has brought permanent disunion into a previously united family, has rendered it necessary to restrict free intercourse between mother and children, and has directly led to systematic deception, long-continued and most flagrant.

As may be supposed, this statement, emphasised by a strong leading article in our evening contemporary, has awakened the deepest interest in many circles, and succeeding issues of The Globe have contained portions of the voluminous correspondence it has evoked. Many of the letters skilfully evade the real point at issue, which is not whether a wife may abjure one system of faith and embrace another, from conscientious and deliberately formed conviction, but whether a Romish priest may insinuate himself, by secret and underhand methods, into a Protestant family circle, and seek, by the plausibilities that do duty for argument, to lure away some of its members, while the responsible head of the family is kept entirely in the dark, and thus prevented from throwing his legitimate influence into the scale. Cardinal Manning candidly endorses all that his subordinate has done, and makes the amazing claim that a priest in the exercise of his proselytising functions "has no obligation to communicate with anybody." This may be Papal morality, but it is not a principle of action that will commend itself to those who are guided by the laws of God, or even by the code of equitable dealing between man and man as understood by the common instincts of civilised humanity. On this point one writer in The Globe well remarks:—

> According to Cardinal Manning, a "higher law," that is to say, the dictates of conscience, suspends a lower—i.e., the dictates of honour and honesty. But Cardinal Manning, if he admits this proposition, finds himself in this awkward position—namely, that the Church of which he is so distinguished a member has never, in any country, or any time, where clerical rule has prevailed, permitted any proselytising to be carried on by members of other religious bodies, whether moved by a "higher law" or not. On the contrary, it has stopped all such proceedings with a high hand, and, as in the case of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew, and in the Autos da Fè in Spain, has speedily sent to the stake or to assassination all who have dared to attempt to seduce away members of the Church of Rome, whether such proselytisers were actuated by the "higher law" or not. In short, the liberty which Cardinal Manning claims for Popish priests in this country—namely, to secretly seduce away members of the Church of England—his own Church has never permitted nor sanctioned in its own country.

This, to our thinking, is a perfect and complete answer to the unblushing assumption of the Romish ecclesiastic, who hides beneath the glove of studied politeness and meekness of demeanour an iron hand of cruel and unrelenting disregard for some of the fundamental axioms of the religion of Jesus Christ, whose minister he professes to be.

We have seen, with no small astonishment, that the action and opinions of the priest and the Cardinal are, by implication, defended and advocated in the editorial columns of The Pall Mall Gazette. The writer of a note in that journal on Monday week must know as well as anybody, if he has read the correspondence on which he comments, that the real question at stake is not as to the liberty of the wife to change her creed; it concerns the liberty of the priest to enter the family and further his designs under the cloak of secrecy; with the result that those for whom he is angling follow his example, and conceal all that is transpiring from those who ought to know. How any truly religious man, with a wife and family of his own, who may possibly be the next victims of such craft and intrigue, can bring himself to espouse the Romish cause in this case, passes our comprehension. A good many things have appeared in The Pall Mall of late that has excited our wonderment, but nothing more than this. Have the Jesuits succeeded in placing one of their own order on its editorial staff?

It is not to be supposed that the case related in The Globe is a solitary, or even infrequent, one. Indeed, in the subsequent correspondence, other and in some respects worse instances of priestly unscrupulousness and deceit are given. Says one writer:—

> It may startle those who are in ignorance of the deception that is apparently allowable and encouraged by Rome to read the following case: A lady who had become a professed nun in opposition to her mother's wishes, came to know that the will which otherwise would have left her richly provided for had been altered in consequence of her profession as a réligieuse. One day, therefore, the said nun appeared at her mother's home, her religious habit laid aside, and told her that she had found out the error of the step she had taken, and intended renouncing her vows and returning to the parental roof. Here she remained, and by her filial obedience and apparent contrition contrived to get the will restored in her favour. On the death of her mother, however, and her consequent possession of the money, she returned to the convent, carrying her spoils with her, and hereby materially enriching the community whose profession she had only outwardly renounced! What can we think of this? It must have been allowed by her superiors and the priests, yet it involved the deception of her parent on the one part, and connivance at the same on the part of her spiritual directors. But the end, I suppose, as usual, justified the means.

"The end justified the means." Her long and chequered history infallibly shows that Rome has throughout been consistent in the adoption of this principle—or rather, utter lack of principle. And it is abundantly clear that, however the circumstances of the time may have compelled its modification or temporary abeyance, semper eadem is still the motto of the Romish Apostasy. Out of this case, discreditable and deplorable as it is, good may arise. One of the writers in The Globe observes that the correspondence "has struck a heavy blow at Roman influence amongst us." If this be so, all true lovers of England will rejoice. We sincerely hope that the incident may have its due weight with "the prominent statesmen" whom Lord Denbigh is expecting to aid him in bringing about a rapprochement between the British Government and "the prisoner of the Vatican."

GERMANS IN LONDON.

The work of the Christlicher Verein Junger Männër, whose headquarters are at 28, Finsbury-square, E.C. (the object of which is to benefit spiritually and socially German young men of the commercial and other classes in London), continues to give cause for great thankfulness. The secretary reports a large addition to the number of members and associates, with increased attendance at the various religious meetings, and growing interest in the study of the Bible. Whilst care is taken to provide for the social needs of the variety of men visiting the rooms, the chief aim of the workers is to bring them to Christ. Letters continue to reach the secretary from members returned to their "Fatherland" and others, testifying to personal blessing received whilst connected with the Association; one is from a member who lately entered Professor Christlieb's Training Home for Evangelists at Bonn.

English Christians who are anxious for the evangelisation of Germany might with advantage show their practical sympathy with the work at Finsbury-square. A large proportion of these Germans return to their country, and, if won for Christ during their stay amongst us, they would become missionaries to their brethren. The committee, whilst labouring under many difficulties, such as lack of suitable premises and want of sympathy from many of the German City merchants, are encouraged by the results achieved during the past year. The secretary is Herr Müller, 28, Finsbury-square, E.C.

FREE DISTRIBUTION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

It has been estimated that about five million copies of the Scriptures are annually sent forth, but the yearly increase in the population of the globe being about ten millions, it is clear that the circulation of the Scriptures is far behind even present requirements. The Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures seeks in some measure to meet the dearth of God's Word. During 1885 about £1500 was spent in this work.

An earnest appeal is made for increased help, that the Scriptures may be freely distributed amongst those who otherwise would never possess the word of eternal life in Christ Jesus. From Germany, Constantinople, India, and other parts, letters have lately been received telling of wonderful blessing following this gift of the Word of God. The hon. sec. is Mrs. A. E. Robertson, 1, Oak-hill-park, Hampstead, N.W.

STUDY, PULPIT AND PEW.—1.

REV. ADOLPHUS SWEETMAN.

It was the eve of the Sabbath-day. The hour of eight had chimed from many a church tower and public mart — chimed over the muddy street and reeking court; over the city squares and residences of the aristocrats; over the quiet homes of the middle classes, and penetrated into the study of Rev. Adolphus Sweetman, rousing him to glance from The Nineteenth Century, held loosely in his hand, to the clock on the mantelpiece. "I must have fallen asleep," he murmured, laying down the periodical, and yawning; "it is time to think of to-morrow's sermon."

He rose, rang for coffee, stirred the fire into a blaze, and changed his coat for a comfortable dressing-gown. As he did so his eye fell on the well-filled shelves of the bookcase which lined one side of the study. His feet following the glance, he carried to the table an armful of commentaries, "theologies," and "selections." "It is so difficult to choose a text!" he thought, as he turned over the leaves of the Bible, "my people are so critical! The Honourable Sextus Moneyford and the Ladies Julia and Gwendoline have returned to town; Mr. L. Smythson Tottenham will be there also; the sermon must have a little extra attention."

He sipped the coffee leisurely and read, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." "That will do," he thought; "people do regard 'death' as an 'enemy:' it is well to remind them that he will be 'destroyed;' a little word-painting will come in appropriately; poetry also:—

'Thou art where billows foam,

The Lady Gwendoline likes poetry, and Mr. L. Smythson Tottenham likes to hear about heaven. It will be easy to point on to the glory of heaven after the destruction of the 'enemy.' Let us see what the theologians say on the subject." And he reads, makes extracts, and thinks. At 9.30 he shuts the books, looks over his "notes," to see that all is correct, and puts them carefully into the elastic of the Bible; takes up The Nineteenth Century again, and after some time retires.

But the Recording Angel has been hovering over the study, and writes: "Adolphus Sweetman seeks not the honour which comes from God only."

The minister enters the pulpit as the Honourable Sextus Moneyford enters his pew. The Ladies Gwendoline and Julia are there; Mr. L. Smythson Tottenham, also, and a few distinguished-looking strangers, who had heard of his eloquence. There are others—many others (for the neighbourhood is a populous one), but of the middle and lower classes. He begins his sermon. The Honourable Sextus Moneyford listens, admires his faultless elocution and accent; thinks, "How fortunate we are to have such an unobjectionable minister." Gradually he becomes drowsy, and forgets his surroundings in a quiet nap.

Mr. L. Smythson Tottenham did not enjoy the sermon till the reference to heaven at the close soothed his mind and sent him away content. The Lady Gwendoline thought the poetry "quite too" delightful. The Lady Julia—ah! what of her? During the last few weeks the world had become dark to her. She bore her sorrow bravely and alone, longing for something to rest in which could not be touched by the tide of time; but the beautiful sentences and sweet voice of the minister brought no balm to her wounded soul.

Mr. Swithington, whose business affairs were becoming complicated, and who knew that in a few months his wife and children must be plunged into poverty, thought, "It's very well to talk about death and heaven, but how is a man to live?" And Widow Jones, whose son was brought home with a broken leg, after a drunken spree, said to her friend, Sally Long, "He be a beautiful preacher; but the world's not happy, an' I'd like to die if he'd a told us how to get to heaven; and Tom, I'd like to take him too." "What a mockery!" thought Mrs. Termans, as she walked sadly to the hospital, where her husband lay in a private ward. "There was no Gospel (God's-spell) of everlasting love in that sermon; nothing but self."

And the Recording Angel who had been hovering over the church wrote: "Adolphus Sweetman: those who might have entered in he hindered, and his damnation shall be just."

MINISTERS AND INQUIRERS.

Dear Sir,—I recently attended an evangelistic meeting held in a large city. There were four or five well-known ministers on the platform. At the conclusion of his address, the evangelist intimated that there would be an after-meeting. No sooner had these words passed his lips than a regular stampede among the pastors ensued, the chairman alone standing his ground.

It is not the first time I have observed a similar exhibition. The fact undoubtedly is, that most ministers have no ability to face an after-meeting. So long as it is preaching, they are quite at home; but when it comes to close personal dealing, they are as unable to engage in it as an unfledged schoolboy.

I think you would be doing good service if some correspondence on this subject were entered into in your columns. The fault lies in the present ridiculous method of training young men for the ministry, in which there is no practical instruction given. Fancy a set of doctors who only knew medicines from lectures and books, and who had no "clinical" training. The public would take very good care not to trust their bodies to such men. I am far from thinking it would put everything right, but it would be a great step in the right direction, if all Divinity students were required to go through an evangelistic training, and practical dealing in the inquiry-room, before being sent forth as pastors and teachers.—Yours very truly,

W. G.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—November 21, Mark xiv. 32—45; November 22, Mark xiv. 46—59; November 23, Mark xiv. 60—72; November 24, Mark xv. 1—15; November 25, Mark xv. 16—32; November 26, Mark xv. 33—47; November 27, Mark xvi. 1—20.

SLAVERY IN CUBA.—The Queen of Spain has signed a decree, which confers immediate freedom on the remaining slaves in Cuba. When it is borne in mind that not forty years ago, no less than 40,000 slaves were being shipped every year from Africa to Cuba, the friends of humanity cannot but be thankful now at seeing an end of this stupendous iniquity, for which objects the Anti-Slavery Societies of London and Madrid so long laboured. Brazil now alone in the Western world still clings to the old and evil distinction of being a vast slave-holding country, where more than a million of slaves yet exist, who themselves or their parents have been imported from Africa in spite of solemn treaties with all the laws of Brazil.

III.—STRENGTH FOR SERVICE.

"Who is sufficient for these things?"—2 Cor. ii. 16.
"Our sufficiency is of God"—2 Cor. iii. 5.

1.—Prayer. "And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, He went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed" (Mark i 35). (In the Gospel of God's Servant, here in the first chapter, we see how He gathered strength by prayer.)

2.—Baptism of the Spirit (Acts ii.). "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness" (Acts iv. 31). "Seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business . . . Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost . . . full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people" (Acts vi. 3, 5, 8).

3.—Following Jesus. "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me" (John xii. 26). "Consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds" (Heb. xii. 3). "I have given you an example" (John xiii. 15).

4.—Looking to the Lord. "Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God" (Ps. cxxiii. 2). Answered by, "I will guide thee with mine eye" (Ps. xxxii. 8). "The Lord looked upon him, and said, Go in this thy might . . . have not I sent thee?" (Judges vi. 14).

5.—Trust. "The God of heaven, He will prosper us; therefore we, his servants, will arise and build" (Neh. ii. 20). "We rest on Thee, and in thy name we go against this multitude" (2 Chron. xiv. 11).

6.—Grace. "Let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear" (Heb. xii. 28). "He giveth more grace" (James iv. 6). "God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all-sufficiency in all things, may abound in every good work" (2 Cor. ix. 8).

7.—Remembrance of past help. "David said moreover, The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, He will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine" (1 Sam. xvii. 37). "When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing" (Luke xxii. 35).

IV.—THE GLORY OF SERVICE.

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who . . . made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant . . . and humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him," &c. (Phil. ii. 5—11). "I am among you as He that serveth" (Luke xxii. 27). "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Matt. xx. 27, 28). "Ye serve the Lord Christ" (Col. iii. 24).

They spent their lives for others,
  But the world knew them not;
It had not known their Master,
  And they sought no higher lot.
But the angels in heaven knew them,
  And He knew them who died and rose;
And the poet knew that the lowest place
  Was that which the Highest chose.

THE HUNGRY OF OLD FORD.—The first cold day has brought poverty out of its hiding-places, which I am utterly unable to meet until funds for the purpose are entrusted to me. Anything that can be used for the poor children and adults will be thankfully received.

FIGUERAS, SPAIN.—We hear with great thankfulness that Señora Lopez Rodriguez has passed the crisis of the gastric fever and dysentery which had placed her life in danger, and that she is now able to take nourishing food. We hope that when this appears she will be materially gaining strength. Thanksgiving is desired for this, and continued prayer for complete recovery without relapse, and for the Lord's work in the villages of this north-east corner of Spain.

The Manchester Conference.

A VERY remarkable Missionary Conference was held in Manchester last week. Though of only two days' duration, seed was sown of which it will take years to realise the fruit, and even then heaven alone will reveal its fulness. Many hearts were placed wholly, afresh or for the first time, into the Lord's hands, willing to do his bidding at home or abroad.

A preliminary prayer-meeting was held on Monday evening at the Central Hall, at which Rev. Preb. Macdonald presided, giving as the keynote of the Conference the Master's words, "That they all may be one . . . that the world may believe;" he added a few beautiful words on the importance of all workers being in living communion with their risen Lord. Earnest, expectant prayers were offered by Revs. Evan Hopkins, C. H. Judd, Grattan Guinness, F. B. Meyer, and J. Wilkinson, leading the supplications of the 900 or 1000 people present. Mr. Radcliffe gave one of his characteristic addresses upon "What mean ye by this service?" and Dr. Ziemann told of God's work in Berlin.

The presence of the Holy Spirit was realised in a marked degree on this occasion.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9.

This morning the Conference proper commenced in the Hall attached to the Boys' and Girls' Refuges, Strangeways. Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE presided at the early prayer-meeting, at which

Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS said that salvation is for the world, but it is of the Lord. In it man is nothing and God is all. If we look at our nothingness we are discouraged; we must look at the all-sufficiency of God, who is omnipotence and infinity, who created the millions of human beings upon the globe, and kept not back his Son, nor his Spirit, in order that they might be saved. God made his promise to Abraham. There could not be a greater contrast than between Abraham and God: the one was a worm, the other his Creator. God's promises antedate the law. That law in its primary sense has passed away, but his promises have not. His purpose was to save man, and this He would accomplish in a certain order. First, He would bless a family and be a God to that family; second, He would make that family into a nation and be that nation's God; third, that nation was to be emancipated and planted in the promised land, and God would dwell in its midst. "God so loved the WORLD that He gave his only begotten Son, that WHOSOEVER believeth on Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." And when the Holy Ghost came upon his disciples it was that they might declare the Gospel to EVERY CREATURE, and He has laid on the Church the responsibility and honour of evangelising the world. Christianity has been like a great tidal wave which sweeps up the shore, carrying all obstacles before it; then retreats, but only to return with still greater force, covering more ground than before. For three centuries the history of Christianity was one of triumph and progress. Although the Jews, the Gentiles, and the mighty power of Rome were all against it, yet it conquered and advanced. Then came retreat, and for thirteen centuries through the dark ages the Church ceased to evangelise the world, and became converted by the world, and turned persecutor of the true followers of Jesus. Then came the second advance, which we are in the midst of to-day, and which will continue until the Lord comes. But the first two hundred years of this advance were exclusively occupied with spreading the Gospel in our own land, and only at the end of last century did Christians turn their attention to the heathen. During these hundred years, however, there has been so mighty an advance in the evangelisation of the world that three million souls have been brought to Christ. But then the increase of population has been two hundred millions, so that, great as the work has been, there are 197 millions more who do not know the Gospel than there were a century ago. While we are talking and discussing, the death rate is going on, the birth rate is going on, and in a few years all who are alive now will have passed away. If, therefore, we are to reach this generation, we must rouse ourselves to our responsibilities, and work for the Master while yet it is day.

THE CONVERSION OF THE JEWS.

Rev. J. WILKINSON then gave an address, which seemed to touch the hearts and sympathies of all present, as he pleaded the cause of the Jews in England. "Mr. Guinness has said that salvation is of the Lord. It is also true that 'salvation is of the Jews.' It is of the Lord as a source, and of the Jews as an instrumentality. There will be a national ingathering and a spiritual one. The first of these we gather from such passages as Isa. xi. 11, 12, where 'the Lord shall set his hand the second time to recover the remnant of his people,' and gather them 'from the four corners of the earth;' Amos ix.: 'I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up.' The land of promise is still the promised land, for while it embraces 300,000 square miles, only a portion of it (from Dan to Beersheba) was ever occupied by the children of Israel. Then from Ezek. xlv. to xlviii. we have a different distribution of the land and a new location of the tribes. All these point to a great national ingathering of the Jews. Then of the second, the spiritual, ingathering, we have a Divine guarantee in such passages as Rom. xi. 26. We must bear in mind that evangelisation is not conversion. Evangelisation is only making known the truths of the Gospel; conversion is the reception of them by the hearers. We are to evangelise, but we cannot convert; we are to take the truth to the heathen, whether they are converted by it or not.

"But these two ingatherings are future; what, then, about the present ingathering? Thank God, steps are being taken to accomplish this as well. Nearly eleven years ago the Mildmay Mission to the Jews was commenced, upon the principle that if it were God's work He would own it and provide for its needs. This has kept us very near to God, and we have great joy in showing to the Jews 'from the Scriptures that Jesus is the Christ.' This greatly strengthens our own faith in Christ, which is an important thing in these days of scepticism. If we have an intelligent faith we speak with no bated breath about the Atonement and the Deity of Christ; and though sometimes men, white with rage, will denounce us for saying such things of Jesus of Nazareth, we have had thirty out of a congregation of 400, or fifty out of a congregation of 500, rise up before their brethren, and confess their faith in Him as the Messiah. Then amongst the children a very interesting work is done. They come and learn Gospel hymns, which they sing at home, and in this artless way their parents are often reached. It is common for Jewesses to thank God that they are as they are, whilst the men thank Him with equal fervour that they are not women. We therefore teach them that their souls are just as precious as their husbands', which, being a new truth to them, finds a hearing from its very novelty. Many, again, are reached through the Medical Mission, who would not otherwise listen to the Gospel. I have seen a lady kneeling at the feet of a dirty Jew, and as he saw how tenderly she bathed and dressed his wounds, he exclaimed, 'If Christianity had been like this ages ago, we should all have been Christians now.' And why was it not so? Because the Lord's people have not exercised that Divine compassion which characterised the spirit of Christ. He says, 'If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his.' Have we that spirit? How people can go away and say, 'Wasn't it a good meeting? Hasn't it been a blessed Conference?' and yet do nought for the cause of the Lord, seems passing strange.

"One thousand eight hundred years ago there was a converted Jew, who by one sermon led 3000 souls to Christ. The Apostolic order was, 'To the Jew first,' and the Apostles always sought the synagogue first; and, if we would observe that order now, without diminishing the work among the Gentiles, we should soon find the Jews a most glorious auxiliary in blessing the Gentiles of every land and tongue."

MISS WESTON AND THE SAILORS.

Miss WESTON, in bright, racy style, told of successful efforts to help "Jack ashore and Jack afloat," and showed the valuable influence of a truly converted sailor, not only over his crew, but in foreign ports and lands. "Christian officers and men carry the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth," she added, and told how a missionary had lately found that an English gunboat, stationed for six months near a Chinese port, had been a direct help to him in his work, the men, by their Christian lives and actions, having won the respect of the Chinese. Would God this could be said of more of our foreign representatives!

In introducing the subject of

HINDRANCES TO THE GOSPEL,

Rev. EVAN HOPKINS was interested in Miss Weston's work, as it was through a sailor that he was brought to the Lord. Work, he said, is the outcome of conversion, but the subject about which he had to speak was the root. If we want to be workers for Christ we must not begin by imitating the fruit on the branches; but the life must be from within, derived from the passing stream as the "tree planted by rivers of water." What is the Gospel? It is the power of God unto salvation. It is the weapon appointed for the salvation of men. Unless we have faith in this instrument we shall not succeed. But we must have the Gospel put forth in an intelligible way before we can receive it. "Understandest thou what thou readest?" was the question Philip asked the eunuch. He was reading the Gospel of the Old Testament, and Philip from it "preached unto him Jesus." Now, what are the hindrances? They are found—(1) In us; (2) Through us. Among the first are (a) want of knowledge; (b) want of thoroughness; (c) want of faith. (a), Want of knowledge means that we do not realise what we possess. We may take possession of some property, and yet not know fully its resources. We know we are rich, but do not know how rich. Now God calls us to be holy. Is it difficult? That depends. Difficulty is a relative term, depending upon our resources. Put all your difficulties into one scale; they are heavy indeed. Now in the other put—what? "My grace is sufficient for thee." God's grace, then, is proportionate to man's difficulty. Then (b), in want of thoroughness you are afraid of "going too far." You want to get to heaven and all your children, but you do not see why you should not go into the world a little way. But the world takes one chamber of the heart, then another, and ultimately crowds out what is spiritual. How are you to remedy this? Get as near the Master as you can. What had Israel to do? To give up Egypt? No, but to follow the pillar. Do not think about giving up, but about taking. Let no space intervene between you and Christ, and the closer you keep to Him, the more easily will weights and hindrances slip imperceptibly out of your grasp. Then, again, many are consecrated, but not happy. Why? Because of (c) want of faith. We cannot walk with one foot. We have two feet—consecration and faith. What am I to trust? The "exceeding great and precious promises." But these are not merely to be admired, they are to be appropriated. "Oh, but," you say, "I want to feel something." Suppose I show you three men—Fact, Faith, and Feeling—which walk in that order. If Faith looks at Feeling he loses sight of Fact. We must keep our eyes on Fact. The promise is, "I will," but the fact is, "I am." "I am" is present: "I will," is future, and the past is under the blood.

Secondly, hindrances come through us, and under this we find: (a) Want of testimony; (b) Want of gladness. Our duty is to testify. We are "living epistles to be read and known of all men." We are, as it were, the sheet of paper on which the message is written; men should read that message and think, not of us, but of the absent writer. If we fail in this we grow cold, and, as an inevitable consequence, have (b) want of gladness. Testimony convinces, but gladness attracts. The Lord Jesus Christ was "anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows." Are we thus anointed? If so, our testimony will prove attractive, and we shall find that, in proportion as we put these hindrances aside, and grow in these various phases of grace, we shall be able to run the race set before us, and convince the world of the reality of our religion.

Mr. H. F. Bowker, of London, who followed upon the same subject, said that the sphere which many occupy is not that of Christ, for He laid down certain principles which they have not carried out. "As my Father hath sent Me, even so have I sent you." If we are not in that sphere we must get into it. We want principles not emotions. In the red-hot influence of this meeting we feel we could go anywhere and do anything for Christ, but this emotion will pass away unless it is founded on a principle. The world has a keen idea of what we ought to be, and a half-hearted religion is not a subject of their condemnation merely but of their contempt. We in England and Scotland are a law-abiding people, and insist that law must be applied and obeyed. Carry this into spiritual things. God demands obedience to his law. "Oh, but that is impossible," someone says. Well, if you realise that, it is the first step towards blessing, for if it is impossible with men it is not so with God. If, therefore, you have found that it is impossible will you yield yourself to Him to mould and direct you according to his own will?

Every promise begins to be fulfilled when we believe it. We often feel that the devil and the world are too much for us, and say with those who came back from viewing the land, that to conquer is impossible. But two said it was possible. Both these statements were true. But if God be for us, what can the devil do? "A great deal," you say; "he murdered Bishop Hannington." So he did Christ, at three o'clock on Friday; but before dawn on Monday who had the victory? The risen Christ. We cannot understand God's ways, but He will shed a light on all his ways by and by. Are you hindered by not knowing what sort of work to undertake? You are kindled with fresh love in this meeting, and you ask what are you to do? For fifty years I have never asked God what I am to do. In Ephes. ii. I learn that God hath created us in Christ Jesus unto good works, which the Lord hath prepared. So your work is prepared for you. Put yourself in the hands of God: live in communion with Him, and He will show you your work. But do not shrink from it when He does show it. If you do, He will hand it over to someone else, and that one will have the honour of it, whilst you are put to shame.

THE GOSPEL IN IRELAND

was the theme of the afternoon gathering, under the presidency of Mr. Isaac Hoyle, M.P. Miss Smyly, speaking of the Irish Church Mission work amongst Roman Catholics, said that when a man has been absolved on a sick bed he still feels the burden of his sins, but when he receives Christ, he feels the burden rolled away. The people feel that they do not get satisfaction in their national religion, and many are seeking it where only it is to be found. As an instance of this, a man who had been in the habit of ill-treating his wife asked the priest's advice as to leading a better life. But his reverence said that while the Church could pardon sins of the past, she could not give any help in the matter of future behaviour. Much dissatisfied, the poor fellow met a friend who had been converted through this work, and stated his case. But even from him he did not get full light, so he begged his wife to accompany him on foot to Dublin (some hours' journey) to seek salvation. The Lord did not permit this to be in vain—they both found the secret of a happy life.

It is most important, she said, to show the love of Christ because the priests inspire fear. Roman Catholics more than Protestants realise the power of sin. Their religion is one of mourning and confession of sin, but they are not familiar with the love of Christ, so this is a great power. We believe in getting hold of the children in our homes and schools; we have over 600 children, and through them we reach the parents.* But they are never free from persecution. For instance, a poor woman recently had all her children kidnapped during her absence, for allowing them to attend the schools, and has no idea where they are, all efforts up to the present have failed to trace them. The good work does not end when the children leave our care, for when they return to live at their own homes they become in very many cases missionaries to their parents and friends.

Rev. Wm. Park stated that behind all the riot and disturbance in Ulster there was a large amount of steady Christian work. Whatever degree of vital religion existed is clearly traceable to the notable revival of 1859. Two features are noticeable in the religious condition of this part of the country. First, there is an intense desire to hear the Word of God; second, there was never so much real Christian work carried on as now, and especially by women, in the cause of the Gospel and of Temperance. The Presbyterian Church at Belfast has a training college, and sends out students to various districts to preach the Word, which is the best training they can have for ministerial work. Many ministers in these districts have testified to the value and fruitful results of their labours.

Rev. H. W. Townsend, in dealing with the South and West of Ireland, found great fault with those who shrink from speaking to Roman Catholics about salvation. District visitors generally pass by their houses. By rather weak argument he set forth the need (?) of controversy in working amongst them. He followed, however, with some capital anecdotes which had come under his notice, showing the value of grounding the children in the Word of God. Very often a priest will forbid parents to send their children to the Protestant school when he finds it out; it is therefore most important to teach them during their short attendance some truths which they will never forget. The success of this has been tested again and again.

An account from Mr. W. B. Harington of a recent visit to Cork brought this very interesting subject to a close.

OUR CHILDREN.

Dr. Barnardo's address will long be remembered. After expressing regret that the young were so little remembered at such Conferences, although during their early days their young plastic minds are in our hands, and the impressions and teaching of early life can never be effaced, he gave some earnest advice to parents.

Most emphatically he begged them to win the confidence of their little ones; to be most careful in the choice of governesses, nurses, &c., in their early life, to see that their own lives were consistent, remembering that the young are quick to detect unreality. Not to neutralise their Christian teaching by practically bringing them up for the world. To be very watchful over the books read by children. To provide plenty of occupation for the active young heads and brains, early interesting them in the work of God at home and abroad, and encouraging their interest and care for children in circumstances less fortunate than their own.

To seek most earnestly for the conversion of their children while young, proving that some of our most useful and best men are those who in early life came to Christ. To give the children our warm sympathy, and to keep their confidence in the most trying ordeal of school life, and when entering upon business or profession, &c. To let no public work for God interfere with the personal influence and time given to our little ones; very specially addressing mothers on this point, telling of their wonderful influence over the young minds committed to their care, and of their responsibility regarding the moral training of their boys. "Oh, parents," concluded Dr. Barnardo, "if you are God's men and God's women, I charge you in his name write on your children from earliest infancy 'For Christ, not for the world.' Engrave upon their character and on every arrangement for their life 'For Christ.'"

A prayer-meeting was held after these addresses, at which many hearts responded to Dr. Ziemann's words, "Do you not feel as if you must pray? Let us go to God now as we realise our immense responsibility regarding our children and the Gospel-hunger of God's great world. Let us go to God as the Scotch Puritans did—they used few words of their own and more of God's, saying, 'Hast Thou not said?'" putting God to the test as it were. Short earnest petitions closed the afternoon's Conference.

Great expectation was expressed for the evening meeting, when the topic was

THE GOSPEL AND THE MASSES.

The Chairman, Mr. F. W. Crossley, commenced with a speech in defence of the Salvation Army, after which Miss Emma Booth gave a very powerful address. We must look at the world as Christ did from Calvary, and let our hearts yearn for sinners as did his. The sins of all nations were borne upon the Cross: hence the importance of carrying the good news to every creature. Do you realise, she asked, that the whole world may be saved, or do you look upon it as a pretty story? People say our efforts are fanatical, but if you knew what it is to yearn with your whole soul to bring about the result that Christ died to accomplish, you would understand our zeal. Men know in whom we have believed, and they see that our faith is fulfilled in our works. But we require more than faith if we are to reach the masses; and more than a knowledge of their condition. I may see a man in the train whom I know to be without Christ. I also know that Christ has made provision for his salvation. I know the man's need, and I have faith in Christ's supply, but that will not save him. I must lay the truth before him ere my responsibility is removed. We must connect the need and the supply. With a pathos which few speakers could surpass she related an incident which she experienced a short time ago. Late one night a tiny baby face attracted her attention at the door of a gin-palace. It belonged to a little ragged girl of four years old, who held up two boxes of matches, and plaintively asked, "Will you buy 'em?" She dared not go home until they were sold, so Miss Booth gave her a few pennies, with the words, "You'll go home now, won't you?" "No, 'm," was the reply; "I'll go an' 'elp my sister to sell 'em!" And away pattered the little naked feet. Many tears flowed while the speaker, in earnest tones, pleaded that if God has taken pity on our wretched, sinful condition, and given us eternal life, should we not help our brothers and sisters around us to obtain the same?

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, speaking from 2 Kings vii. 9, said that the recent religious census of the places of worship in London had revealed a terrible spiritual famine in our midst. Yet it is "a day of good tidings," seeing that God has given his best gift for the salvation of the world. Like the lepers, then, "we do not well" if "we hold our peace." "If we tarry till the morning light some mischief will come upon us." The "morning" of Christ's appearing will be upon us perhaps very soon. Our work will be examined, and evil will indeed befall us if we "hold our peace" instead of declaring the Gospel. Let us, as the lepers, go and "tell them of the King's household." In the lowest of our slums there may be some who are to be jewels in the Saviour's crown and members of the family of heaven.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, in tones of quiet earnestness, leaving the subject of his work at Leicester, of which he was to have spoken, showed how every Christian might do similar work themselves. The effect of these meetings would be bad if the present emotion was the only result, and no practical outcome was attained. His great desire was to see those, who had been moved by the stirring words to which they had listened, yielding themselves up unreservedly to Christ. An account of his own dealings with God in the matter of consecration proved an evident blessing to many. An after-meeting was held, and eternity alone will reveal the covenants made between stricken souls and their God on this deeply solemn and memorable evening.

* We recently had an opportunity of visiting these schools in Dublin. Nothing could exceed the cleanliness, order, and brightness of the premises and the children, who are very well trained in Scripture and other instruction.

WEDNESDAY.

This morning the Conference opened with an hour's prayer meeting, and Rev. W. Park gave an address on "Come and See" and "Go and Tell." Afterwards Mr. Scott Moncrieff introduced the subject of work in

THE INDIAN ZENANAS.

Rev. A. R. Cavalier spoke of the great openings there are for ladies' work among their Indian sisters. While we have given much education to the men, the women are left in their deep ignorance, and we have only widened the breach between man and woman. Most eagerly the poor confined Indian ladies welcome woman's teaching, and cheering incidents were given of the way in which seed sown had sprung up and borne fruit, notably that of a young woman obliged to marry a heathen; but, though the only Christian in a great city, God blessed her work and influence there, and there are now one hundred and forty Christians in the place.

THE ISLES OF THE SEA

were next brought before our minds by Mr. R. N. Cust, who described missionary enterprise in the South Seas. The results of the labours of the Wesleyan, Congregationalist, Episcopalian, and Presbyterian labourers in Polynesia and Milanesia have been to change formerly barbarous peoples to gentle, hospitable, and good servants of the Lord Jesus Christ. The method of work was first to translate the Bible. In one instance a load of Bibles had scarcely touched the shore before they were all bought up, the natives paying for them chiefly in kind. From Samoa the Bible Society received the entire cost of the translation and transmission of the Bibles which they sent there. Another most important agency is that of native teachers. The work must mainly be done by the people themselves. Young men were trained and sent to different islands, the Mission ship calling for them in a year's time. In some cases it was found that the poor fellows had been eaten, but in others that native Churches had been established.

AFRICA.

This great subject was introduced by Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, who based his remarks on the words, "So much the more as ye see the day approaching." There are, he said, some 600 languages spoken through the Dark Continent, a great many of which have never been reduced to writing, much less has the Bible been translated into them. As at Mildmay, he pointed out that the four chief fields already occupied, West, South, North, and centre, left enormous tracts of countries utterly untouched. The three first were confined to within a few miles of the coast, whilst the supply of fifty missionaries (of whom fourteen died), sent to the Congo region, are quite inadequate to the dire needs of the surrounding country. There is the great Soudan, with its teeming thousands, totally unevangelised; and, indeed, look at any portion we will, the same dreadful need stares us in the face. The outcome of Mr. Guinness's impassioned appeal was the gift of £100 from a gentleman present, towards the support of a mission in the Soudan.

Mrs. Osborn then gave a sketch of the progress of the Gospel in Cape Town, and showed that, whilst in South Africa the native Church members are numbered by thousands, there is a great need for a missionary spirit amongst these native Churches. Access to the people is easy; but it is a fearful fact that English influence is largely a curse rather than a blessing. Sir Charles Warren has said that the blood of thousands in South Africa is crying for vengeance against England for forcing drink upon them. A native chief said lately that he must go into the desert to get rid of this plague. The Zulus were simple, honest people until English influence affected them, and the Roman Catholics tell them they may retain their heathen customs, so they say to our missionaries: "We have found a Christianity which is easier than yours." Mrs. Osborn then pleaded the cause of the "boy-soldiers" who are sent out, and no sooner has the anchor been dropped than they are told that at a certain public-house they may obtain drink free of charge. Many of these are attracted to the Soldiers' Home, where they are pointed to the Saviour. The conduct of our soldiers re-acts largely upon the natives. Hence the great importance of seeking their salvation.

Mr. E. H. Glenny, representing North Africa, described the work of the Kabyle Mission, and dwelt upon the melancholy fact that some forty generations of Mahommedans have passed beyond reach of human voice, and the consequent demand upon the Church of God to fulfil its duty in respect of the present and future generations.

In the afternoon Mr. Broomhall introduced the subject of by insisting that so far from zeal in the foreign cause detracting from the success of home work, blessing generally redounded upon the labourers at home for any practical interest they took in the heathen world. In support of this he quoted Rev. Dr. Alden on "The Inter-dependence of Home and Foreign Missions"*:—

> The foreign missionary purpose is the definite aim to carry the riches of the Gospel of Christ, as speedily as possible, to the utmost of our personal ability, to every unevangelised people on the face of the earth.
>
> It emphasises at the same time the specific Divine command, to which it seeks to render a loyal personal obedience, going whithersoever the Master's voice calls. It recognises also the urgency of the command and the urgency of the need, in that the opportunity is brief both for him who carries the message and for those to whom it is borne. Whatever others have done or have failed to do before us; whatever others may do or may fail to do after us, upon ourselves during our own brief day rests, according to our measure of ability, the serious obligation to evangelise the living men and women of our own generation at this hour passing through their one probation, to each of them as momentous as to each of us; for whose present and final well-being, as far as it depends upon that Gospel of Jesus Christ which has been committed to us in their behalf, we, the dwellers in Christian lands, are to-day responsible.
>
> This is the burning, controlling thought of the genuine foreign missionary spirit. No wonder it has sent, and is sending, hundreds of devoted men and women away from the thousands, however needy, of lands nominally Christian, to the more needy millions of lands positively heathen. No wonder that gifts and prayers from those who cannot personally go pour themselves out in lavish measure from tens of thousands of grateful hearts. The wonder is that the number of messengers, gifts, and prayers are not all multiplied a hundredfold, with a fervour of consecration a hundred times more intense.
>
> This very statement of what the distinctively foreign missionary spirit is, indicates how vitally it enters into every department of Christian work at home. Since there are multitudes, as already suggested, who are necessarily prevented from becoming personal messengers, who may, nevertheless, be as completely filled with the same burning zeal as those who go, this flame of burning zeal must express itself in every conceivable form of Christian activity for the salvation of every man, woman, and child accessible all around us at our own doors. There is no form of human need at home which would not be thoroughly supplied, simply as a supplementary "twelve baskets' full," to the well-equipped resolute endeavour first of all to find the hungering millions of heathen lands.
>
> Let the Lord's people, filled with their Lord's compassionate spirit, heartily unite in the determined purpose, as the primary obligation in obedience to their Lord's "Marching orders," to carry the message as rapidly as possible to those who are farthest from the light and deepest in the degradation, and the whole Christian world would be flooded with celestial glory, the power of the Divine Spirit would come down in amplest measure, the masses of men here at home whom, as we sometimes lament, we now fail to reach, would themselves spring forward, eager both to receive and communicate the heavenly gift, while at the same time the millions of the heathen world would begin to hasten from every direction to welcome the swiftly approaching Messengers.
> If there be any one instrumentality which the representatives of the home missionary work in its various departments should press upon their home constituency as most vital for the immediate urgency of the home work, it is an entire personal surrender of every Christian heart to the distinctive, unselfish, sacrificing purpose of contributing every energy of mind and body to the proclaiming of Christ by ten thousand heralds running to meet the immediate urgency of the perishing millions of unevangelised lands.

Rev. C. H. Judd, in a fiery address, said that if some of the energy and time which is spent among Christians and denominations in showing jealousy towards each other were devoted to the cause of the heathen, some good might be done. The Christian workers do not quarrel in China, they are too far apart. What are we doing for the millions of China who day by day are passing into eternity? It is necessary to live as a Chinaman in China, as the prejudice against all foreigners is so strong. And justly enough too, when they are able to say, "You foreigners are ruining us and our people by forcing the opium upon us, and gaining for yourselves a revenue of seven million pounds." Mr. Judd's own experiences in China are mingled with romantic incidents. On one occasion he was taken captive by thieves who demanded his money, and kept him for a day, having told him they would cut off his head at night. At four p.m., for some reason which he never ascertained, they all fled, and left him to thank God for such a remarkable answer to his fervent prayer. It would be a good thing if ministers would say to their congregation, "If you won't be converted I'll leave you," as Paul said to the Jews, "Seeing you put it from you, lo! we turn to the Gentiles." Mr. MacGill had told him that last year they had sent a worker of the Manchester City Mission abroad, and before long ten workers took that one's place. So will God ever bless those who obey his command. Then, again, the Societies will not send men out until they have become educated, and in Scotland men are kept six years, until all the spiritual life is dried up within them, and then they send them out. The Societies have done a glorious work, but they have not got the funds to do a hundredth part of the work. "Major" Tucker took forty men and women out to India a few months ago with no money at their back, determined to go and beg for their living, rather than not take the Gospel to the heathen at all. If you want to go out ask your Church to send you, and if that Church will not send you it ought to shut up. Why should not every Church have its representative in the heathen fields? But, at any rate, the Lord will provide the means for all who are willing to obey his voice, and He will send a double blessing upon our land as a result.

Rev. C. A. Moore urged that all should acquaint themselves with details of missionary work, and suggested that certain definite parts of the earth should be prayed for at family worship each day of the week, adding, "Pray with large hearts, not as if the only valuable bit of God's property is the spot on which you stand!"

SOME WORK ON THE CONTINENT.

In the absence of Rev. R. W. MacAll, Rev. S. R. Brown described the work carried on in connection with his mission in Paris. Some think (he said) that Paris has rejected the Gospel. Yes, but it is the gospel of the priests, not of God. The people gladly listen to God's message of love, and now—strange moment in France!—we have liberty of conscience, of worship, and of holding public meetings to an extent never known before; also there is peace in Paris and the country. Yet at this auspicious moment we are obliged to draw back from work already commenced. Why? Because we lack the support that the English used to send us. Surely, you will not allow this to continue. Who dare say how long there shall be this wide-open door?

Mr. W. Hoste spoke of the Belleville Mission, in connection with which he works as a medical man. Then Miss De Broen told with much feeling how in 1871 she had visited a large Paris cemetery, just after five or six hundred Communists had been shot, and as the curses of the widows and sonless mothers sounded in her ears, she felt that God was calling her to be his messenger to those stricken, blaspheming women. She now lives amongst them, and has won their confidence in a remarkable degree. Gospel meetings, a Medical Mission, Sunday, day and night schools, Bible-classes and sewing classes, &c., are carried on by Miss de Broen and her helpers. Very vividly she described going to a theatre, where some 2000 people were watching a sceptical play. In an interval she rose to speak, but was quickly hissed down. Again she rose, and a voice screamed out, "Let her speak, we know her well!" In perfect silence she preached Jesus in that strange place, and to that still stranger audience. Then voices cried, "Give her another hearing!" and when the curtain next fell, she was invited to go upon the stage, whence she told of a living, loving Saviour.

* From the Boston Missionary Herald.

Dr. Ziemann and Mr. Radcliffe followed with some experiences of the Lord's work in Germany and Russia respectively.

A special prayer-meeting preceded the evening gathering for the purpose of presenting, at the throne of grace, a number of requests which had been sent in. After this Rev. W. Carlile gave an earnest address on behalf of the kind of work undertaken by the Church Army, of which he is the secretary. The great general subject of

was then opened by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who read John xvii. 18, from which he urged that as Christ, baptized by the Holy Ghost, went about doing good, both to the souls and bodies of men, so He has commissioned every converted man and woman to go forth and follow his example. We cannot think that He was not in earnest in that work. He cared not what He ate nor what he drank, nor where he had to lay his head, and as for the opinion of his fellow-countrymen he scorned it. He has finished preaching, and does not suffer even angels to carry on his work, but He has sent forth his people to do it even as his Father had sent Him. If He was so much in earnest as to give his life for the world surely we shall be in earnest to take that blessed, good news to the world, when it is at no such cost to us as that by which the Saviour accomplished his work. Mr. Radcliffe laid great stress upon the terrible disproportion of progress of missionary effort during the last hundred years, and the natural growth of population in heathen lands, as stated by Mr. Guinness yesterday. These things make us despair of our own power, and drive us to the power of the living God, as it was with Jehoshaphat of old. If God goes with you to the foreign field, he urged, He will unlock the hearts of both heathen and Mahommedans. At the close of this impressive appeal a large number raised their hands, as determined to seek the Lord's will as to whether they should go forth in his name to any of the countries whose needs had been so powerfully put before them. The Spirit of God manifestly anticipated the prayer which followed in song—

Come, Holy Spirit, Heavenly Dove.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, as last night, expressed his intention to "talk" to the eager audience before him. After the earnest eloquence of the preceding speaker, Mr. Meyer's weighty words fell with great effect. When Jesus died for us He bought our bodies to live for Him, our brains to think for Him, our eyes to see for Him, and our breath to speak for Him, our houses, our furniture, and even the money which we have laid in the bank to our account. And yet we have used our strength to build a house for ourselves in peace, where we live and expect to die. But it is all his, and we have appropriated it without consulting the real owner at all. Queen Elizabeth asked a subject to go on an important errand for her, and, upon his objecting that his business would suffer, she replied, "If you look after my business, I will make your business my care." Oh, friends, if you will care for your Master's business He will surely look after yours. Three times did the Saviour appeal to the sleepers in Gethsemane for sympathy, but in vain, until an angel was sent to do the work men might have done if they had not slept. He seeks our sympathy for a dying world. We leave Him to watch alone; we sleep; oh, dreadful words—"Sleep on now, and take your rest. I must go on alone; the time of your opportunity is past!" Shall these words ever be said of any of you who have been drinking in the words spoken at this Conference? What a great responsibility the Lord has laid upon us all!

A most impressive silence followed, after which some forty persons of both sexes mounted the platform, expressing their willingness to go abroad, in response to Mr. Meyer's words: "You do not know where you may go, or where the money is to come from. But if the Lord opens the way, will you go? Engineers, trained nurses, medical missionaries, all are wanted in this great cause." Of those who remained seated, Mr. Meyer asked if any who could not go themselves would help those who could. Thereupon several persons handed up gifts of jewellery and money. Three or four then stated their reasons for deciding to enlist for foreign service, and then all these volunteers adjourned to another room, to give particulars of their names, &c. Here Mr. Guinness, Mr. Broomhall, Mr. Glenny, and others gave loving counsel that this step should not be taken hastily, and not unless every heart was satisfied that the call was of God. Practical advice was also given as to health, gaining information by reading missionary biographies and other means, and especially of labouring diligently at home until summoned abroad. The rest were bowed in prayer, as Mr. Meyer entreated them to yield themselves, body and soul and spirit, to the Lord who bought them, and a large number signified their response to this appeal.

Thus ended one of the most solemn, practical, and, we trust, fruitful Conferences it has ever been our lot to attend.

At the close of the Conference, a meeting was held in the rooms of the City Mission, when the following were present:—H. Grattan Guinness, R. Radcliffe, B. Broomhall, R. Scott-Moncrieff, F. W. Crossley, L. K. Shaw, J. W. MacGill, J. E. Mathieson, and F. B. Meyer. The following resolution was unanimously passed, after prolonged and prayerful discussion:—"We think it advisable to form Missionary Consulting Committees in various large cities of Great Britain and Ireland, in connection with a central body in London, to meet monthly, or more frequently, for prayer, for study of the needs of the great world-field, and to consider missionary information, and to interchange opinions."

A MISSION FOR THE SOUDAN.

Sir,—The Conference held in this city during the past week brought together as devoted a band of earnest labourers from various parts of the world as have ever been gathered in one place. The hearts of many who listened during those crowded gatherings have been stirred to do something for those dark places of the earth which are still the habitations of cruelty. One fact was stated which ought to touch the heart of every Englishman—certainly of every Christian—that in the Soudan, so recently the scene of our conflict and our victory, there are dwelling some fifty millions of people, and in this large country and amongst this vast population there is not a single Christian missionary.

It has been laid on the hearts of many of the Lord's people that one practical result of the Conference ought to be a mission to the Soudan. A gentleman present said, "If you will begin a mission to the Soudan I will promise £100." Would it not be a blessed exchange for the horrors of the late war, if we now heaped coals of fire upon the heads of our enemies by sending to them a band of messengers from the Prince of Peace, and thus supply one of the missing links in the mission chain which is rapidly circling the world?

Many ladies at those meetings took off their ornaments—diamond ring, gold watch and chain, brooches and ornaments of various kinds, and placed them in the hands of the Chairman; these could be disposed of to aid the mission fund. Others sent up to the Chairman some £16 in money; while others gave still larger gifts—even themselves; one lady her only daughter, to go out anywhere that God might send her!

What is now wanted is a few earnest men to form themselves into a committee to consider the subject. Will those willing to join in such an effort communicate with us, and state what they are disposed to contribute for this object? We rejoice to hear that the Church Missionary Society is about to establish a mission in that country as a memorial to the sainted Gordon. We wish them God-speed in their noble and Christlike effort. It would be for the committee to decide whether to join with the Church Missionary Society, and help them, or establish an independent mission in a different quarter of that vast country. In any case, if those willing to co-operate will send their names it will be the first step.

We are, yours faithfully,
Leonard F. Shaw.

THE HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.

The monthly all-day meeting was held on Friday, November 5. Amongst the many subjects for thanksgiving at the morning meeting two claim a special mention. Much earnest prayer was offered last month that the Lord would bless the effort being made to raise the last instalment of £500 for the Eastbourne House. Within ten days Miss Mason received a cheque for the whole sum from a kind donor, who knew nothing of the proceedings of that day's meetings. The sums raised by the collecting cards will now be used for papering and re-painting the house. The Lord has thus answered the prayer "exceeding abundantly" beyond the request. Another very marked answer was in connection with prayer on behalf of a sister-in-law of a gentleman present, who had been stricken with the loss of her reason. At the very hour that the petition was ascending to the throne of grace she suddenly exclaimed to her husband, "Some one is praying for us." This was the first dawn of returning reason. From that moment she continued gradually to recover, and now, although still weak in body, her mental powers are restored to their full vigour.

In the afternoon Rev. J. Pearce Clark gave an address on the word "Glory." When we come to the Bible, and trace out the word there, we find a wonderful vista of life and beauty opened out to us. The Bible is a book of glory. God is the God of glory. It is the word we use in ordinary life, when all others fail us, to express an unaccustomed height of excellence. A few references to our Lord's life were made to illustrate the meaning of the word. (1) Mark x. 13: We see the glory of gentleness in the tender way in which He dealt with young children. (2) In Luke xxii. 60, 61, the glory is seen in the perfection of friendship—no word of reproach, but only a look of recognition turned upon Peter when he was denying his Lord. And in the message sent after his resurrection, "Go, tell my disciples, and Peter," the glory of perfect forgiveness is revealed. Then there is the "glory of the Father"—that unspeakable something that makes you and me feel at home with God! We are said to be "heirs of glory," which means much more than merely inheriting a beautiful home, where everything pleases the eye and ear. We shall become so like to Jesus Christ that his glory will fill the whole of our being.

In the evening Rev. J. D. Dinnick gave a powerful address on "Sympathy with Jesus." Several others took part, and much earnest prayer was offered on behalf of our own and other nations now in the midst of perilous times; and for all who are engaged in promoting the kingdom and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. One remarkable feature of these gatherings is that the answers received are invariably in response to united prayer.

Letters to the Editor.

LAYING ALL ON THE ALTAR.

DEAR SIR,—May I refer "A Perplexed Correspondent" to the chapter headed, "Our silver and gold kept for Jesus," in Miss Ridley Havergal's last work, "Kept for the Master's use"?

MAURICE GREGORY.

SIR,—"Laying all on the altar" is, I understand, in the spirit of consecration, the submission of the will to God. There are, I fear, many Christians who have come to God for pardon, but the citadel of the will, the stronghold Self, has been retained, and it is clear to many that the life as a whole is to please self in all things instead of the Lord (Col. i. 10). Christ uses very strong language in his day to professors (Matt. xxiii. 19), "Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifieth the gift?" Christ Himself in heaven is our only altar, in and upon whom we are to be consumed as a sacrifice for God. See Heb. xiii. 10, 12, 15; Rom. xii. 1, 2, 3; Ps. l. 13, 14, 15; 2 Chron. xxx. 8; 1 Cor. iii. 21, 23.

It is not so much a question of laying all your property on the altar as self; the rest will follow as God guides, when the life is yielded up to Him.

J. P.

DEAR SIR,—The story of Ananias and Sapphira has always seemed to me to make it beyond dispute (1) that God does not demand from all his people the gift of all that they possess; (2) but that He most jealously resents any profession of giving all when only a part is either meant or given.

There can be no doubt that we are now-a-days too much accustomed to singing altogether more than the majority of those singing mean, and this may account for your correspondent's puzzle. Of course, no man can judge another in this matter, and God may not in every case require the gift offered to Him; but I can imagine no definition of being "on the altar" other than the "ready to be offered" of the great Apostle. Those who will not go so far should be content to use language which simply expresses what they do give up to God, and should not use that tremendous "all," which so often, alas! covers the reservation of the most valued part.

DEAR SIR,—Let us suppose that a true Christian man of considerable income has ever regarded this income as his own, to be disposed of for his own purposes, and almost wholly for his own ease and comfort. There comes a time when he receives new light, and sees it to be his duty and privilege to present himself a living sacrifice to the Lord, and make a full surrender of all that he has to be the Lord's. He now no longer regards what he possesses as his own, but as belonging to his Master; he then may be said to have laid all upon the altar, and if sincerely done he now regards himself no longer as owner, but only as steward of that of which he has hitherto regarded himself as sole possessor, and in the disposal of which he no longer consults his own will, but the will of the Lord.

Although he sees it to be his duty to "provide things honest in the sight of all men," and it may be to remain in the same social position as before, yet he will now use his income as the Lord shall direct, and with a single eye to his glory. That I take to be the meaning of "Laying all upon the Altar."—Yours truly, T. J.

DEAR SIR,—I cannot tell your correspondent what "my all is on the altar" means to others; nor was its meaning fully realised by me on first seeing the hymn, from which it is quoted, some months ago at a meeting. I sang the words but little conscious of what they might involve, but besought the Lord that the desire of my heart, as here expressed, might, by his grace, be accomplished in my life.

"My all" is the response to Rom. xii. 1: "Present your bodies a living sacrifice"—all I have, all I am, as implied in the word bond-servant of Rom. vi. 16 (R.V.). It means that I am willing to give up, day by day, everything, even the little things that by his Spirit we instinctively feel are not quite pleasing to Him, our Master; willing to learn "the fellowship of his sufferings"; prepared, if He call us, to "suffer the loss of all things." He has called me, in some measure, to pass through suffering and loss; but of the conscious enfolding of the Everlasting Arms—of the unfailing sympathy and comfort from his Word by the Holy Spirit—of the deeper knowledge and enjoyment of his love, I can unfeignedly testify.

Whether this is the higher life or no, I cannot say, but I know the Lord will answer the prayer "Draw me nearer," when it comes from a yielded heart. He will give an hundredfold, in this life, of joy and gladness for the suffering and loss which the sacrifice may involve. Thus may the inquirer, with the one who writes these lines as a testimony to his abundant goodness, and all who read them, know the joy of living daily in "the heaven of his love."—Yours faithfully, M. Y.

RESURRECTION TEACHING.

DEAR SIR,—I should feel thankful if some of your correspondents familiar with the subject would give me an epitome of the results of the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus. So far as I can make out, they are as follows:—

(1) It asserted the powerlessness of death over Him.

(2) It fulfilled Scriptural prophecies, and his own.

(3) By showing us that Jesus "ever liveth," it assures us that He is a constant and living Saviour to his people.

(4) Indirectly, it showed that the rage of the Jews, and his sufferings incidental thereon, were only effective upon Him because permitted.

(5) Typically, it showed the believer's "deadness to sin" (Rom. vi. 5—11).

(6) In the great matter of our justification, it completed that work: for as the vicarious sufferings upon the cross atoned for the believer's past sins, so "He ever liveth to make intercession," and to continually apply the precious blood of that Cross (Heb. vii. 25; 1 John i. 7).

Are not these conclusions sanctioned by Scripture? and can any of your correspondents add others to them? By doing so they will probably enlighten other young Christians who, like the writer, are in need of an explicit and definite statement upon one of the most important points of Christian doctrine.—Yours respectfully,

Cardiff. DELTA.

MISSIONARY PROGRESS.

SIR,—With reference to some correspondence in a recent CHRISTIAN, on the subject of "Missionary Progress," I venture to send you an extract or two which have struck me in the course of reading, and which may possibly prove of interest to your readers.—Yours faithfully, C.

"Professor Monier Williams, Boden Professor of Sanscrit at Oxford, deals in a contemporary with the 'popular impression' that Buddhism is the religion of the majority of the human race. He says: 'The numerical position of Buddhism in the world will be found to be very much below that with which it is commonly credited. It has entirely died out in India proper, the place of its origin, and is rapidly dying out in other Asiatic countries. My own belief is, that one hundred millions of Buddhists (monks and laymen) for the whole world would be a liberal estimate in the present day. It seems to me, too, that owing to exaggerated ideas in regard to the population of China, and to a forgetfulness of the millions who worship no one but their ancestors, the number of Confucianists is generally overstated. On the whole, I have no hesitation in affirming that even in numbers Christianity now stands at the head of all the religions of the world. Next to it I am inclined to place Hinduism (including Brahminism, Jainism, demon and fetish worship), while Confucianism should probably be placed third, Mahommedanism fourth, Buddhism fifth, Taoism sixth, Judaism seventh, Zoroastrianism eighth."—Church Bells, October 29.

"In my judgment Christian missionaries have done more real and lasting good to the people of India than all other agencies combined."—SIR RIVERS THOMPSON, Lieut.-Governor of Bengal.

A recent Blue-book, quoted in The Central Presbyterian, says:—"The winning of converts is but a small portion of the beneficial results which have sprung from missionaries' labours. No statistics can give a fair view of all they have done. The moral tone of their preaching is recognised by hundreds who do not follow them as converts. The lessons which they inculcate have given to the people new ideas, not only on purely religious questions, but on the nature of evil, the obligations of law, and the motives by which human conduct should be regulated. Insensibly a higher standard of moral conduct is becoming familiar to the people. The Government of India cannot but acknowledge the great obligation under which it is laid by the benevolent exertions made by the 600 missionaries, whose blameless example and self-denying labours are infusing new religion into the life of the great populations placed under English rule."

UNITED PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

DEAR SIR,—For years past there has been, I believe, a growing conviction of the desirableness of more prayer, and of united prayer, on behalf of missions to the heathen.

It is true that the Evangelical Alliance sets apart one day in the Week of Prayer, in the beginning of the year, for intercession on behalf of missions. I am very far from undervaluing the importance of this arrangement, and I rejoice in the prominence which the Alliance gives to this great subject. But, unhappily, many friends of missions are not members of the Alliance; and besides, the evangelistic enterprise seems entering on a new stage, or is now, at all events, of such magnitude as to demand a recognition which it is not in the power of the Alliance to give. The question, then, naturally presented itself, Would it not be possible for all missionary churches and societies throughout the Protestant world to set apart the same day—or week, if possible—for intercession on behalf of the great work?

Correspondence was accordingly opened with missionaries and friends of missions in various parts of the world—America, Scandinavia, India, Japan, &c. The answers which came back were very hearty. A season of united prayer on behalf of missions was regarded as most desirable; and the only difficulty seemed to be to fix on a time equally suitable for all who desired to take part in the common supplication. Everything encourages the hope, however, that it will be possible to fix—in the United Kingdom and America, at least—on one common time of prayer.

There is another suggestion which may be taken along with what has been said. It is proposed that a brief summary of the progress of all Protestant Missions during the preceding year be annually published before the time of united prayer. The statement could probably be divided into seven parts, each part dealing with one great mission field—one for each day of the week. Thus, the entire enterprise would come under this notice; Christians would have a clear conception of the wide range of operations; and thanksgiving and prayer would be largely stimulated. Such a paper cannot be prepared for the present year, but we may hope it will be for the next, if the proposal for this great concert of prayer on behalf of missions is generally agreed to.

Nice. J. MURRAY MITCHELL.

DEAR SIR,—I see nothing in Mr. Mathieson's interesting letter on this subject in a recent number that I could not fully endorse, if only preaching be distinguished from teaching in the Church or assembly of Christians; for it is to this latter that those prohibitions seem to refer, which cannot easily be set aside: "I suffer not a woman to teach" (1 Tim. ii. 12), and "Let your women keep silence in the churches" (1 Cor. xiv. 34). Let the context of these two passages be carefully weighed, and their distinct parallelism will become obvious, and it will be seen how forced and unnatural is the explanation which would limit the prohibition to mere talking or "chattering."

Whilst thoroughly at one with Mr. Mathieson in all that he says as to the range or sphere for preaching open to women in the present day, I would urge the need of caution in not seeking to extend this sphere in a direction which the Word of God seems distinctly to prohibit. The Society of Friends are at least consistent in this matter, for they rest their ministry of women in the assembly on their supposed possession of the gift of prophesying; and this is apparently the ground taken by Mr. Judd. But if the possession of this gift in the present day be denied, it involves surely a solemn responsibility to set aside a prohibition which, in one place where it occurs, is followed by such words as these (1 Cor. xiv. 36): "What? came, the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only? If any may think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord."

An argument of Mr. Mathieson's demands an answer. He says: "If God . . . put men and women on equality as inspired prophets in the Apostolic age, it is a fair argument to claim that, à fortiori, the lesser gifts are equally placed in possession of both sexes." To this I would reply, It was the very greatness of the gift which rendered it possible for men and women to be thus placed on an equality. They were merely channels through whom God spoke. "Thus saith the Lord" is the preface of all real prophetic utterances. A child might be used for this purpose, but this would not prove the fitness of children to teach in the assembly of Christians. The lesser gift is not bestowed independently of the mind and character through which it is exercised, and if the Lord has Himself drawn the line between the sexes in this matter, is it for us to ignore or obliterate it?—Yours sincerely,

HENRY E. BROOKE.

DEAR SIR,—I have been interested in the correspondence on "Women Preachers," and would like to add a word of testimony. I am a woman, and a "preacher," yet no one was ever more against "woman preachers" than I was, when, twelve years ago, I yielded myself to God, and said, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" Step by step I followed the Lord's leading, and suddenly stood still, appalled to find I was a "woman preacher." I said, "No, Lord, I cannot do this;" but his word was in my heart as a fire within my bones, and when I looked on the men and women perishing around me I was weary of forbearing, and I could not stay. I went forth as an ambassador for Christ, beseeching them to be reconciled to God; I could not help it, for the Spirit of the Lord was upon me. Yet I do not think it is woman's sphere; no woman should do it unless she cannot help it.

God has been graciously pleased to own woman preachers in winning men from lives of open sin to pure and holy lives in Jesus Christ. He used the woman of Samaria to bring many of the men to Him, and He called Mary Magdalene to be the bearer of the tidings of his resurrection to his disciples; and now, in the present day, He is pouring out his Spirit on his handmaidens, and they bear witness of Him. What are we that we should say, What doest thou?

Yours in Jesus Christ,
Bolton. L. JOHNSTONE.

[We must now close this discussion. We think a substantial and practical agreement exists as to the privilege and duty of women, as well as men, to tell, wherever they have the opportunity, the good tidings of the grace that saved them. There are cases in which women have a power no man could have over men. What man could do the work of Miss Robinson or Miss Weston among our soldiers and sailors? But if they usurped authority over the man, their influence would be gone.—ED.]

MR. WOOD'S REPLY.

MY DEAR SIR,—Seeing you have accorded me a notice in your last week's issue, accompanied with an extract from a letter of mine, written in July last and published in Thy Witness in September, will you kindly allow me a space for explanation and reply? Just prior to the letter in question being written, I was brought in contact with some friends who had accepted the Agapemone teaching. My sympathies were drawn out to accept the views presented to me. I attended some meetings afterwards, to ascertain all I could, and to arrive at the foundation of the doctrine set forth by them—viz., That the Son of Man had come in judgment over forty years ago, and had judged Satan, concealed in the flesh since the Fall, and had cast him out, and had filled the temple, or body, of the believer with the Spirit of Glory, as promised by Jesus (John xvi. 11; xvii. 21—24), and confirmed by St. Paul (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19, 20; 2 Cor. vi. 16).

My experience during the past three years corresponding to the state here promised and described, I accepted it as true. But when the following teaching was brought out, I at once denounced it to be heresy and blasphemous, and severed myself from all connection with it—viz., That the Holy Spirit, as the Son of Man in judgment and glory, had selected a person to fulfil the Gospel dispensation of grace, and make him the personality or embodiment of the Holy Spirit, to bring in a new dispensation of glory—as the Lord Jesus had fulfilled the law and brought in the Gospel dispensation—and all who received that testimony would become one with the Bride of Christ, and would thus pass into a new dispensation altogether, leaving the Gospel of grace behind with all its obligations, requirements, and responsibilities. I at once denounced it, and disclaimed all sympathy and connection with the teaching; and I wrote to Australia by the following mail to withdraw my article, from which you make the extract; but my letter arrived too late—it had been published.

Since then I have set forth what I hold and teach daily at the Assembly-hall, Brighton. I speak openly; all men can hear me; and the outline of the doctrine taught has been published for general information, and circulated in The Christian Standard. I have also written an article exposing what I believe to be the heresy of the Agapemone teaching. The article was written in August, but, for various reasons, it has not been published, the principal one being that I hold that promulgation of truth is the most effective way to destroy error. Read Acts v. 38, 39; and so I advise.

Any further elucidation I shall be happy to give.—Yours in the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ,

J. W. WOOD, Evangelist, of Australia.
Assembly-hall, Brighton.

[We must reserve remark on this letter to our next.—ED.]

ST. MARK XVI. 9—20.

SIR,—I am obliged by your notice of my book. Your reviewer certainly, however, does me scant justice when he observes: "What would be the gain, practical or doctrinal, if it could be proved that St. Paul was the author of these verses, it is hard to see." Permit me to say that the "practical gain" would be that a scientific proof would be thus afforded that St. Mark's Gospel was in existence before St. Paul's martyrdom in A.D. 64; and, consequently, that the prophecy in Mark xiii., of the destruction of Jerusalem and of the Temple, was both written and read several years at least before it was fulfilled by Titus in A.D. 70. To the readers of THE CHRISTIAN such a proof may seem superfluous; but the infidelity and materialism that prevail are largely due to the arguments of those German and other sceptics who, to borrow the words of the famous Tischendorf, "endeavour to assign the Gospels to writers who were not in a position to give a really credible testimony—to writers who only composed their narratives long after the time when Christ lived." To furnish a logical proof that such sceptical arguments are false, would be, as it appears to me, no slight or imaginary gain.

Your reviewer is, also, I think, a little needlessly censorious with regard to the suggestion that it is possible there may be in these verses an echo of Gal. ii. and of 2 Cor. xi. and xii.—St. Paul's indignant vindication of his own disputed Apostleship—this, of course, from no petty personal motive, but as the champion of free and universal Gentile Christianity.—Yours faithfully,

H. HEBER EVANS.

DRINK IN BELGIUM.

DEAR SIR,—Kindly allow me to correct an error in THE CHRISTIAN of November 4, in your report of a statement I made at York in connection with the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union. I said that 45 per cent. of the deaths in the hospital at Antwerp were stated to have occurred during delirium tremens, not of the whole population.

Things are quite bad enough in Belgium without being overstated. The published reports of the hospitals at Brussels attribute 80 per cent. of the deaths there to drink, and is it any wonder, when there are drink shops at the rate of 1 for 41 inhabitants throughout the country.—Yours truly,

Hornsey-rise, N. CHARLOTTE A. GRAY.

A WELSH COFFEE ROOM.

IN July, 1885, I made known through the pages of THE CHRISTIAN my great wish to build a coffee house at this little seaport. The result of my statement was £47 2s., and many kind words of sympathy. This, added to what had previously been sent me, and also a bazaar in the village, brought our funds to £290, and I felt I might see about the promised site. There was so much opposition that we had to wait till last March before we could commence. But it had not been an idle winter, for I was able to take two rooms for the six winter months, one as a class-room and the other as the young men's recreation and reading-room. Many happy evenings we spent in them.

On the 9th of last March the first stone of our much longed for coffee house was laid. It is just completed, but we are still wanting £36 to free the building from debt, and £20 to buy the necessary furniture to start with. After much anxious thought and search, I have just secured the services of caretakers who seem to be peculiarly suited for the post. May I ask your readers to remember in prayer the Saundersfoot Coffee Tavern, that it may prove a true blessing to this little seaport?

GEORGINA PARTRIDGE.
Saundersfoot, Tenby.

MR. S. WALTON AT MONTROSE.

A MOST interesting and successful mission has been conducted in Montrose, N.B., during the past week by Mr. Spencer Walton. He began on Saturday evening, October 30, by addressing a meeting of the Young Women's Christian Association in the Memorial Hall, which was filled. A result of his last mission has been to double the membership of this Association, and to crowd them out of the small hall where they formerly met. Next night the meeting was in St. Paul's Free Church, which was crowded in every part, large numbers having to go away who could not obtain admission.

The services during that and the following evenings of the week, which were all numerously attended by those of all churches, were deeply impressive, and at the close of each meeting many anxious inquirers remained behind to be spoken with. Earnest workers, belonging to the different congregations in town, retired to the Church Hall to an after-meeting for prayer, and to render help to those who had come from the church deeply moved and inquiring for guidance, when many professed to give themselves to the Lord.

A series of afternoon Bible-readings were, by Christians, a prized feature of the mission. The services have been felt to be throughout most solemn and helpful, a time of refreshing to God's children, and of new life and conversion to those who, for the first time, came under the power of the Gospel. Mr. Spencer Walton's labours have been much honoured of God, and we are sure that good and abiding fruit will be gathered from this visit.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—Some months ago prayer was asked for a blessing on the journey of Mr. and Mrs. Trotter and Mr. Waldegrave to New Zealand. Praise the Lord for having abundantly answered. Much blessing has been given in the conversion of souls, and in the strengthening of God's children. ——For much blessing given in Elgin, Banff, and Dufftown on missions conducted by Mr. John M. Scroggie.

PRAYER is asked for special blessing on Mr. Waldegrave's journey, as he is now gone to visit the mission stations in the islands of the South Pacific, where in some cases much help is needed.——For blessing on a mission at Cage-lane Hall, Plumpstead, by Mr. Penfold.——For blessing on evangelistic services in the Baptist Chapel, Sevenoaks. ——For wisdom and guidance to friends seeking to help and counsel those who offered themselves for missionary work at the Manchester Conference. ——Count Campello begs for the prayers of God's people for his important mission work in Umbria. ——For blessing on Dudhope Church Mission, Dundee.——For blessing on a special mission to be conducted by Mr. John M. Scroggie in the Albert Hall, Nottingham, beginning Nov. 21.——For blessing on special services to be held at Chelsea Chapel, Lower Sloane-street.——As the result of the recent Cardiff Conference, many have offered themselves for the mission field; will your readers pray that if it is God's will they should go out to preach the Gospel to the heathen, every obstacle may be removed out of their path, and a wide door of usefulness be opened for them?

AN APPEAL FOR THE HUNGRY.—Rev. J. Bain, of Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Lower Clapton, writes to say that the distress in hundreds of homes in the lower part of Clapton-park is truly appalling. He makes an earnest appeal for help during the coming winter, when the necessities of the poor are so keenly felt. The workers have been greatly cheered by seeing lasting blessing as the result of their visitations among the poor, and long to aid them in temporal as in spiritual affairs. Any money, clothing, food, or coals, should be sent to the Pastor, Lindholme, Clapton, E.

OUR next portrait and sketch will be those of Mr. Leonard N. Shaw, of the Children's Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester.

In a paragraph elsewhere, particulars will be found of the proposed opening of the new buildings of the Y.W.C.A. in Regent-street, on Monday next. We trust there will be a large muster of sympathising friends.

We are glad to learn that, through the kind offices of the British Ambassador, Rev. W. Moore has been able again to open the chapel at Puerto Santa Maria, for service, and the schools are to be recommenced immediately.

In one of our Notes last week, through a curious mistake on the part of our indispensable friends "the printers," we were made to express an opinion exactly contrary to what we had written. Our words were:—"We are not sanguine as to the power of democratic rule to bring in the Millennium speedily." The omission of the qualifying negative caused us much searching of heart, and naturally evoked several tentative protests from our faithful readers.

We would again call attention to the important and interesting meetings conducted by Captain Dawson at Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, on Sunday afternoons. A crowded congregation is gathered, and an increasing overflow meeting is held in the Y.M.C.A. Might not a similar work be carried on in many other towns? This week a mission, which we believe will have large results, is being conducted in connection with the above, by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of London.

In our issue of November 4, a correspondent, writing with reference to quotations from Mr. Johnston's pamphlet, "A Century of Missions," took exception to the comparison between the number of the converts and the increase of population, and urged that the proportionate rate of increase in the number of converts grows every year. In illustration of this thought, it may be stated that during a century the translations of the Scriptures have increased five-fold, the evangelical missionary societies ten-fold, missionaries fifty-fold, contributions twenty-five-fold, circulation of the Bible thirty-fold, and the number of converts thirty-five-fold.

We learn from last Thursday's Nonconformist that considerable excitement, and many protests, have been occasioned by a note in that paper on Sunday work in the country. Although the passage went no further than approval of gathering in the harvest when, in wet weather, the Sunday was fine, it was so worded as to favour a wider secularising of the Sabbath. Than this, with all its inevitable abuse, there could not be a greater calamity to English labourers. The Lord's-day is truly a "privilege of grateful love and spontaneous reverence;" but, in addition, the argument has never been set aside that the Sabbath was a Divine institution from the beginning.

At a meeting of the Sunday Society last week it was argued that places should be opened or closed on Sundays as the needs of the time might dictate. Abstractly considered, little exception can be taken to such a statement. But the crucial question is: What are the needs of the time? We believe them to be a seventh day rest for the body and a season of special care for the spirit. Neither of these needs would be met by the programme of the Sunday Society.

Those people who desire to secularise the Sabbath day in Great Britain and Ireland, and who are therefore, as we have always urged, enemies rather than friends of the working classes, may learn an excellent lesson from the carpenters of Berlin, a thousand of whom have forwarded a laconic memorial to Prince Bismarck:—

> You have declared that you will not forbid Sunday work until convinced by the voice of the labourers that they demand rest on that day. Here then is their voice. We declare implicitly that we desire a law which will grant us protection in the enjoyment of freedom from work on Sunday. Sunday labour leads to misery, crime, and vagabondism.

A letter appeared in The Times of 9th inst. on "Recreation for the People," from the House of Commons representative for North Islington. Mr. Bartley argues that institutions for healthy relaxation for working men do not meet the need if they are three or five miles from their own homes; that opportunities for what is needed on behalf of men and children, should be of an unimposing kind, and near to where they live. The letter gives an example of the success of an effort in this direction.

A book called "Reminiscences of the Turf" (Bentley & Son) has been sent forth by William Day, who has had close relations with race-course statesmen and celebrities during the present century. It gives a record of unscrupulous cheating, of a preying of parasites, of a fall of representatives of English families, of men on the one hand who have lost enormous fortunes, and on the other, of sharpers who have risen from the lowest social position to affluence, which might usefully be pondered by men in high places who are advocates of the Turf. The book is opportune at a time when the melancholy death from suicide of a noted jockey is recorded, and when we read of an English Duke who gives 4500 guineas for a race-horse. It is these things, at a time of want, that go to help on Socialism.

It was stated recently in The Daily Telegraph that three hundred and fifty-four packs of hounds are kept in England, the aggregate cost of keeping which has amounted to no less than three and a half millions sterling. We hope there has been some unconscious exaggeration in the statement; but, even assuming that there has been, what an idea the figures give us of that wasteful luxury which is doing so much to intensify the feeling of bitterness between the rich and the poor. Some time ago Lord Leigh gave up keeping hounds on the plea, if we remember rightly, that he could not maintain them and continue his charities, and the example is well worthy of imitation.

The Notes on Daily Readings have for the last few months been supplied by Rev. J. Pearce Clark, of Streatham. They are now resumed by Rev. H. E. Brooke. Those on Nehemiah, however, have been kindly supplied by Captain Dawson, whose original and practical use of this book of revival attracted our attention during his evangelistic addresses last year at Bournemouth.

A very thoughtful paper in the current number of Eastward Ho, on "The Homes of the Poor," deserves careful attention, and we hope that it may come under the notice of some of our Christian capitalists, as it points out ways in which, upon business lines, wealth might be invested with profit to others besides the owner. We know from the successful labours of Miss Octavia Hill how much can be done in the way of improving the dwellings of the poor, without pauperising the recipients of the kindness and attention. Judging from recent statements with regard to uninvested capital, there would appear to be plenty of people who would be only too glad to invest money, and we should be glad to see an attempt made on a large scale to make it more easy for a working man to hire at a moderate rent three or four rooms, instead of the one room which is so frequently the source of moral evil.

"Not till those who have the welfare of the people at heart become the owners of the houses of the poor may we hope for escape from poverty," says the writer of this paper; but he also asserts that any investment of the kind "with the necessary personal oversight" would pay, in the worldly sense of the word, after a very short time.

A contemporary, Justice, calls attention to the painful fact that on one day only there were forty-four School Board summonses for hearing at the Westminster Police Court, most of the defendants being poorly clad women who had to stand for hours outside the Court in a drenching rain. Education is very important, but it is not improbable that these poor people may have an idea that they are being required to pay too dearly for it. Readers of George Sims' "How the Poor Live" will not need to be reminded what such suffering involves, and many of our Christian friends who are visiting in the courts and alleys, know only too well that we are going a little too quickly in the direction of educating, rather than feeding, the starving children of the poor.

A few weeks ago we noted with satisfaction that the Head Master of Clifton College had lectured in the Congregational Church, on "Progress in Christian Church Life." We also quoted with commendation a sentence in the lecture which expresses a desire for Christian unity. A correspondent, however, sends us a passage from the lecture, in which the present Broad Church teaching is contrasted favourably with the teaching of five-and-twenty years ago. We do not argue for all the terms in which our fathers set forth the Gospel; but we regard not as progress, but as fatal retrogression, the depreciation of the vicarious sufferings of Christ, and the idea that the Incarnation was itself the reconciliation of man to God. We should consider unity dearly purchased if it were brought about by the sacrifice of vital truth.

The Christian.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS
From this World to that which is to Come.
BY JOHN BUNYAN.

"I, writing of the way
And race of saints, in this our gospel day,
Fell suddenly into an allegory
About their journey, and their way to Glory,
In more than twenty things which I set down.
This done, I twenty more had in my crown;
And they again began to multiply,

"At the summit sits the Pope, divine and infallible. Immediately below the Pontiff come some thousand bishops, all of whom are sworn to obey him: below the bishops come hundreds of thousands of priests, and hundreds of thousands of monks and nuns; with a machinery of schools, colleges, and confessionals. Below the priests come millions and millions of devotees, dispersed over all the countries of the globe. From the Mount of Infallibility goes forth the fiat. It descends to the rank below. These send it on to the more numerous rank below them; and these to the yet more numerous rank beneath; and so on to the base: and thus it goes on, widening and widening, till it sets a world in motion. Of all these millions the Pope is the master. But has the Pope himself no master? Yes, he has a Master: and that Master is the Society of Jesus. Behind his throne stand in shadow the sons of Loyola. The Pope is simply the mouth through which the Jesuits speak—the hand by which they execute their deeds! and be the crime to which they prompt ever so enormous, he must issue the order for its perpetration, or prepare the robe and ring which are used at the funerals of popes.

"THE HERALD OF MERCY" ANNUAL VOLUME.

"The Volume of this capital periodical is largely illustrated, and is bound in pictorial covers. It will make an acceptable gift-book; and should find a place in the juvenile libraries of all our Sunday-schools."
—Methodist Times.

"'The Herald of Mercy' is abundantly illustrated; and contains numerous short articles setting forth Gospel truth in a simple and attractive way."—British Messenger.

"The message of this monthly 'Herald' is the ever welcome message of the Gospel to the sinful and the weary: delivered with marked simplicity and directness, in the form of promise and precept; of story and song; and frequently made attractive and capable of arresting attention by suitable engravings."
Baptist Magazine.

SOUND-MINDEDNESS
IN RELATION TO
Christian Life and Practice.
By Rev. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON, M.D.

Sound-mindedness does not lessen our enjoyment. Oh, no one knows the enjoyment of a holy life, just because no one has put it fully to the test. All the pains and griefs that come to us who try to follow Christ are from our slowness of heart, and unsteadfastness of mind, and shrinking from the path along which He beckons us. If we were to yield ourselves wholly to Him, we should be filled with all His fulness. The note of joy rings sharp and clear through all Paul's life, and yet his was a hard life; but in the midst of it he says: "Rejoice; and again I say, Rejoice." No happier man lived than the Apostle in his day; and the nearer we get to him in doing God's will, the nearer shall we get to the fulness of that joy that the unbelieving, unfaithful servants lack.

SIN SELF-DETECTIVE.
By Rev. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON, M.D.

"Sin does find a man out. There is no detective so keen-witted, so close and constant in his dogged search, as sin itself. It never loses sight of its prey, never fails to keep its grip of conscience, and heart, and mind, at last dragging the offender before the judgment-throne of God, when all the deeds done in the body are fully punished."
Extract.

THE FEAR OF DEATH.
By D. L. MOODY.

Price 2s. per 100, post free.

"We ought not to look upon death as we often do. Bishop Heber has written of a departed friend:—

"Thou art gone to the grave! we no longer behold thee,
Nor tread the rough paths of the world by thy side;
But the wide arms of Mercy are spread to enfold thee,
And sinners may die, for the Sinless has died."

ASTHMA, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, ETC."

The Nineteenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from November to January

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ASTHMA.—CASE of a LADY AT SHEPHERD'S-BUSH.

In August, of last year (1885), I was consulted, at Coombe Lodge, by the daughter of this patient, who was a lady then 75 years old.

The Asthma had been brought on by bad colds, and then Acute Bronchitis followed, terminating in this most distressing complaint—a disease especially trying to the aged, and difficult to touch when the constitution is enfeebled by age.

The symptoms of Asthma are so well-known and described in my book, I need not lengthen the story of this. Suffice it to say, she had taken a small quantity of my medicine on her own account, and had found relief, and slept better, so that she was anxious for full advice from me. The most careful dieting was necessary in her case—the use of injections, the rubbing with Anodyne. and Stimulant Embrocation, in conjunction with the Balsam, and afterwards a Tonic, as auxiliary.

In September the daughter writes:—"Our dear mother is better since taking your medicine. She is stronger, able to dress herself, and has been out three times in a bath chair. She is better able to cope with her attacks."

In a subsequent letter she writes:—"My mother quite recovered from the Asthma. She blesses Mr. Congreve, and says he was the making of her. You can quote my letter if you please, reserving the name and address for private reference only."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

CONSUMPTION,
BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA.

I will demonstrate to the whole world, and to sufferers from these unfortunate maladies, how they can be permanently cured by an entirely New Method of treatment, without the chance of failure. All afflicted may write with full confidence to Mr. WILLIAMS, 10, Oxford Terrace, Hyde Park, London; who will send full particulars to any person free of all charge.

No extra payment required under the Institution's Policies after this date (May, 1886), on account of Occupation or Foreign Travel or Residence in any part of the World (always excepting risks in time of war).

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

Years.	Temperance Section.		General Section.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	938	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

WINTER MONTHS

The Committee are putting forth renewed and extended efforts to check Immorality throughout the Land, and to Rescu its Victims. They are repeating the Meetings in Glasgow and Edinburgh.

FOREIGN FALLEN WOMEN, unhappily a numerous and neglected class of evil-doers in London, have been brough under the Gospel of the Grace of God. Suitable Tracts and Appeals in Foreign Languages have been judiciously distributed in addition to the holding of Special Meetings.

BREAKFAST MEETINGS have been opened to gather in those who, though impressed by the Over-Night Meetings still remained Undecided!

The Town Agent of this Movement is employed in Missioning among the Lowest Outcasts in the London Parks; and throughout the entire metropolis Meetings for the Rescue of Outcast Women are being held.

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing toward the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited t communicate with J. H. L. Christien, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or to

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by

JOHN KIRK, Secretary.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Dear Sir,

The Business Young Men of London, for the most part, reside in the inner circle of its suburbs.

While the City Branches of the Young Men's Christian Association provide for those who live on the premises where they are employed, there is a growing necessity for Suburban Branches.

One of the most important and in every way successful of these is that at Finsbury Park, close to the large Station of the Great Northern Line, and within a mile of Stations on the Midland and Great Eastern Lines.

The temptations to Young Men in London are so fearful that hundreds of them are ruined in body and soul every year. And fathers and mothers in countless homes are mourning over sons who, in youth or early manhood, came up to London, and were lost to themselves, to society, and to God.

It is a melancholy fact that comparatively few who go astray (and are not won to Christ before they are twenty-five) are rescued at all; or if so, their lives are marred and blighted by years spent in sin.

To prevent their downfall, by stretching out a helping hand as they first enter City life, is the work of the Y.M.C.A.

The Finsbury Park Branch is surrounded by 6000 Young Men; of these, 500 have joined us during the past year, as associates, 30 of whom have, during the past six months, given themselves to Christ, and are working for Him.

In addition to the usual Classes, Lectures, Social Gatherings, &c., the Hall, seating 800, enables us to have Children's Meetings, and a remarkably successful Sunday Evening Service, at which souls have, it is believed, been saved on every occasion. It is a meeting signally blessed and owned of God.

But no adequate support can be obtained in the neighbourhood, the inhabitants of which consist almost exclusively of local tradesmen, and of business men engaged in the City.

£1300 a year is needed for this beehive for God, besides £1000 due for Lease, Furnishing, &c. A donation for this latter purpose, and a subscription of a Guinea a year towards current expenses, I very earnestly ask of those who love Young Men, and who believe in the work of the Y.M.C.A. I hope I may, with confidence and success, address you as such, and remain,

Yours very faithfully,
R. C. MORGAN, President.

LIGHT FOR THE LAST DAYS

A STUDY, HISTORICAL AND PROPHETICAL.

BY MR. AND MRS. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS,
Authors of "The Approaching End of the Age."

EXTRACTS FROM PRESS NOTICES.

"It is impossible to read this book without feeling that it propounds a theory which explains a great bulk of prophecy upon a consistent system—upon a system for which a large amount of historical proof can be adduced, and, above all, upon a system which is clear, definite, and precise, without being irreverent."—Record.

"The book gives evidence of very extensive reading. It is written in a style both lucid and graceful, and will take rank as one of the standard works of prophetic literature."—Christian Advocate.

"We commend Mr. Guinness's book as well worthy of the examination of the thoughtful student of Scripture."
Rock.

"The work is written in a clear and masterly style, and is most interesting and valuable."
Evangelical Christendom.

"This is a very remarkable book in its way, and will have a strong fascination for many minds."
Literary Churchman.

"We cordially welcome and recommend, to all wh are seeking light for the last days, this excellent con pendium of the opinions and deductions of two mo practical and earnest evangelists."
British and Foreign Evangelical Review.

"This book is of very high value to the Church c God, and a worthy successor to the author's 'Approacl ing End of the Age,' which has been pronounced b competent judges the most valuable work on prophec published since Elliot's 'Horæ.' The work is a flood c light shed on God's dealings from the beginning of tim but especially illuminating the very time in which w live, 'the time of the end,' when, as had been promise the wise should understand what had been hithert sealed. . . . It is for the definiteness and convincin clearness with which the chronology of these times i presented, that longing, waiting believers owe a debt t our honoured brother and sister that eternity alone ca repay."

"This is indeed a wondrous record."—Word and Work.

"The autobiography of an Englishwoman long resident in New York, and who has a wonderful story to tell of the Lord's faithfulness to those who trust His promises."—Christian Leader.

"With the sense of a holy awe upon us, as of having been in the presence of a saint of God, and caught a glimpse of the power and the calm and the holiness and the hush within the veil, we would bring before ou readers the Life Story of Bella Cooke. From beginnin to end it is a 'record of lovingkindness and tende mercies'—a complete refutation of the too oft accepte theory in connection with sin and suffering, and a living marvellous testimony to the truth—'He giveth power t the faint, and to them that have no might He increaset strength.'"—Christian.

The current number of the leading Roman Catholic organ, The Month, has a paper on "The Church and the People," in which it is stated that the numbers of Roman Catholics in England have increased at a rate lower than that of the population. The writer, in commenting upon the small attendance at Sunday Mass, says that at the evening services the working lads are entirely unrepresented. Services in English and congregational singing are suggested as innovations likely to bring about larger attendances, and greater interest in the services. "To many Protestants," says the author, "the Catholic faith is associated with the worship of images and payment for sins, with leave to commit crimes for money; with immorality condoned, with persecutions, burnings, and wholesale slaughterings, and similar crimes."

In reference to this passage, an Irish contemporary says, "If all these things are to be forgotten Rome must change, and burn her books of devotion." It goes on to quote from a recently published Roman Catholic volume, reviewed in the same number of The Month, a story of a man who denied the real presence, and who was led to accept the belief because a starving donkey, when oats and the Blessed Sacrament were put before it, turned from the oats and knelt before the Sacrament. No wonder that our Irish contemporary asks, "Does Rome expect us to believe this rubbish, or does she believe it herself?"

OBITUARY.

MR. FREDERICK NEWTH.

DIED on Monday, November 1, at his home, New Barnet, after a long illness, Frederick, eldest son of Mr. Frederick Newth, of the same place.

MR. L. D. WOZENCROFT.

After only two years' service as Superintendent of Colporteurs for the North India Bible Society, Mr. Wozencroft died at Allahabad on October 2. His short service has been characterised by much faithfulness for the Master, and the British and Foreign Bible Society has lost in him a faithful and devoted servant.

REV. PATRICK WHITE, LIVERPOOL.

This devoted servant of God passed to his eternal rest on November 8, in the sixty-fourth year of his age and the thirty-eighth of his ministry. A simple, warm, affectionate preacher of Christ's Gospel, his untiring labours on behalf of the Everton Home, his attention to the Sabbath-schools and the young, his kindly and seasonable counsels to the afflicted, the sick and the dying, and his liberality to religious and benevolent objects, endeared him to his congregation at Islington Church, Liverpool, to whom he ministered for thirteen years. He was remarkable for the simplicity of his character, the warmth of his heart, and the all-absorbing interest which he felt in the cause of Christ, as well as for his tender, constant, and unwearied solicitude for the well-being, temporal and spiritual, of those committed to his charge. His father, Rev. Patrick White, was for fifty-two years pastor of the Presbyterian Church of First Bailieborough, while his two uncles and five brothers were all ministers of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland. He was ordained, in 1849, to the charge of the congregation of Scotstown, co. Monaghan, and after three years succeeded his brother, Rev. Verner M. White, as minister of a large and influential congregation at Donoughmore, co. Down. It was during his ministry here that the revival of 1859 took place, and Mr. White's labours in connection therewith were very greatly blessed. In 1862, on the death of his father, he accepted the invitation to follow him as pastor of First Bailieborough, where he remained till in 1873, he again succeeded his brother at Liverpool.

NOON PRAYER-MEETING NOTES.

183, ALDERSGATE-STREET.

ON Monday, last week, after an earnest address on "Lovest Thou Me?" Mr. Robert Burn mentioned, for the encouragement of all who are sowing the Gospel seed, that he had recently heard of the conversion and happy death of a G.N.R. workman, whom, ten years ago, he knew as a sturdy atheist. He worked at the time in what was a thoroughly godless yard, and in the office adjoining there was a gentleman who was a strong atheist. One man, a platelayer, however, by his Christian and consistent life, exercised a blessed influence, and held little Gospel meetings during meal times. Since then the gentleman referred to had been brought to the feet of Christ, and is now witnessing for Him in a Midland town.

Mr. Robert Paton said that some time since, in attending a religious meeting, he was astonished to see in the chair one whom years before he had known as an advanced infidel. He pleaded that such men should be treated gently, kindly, yet firmly, by Christians.

TUESDAY.

Mr. Easton, of the China Inland Mission, gave an address on missionary work in that land. He said that now—very different to what it was years ago—stations are separated one from the other only by about 600, 400, or 300 miles. New missionaries, on their arrival, instead of being kept on the coast, are sent to some station inland, where, amongst the people to whom they are to preach, they learn the language. Stations are being established through the interior, and the missionaries are even knocking at the doors of Thibet and Turkestan. They have at length won the confidence of the authorities, and are no longer believed to be British officials in disguise. God is giving them souls for their hire. There are conferences of native Christians being held continually in Hong Kong, Penang, and various places in the interior.

Mr. Easton said he had been stationed at Hanchung, in the province of Shensi. Here there is a church of 120 members, a hospital in full swing, and a girls' school, which once it was considered hopeless to think of, fruitful in spiritual results. In some places, scholarly men have been the first converts, and thus, from being the greatest opponents of the Gospel, have become witnesses for Christ. He did not think they had been faithful enough in expecting to see the literati of China converted. Over vast districts of China the Gospel is being made known; the Chinese are themselves becoming evangelists, and chapels are being built in country and in town. Herein is great cause for thankfulness. It was stated as an important fact that the whole of China proper is reached by the translation into that language of the Scriptures, while from time to time the Thibetan, Mongolian, and Turkestan dependencies are being provided with the Scriptures in their own tongue, mostly through the labours of the Moravian missionaries.

WEDNESDAY.

Mr. Morris (from Calcutta), in the course of an interesting address on India, after deploring that the Government had prohibited the use of the Bible in the public schools, went on to point out that the native mind is gradually becoming dissatisfied with its own beliefs,, and though, to a great extent, they turn aside from missionaries and missionary teaching, yet there is a kindly feeling towards Christian teaching, and many are asking "What is truth?" Some of the native newspapers have not been slow to speak of missionaries as the friends of India, as the pioneers of education and reform. There is, too, a general expectation that the day is not far distant when great numbers of the natives will be Christians. Cases were mentioned as evidence of the wonderful way in which the truth is permeating men's minds, and of the way in which many come boldly out on the Lord's side, forsaking all. It would be a good thing for India, said Mr. Morris, in conclusion, if a great number of Christian laymen would make that country their home, resolving to remain there, and so give themselves to India.

THURSDAY.

Rev. P. Carmichael gave an address on the subject of "Christian Homes," and the influence of the family life. He showed that throughout Scripture, with scarcely an exception, home life is seen to be a beautiful and God-honouring life. In the affections that have their root and centre in the home, there is a peculiar charm and power. Even the busiest man should do his utmost to cultivate home life, and to make it attractive and beautiful. Sunday-school teachers and heads of institutions, where the young are trained, should remember that the best thing they can do for their pupils is so to train them to love and honour home.

FRIDAY.

Mr. Richard Weaver gave a stirring address, in the course of which he said that backsliding begins in the closet, and the question for Christians is, not what they are saying or doing, but what do their closets witness for them. Neither drink nor anything else could cause a man to backslide who was in close communion with Christ. Blessed be God, Jesus has not lost his power and attraction yet—the power of the Cross is the same now as ever.

WITNESSING IN MANCHESTER.

UNDER this heading we recently gave an account of circumstances relating to the church of which Rev. S. Wainwright is the minister. An appeal was made for funds to purchase the building. It may be stated that, though the building cost over £6000, they are buying it for £1750. £2000 will be needed to include the cleaning of the chapel. Towards this amount £600 has been subscribed. In May next the purchase, it is hoped, will be completed.

In the same number an address on "Walking in the Light," by Mr. Wainwright, was given, and by an error it was added "of Birmingham," whereas it should have been "of Manchester."

MEDICAL STUDENTS' PRAYER UNION.

THE annual meeting of this Union at Freemasons' Hall last Friday evening was small, but the proceedings were of deep interest. Some gratifying statements of progress were contained in the report; among others the establishment of branch unions at Cambridge University and at Owens College Manchester.

The Chairman, himself a physician, earnestly exhorted the students to give prominence to the two primary objects of the Union—Bible study and united prayer. Dr. Sinclair Paterson spoke emphatically in defence of a whole Bible. Mr. Coleman, of Edinburgh University, gave a deeply interesting account of the remarkable work of spiritual revival that has been going on among the students in that city for the last two winters. Dr. Barbour, also of Edinburgh, addressed his very practical remarks to the "freshmen," showing from his own experience how they might avoid mistakes into which they were likely to fall. In his address, Mr. Coleman suggested the formation of a Holiday Mission among Christian students in London, similar to that now in operation at Edinburgh with such happy results.

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS WITH THE PEOPLE.

FOR some years we have held a simple mission service in the Victoria Coffee Hall, Waterloo-road, on Sunday afternoons, to which we invite the lowest and poorest men and women. We should be glad if some good voices would lend their aid in the singing, for we find this of great value and power in bringing in many waifs and strays, who would never think of entering a church. Many of our roughest neighbours have through these means been brought into contact with us. We have been enabled to follow up many cases of great distress, winning the love and confidence of those for whom we feel the deepest pity.

The work entails many expenses; we need help for warm clothing, for relief in sickness, and for other necessary expenses. A weekly meeting in continuance of the mission work is held in a schoolroom; this effort is in no way connected with those evening services held in the same hall. Those who conduct them have our hearty sympathy, but we are unable to help one another. Visitors will be welcomed at the Victoria Coffee Hall, Waterloo-road, at three o'clock on any Sunday afternoon.

Yours faithfully, KATE RIVAZ.

EAST-END POOR.—Archibald G. Brown addressed, on Friday last, a drawing-room-meeting of "The Brixton Clothing Society for the Destitute Poor of East London," at the residence of Mrs. Higgs, Gwydyr House, Brixton-hill. The ladies of the Society presented him with 1060 garments, made by them in their different homes, and also with the sum of £88 for his mission work.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

III.—THE STOLEN BLESSING.

Gen. XXVII.

In many a picturesque English village there lies a pond of stagnant water, which has been there as long as the oldest inhabitant can remember. It looks innocent enough when the winds of March sweep it, or the leaves of October bestrew it; but when it is exposed to the scorching rays of a summer sun, it pours forth volumes of poisonous gases, which had lurked unnoticed in its depths, and typhoid fever is sown in the homes that cluster round. Such is the heart of man. We do not think, we do not care to know, how much evil lies within. We read with listless interest the terrible photograph given by One who could not exaggerate (Mark vii. 21), and attach a vague meaning to other words which characterise the human heart as desperately wicked. And yet we do not feel so bad, nor shall we, nor shall we truly verify those words, nor realise how evil our nature is, or what a dying need we have for God, until we have been exposed to some searching test, which shall reveal us to ourselves.

Temptation is such a test.—There is no sin in being tempted. Our great High Priest was "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." And temptation need not necessarily lead to sin, so long as the steadfast will, inspired by the Holy Spirit, keeps the door of the nature shut and locked. Nay, temptation is even a blessing: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation," when it leads a man to discover tendencies, movements, appetites within him, unknown before, but against which he must henceforth be on his guard.

God our Father permits us to be tempted to lead us to see the hidden evils of our hearts—to hold up a looking-glass before us, in which we may behold what manner of people we are, and to make us so sensible of our own worthlessness and deformity as to drive us to hand ourselves over to Him, to do anything He will, if only we may be delivered out of this body of death. To know oneself, and despair of oneself, is to come within the sweep of that gracious power which can fashion a temple-column out of a bruised reed, and a noble vessel out of a lump of clay, and an Israel out of a Jacob.

We need not be at all astonished, then, to learn that temptation was allowed to come to Jacob from an unexpected source, taking him unawares. And if you are truly desirous of ascending the higher reaches of Christian thought and life, you must not be astonished if, in answer to your prayer for more grace and life, your heavenly Lover should take some unexpected means of showing you what you are. So Newton found—

> I asked the Lord that I might grow
>   In faith, and love, and every grace;
> Might more of his salvation know,
>   And see the glory of his face.
>
> Instead of this, He made me feel
>   The hidden evils of my heart,
> And let the angry powers of hell
>   Assault my soul in every part.

I. The Temptation Originated in a Sensuous Request of Isaac.—We sometimes find it hard to think that the Isaac of this chapter is the same person as the submissive boy who carried the altar-wood on his stalwart young shoulders, and wondered about the lamb, and meekly submitted to be bound as a sacrifice. That was a radiant dawn for a human life, which for some reason became quickly overcast.

What was that reason? Was it the prosperity of which we read in the previous chapter? "The man waxed great, and went forward, and grew until he became very great." It would not be the last time that prosperity has choked off spiritual growth. Was it a too-easy disposition, of which we catch a glimpse in his readiness to abandon well after well, if only he might be left in peace? It would not be the only time that a molluscous lack of backbone has barred the path of a noble career.

Was it an inordinate love for the pleasures of the table? There seems to have been too much of this in his constitution. He said to Esau, "Make me savoury meat, such as I love." Rebekah was keenly aware of her husband's weakness in this respect: "I will make for thy father savoury meat such as he loveth." There is a sad suggestiveness in all this, and enough to account for all. The man who, on the supposed point of death, thinks most of all of a good dish of delicious venison, is not likely to shine as a specially brilliant star in the heavenly firmament.

We need to take warning against the twin sins of gluttony and drunkenness. Intemperance in eating may not result in the same outward degradation as in drinking, but it is as harmful to the spirit. The question is, whether average Christian people do not eat much more than is good for the health of either body or spirit. Certainly the world and the Church are filled with numberless cases of men, the brilliance of whose minds has been obscured, and the edge of their spiritual life blunted, by their habitual and greedy indulgence in superfluous and luxurious food. With every grace we say at our meals, we need to ask that we may eat and drink, not merely at our own caprice, but to the glory of God. "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares."

Many years had passed since that memorable day on Mount Moriah, and many signs told Isaac that his sun was setting. Chief among these was dimming sight. God has mercifully arranged that such reminders, like warning bells, should ring out to show us how far we have travelled, and how near we are to the terminus of life. Many a man, who otherwise had dropped carelessly into the grave, has been awakened by such things to say to himself, "Behold, now, I am old; I know not the day of my death. I must begin to prepare for the final act."

There are glimpses of the better things in Isaac's character in the threefold preparation he made for his end.

He made his last testamentary disposition. If you have not done this, do it at once—no time so good as this. Leave nothing uncertain, nothing to chance, no loophole for heartburning or heartbreak amongst your heirs. He laid aside his earthly cares. He lived for several years after this, but he was a man set apart. It was the gloaming of his life, not quite dark, yet not light enough to work—the fittest time for meditation and prayer. It was ever the ambition of Dr. Chalmers to have such a time of Sabbath calm after the busy rush of his life of working days. He handed on the blessing. Granted that he proposed to counterwork the purposes of God, yet there is a significant beauty in the desire of the old man to bless before he died. Aged people! we younger ones have surely a right to expect some blessing, ere you leave us, of ripe counsel, of matured wisdom, of prophetic experience.

II. This Temptation was presented to Jacob through the Unscrupulous Love of Rebekah.—Jacob was her favourite son. There was a closer relationship between them than there could be between her and the more random Esau. As soon as she overheard Isaac's request to Esau, she resolved at once to win his blessing for her younger boy. And if a momentary qualm suggested itself, she, doubtless, quieted it by the reflection that she was simply trying to ratify the bargain which he had made for himself.

We cannot but admire her love. She threw herself away on this lad, whom she was never to see again. She was reckless of personal consequences. She cared not what might come to herself, so that he might win. "Upon me be thy curse, my son." For him she sacrificed husband, elder son, principle—all. It is with such prodigality of affection that women constantly give themselves for their beloved. Their love is often worthy of a better object, and yet it is beautiful. Oh, that all such knew of Him on whom the saint of the home at Bethany, and the sinner in the house of Simon, broke their alabaster boxes in a very prodigality of love, and yet there was no waste.

But her love was not based on principle. And such love is as terrible as the fire, which has burst from the restraints of iron bars, and leaves behind it a scorched and blackened trail. Love is either the bliss or bane of life; its bliss, if rooted and grounded in an all-mastering and all-penetrating devotion to purity, truth, principle, or in a word, to God; but its curse, if, like some pirate crew, it steers the ship of life according to its own wild whim. Let us keep our hearts above all that we guard, since out of them are the issues of life. And if we are ever prompted to act according to the strong solicitation of mere natural affection, let us remember the havoc which such a course produced in that far-off Eastern home, under the black tents of the patriarch Isaac; how it deceived the husband, wronged the elder son, drove the younger to an enforced exile, and blasted the reputation of this woman, who otherwise had been honoured and beloved.

But Rebekah is not the only mother who has acted thus. As we review her life, we find its counterpart in many who will scheme, manœuvre, palter with truth and righteousness, and cast even conjugal love into the scale, if only at all hazards they can advance the interests of their child. How little do they realise the harvest of which these are the seeds—a harvest of misery for the home, of heart-burning and hatred, of sorrow for those whom they would benefit, and of heart-breaking anguish for themselves!

In another sense than our Saviour meant, a man's worst foes may be they of his own house. We exert a vast influence, not only by what we say, but by the spirit of our lives, on those who dwell under the same roof, and address us by the tenderest names. And, alas! this influence is often sadly adverse to their nobler life, withering it as gas does flowers. They see us in our most careless moments, when we have ungirded ourselves, and lie at ease on the grass. They catch up our least guarded words. They take us at a disadvantage, when, biassed by love, we try to solve their problems and answer their questions so as to make life's pathway as easy as possible for their feet. And one drop of poison instilled into the heart by a loved and trusted friend is enough to blast a life. We drink more unquestioningly of the poisoned chalice when put to our lips by one we love. We enter more unsuspectingly the pathway to ruin when the hand of parent or friend points the way. The course of deceit is less forbidding when urged on us by those who, like Rebekah, can gain nothing if we succeed, who are willing to assume all responsibility if we fail, and who profess that they are inspired by no other motive than the most unselfish devotion to our interests.

How careful should we be, then, of all suggestions and advice we give to those accustomed to look up to us, lest, wittingly or not, we should place a stumbling-block and occasion to fall in another's way. In such matters affection is no true guide, unless regulated, as God's is, by the dictates of righteousness and truth; if these be absent, there is terrible danger lest we should make again the mistake of Rebekah, and follow again in the footsteps of her sin, against her sons, herself, and her God.

III. This Temptation was greedily responded to by the Weak and Crafty Nature of Jacob.—Jacob was not a thoroughly vicious man, but he was deplorably weak; and weakness is close akin to the sin to which it inevitably leads. He would not have concocted this plot or laid the train himself. He would have preferred not to act the liar. He was really afraid of the result. But he had not the courage to say "No" to the strong will and wish of his mother, especially when she was ready to take all risks. He tried to quiet his conscience by the consideration that he was only trying to get his own, and that Esau had no right to think of getting back from their father the birthright which he had certainly sold. And so, when his mother put strong pressure on him, summoning him by the obedience he owed her as her son (ver. 8), he weakly did not refuse on the ground that it was unlawful, but suggested it was inexpedient, lest they should be found out. "Behold, Esau my brother is a hairy man, and I am a smooth man; my father peradventure will feel me, and I shall seem to him as a deceiver, and shall bring a curse on me, and not a blessing." And when a man retreats from the position of what is right, to the urging of what is likely to be expedient and to pay, that man is near a fall, swift as the archangel's from heaven to hell.

Such a fall was Jacob's. It is impossible to emphasise this point too earnestly, especially for the young. So long as we take our stand on what is lawful, as John the Baptist did, when he strode into the royal presence and told Herod that he had no right to take his brother's wife, we are impregnable. But when once we retreat from this, and argue with the tempter on the lower grounds of possible discovery and failure, we shall find ourselves outmatched by his arithmetic, and led as garlanded oxen to the slaughter-house. Into this fault, to which all weak men are so liable, Jacob fell; and so, when, a second time, his mother commanded him to obey her voice, and go to the flock for two good kids of the goats, "he went, and fetched, and brought them to his mother."

When once the first step had been taken, it was quickly followed by others, which it seemed to render needful. Sin never comes alone. The first act of sin is like the boy put through the narrow window into a burglar-beset house, who creeps round to open the door for the entire gang; or it is like the first link of the rusty chain, which draws all the rest into the hold of the ship. If the graces come with linked hands, so do the vices. They are sporadic. That first sin of Jacob led to many others.

He simulated his brother's dress and skin. While the meat was cooking, Rebekah was engaged in turning over Esau's wardrobe, to find some suitable garments, highly perfumed, as is the custom with the Easterns to this day. This done, she prepared the delicate skins of the hides for his hands and neck. All was done with haste, lest Esau might come in. And when all was ready, Jacob arrayed himself to play his part.

He deceived his father with a direct falsehood. "I am Esau, thy firstborn; I have done according as thou badest me; eat of my venison, that thy soul may bless me."

He made an impious use of the name of God. In answer to Isaac's question as to how he had found it so quickly, he dared to say, "The Lord thy God brought it to me."

Yet what horror must have thrilled him as he found himself forced to take step after step, aware that he was being carried out by a rushing stream towards an ocean of ink, yet not daring to stop—nay, compelled to press still further out to sea. How his heart must have stood still when the old man became suspicious, and doubted his voice, and insisted on feeling, smelling, and having him near! What if God should strike him dead! What a relief when he came out again into the fresh air, though the words of the coveted blessing hardly repaid him for the agony he had passed through! How he must have loathed himself, and longed to change places with the lizards that crept about the tents, or the little naked slave children that laughed so merrily at play! The sun itself seemed shorn of half its light.

Yet this is the man who became the Prince of God. And if he became so, is there not hope for us, who can trace in him many resemblances to ourselves? "Though we have lien among the pots, yet may we be as the wings of a dove, covered with yellow gold." If the Almighty Workman could fashion such clay into so fair a vessel, what may He not do for us? Our only hope is to hand ourselves over to Him, in an act of entire self-surrender; conscious that we are useless and worthless, deserving rather to be trampled under foot than fashioned by his hand; conscious, too, that if He do not work for us we are undone; willing to be and do anything He may direct; careful to work out all that He may work in. If only we will to do this, and yield ourselves to God, and be willing to be made willing to have his will done in us, by us, and about us, then God will be able to work in us too some fair design of beauty and use. Oh! do not mar his work, or lead Him to make of thee some inferior vessel to that which thou mayest become. (Jer. xviii. 4.)

But, remember, God must implant the nature which He educates into Israel the Prince. When we speak of God's education, we must be very careful what we mean, and how we express it, lest we should countenance error. Amidst all his sin there must have been in Jacob a better self, which was capable of receiving the education of God, and of being developed into Israel. You may call this faith, or what you will, but it was there. And it was the possession of this better nature which made him stand in a different relation towards God than Esau did, and made him capable of rising to a spiritual level for which Esau had neither the aptitude nor the taste.

No doubt the God of love had thoughts of love towards Esau; but there was not, in his worldly nature, the faith, or the elements of nobility, which, through faith, had been implanted in his brother's heart. Put a stone into a flower-pot, cover it with mould, give it water and sunshine, and light and air, it will always be a stone; so if Esau had passed through the discipline of Jacob, he would always have been an Esau—he never could have been an Israel, unless there had been also in him the better nature which is associated with faith. You may develop intelligence, by education and mind-culture; but the faculty must be already present, otherwise your best methods will be abortive. You can develop the rudimentary germ, but when it is absent, you cannot create it. So the discipline of God's grace in a human life can do nothing, unless there be the germ of that new and divine nature of which our Lord spoke to Nicodemus: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Ye must be born again."

If, then, you are conscious of a depraved nature, capable of the crimes which disgrace the name of Jacob, be anxious to inquire if, besides this, there is the new nature, born of God, and capable of being educated into his image. If it be there, be thankful, and ask the Holy Spirit to lust against and repress the Jacob-nature, so that ye may not do the things that ye would (Gal. v. 17, R.V.), and to hasten your Israel-beauty. If it be not there, your duty is to look at once to the Lamb of God, who was delivered for your sins, and was raised again for your justification; and the imparting by the Holy Ghost of the germ of the new and better nature will be simultaneous with the first real, longing, transforming look of faith to the Lord Jesus.

SILENT GROWTH.

True souls grow grand in silence, as the trees
Grow tall and stately, looking up to God,
And list'ning for the whispers of the breeze
Among their branches, towering o'er the sod.

So breathes God's Spirit upon souls who soar
Unconsciously, while gazing on Christ's face,
Till they are crowned by Him for evermore,
While yet on earth, with more than mortal grace.

God tends the trees, in winter stiff and bare,
Awaiting the soft touches of his hand;
Naked and leafless in the bitter air
As sentinels they stud the frost-bound land.

But when He speaks the sap within them stirs,
Green shoots appear, and soon the bird on wing
Builds gladly 'mong the boughs, and gossamers,
Of tender leafage herald in the spring.

Brave silent souls, whom God has stripped and reft
Of joy and beauty. Silence is not death;
Alone and desolate ye are not left.

At HIS command shall quicken life anew,
Shall waft you on to heights unknown before,
A wondering world shall gaze on Christ in you,
Whom silently ye worship and adore.

MISSION TO PLATELAYERS.—Having worked for eight years among the platelayers on the Great Western Railway, by sending packets of Gospel papers to them every month, and having seen the good results of our labours, we are anxious that a similar work should be begun on the Midland Railway. Will any Christian lady start this work? To anyone doing so, we shall be glad to give the benefit of our experience. E. Carter.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN SPAIN.

We thank God that our schools are fuller than ever, especially the three in Chamberi, where we have been so much opposed; although those opened at our side in avowed opposition keep on, and have not a few children. The people still attend the services without fear, and there are always a few in the congregation who are seeking after God. Some of various conditions and ages have just started in the Christian race. The Lord is able to protect and feed his sheep in the midst of wolves.

Since about the time of the murder of the poor Bishop, there has been less open opposition on the part of the parish priests, though we know not what the more hidden efforts may be. The Jesuits swarm here, but the humble disciples of the Lord Jesus are stronger in his might.

We here have been more limited than we should be through lack of fellow-workers. From time to time we are able to write a tract, and translate a little book; but we are constantly desirous of doing something in this way, as we see the need and have the matter, and without much difficulty could do it in the rough, but need someone with less pressure of work to prepare it for the Press. Such help is at hand, were we able to avail ourselves of it. But all our brethren and sisters are dependent on their labour for their daily bread, and cannot give their time without remuneration. Should any reader of The Christian think it to be a part of his or her work to send help for the employment of a Spanish Christian in this way we would be thankful for such fellowship.

Yesterday my husband and I returned from a three days' evangelistic visit to a village twenty-eight miles off, where we were received with as much heartiness as if we were old friends, the people being disgusted with their priest, and in part with their religion. We were interested in the following facts, which have done something in preparing the way, and may encourage sowers who see not fruit to their efforts. (1) One family had had a New Testament in possession for some years. (2) One of the women had been a servant in the family of a Protestant in Madrid; (3) Another had once heard a sermon in Madrid; (4) The principal man of the place had a R. C. Bible (with notes in twelve or sixteen vols.) and was ever ready to defend the Scriptures. We met also with a respectable man from another village who carefully treasured up a Gospel of Matthew which was given to his father forty years ago by an Englishman traveling through Spain, who was received into his house.

We trust our visit will lead to others by one or two of our Spanish Christians, and ourselves, and that it may be manifest that the Lord has his people there. Our little statement of work and accounts will shortly be in the hands of those who have interested themselves in this corner of the vineyard. Charlotte Fenn.

Cardinal Cisneros 55, Madrid.

MESSRS. MATEER AND PARKER have been for some time evangelising in New Zealand, with great success. They commenced their work in Mr. Thomas Spurgeon's Tabernacle, Auckland, after which they held missions in some of the neighbouring suburban churches, and in Wellington, Christchurch, and Dunedin; they then returned to Auckland en route for Sydney.

DEHRA DOON, INDIA, N.W.P.—This valley at the foot of the Himalayas is thickly populated during the winter months by Europeans and Eurasians, the majority of whom are pleasure-seeking people, careless and indifferent about salvation, and whose lives are a continual hindrance to the reception of the Gospel by the heathen. We are desirous of holding Gospel meetings, and would be glad of help from God's people towards getting a tent, and having it fitted up for this work. Many might be attracted by the novelty and unsectarianism of a tent service. We ask prayer that we may be guided by the Lord, and filled with his Spirit for this work, and that many may be saved.

LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.

MEETINGS AT NEWCASTLE.

The Tyneside Methodists have declared their cordial adhesion to the scheme set on foot by the Wesleyan body, and intended for the social and spiritual elevation of the masses in the metropolis. The provincial campaign in advocacy of the claims of the proposed London Mission was opened at Newcastle-upon-Tyne by a combined effort on the part of office-bearers, class-leaders, and stewards, besides a host of ministers, who assembled in thousands in the Town Hall, which was filled with nearly 3000 persons, who came to hear a sermon from Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. On the following morning a Convention was held in Brunswick-place Chapel, and in the evening an enthusiastic meeting was held in the same place. There was a unity in these three gatherings, with regard both to spirit and design. They all centred in the one crying need of to-day—evangelistic work among the poor, the outcast, and the too-often-neglected of our London alleys and courts.

In his sermon, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, basing his remarks upon the words, "Let us make here three tabernacles" (Matt. xvii. 4), uttered by Peter, "not knowing what he said" (Luke ix. 33), told the story of Peter's mistake: (1) How he wanted to build in the wrong place; (2) how he wanted to build for the wrong tenant; and (3) how the Master showed him where he wanted to pitch his own tent. The preacher condemned the Peter-spirit as the curse of our Christianity, which wants to get on the mountain-top, and, in its delicious hallelujah raptures, wishes to build a house up there, when Christ is down here, among the outcast and the miserable. He held that, if we are always to have Christ's company and Christ's presence, we must come down from our selfish raptures. A splendid place to visit, the mountain-top is a bad place to live in. Angels on earth (continued the preacher) are to be found in your back streets, down in the slums, and in the kitchens, with their white wings tucked modestly out of sight, and their white robes rolled up in serviceable fashion, setting themselves to do God's work. That is where Christ lives.

The second error is that of perpetually supplementing the Gospel with human arrangements—ritual and the like—as if they were essential to it. I care not (this was said with particular emphasis) whether it be your church architecture, your music, or your order of service; if any of these be set alongside of Christ, instead of leading men to Him, then you will lose all; you will lose Moses, you will lose Elias, and you will lose the glorified Christ too. Better have your poor stammering preacher, than that Christ should not be glorified. It won't do to exalt the intellect—to build a tabernacle for Elias. The Church has got a great lesson to learn. Christ has knit us into a brotherhood with poor fallen humanity. If we go with Christ into the crowds, where the sin and sorrow are, Christ will come into our homes. Ah, it is a grand thing to have one like Him living among us! Yes, it is not three tabernacles, but Jesus, Jesus only, living in our homes.

A considerable part of the conversation at the Convention related to the doctrine and the life of holiness. As pointed out by the chairman of the district (Rev. A. Bishop), who presided at the meeting, the Convention tended to bring brethren into more direct touch with each other, with their great Master, and with their work. "The Doctrine of Holiness" was expounded by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Holiness (he said) is healthiness. The experience of every healthy Christian is, "I thoroughly enjoy doing the will of God." The realising of our privilege in Christ (Rom. vi.) is hindered by two difficulties on our part: (1) A difficulty of the will. We are not willing to make an absolute self-surrender to Christ. The other is a difficulty of the understanding, because we do not know how much Jesus Christ is able to do for us. It takes a man and Christ to make a Christian. If, by virtue of what Jesus Christ is for us and in us, what He has done and is doing for us, we place ourselves unconditionally at his disposal, we are now able, in the strength of the Spirit of God in our hearts, to yield ourselves to God as those who are spiritually alive; for we are made to live by the indwelling of the Spirit of God. Such is the practical conclusion of the whole matter.

Rev. M. G. Pearse took up the second branch of the subject, "The Life of Holiness." Referring to the confusion among Christians as to ways of holiness, he said:—I do not care a straw about the ways. The controversy is cut short at once when a man goes right up to God, and submits to Him: "This is thy work; do it in thy own fashion." Whatever may be the theories of holiness—and we cannot afford to spend our life in discussing them—all are agreed in this one thing: holiness is in Christ; holiness is receiving Christ; letting Him have his own way with and in us. I am with all the theologies which lead up to Christ, whether one finds Him by a long road, or another by a short way, a third by a road that is easy, and a fourth by a way that he finds difficult. If they all only lead up to Christ, go by any one you will. Holiness is the glorious Jesus, and our abiding oneness with Him.

There was a discussion, or rather conversation, at the close of each of the addresses, and the Divine unction was markedly manifest.

The three ministers who are set apart for the chief conduct of the London Mission—viz., the Revs. J. E. Clapham, Mark Guy Pearse, and Hugh Price Hughes—thoroughly stirred the sympathy and aroused the enthusiasm of the Wesleyans who crowded to overflowing the evening meeting of Wednesday. Mr. Clapham spoke especially on the social wants, as well as the moral and spiritual needs of the vast Metropolis. With regard to the former, the immense majority of the working classes (he said) have to live under social conditions that entirely differentiate their place and position from that of their brethren in the country. No wonder the father of a family crowded into one room, goes to the public, the music-hall, and worse places even. If we are to save the souls of these people, we must do more for them than is needed in the country. We must provide them with a place where they can sit and talk. We must combine social with religious work, which have too long been disjoined.

After a brief address from Mr. Pearse, Mr. Price Hughes described the scheme in some detail, particularly that part of which he and Mr. Pearse have charge—the West-end Mission. The very centre (he said) of the devil's kingdom, we would like to get Her Majesty's Theatre, which will hold 4000 persons; and we must be sharp about it, unless we want someone else to get it. £50,000 is needed; and on the whole, considering the great work of Peter Thompson at the East-end, we must put the cost of the whole mission at £57,000. Towards that amount, considerable sums were promised at the close of the meeting, without any distinct appeal of a pecuniary character, and before the vast audience separated, a resolution was unanimously passed acknowledging the necessity of the enterprise, and avowing the determination of the Wesleyans of the Newcastle District to further the interests of the Mission to the utmost of their ability.

There was an overflow meeting in the adjacent Presbyterian Church in Blackett-street, under the presidency of Rev. James Cuthbertson, and addressed by the deputation.

RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.—The recent gales in the Channel having thrown so many sailors and their families into want and sorrow, we would ask the prayers and sympathy of readers for them. We are just reminded of other dangers of the deep, by news arriving of a collision between two steamers, through which the Minerva sank and six men were drowned. The ship only left this port a few hours previously, and some of the crew were amongst those who were last week in the meetings held in the "fo'c's'le." We feel more and more the importance of the short time they are with us.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

THE CONGO.

God is continuing to bless the labours of his servants on the Congo. At Banza Manteke, writes a correspondent, the number of professing Christians now exceeds one thousand. At Mukimbungu there are thirty, and at Palaballa there are a few who have recently professed to be converted. The people are forsaking their idols, and turning unto God.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

Mr. Hettasch is engaged in originating new industries for his people in Genadendel, South Africa. As castor-oil beans grow wild there, a new oil-press has been procured, and he reports having tried it with great success. Mr. Hettasch's 1200 mulberry plants are growing so satisfactorily that he will soon be ready for a large supply of silkworms' eggs. Some time must elapse before any of these are remunerative, and in the meantime poverty and distress are rife; the missionaries foresee a very trying winter. Gifts of old clothing would be very helpful, and might be forwarded to Genadendal through Mr. J. F. Pensel, 32, Fetter-lane, London, E.C.

FRIENDS' MISSIONS.

We are rejoiced to hear of the good work being done by the Scripture Union in Japan. A missionary writes that the number of members increases daily, and that the correspondence is most encouraging. The Scripture Union picture leaflets are much appreciated and largely distributed. In Japan there is great need of Christian books, to replace the immoral and otherwise dangerous native literature. The Pilgrim's Progress has just come out, also the Life of Stephen Grellet, and it is hoped that the Old Testament in Japanese will be published next year. Amongst the students, English Bibles are in great demand; and, generally speaking, the Scripture knowledge of Japanese converts is remarkably good.

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

In an article on Family Religion in China, Rev. J. W. Brewer says:—"The longer one lives and works amongst the Chinese, the stronger becomes the conviction that we are not sure of a man, and cannot put full trust in him as a Christian, until his wife and family are one with him in the worship of the true God. We have kept the subject continually before our members, both in public and private exhortation. The result has been cheering, and our work in consequence has, on this proverbially difficult station, assumed a much healthier aspect."

At the conclusion of his first year in Mafikeng, South Africa, Rev. Robert Appelbe is able to send cheering reports of a harvest being reaped amongst the Baralongs, frankly acknowledging himself to have entered into other men's labours. In Mafikeng alone there are 423 fully accredited Church members, and 73 candidates for membership. Five preaching stations are included in the Circuit, and these are regularly supplied, there being about twenty local preachers. Mr. Appelbe writes:—"The son of Montsioa, who is to succeed to the chieftainship, is a diligent scholar in the day-school (Mafikeng), and I am hoping that whilst he is under our influence the gracious Spirit may open his heart to receive the 'truth as it is in Christ.' The number of inquirers averages three a week, and both men and women are heard singing Christian hymns as they go about their daily work."

Mr. Elbert Clarke, who has laboured for the past twelve years in Natal, is returning on a visit to England for rest, and to further the education of his children.

The Bale Foreign Mission has lost, in three days, three of its missionaries. Mr. Siegle and his wife both died, August 26, of gastric fever, on the Gold Coast, Africa, leaving a baby eleven months old. Two days later, the wife of the missionary Jean Müller died suddenly at Akropong.

"Oh, their's is peril to sadden the heart,
Peril the mind to harrow,
Who wander off on the broad, broad way,
Taking it for the narrow."

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE.

In a letter to The Methodist Times of last week, on the much-agitated subject of whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be permitted in the proposed People's Palace, Mr. F. N. Charrington writes:—"As to the scheme itself, in the first place, I object to £100,000 of public money being expended in what, to my mind, can become nothing else but a subsidised rival to existing theatres and music-halls, of which we have enough in the East. They have already started a Dramatic Club (under the patronage of the Treasurer of the Palace) in anticipation of the opening in June next. Secondly, I object to the proposed combination—namely, a concert-hall and winter garden. We have never seen this come to any good, even when started on a fair business basis. For examples of this we have only to remember Cremorne Gardens and Highbury Barn.

"Thirdly, I object to the individual who is chiefly responsible for the whole affair—namely, Sir Edmund Hay Currie. People seemed to think, in the time of the Purity Crusade, that we had no concern with the character of men who represented us in Parliament, and now they contend that we are to fight the drink traffic in an abstract sort of way, and never to mention the names of the makers and sellers of the deadly compound. The noble women in the Whiskey War in America did not think so when they prayed for the rum-sellers in their very presence, and denounced their infernal traffic before their face. Now here is a fact which has been apparently kept in the dark—the Chairman of the Trustees is a gin distiller, and is supposed to carry on the largest business of this sort in the world. I cannot imagine why this man, who, humbly speaking, must have done more harm by his horrible business than any other man in the East-end, should be chosen to be Chairman of a scheme for raising the masses of East London (though, as far as I can see, it is more likely to lower them).

"As to the opening of the Palace on Sunday, of course that will only intensify the evil if it is carried out, as we fear, with a licence for intoxicating drink, and add the sin and physical harm of Sabbath-breaking to other and worse sins, which must necessarily come in the train of the indulgence in drink. I hope and pray that this stir about the People's Palace will spread beyond a mere local matter, and become a general war not against this curse of strong drink being introduced into one place supposed to be for the benefit of the people, but against it being sold in any street, in any town, against the will of the people. Why should we be so far behind our own colony of Canada, where they have already got Sunday-closing, and practically Local Option? Why should we be ruled by this horrid monster of strong drink? Why should we make knights and baronets of those very men who are ruining and blasting the homes of the people by their soul-destroying traffic?

"I only hope the People's Palace may turn out better than I anticipate, but if the general public had seen as much as I have of the awful effects of music halls, they would not be surprised at my taking any steps I legally can to prevent what I fear may be another and a larger one being started with the money of philanthropic people."

At the meeting held at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, last week, a significant expression of the opinion of the people of the East-end was given on this subject. The meeting was evidently fairly representative of the working-classes, and the resolutions, both against the sale of intoxicating drink and against the opening on the Lord's-day, were carried almost unanimously, the few dissentients (only about twenty) being evidently of no weight whatever, while the enthusiasm of the great mass of the meeting, and especially of the women, was unbounded.

A great point was made, also, by the reading, by Mr. G. H. Barber Beaumont, of some extracts from the will of his late grandfather, whose wishes, as the originator of this movement, by his bequest of £13,000, are certainly entitled to the fullest consideration. One extract, and a sufficient one, says: "I am about to found a Philosophical Institute, for the purpose of providing persons in the neighbourhood with the means of meeting for mental and moral improvement, free from the baneful excitement of intoxicating liquors." And again he says: "I desire to put within reach of the working-classes the means of harmless recreation, in subjection to the great principles of God, as seen in the works of the universe." Mr. Beaumont added, he feared the trustees could have taken little trouble to read the provisions of the bequest; and Mrs. Urmston had the feeling of the meeting with her when she said it had brought tears to her eyes to think it was necessary to read these extracts, and that there could be any doubt as to the wishes of the testator being regarded. With these two points made clear, that the wishes of the testator, and of the people of the East-end, are distinctly against the selling of intoxicating drinks within the People's Palace, there should no longer be any doubt as to the action of the trustees.

SAILORS IN DEVONPORT.

Dear Sir,—Some months ago I pleaded in your columns for help to knock down two strongholds of drink, the "Royal Naval Rendezvous" and the "Fountain" Inn. The money was quickly given, two friends sending £1000 each, while hundreds, fifties, tens, and fives, with smaller amounts, made up the rest, and these public-houses are bought and closed.

There is a corner house, the last between the Sailors' Rest and the dockyard, still standing, called the "Dock Gates" Inn, with its doors in the main street and round the corner, as an allurement which many cannot withstand. A young seaman in the Royal Naval Hospital said to me, "Have you got the 'Dock Gates'"? "Not yet, but I believe God will give it to us." "I'm praying for it," he said; "it's the cruellest house of all." I do not wish to speak hardly of any trade; but I wonder what the chronicles would be of such houses, could they be written!

We want £5000 in a month's time, to complete the purchase, without borrowing. Perhaps one donor would, at a stroke, clear off this amount. The Devonport magistrates have decided to grant no fresh licenses, to allow no transfers, so the work will be solid. Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, has kindly promised £100 if the money is quickly raised. May God give us a speedy victory, then we will knock down and build.

Yours very truly, Agnes E. Weston.
Sailors' Rest, Devonport.

Mission and other Appeals.

Hook, Wooton Bassett.—Help is needed to build a temperance hall in this poor village; also clothing for the poor. Address, Miss F. B. Baily, the Rectory, Lydiard Tregory, Swindon, Wilts.

Maryland Point Mission, Stratford.—The Committee appeal for funds to enable them to relieve the great distress in this district. Food and fuel, medical advice, blankets and clothing are given to relieve necessitous cases. Help may be sent to Mr. John Stabb, 6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington.

The Army Scripture Readers' Society (4, Trafalgar-square) earnestly appeal for help to remove a debt of over £1000. At present eighty-nine readers are engaged, and, many regular subscribers having been removed by death, unless help is forthcoming, there is danger lest some curtailment of the Society's operations may become necessary.

Leicester.—A few working-men have built a mission hall in a densely populated part of Leicester, and are giving much earnest effort for the salvation of those around them. Those efforts have been crowned with evident blessing, but they are much crippled through want of funds, and the whole work must be stopped unless they can raise £15 immediately, and £800 within three months. The case is well known by Rev. F. B. Meyer, Leicester, who will gladly receive contributions.

LIMEKILNS, N.B.—Mr. Hall, evangelist, has been conducting services in Limekilns and Charlestown during the past fortnight. The meetings have been largely attended, and there are evident signs that they have been blessed. Mr. Hall's visit has not only aroused the careless, but will lead many young Christians to make a more decided profession of Christ.

Gleanings.

EVANGELISTIC.

A band of working men are engaged every Sunday in visiting the Sheffield workhouse and proclaiming to the five hundred tramps there the Gospel of Christ.——Miss Leah Smith and Miss Bat have had a successful fortnight's mission at Rowlands Castle.. Their next sphere of work is Cowes.

The Committee for holding special religious services in theatres and music halls are prepared to accept the offer of a large circus at Dalston Junction as soon as an additional £100 can be obtained.——Mr. J. Denham Smith writes that he has lately had good times in Ireland, on the Continent, and in the South of Scotland. As announced elsewhere, he is at Clapton during November.

Last Thursday evening, Nov. 11, a large company of seamen assembled at the chapel in Ratcliff-highway to listen to Gospel addresses by Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Maynard, of Wimbledon. A number of seamen signed the temperance pledge.——Barnsley has again been favoured by a visit from Mr. Henry Thorne. The services were not large, but real good was effected.——A ten days' mission has just been held at the Scarborough Y.W.C.A. by Mrs. Legg, of Harrow.

During October, the Sunday services in the Metropolitan Music Hall here have been overcrowded. After one meeting some twenty persons wrote, stating that "from that night they had determined to accept Christ."——A two weeks' Gospel mission has been held at the Friends' Meeting-house, Copford, by Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society.——A three weeks' evangeliatic mission is being held in the Royal Public Hall, Torquay, on Saturday evening, by Gipsy Smith, assisted by Mrs. Evens.——The Christians in the district of Longforgan, near Dundee, have been greatly cheered by a visit from Mr. J. W. Moodie, the "soldier evangelist."

TEMPERANCE.

Mr. Richard Coad, the Cornish miner, has conducted a twelve days' mission in Curford Hall, Birmingham. The meetings were largely attended.——In Bradford (Yorks.), there has been a decrease of 221 public-houses in four years.

At Marylebone Workhouse, since 1881, no intoxicants have been used. Dr. Norman Kerr says, if this may be done with success at so large an institution, it may be done with safety anywhere.——After the delivery of the Bishop of Lincoln's recent charge to his clergy at Boston, a luncheon was provided at the Assembly Rooms, for which occasion a special licence was obtained.

In The Temperance Record, a writer advocates in connection with the Queen's Jubilee, a "Universal Temperance Jubilee Mission."——The Scottish Baptist Total Abstinence Society held its annual meeting, recently, at Glasgow with great success.——The Bishop of Newcastle urges more vigorous measures against intemperance. All parties, he says, should unite in sending to Parliament a much larger number of temperance representatives.

The twenty-fifth series of winter evening meetings, held at Lambeth Baths, have been commenced.——Meetings in favour of popular veto have been held at Maidenhead, Guildford, Canterbury, Maidstone, and Sheerness with encouraging results.——"Drink prizes" having been given at some bazaars held in Dublin on behalf of philanthropic and religious objects, the Archbishop of Dublin has expressed his strong disapproval of the practice.

The recent National Council of the Congregationalists of Chicago, passed a strong resolution on the evils of intemperance.——The population of France does not increase, yet in the last ten years it is stated that public houses have increased by tens of thousands.——Sir Marshall Clarke, Resident Commissioner, Basutoland, is reported to have brought about a great improvement in the affairs of that Colony. The Basutos have almost given up excessive drinking.——A Moravian missionary writes, from Alaska, that he has never seen an Eskimo the worse for drink.

It is proposed to hold a simultaneous Blue Ribbon Jubilee Mission throughout England next year, the temperance movement being regarded as one of the most important events of the Queen's reign.——A Temperance Jubilee was celebrated last week in Newcastle-on-Tyne.——Mr. Alderman Norton, of Poole, has offered to erect a free library in the town at a cost of £1000. This amount he considers as the savings of himself and family in abstaining during a lifetime from intoxicating drinks.——Mr. William Noble, of Hoxton Hall, is expected home in January next.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Edward Pickard Hall, M.A. (brother of Rev. Newman Hall), for many years at the head of the Oxford University Press, died on the 16th inst.——Mr. Spurgeon left London for Mentone on Monday last.——Rev. Walter Home, the "father" of the Scotch Established Church, has just died, at the age of eighty-three.

A new Orphan Home has been opened at Sheffield by Mr. Stuart Wortley, M.P., to accommodate thirty-five children, and has cost £2000——A new Cabmen's Shelter, making the thirty-ninth erected by the Cabmen's Shelter Fund, was recently opened in Duncannon-street, Charing-cross.——Madame Boucicaut, proprietor of the Bon Marché in Paris, has founded and endowed a Home for those in her employ, at a cost of five million francs—about £200,000.

The Book World.

Wayside Chimes. By Margaret Scott Haycraft. 1s. Nisbet & Co. A tiny volume of true poetry. Helpful, hopeful, full of real experience, these verses will inspire and refresh many.

See for Yourself. By Grace Stebbing. 1s. Nisbet & Co. A thoughtful, wise little story on the duty and benefit of seeing for oneself. A philanthropic gentleman carries out this plan, beginning with a family, an insight into whose poverty and faith forms the most tender and beautiful picture in the story.

National Temperance Reader. National Temperance Depôt. Very good papers, suitable for recitations and readings, all teaching Gospel temperance truths. The same publishers send The National Temperance Mirror Volume for 1886. Here we have a good variety of tales in prose and verse, with attractive illustrations, all teaching some good lesson, and especially advocating the temperance cause.

Work and Save. By H. De Hochstrasser. 2s. Elliot Stock. A realisation of the true political economist's dream. Given a continental village, notorious for being the haunt of prodigality, idleness, and other sins, and an employer whose philanthropy and energy work out a reformation in the morals of all concerned, and we have the result—a happy, thriving community, a pattern of decency and order. English working-men should get the book, and digest its lesson.

The British and Foreign Evangelical Review. 3s. 6d. Jas. Nisbet & Co. The current issue has two specially strong articles. "The Bible Doctrine of Sin" is a careful and adequate discussion of the topic with which it deals. In the "Counterfeit Gospel of Nature" we are presented with a vigorous criticism of Matthew Arnold. The writer rains merciless blows on the poor "Apostle of Culture." The other contributions are up to the usual standard.

The Prairie Chief. By R. M. Ballantyne. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. For years the wonderful pen of Mr. Ballantyne has done the bidding of his still more wonderful imagination, and the result is those well-known stories for boys which make his name a praise in Boyland. The present volume contains the story of a young North American Indian chief, whose adventures, loves, bravery, and truth will win the hearts of all boy-readers; they cannot fail to learn much of God and nature from it.

Gospel Faith. By Dr. J. Leighton. Funk & Wagnalls. A treatise well worth reading on a theme which, though of vital importance, is much misunderstood. The author shows how emphatically the Bible idea of faith is that of trust, and seeks to clear away the obscurity and unnecessary complications which theological disputants have thrown around the subject. Faith is shown to be more an act of the heart than of the intellect, while its rational character, as in accordance with the dictates of truth, is also insisted on.

Abraham: his Life and Times. By Rev. W. J. Deane, M.A. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. To write a monograph on the "Friend of God" is a bold venture, but the present volume is well worthy of its subject. For ethnology and topography Mr. Deane has laid under tribute the best Orientalist and Eastern travellers. His book is a perfect fund of information of Chaldæa, Egypt and Canaan, but in the midst of all digressions he keeps prominently before his readers the central figure of the Patriarch and the development of God's covenant promises. What strikes us even more favourably than Mr. Deane's literary and descriptive powers is his adherence to the spirit of the inspired history. This is the first of a series of half-crown volumes edited by Rev. J. Exell, on "The Men of the Bible." If the succeeding volumes of the series are as full of information and as sound in theology as their forerunner, journalists, ministers, and students may welcome their advent.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

Our Gracious Queen: Jubilee Pictures and Stories from Her Majesty's Life. By Mrs. O. F. Walton. 3s. This gifted authoress, who has so often touched our hearts with tales of the lowly, has proved equally happy in sketching scenes from royal life. The book is beautifully illustrated with engravings and coloured prints. It is a charming little volume, and will inspire our English maidens not only with living loyalty, but with a desire to imitate the example of high faithfulness and simple piety set by our beloved Queen.—The Town's Benefactor: A Story of the Sunday Question. By Ellen Louise Davis. 1s. 6d. This important question is skilfully and Scripturally handled, and the right of our working-men to the Sunday, as a day of rest, is bravely upheld.—Launch the Lifeboat, by Mrs. O. F. Walton (3s.), is one of this pleasing writer's most delightful books. The soft engravings and bright coloured prints enhance its value.—Child's Companion Vol. 2s. 6d. Happy the children who have so good and helpful a "Companion," especially for Sunday afternoons or quiet hours. It is full of bright stories and instructive papers.—Tract Magazine Vol. 1s. 6d. Full of interest and instruction, with bright Gospel light shining from every page.—The Cottager and Artisan Vol. 1s. 6d. Another thoroughly good periodical, beautifully illustrated; will brighten many cottage homes.

MESSRS. S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO.

Palms of Victory. 1s. An illuminated text-book, arranged for a month, with Scripture text and verse for each day. On each opening there is a neatly coloured floral design.

Changing Places. By Miss Gertrude Jerdon. 1s. 6d. A book for children, inculcating kindness to animals. The style is easy, and the language employed such as will be readily understood, even by the very young.

Almost a Wreck; or, Love's Quest and Guerdon. By Mrs. Lucas Shadwell. 3s. 6d. A temperance tale of the highest class. The writing is good, the story is good, and its influence must be of the best kind, since it is written in the spirit of veriest truth.

Four Knockings (4d.); Too Good to be True (2d.) Two booklets by Miss E. S. Elliott. These booklets are full of Scriptural instruction and warning, couched in the cheerful tone that might be expected from the Authoress of "Expectation Corner." The second gives an account of a Christmas-eve in a hospital; the nurse's words convey many a lesson of faith in a living, loving Father.

Annual Volumes.—The Family Friend contains something for everybody. The papers on home and home life are full of sound and useful suggestions.—The Children's Friend. This is the kind of literature that our boys and girls should be encouraged to read—healthy and entertaining. The volume forms an excellent gift book.—The Infants' Magazine is a perfect garden of delights for the wee ones. The reading is attractive, and the illustrations are charming.

The Bethlehemites. From the German. By Julie Sutter. 1s. This beautiful little book will make a suitable Christmas gift. The story of the birth of the Saviour is told with a freshness and sympathy that makes all the incidents seem very real.—How a Farthing made a Fortune. By Mrs. C. E. Bowen. 1s. A bright story, illustrating the truth that "honesty is the best policy."—A Flight with the Swallows. By Emma Marshall. 1s. A pretty tale, well told. It will carry a good lesson of unselfish love home to many young hearts.

The Contemporary Pulpit (6d., Swan Sonnenschein & Co.) is less original than usual. It culls two articles from The Guardian, and its sermons have not the forceful presentation of truth which characterised their predecessors.

The Churchman (6d. Elliot Stock) has an interesting paper on Christ's Second Coming and the Restoration of the Jews to the Holy Land. Mr. Cobb's account of work among hop-pickers is very readable, and supplies useful information.

Mrs. Daniel Tomkins (Sutherland House, Great Yarmouth) has forwarded us a copy of her Motto-card for 1887. The text, "Blessed be the Lord, who daily beareth our burden," is a very appropriate one, while the card is artistically printed and adorned.

"Christmas Cheer," the special Christmas number of Our Own Gazette, is very attractively got up. An article on "Scenes in Irish Life" will be of very general interest just now. There is also a story entitled, "Leucia's Book," by Lady Hope, telling how the Shepherd found his sheep, and how a brother and sister found each other (2d., S. W. Partridge & Co.).

The Babylonian and Oriental Record. 1s. 6d. D. Nutt. Biblical scholars will welcome this new monthly. Its editors are authorities in their own departments, and its papers are all learned. It does not appeal to the many, but to the few. We hope its promoters will be encouraged in their attempt to cast the side-lights of ancient history and tradition on the Old Testament record.

The Hospital is a useful penny weekly paper, giving information that may be found helpful not only in hospitals, asylums, &c., but in families. There is something for the general reader as well as the specialist. It is published at 30 and 32, Sardinia-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields. From the same office comes a pamphlet entitled Satisfaction (3d.), showing the true lesson of life to be that only in Christ and in the daily walk with Him is true heart-satisfaction to be found.

Notices.

Mr. John Elliott, evangelist, has left London, and is now residing at Hill View, Torquay.

Lieut.-Colonel Kennion, Glengariff, Archer-road, Southampton, writes that he has an expensive surgical appliance for raised shoulder and curvature of spine, little used. He would be glad to give to give it to any institution where it would be useful.

YOUNG WOMEN AT THE WEST-END.—Princess Christian has kindly promised to open the Head Offices of the Young Women's Christian Association, at 316, Regent-street, W., on Monday next, the 22nd inst., at half-past four. Admission will be by ticket only, and obtainable from the Hon. Secretary, Mr. G. L. Dashwood. These buildings, which comprise the new Halls, Secretary's Offices, Welbeck Home and Institute, and Servants' Home, represent a sum of £10,000, which has been given in donations, and only £1750 is required to start the undertaking free of debt.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,600 poor Boys and Girls.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE,

for as yet but very little has been received? Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale, remember that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, etc., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as of the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say,

Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque (made payable to J. T. Page) to any part of the country.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Hall of the "Edinboro' Castle."

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (Prepaid), with full instructions as to conveyance, etc., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo now desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, NOV. 21.—2 CHRON. XXXV.

1.—On the fourteenth day of the first month.—"Not at an irregular time like Hezekiah (xxx. 2), but on the day appointed by the law."—Sp. Com.

3.—Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon . . . did build.—"The fact that the ark of the Covenant had been removed from the Holy of Holies had not been previously stated, and comes upon us as a surprise. It is impossible to say whether it had been cast out by Amon to make room for the idolatrous emblems with which he seems to have defiled the Temple (2 Kings xxiii. 4—6), or had only been temporarily removed by Josiah while he effected necessary repairs. The latter supposition is on the whole the more probable, since if Amon had thrust out the ark, so grievous a sin would probably have been distinctly recorded."—Sp. Com.

This is the last occasion on which the ark of the Covenant is mentioned before the Captivity, when it disappears altogether from view; a disappearance for which Jer. iii. 16 was probably intended to prepare them. There is an interesting tradition recorded in the Apocryphal book of 2 Maccabees ii. 4 of Jeremiah hiding the ark in a cave on Mount Nebo, where Moses "climbed up and saw the heritage of God." And when some sought to discover where he had hid it, "he blamed them, saying, As for that place, it shall be unknown until the time that God gather his people again together and receive them unto mercy."

21.—Forbear thee from meddling with God who is with me.—"These are remarkable words in the mouth of a heathen; but they are not without a parallel in the remains of ancient Egypt that have come down to us. It would seem that the Egyptian kings, in a certain sense, acknowledged a single supreme God, and considered their actions to be inspired by Him."—Sp. Com. But, besides this, we have the authority of the next verse (22) for saying that the words of Necho were "from the mouth of God," and blame seems there attached to Josiah for not hearkening to them as such.

MONDAY, NOV. 22.—2 CHRON. XXXVI.

"The narrative (of this chapter) runs parallel with 2 Kings as far as verse 13, from which the writer ceases to follow in the footsteps of the earlier historian, omitting wholly the events described in 2 Kings xxv. 8—30, and substituting a sketch in which the moral and didactic element preponderates over the historical."—Sp. Com.

13.—Who had made him swear by God.—"It is expressly stated in Ezek. xvii. 13 that Nebuchadnezzar administered to Zedekiah an oath of fealty, when he made him king, on which occasion he would naturally have made him call his God to witness. Hence by his rebellion Zedekiah broke the oath which he had sworn by Jehovah, and Jehovah punished him for his perjury."—Bertheau. It is in reference to his profanation of his oath that Zedekiah is addressed in Ezek. xxi. 25 as "thou profane wicked prince of Israel."

14.—Polluted the house of the Lord which he had hallowed at Jerusalem.—"It appears from Ezekiel that towards the close of Zedekiah's reign idolatrous rites of various different kinds were intruded into the sacred precincts of the Temple. In the outer coast toward the north, Hebrew women wept and wailed for Tammuz (Ezek. viii. 14); in subterranean chambers beneath the court, incense was offered by the elders, to the forms of creeping things and abominable beasts, pourtrayed upon the wall round about; while at the entrance to the Temple itself, between the porch and the altar, there were those who bowed themselves down before the rising sun, turning their backs to the sanctuary and worshipping with their faces towards the east."—Sp. Com.

21.—Until the land enjoyed her Sabbaths.—"All that we can legitimately conclude is that between the time of Moses and the commencement of the captivity, there had been about seventy occasions on which the Sabbatical year (Lev. xxv. 4—7) had been violated."—Sp. Com.

TUESDAY, NOV. 23.—EZRA I.

1.—Now in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia.—Canon Rawlinson accounts for the two last verses of 2 Chron. xxxvi. being here repeated verbatim by the fact that it is probable that Ezra was "originally a continuation of Chronicles, Chronicles and Ezra together forming one work." He also says: "By the first year of Cyrus is to be understood his first year at Babylon, which was the first year of his sovereignty over the Jews. This was B.C. 538."

2.—The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth.—There is an interesting parallelism between this proclamation of Cyrus and that great event which it typified, Christ's proclamation of "liberty to the captives" after his victory over "Him who had the power of death" was completed. Cyrus appeals to the power entrusted to him by God. Christ says, "all power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore," &c. (Matt. xxviii. 18). Cyrus states God's charge to him to have been "to build Him an house at Jerusalem." Christ's "preaching peace" is in Eph. ii. 17, traced up to, as its aim, the building of "an holy temple in the Lord." Cyrus gives a free invitation: "Who is there among you of all his people . . . let him go up." Christ's invitation is: "Whosoever will, let him come." Cyrus mentions the needed presence: "The Lord his God be with him." Christ closes his proclamation with the words, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the age."

5.—With all them whose spirit God had raised.—One is reminded of Lydia's conversion. "Whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul" (Acts xvi. 14).

7.—Which Nebuchadnezzar had . . . put in the house of his gods.—Thus was the apparent triumph of man over God recorded in Dan. v. 2, 3 reversed, and the holy vessels, which had been desecrated, were now returned to be restored to their rightful use.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 24.—EZRA II.

61.—Therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.—R.V. renders this "therefore were they deemed polluted, and put from the priesthood." This shows the the extreme care bestowed upon testing the genealogical title to the priesthood. Those who claim a part in the "royal priesthood" (1 Pet. ii. 9) should be able to make good their title thereto on the ground of "being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Pet. i. 23).

63.—Till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.—"From the words 'till a priest shall arise,' &c., it is evident that the then High Priest was not in a position to entreat and to pronounce the Divine decision by Urim and Thummim. The ark of the covenant, with the mercy-seat, was in virtue of the Divine promise (Exod. xxviii. 30; Numb. xxvii. 21), the place of judgment, where the High Priest was to inquire of the Lord, by means of Urim and Thummim. The ark, however, was no longer in existence. The unanimous testimony of the Rabbis is that, after the Babylonian exile, God no longer manifested his will by Urim and Thummim, this kind of Divine revelation being reckoned by them among the five things which were wanting in the second Temple."—Keil.

64.—The whole congregation together was 42,360.—If to this we add the servants, spoken of in the next verse, 7337, we get nearly 50,000, which is only a twelfth of 600,000, the number of men who left Egypt at the exodus (Exod. xii. 37).

THURSDAY, NOV. 25.—EZRA III.

1.—When the seventh month was come.—"The month Tisri, corresponding nearly to our September, the most sacred month in the Jewish year."—Sp. Com. And that because on the tenth day was the great day of Atonement, followed by the Feast of Tabernacles.

3.—And they set the altar upon his bases.—"Upon the old foundation, which we must suppose to have become apparent on the clearing away of the ruins, and a careful examination of the site."—Sp. Com.

For fear was upon them because of the people of those countries.—"The notion is, they erected the altar, and restored the worship of Jehovah, for the purpose of securing the Divine protection, because fear of the surrounding heathen population had fallen upon them."—Keil.

So is it often in God's dealings with souls. He brings them into trouble by outward circumstances, by reason of which "fear upon them" leads them to seek Him, and the first step in seeking Him is to find the altar, which is the appointed meeting-place between the soul and God. "There I will meet with the children of Israel" (Exod. xxix. 13). "We have an altar . . . by Him, therefore, let us offer" (Heb. xiii. 10—15).

6.—But the foundation of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid.—The erection and use of the altar before the foundation of the Temple was laid, of which it afterwards formed an essential part, is an apt illustration of the dispensational truth that the Old Testament saints drew nigh to God before the foundation of the spiritual Temple was laid by the coming in the flesh and death of the Son of God. This, however, can no more exclude Old Testament saints from belonging to that Temple, than did the laying the foundation of the Temple of the Lord (ver. 11) imply that the altar, which had been erected before, formed no part of it.

FRIDAY, NOV. 26.—EZRA IV.

1.—The adversaries of Judah and Benjamin.—"These appear by what follows to have been the Samaritans; a mixed race, partly Israelite, but chiefly foreign, which had replaced, to some extent, the ancient inhabitants, after they were carried into captivity by Sargon."—Sp. Com. Their language seemed friendly, but in seeking the amalgamation of the Jews with those who were outside the Jewish fold, they were practically, and that probably, too, in intent, their adversaries. The true Church of Christ has adversaries too of this character—the "mixed multitude" within her borders, who, like those spoken of in Num. xi. 4, are ever leading her into trouble. "Of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them" (Acts xx. 30).

3.—Ye have nothing to do with us, build an house unto our God.—"By the emphasis placed upon 'our God,' and 'the Lord God of Israel," the assertion of the adversaries, 'we seek your God as ye do,' is indirectly refuted. If Jehovah is the God of Israel, He is not the God of those whom Esarhaddon brought into the land."—Keil. It had been well for the Church of Christ if her rulers had been equally faithful when the world, in Constantine's days, sought admission within her borders. The world might have troubled them from without, as did "the people of the land" (4), those who rejected their fellowship. But it is safer to keep the enemy without, than to admit him within.

6.—Then ceased the work of the house of God.—The "Artaxerxes," who issued the decree that the work should cease, was the Pseudo-Smerdis of history, who succeeded Cambyses, and preceded Darius Hystaspes on the throne of Persia. He reigned but seven months, when he was deposed and executed by Darius Hystaspes. So little is proud man able to withstand God.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27.—EZRA V.

The prophets Haggai and Zechariah now appear upon the scene to encourage, by the word of the Lord, the work which man had hitherto hindered. But it was not only opposition from without which had hindered the work, but also apathy from within, and it was against this specially that "Haggai, the Lord's messenger, spake in the Lord's message unto the people." First, reproving their dilatory way of saying, "The time is not come that the Lord's house should be built," and, secondly, promising them his blessing and presence in their carrying out the work: "I am with you, saith the Lord" (Haggai i. 13).

2.—Then rose up Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and began to build.—"Zerubbabel and Jeshua seem themselves to have grown lukewarm, and to have required to be "stirred up" (Haggai i. 14) by the preaching of the prophets before they would set themselves heartily to the work.—Sp. Com.

5.—The eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews.—The words in Ps. xxxii. 8 are here illustrated, translated literally in R.V., "I will counsel thee with mine eye upon thee." God's counsel or guidance to his people is not so much through any direct apprehension on their part of what that counsel is, as by his providential removal of hindrances, and raising up help by which they discern how He would have them act.

16.—Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and laid the foundation of the house of God.—"These words remove all doubt as to the identity of Sheshbazzar with Zerubbabel (comp. ch. iii. 8; Zech. iv. 9)."—Sp. Com.

17.—Let there be search made in the King's treasure-house, which is there at Babylon.—The enemies of the Jews probably thought that the Pseudo-Smerdis (Artaxerxes), having reversed the policy of his predecessors, had destroyed their edicts. The decree after all was not found at Babylon, where they suggested search, but at Ecbatana.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED IN 1844.

HE Funds of this Society greatly need replenishing. If liberal aid be not speedily forthcoming, the resent number of 125 grants to poor and populous etropolitan and suburban parishes must be still further educed. The Readers visit from house to house and oom to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, he sick, and the erring; and they help generally in the piritual work of their respective parishes.

The Committee earnestly appeal for Annual ubscriptions, Donations, Collections, which are reatly needed.

The above securities are offered for subscription as strictly Mortgage Debentures of the first order, being amply protected under the deed of trust by a first charge on all the Company's freehold property, with a large margin of other security, and are, in the opinion of the Directors, a safe and desirable investment. As such they have had the approval of leading Bankers, Solicitors, Merchants, and Brokers.

Interest is paid half-yearly at the Company's bankers, on presentation of the proper coupons, which may be collected through the usual banking channels.

With this issue the 6 per cent. rate of interest on these securities will terminate.

For prospectuses and other information application may be made at the Company's offices, or of any authorised agent.

HOMES OF HOPE,

Nos. 4, 5, and 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

THIS Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent fallen young women for whom little provision had been made. Young women are admitted on any day, and coming from any quarter whatsoever if there be room in the Homes. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character, and position, to mix with others.

Since the Homes have been established 2670 have been admitted; of this number 910 belonged to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 292 were rescued from surroundings of great temptation unfallen. In almost every case the mothers, and those admitted unfallen, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent. of the others. While inmates of the Homes, the young women are trained in household and domestic duties, with a view to their becoming good and useful members of society. The great object, however, kept most anxiously before the Committee is, to afford them opportunities of religious instruction, and to impress upon them the extreme importance of turning to God with all their hearts.

The applications or admission are painfully urgent, and the charity is wholly dependent upon voluntary contributions.

The Secretary will be happy to forward the last annual report.

H. THOMPSON, Esq., Treasurer, 38, Mincing-lane, E.C.
W. HORNIBROOK, Secretary, 4, Regent-square, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

(1) For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.

(2) For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five shillings would pay for a child for a week.

(3) For law expenses: in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

In the course of a very few weeks the work of 1886 will be brought a close. THE LORD HAS THUS FAR very graciously sustained the HOMES and OPEN ALL NIGHT Refuge; indeed, not one good thing has been lacking.

VARIOUS MISSIONARY WORKERS have brought or sent no less than ONE THOUSAND THREE HUNDRED AND THIRTY young women and girls as applicants for admission, and to the utmost CAPACITY of the HOMES every suitable case has been promptly welcomed.

Amongst this large number were girls scarcely in THEIR TEENS, others saved just on ENTERING the DOWNWARD COURSE, and many sunk in the LOWER DEPTHS of sin, but all alike needing the salvation of the LORD JESUS CHRIST, as well as temporal succour.

Reviewing the experience of THIRTY-FIVE YEARS, the fact is recorded with great thankfulness. The Lord has GRACIOUSLY DISPOSED the hearts of HIS SERVANTS to contribute all necessary funds, and His faithfulness in time past leads to the anticipation that His stewards will be both enabled and disposed to subscribe ALL THAT MAY BE NECESSARY in relation to the work of 1886.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott will, as usual, gladly receive donations.

By F. J. E.

WE know little of what is going on around us; and beyond the little round of our life lies an almost unexplored world, full of interest to anyone who may not, except by the merest accident, be even aware of its existence. To one corner of this unknown region I was introduced the other day by the kindness of a friend. I had heard something of the wonders wrought by Odo-Magnetism in the hands of Mr. Garratt, but after spending a day at 16, Finsbury-square, I was compelled to admit that I had known but little of its marvellous power.

Mr. Garratt is never more pleased than when he is explaining the wonderful power and good effect of his treatment, and the facts at his command are astonishing.

What surprised me most was not the number of those who called to see Mr. Garratt, but the great variety of the ailments concerning which he was that day consulted. For instance, a lady who arrived in her carriage, and had the greatest difficulty in reaching the consulting-room, accepted Magnetic Treatment because her knowledge of the subtle influence of Magnetism led her to see it was suited to her case. A gentleman who followed her was in no way crippled, but "so very tired," a common feeling resulting from brain fag.

Another gentleman who had called some time before, and, not being thoroughly convinced, had taken time to inquire of others, had now found sufficient evidence to justify him in accepting Mr. Garratt's advice; and this every inquirer is free to do after receiving all information desired either by consultation or correspondence. If from force of circumstances or unavoidable overstrain a patient subsequently finds additional help necessary, Mr. Garratt's advice is usually sought again in the confidence engendered by past experience. Upon this particular afternoon two patients came to see Mr. Garratt concerning this additional help, and after one case had received attention, the patient decided to accept his advice, while the other, who had Appliances years ago, although favourably impressed, wished to consider awhile before accepting it.

Amongst the callers was one gentleman who particularly engaged Mr. Garratt's attention; he had become a patient very recently, and thought he was not experiencing prompt benefit from the treatment, so very wisely came to consult Mr. Garratt concerning it. I am convinced that if those who do not seem to be progressing would only follow the example of this gentleman, instead of leaving unexplained some little point of difficulty with them, but simple enough to the practitioner, they would very soon have reason to alter their opinion in favour of a remedy so safe and reliable.

Following this case came a gentleman whose experience was indeed an opposite one; he had long been a patient, had found Magnetism all that could be desired, and as he was going abroad had called to say that he would be pleased to execute any commissions for Mr. Garratt.

And last of all came a gentleman who had become a patient through correspondence, who wished a personal interview. Mr. Garratt tells me that he has a great many patients living at a distance, whom he has never seen, the consultations being carried on entirely by correspondence, and I am assured that every case has the most careful consideration.

By this time it was past four o'clock, and the hours of consultation were over, but the work of the establishment was not by any means ended. I had the pleasure of taking a walk through the various rooms where work was still being carried on, and, as Mr. Garratt had said, I saw that there was a very great deal of correspondence to go through; indeed, I should be inclined to think from the piles of letters which I saw despatched to post that a great many more patients consult him by correspondence than by personal interview; he supposes nearly ten to one.

As I said before, I had no idea of the extent of the healing power of Magnetism, and I left 16, Finsbury-square most heartily sympathising with Mr. Garratt in his work. In bringing this wonderful natural agent before the public, he has placed within our reach an almost universal remedy, which has never been surpassed, though he is careful to impress upon one that Magnetism is not a "cure all;" and he never likes any one to leave him with anticipations of benefit not likely to be realised.

Mr. B. Copson Garratt will be pleased to send particulars of his treatment to any sufferer, post free, upon application. Address: B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS:
An Affectionate Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.
By FRANCES F. WILLARD.

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER; and a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is the sisterly tribute which Frances, in tears and loneliness, brings to lay on Mary's grave—a tribute as full of fragrance and touching beauty as the life whose memory it seeks to perpetuate was full of sweetness and innocence. It is more than a tribute; it is the fulfilment of a solemn commission breathed from the lips of the dying—a commission that might have adorned the lips of Jesus in the hour of his agony: 'Tell everybody to be good.' In this way the one whom she most loved—if a sister's can exceed a mother's love—the one to whom she was most dear, seeks to discharge the dying trust. How faithfully, how transcendently she has performed this duty, you have only to read to ascertain."

FROM THE PREFACE.

This little volume may, I hope, awaken in some minds thoughts of a devotional character. Some of the ideas contained in it came to me in a chamber of sickness, which was at one time expected to be my chamber of death. The thoughts were pleasant and soothing to myself. May they, by God's blessing, be so also to some of my fellow-pilgrims. A. L. O. E.

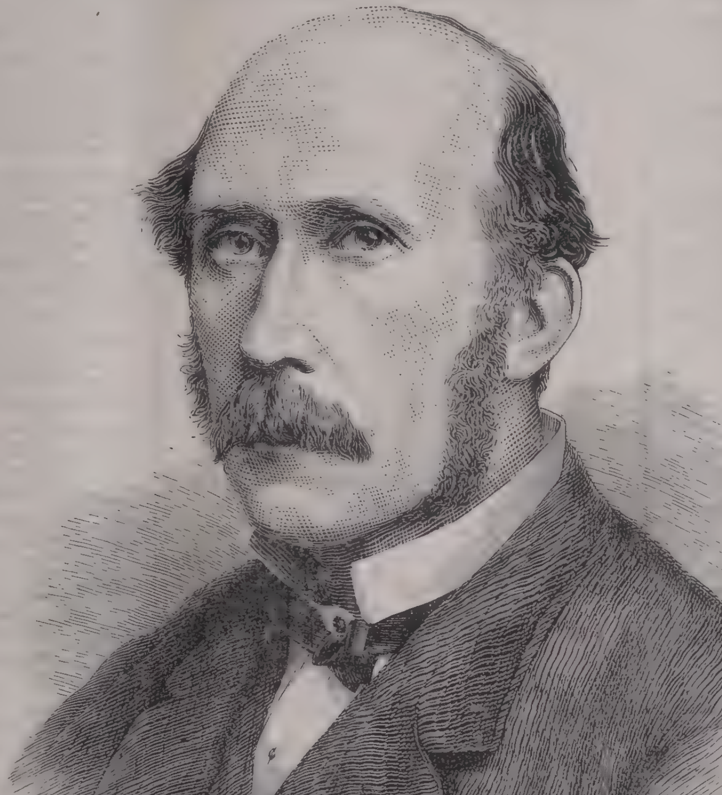
MR. LEONARD K. SHAW, MANCHESTER.

THE subject of the present sketch, LEONARD KILBEE SHAW, was born in Dublin, in the year 1834, but came to Manchester with his parents when about twelve years of age. He has resided there ever since, engaged in the busy commercial life which, in these bustling, competitive days, is sufficient to absorb the whole energies of most men who enter that walk of life. It has not been so, however, n Mr. Shaw's case. He s one of those Christians who, "not slothful n business, fervent in spirit," show how much work for the Master may be put into an already busy life.

There is no wonderful story of conversion to relate, for his Christian ife seems to have been one of those—ought there not to be more such?—which have their rise in nfancy, planted and watered by a parent's prayers and teachings. Trained up in the way hey should go, such Christians do not depart rom it, but are drawn to he Saviour so early that hey seem, even to themelves, to have always belonged to Him. From ery early years Leonard Shaw had a desire after work for the Master, and is heart was turned towards one special branch f it—a corner of the vineyard not then so much cultivated as now. Walking in the streets of Manchester as a child, e was often heard to ay, "Oh, mamma, my eart bleeds for the poor ttle barefooted boys who ave no home. How I wish I could provide place for them!"

Sunday and ragged-school classes were ndertaken by him as a very young man. One of his old scholars speaks as follows of is work at this time:—

"My knowledge of Mr. L. K. Shaw commenced in the early part of 1854, when he took charge of the Sunday-school class in which I was a scholar, at St. Matthias's chools, Salford, Rev. Edward Walker being he incumbent of the church. From the rst he made an impression on the boys in the class by his quiet, earnest, yet cheerful and kind way of rebuking the wildness and frolicsomeness of spirit which will make itself manifest in healthy boys of fourteen years old or upwards. Mr. Shaw seemed to understand that boys such as he had in his care wanted a friend as well as a teacher—one who could enter into their everyday life.



(From Photograph by Messrs. J. Mudd & Son.)

"He began in a very quiet way by asking one, perhaps two boys to accompany him to his home to take a cup of tea with him on the Sunday afternoon, afterwards returning with them to evening service. When at his home, he would introduce them to his parents, and other members of his family, and friends who might be present. Sometimes the whole of the class would be asked to spend a week evening with him in this manner, and he would provide something to pass the time in a pleasant, instructive way. He thus gained a thorough knowledge of each boy's character, which, while highly important for a teacher to know, can hardly be gained by simply meeting the class in the Sunday-school. On the removal of Rev. E. Walker to Cheltenham, Mr. Shaw severed his connection with the class, but the friendship was not severed, nor were the members forgotten.

"When Mr. Shaw had accepted a larger class of young men, at St. Ann's, Manchester, the same course was apparently pursued. The old class was occasionally asked to tea, as before, and the class from St. Ann's would be present also. After some years, when I had grown up and become a teacher in my old school, circumstances compelled me to desire a change, and I asked his advice on the subject. He tried to persuade me to remain, but a wilful man must have his way, and it was my great pleasure to become one of his young men's class. I found it truly a noble band; forty-four names were on the roll, and very often nearly that number would be present. The class met both morning and afternoon, teacher and scholars sitting together in church in the morning. A large proportion were teachers in the Sunday evening ragged-school. So was Mr. Shaw; therefore he often taught three times a day.

"In connection with ragged-school work his labours did not end with the Sunday evening. He frequently devoted a portion of his week-day evenings to visiting the wretched homes of some of his scholars. Several times has he called upon me and asked me to meet him after business hours, and accompany him on some of these visits to places where it was certainly unwise, if not unsafe, to go alone.

"This period may be called the dawn of the Refuge work: it may then have been mapped out in his mind. It was not, I believe, until after Mr. Shaw's marriage (in 1866) that the subject was brought before the public. A few years afterwards Mr. Shaw resigned the Sunday-school class, and devoted himself entirely to the Refuge. Of the members of that Sunday-school class, no less than five are now in the Christian ministry."

In The Christian Worker, which Mr. Shaw has edited since its commencement six years ago, the qualifications mentioned by his old scholar are still to be seen. We are glad to observe that this publication is about to have its sphere of usefulness enlarged by being issued weekly during the new year.

Out of the ragged-school grew the great work of Mr. Shaw's life. He and Mr. R. B. Taylor, with other friends teaching in St. Ann's Ragged-school, had their hearts stirred with compassion at finding that many of those whom they taught on the Sunday evening were actually without a home. They determined to try what could be done. In much fear and trembling as to where the means were to come from, they took a house in Quay-street, Deansgate, then one of the lowest parts of Manchester, and fitted it up with thirty beds, as a "Night Refuge for Homeless Boys." This was in January, 1870. The work grew beyond their expectations. God sent means, and led them on step by step in faith and prayer.

From a simple shelter for the night, the Refuge became a complete Home. The number of inmates increased, till larger premises had to be taken in Frances-street, Strangeways. These also were outgrown, and three years ago the late venerated Lord Shaftesbury laid the foundation-stone of a large, plain, but complete building, where boys are now being trained, not only in comfort and in habits of industry, but "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Services are held weekly in the spacious mission hall, and attended by many who seldom put themselves within hearing of the Gospel.

But the Central Refuge is only a part of the work. There are also two Homes for working boys who are nearly old enough to support themselves, but still in need of a home-nest in the midst of the temptations and trials of a great city. There is a Girls' Home, and there are, in a pleasant suburb of Manchester, six Orphan Homes—not Orphan Houses, by any means, but Homes. They are homes with mothers, and little toddling babies to keep the hearts of the older ones warm, and sometimes to be a little bit spoilt by them. A prettier sight than these families, whom God has gathered together, can scarcely be seen. One of the prettiest parts of the whole thing is the light on Mr. Shaw's face when he gets among his children. They are his children. How he does it we don't know, but as soon as a child comes into the Home he develops a real, natural, fatherly affection for it, and that great tender heart of his opens a little bit wider than ever to give it a special corner of its own.

The respectful, affectionate manner of the Refuge boys to him; the sparkling eyes and loving greetings of the happy children at the Orphan Homes when he "drops in;" the gruff but hearty "Good-night, Meester Shaw," of poor ragged men passed on his errands of mercy to low lodging-houses; the grateful letters of boys once ragged and homeless, and now doing well in the old or new country—all these must be seen and heard in order to appreciate Mr. Shaw and his loved work. The family life of the Orphan Homes is their great feature. "Mr. Shaw is in his element here," said one of the "mothers," pointing to him with the "baby" of the Home, aged two or three, in his arms, and three children round him, eagerly showing little gifts sent to them.

Strangers and friends of the work are alike struck by the simplicity and good common sense of its arrangements, and the spirit of love that characterises the whole. The boys and girls are treated as individuals, and many a rough one is truly "loved into shape." Mr. Shaw's heart is full of love to his boys and girls; and his helpers seem to share his spirit in a remarkable degree.

Then there is a "Boys' Rest and Coffee Room" in Angel Meadow, a misnamed corner of the city, "where Satan's seat is." The very house used for the Rest was formerly a vicious drinking den. The devil must have grieved when "The Hole in the Wall" was turned against him. The Refuge is connected with the training-ship Indefatigable, which receives many a boy unfitted for steady work on shore, but with the making of a first-class British tar in him. There are the Industrial Brigades, for boys with homes, but poor ones, who cannot come into the Refuge, but need a helping hand to keep them from sinking permanently into street life.

There is a Seaside Home for pale and weary city children at Lytham, and a Boys' Summer Camp, pitched last season at Llandudno, both of which put some colour into many white faces, and some thought of God's love into many untaught hearts. There is also the Open-all-night Shelter for lost or deserted little ones, and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Lastly, there is the Emigration Home at Rosen Hallas, Cheetham Hill, where little boys and girls are trained for a short time before being removed to new homes in Canada. All of these owe their origin in a great measure to the subject of our sketch.

No notice of Mr. Shaw would be complete without a reference to his life-partner, who is heart and soul with him in his work, and a splendid helpmate in every way. Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlew, his partner in business as well as in Christian effort, enters most heartily into the Refuge and other work, and has a wonderfully good influence over the boys.

The annual Conference for Christian Workers, which has now for some years been a source of pleasure and profit to many of God's children, arose out of a small gathering which used to be held yearly in Mr. Shaw's drawing-room. Dr. Barnardo, the late Mr. T. B. Smithies, and other well-known Christian friends, attended these meetings, which are now as cheering to many hearts as they were formerly to a few.

These various undertakings mean a great deal of work on the part of Mr. Shaw and those who help him, but it is truly a labour of love, for it is emphatically Christian, not merely philanthropic work. "For Christ's sake" is the key-note of the whole, and the object is not only to save the children from misery, but to win them for the Master. Thank God for the many cases in which that object has been attained.

NOVELS AND NOVEL-READING.

Much has been written about wasted time in connection with novel-reading. It is true that from that point of view alone a confirmed habit of novel-reading is most injurious; but there are other effects, perhaps less immediate and less direct, but certainly more serious. These are often set aside, if not entirely overlooked.

Take, for instance, the point of the false morality of much of the fiction that is poured forth in such large numbers at the present time. Novels are spoken of as "pure" and "fit for girls' reading," which yet are full of inaccurate representations of life, and of sympathy with blamable emotions and conduct. Most of these books, it is to be feared, are written by people whose knowledge of the human heart is of necessity limited, and they write with the certainty that their work will appeal to immature judgments. It is because of this that they are so dangerous. Persons experienced in real life would question the false notions of honour and self-sacrifice presented, and would recognise the artificial goodness, where the young and unformed mind of the average youthful reader readily accepts the meretricious and unsound.

Many of these fictitious and unhealthy works are strangely designated "religious novels." Setting aside altogether those which are written admittedly in order to support certain theories of advanced or retrograde thought upon spiritual things, the average "religious novel" is frequently as false in its statements of religious truth as the ordinary work of fiction is with regard to morals. One could understand the modern novelist being somewhat behind-hand in theology, but the Gospel of Jesus Christ is so simple that it need not be mis-understood or mis-stated. Yet, as far as I have been able to discover, in only few recent works of fiction professing to be of the "religious school" is there anything like an undiluted statement of the truth. B.

THE CRIPPLED POOR.—During the last two years the Charity Organisation Society have formed a special department for the supply of surgical appliances, such as artificial limbs, spinal jackets and supports, and boots with irons, which are in a great many cases quite beyond the reach of the poor patients for whom they are ordered by medical men at hospitals. The department is found so useful that the work is rapidly increasing, and its value is greatly appreciated by the poor, as well as by the hospitals. During the past year alone no fewer than 1100 instruments have been supplied, either as a free gift, or, where this can be done, by an arrangement by which patients pay a certain proportion according to their means. The central office supplies the district committees with every appliance for half its actual cost, and appeal is now made to those who feel a practical sympathy with affliction, for means to carry on this work.

The PAPACY and CHRISTIAN UNION.

SIR,—An American friend, writing to me from Paris, sends copy of a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, that lately appeared in the New York Independent. "America," says my correspondent, "is the future battle-ground of Romanism and Christianity, and our people are alarmingly apathetic and tolerant." The Cardinal writes :—

> I have received a letter from the editor of The Independent, asking my views, "as a Catholic," upon the movement now going on in the Anglican Church, having for its object the "Reunion of Christendom." I have leisure at present to pen but a brief reply. Allow me to say, that I cannot conceive any practical plan for the ecclesiastical union of all who bear the Christian name which does not recognise—
>
> (1) Some authority, living and acting, that can definitely say what is or is not Divine revealed truth, since upon Christ's revelation his Church must be grounded.
>
> (2) The obligation, strict and essential, of receiving in its entirety Christian revelation, since Christ's work in giving a revelation would be, to say the least, useless, if each individual were left free to accept or reject that revelation, or any part of it, as his whim might dictate.
>
>
> (4) That since the mission of Christ's Church is to "teach all nations," "to observe all things whatsoever He has commanded," there must be some teacher teaching in Christ's name, and "as one having authority," to guide his people unerringly in the way of truth.
>
> In the Roman Catholic Church of the sixteenth century, when Luther went out from her, these great requisites of Christian Unity were found, and they are found as well in the Roman Catholic Church of to-day; elsewhere I fail to find them.
>
> In separation from the See of St. Peter, the centre of Catholic unity, I can see only discord. In all this broad land there is no one who longs for truly Christian union more than I do, no one who would labour more earnestly to bring about so happy a result. May the Father of mercies grant that those "other sheep," for whose sake his Divine Son died, that are not yet of his fold, may speedily come home to it, that henceforth there may be "one fold and one Shepherd."

The Cardinal professes to be an ardent friend of Christian union; nay, he tells us there is no one on the whole American Continent who more earnestly longs for, or would labour more for the union of the Church, than himself. It is a grand aim, and we most sincerely sympathise with him in it. What is the Cardinal prepared to do for the accomplishment of this supreme and most desirable object? Is he willing that a world-convocation of Christians, or delegates from Christian Churches, should meet, and openly and freely confer touching a matter in which all of them have an equal concern? Is he willing that Christians, taking the Bible for their rule, and the Holy Spirit for their Guide, should frame a basis of union, and a form of Church government?

This would seem but reasonable; nay, it seems the only practical way of attaining the end. It is the way in which all other unions are accomplished. Does Cardinal Gibbons propose that this desired Union shall be gone about in this fair and rational way? Will his Church meet the other churches of Christendom on an equal level, and reason the matter, the Word of God being judge? The Cardinal will do no such thing. How, then, does he expect ever to be able to effect the re-union of Christendom? It cannot be accomplished, he tells us, but on the following conditions :—

(1) Absolute submission to the Pope. The Cardinal says that he cannot conceive of a union, unless one in which all Christians "recognise a living and acting authority." That "living and acting authority" was, he gives us to understand, Leo. X. in Luther's day, and is Leo XIII. in ours.

(2) The renunciation of the Bible. That "living and acting authority," says the Cardinal, "can definitely say what is and is not Divine revealed truth." This "living and acting authority" has already said that "Divine revealed truth" is contained in the Creed of Pope Pius IV., as more fully set forth in the Canons of the Council of Trent. These two documents are to be the Creed of re-united Christendom. This puts the Bible out of court, and installs in its place the Canons of the Council of Trent, or whatever dogma the "living and acting authority," now decreed to be infallible, may be pleased to add to the Tridentine Canons, as the rule of faith for all Christians.

(3) The third condition is the surrender of conscience and private judgment. For, says Cardinal Gibbons, "since Christ left a revelation, He must have left some authorised interpreter of it, otherwise it would be but a puzzle." That implies that God could not or has not given a revelation which plain men can understand, and therefore the "Church," that is, the Pope, must come in and explain it. The Church of Rome teaches that laymen cannot discover the sense of Scripture, or interpret a single verse of it, and are bound to receive whatever sense or intepretation the "Church" puts upon it. This crushes the conscience of the reader of the Bible into the dust.

(4) The whole teaching of Rome is to be believed under peril of anathema. "The obligation" to receive "in its entirety the Christian" (Roman) "revelation" is, says the Cardinal, "strict and essential," and no one is to be "left free" to follow his "whim."

These are the conditions, Cardinal Gibbons tells the American people, on which alone the re-union of Christendom is possible. Cardinal Gibbons does not deceive the American people; let them not deceive themselves. This is not the union of Christendom, but its surrender to Rome. Is America prepared for that, with all its inevitable consequences? Unless she is, it will be well for her to exchange her "apathetic tolerance" for bold and determined protest.

A YEAR'S EVANGELISM.

I SEND a few notes of what has been done here, in the evangelistic and temperance world, by special missioners during the past year. It is about twelve months since Mr. Richard T. Booth came to Brisbane and roused the city from border to border with the Blue Ribbon movement. During the three weeks' mission over 5000 signed the pledge and took the "Blue." Many who were previously known in the city and at the police-court as chronic inebriates are now sober men, and some of them engaged in preaching the truth as it is in Jesus, and working in temperance societies.

Mr. Booth was hardly gone before we were favoured by a visit from one of the grand women of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of America, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt. Her work did not cause such a furore, but has left solid results. Whilst here she established a branch of the W.C.T.U. of America, which has now sub-branches working successfully in this colony at Ipswich, Mayborough, Rockhampton, and Townsville. These work hard for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and have in more than one instance materially assisted in carrying the vote of the electors to limit the number of public-houses in certain localities, as provided for in the Local Option clauses of the Licensed Victuallers' License Amendment Act of Queensland. At our last Exhibition, at which over 30,000 persons were present on the opening day, they hired a piece of ground, and erected a temperance booth in the show-yard for the sale of refreshments. The ladies themselves did all the work, and formed a counter-attraction to the public-house stalls. Although the attendance was much larger than on any previous year, the number of drunken persons at the show was much less than before. The first annual Convention of the W.C.T.U. of America's branches in Queensland has just closed in Brisbane, at which delegates from the various towns were present, and their first annual report was considered most satisfactory.

Several missions have also been conducted here during the year, with much success, by Rev. J. and Mrs. Mountain, in connection with the Congregationalists. At every place they visited numbers were added to the membership roll of the Church. The same may be said of Mr. and Mrs. Kelly, who were here under the auspices of the Baptist Association.

In April came Mr. Harry Alfred Long, of Glasgow-green debating celebrity. He preached with much acceptance at many of the churches, and several times in the Theatre Royal on Sunday afternoons and evenings. At this time a Freethought lecturer—Dr. J. L. York—was here. Mr. Long and he entered on a six nights' debate, which ended in both sides claiming a decided victory, and the minds of many young Christians much disturbed. God was gracious, however. The debates were scarcely concluded when two Church of England missioners—Messrs. Mason and Boddington—came here for a week's mission, on their way back to England. They did a great amount of good, but rather shocked many of the old school by what were considered innovations in the Church.

Before they went, God sent along a fine young worker, loved and respected throughout the Colonies, in the person of Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, of London. [We gave a detailed account of this visit several weeks since.] Dr. Guinness' mission to Brisbane (proceeds the writer) came at a most opportune time, and was blessed by God in a very marked manner. The friends of his father here can but feel most deeply thankful that the son is treading in his footsteps.

Our latest visitor—Mr. William Noble, of Hoxton Hall Gospel Temperance fame—has but recently gone. He came a stranger to most of us, but, like Dr. Guinness, he has gone leaving hundreds to think of him as a friend from whom they are separated for a time. Both of these missions were free from excitement, but have left results that we believe will be of permanent benefit.

On Sunday, August 22, his mission commenced at the Theatre Royal. During the next week large meetings were held in the Exhibition. Great crowds assembled nightly, and numbers signed the pledge of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks. After a visit to Ipswich he returned to Brisbane, and continued his mission in the Academy of Music. Mr. Noble gave a farewell address at the Theatre Royal, which was densely packed. His departure, like Dr. Guinness', was witnessed by a great crowd of the workers and choir who had assisted during the mission.

Having spoken of the theatre several times, it may interest some of your readers to hear a little of this service. Some nine years ago, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance of Great Britain, we had a mission conducted here by Dr. A. N. Somerville, of Glasgow, and his son, Mr. W. F. Somerville. They established several united evangelistic choirs in the colonies, and, among them, one in Brisbane. This choir has been under the leadership of Mr. Richard Phil Adams, the business manager of The Queensland Evangelical Standard, assisted by his wife. This choir some six years since, with a committee of ministers of religion, started Sunday night evangelistic services in the Theatre Royal. For the past four years these have been under the management of Mr. Adams and the city missionary, Rev. James Steward, who carry them on with much success.

UNITY AND PROSPERITY.

WE are longing for a gracious revival, for increase, for prosperity. This will come when we are in amity (Psa. cxxxiii.). When we are all one in faith and love, believing as God's saints should, and loving as God's saints should, then will come abundance of peace and true prosperity. We should own but one Head—our Lord Jesus Christ—and allow nothing to shut out our love from any member of the body of Christ; and we should heartily pray for each and for all the children of God, as we pray for ourselves.

The desire for uniformity is carnal. There is no uniformity in the visible heaven, nor in any of God's works on the earth, and yet there is beautiful harmony and unity in all. The variety in the flowers and shrubs and landscapes is pleasant to the eye, and the diversity of fruit and provision is most agreeable and profitable for food. Let us all ardently cherish faith and love, and resist the human cry for uniformity, which only tends to mar unity and prosperity.

PRAYER more than CONFERENCE OUR PRESENT DUTY.

By Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast.

I sought to show, in a recent letter, that we do not need a Conference as to what we shall preach. That is clearly, and for all time, settled in the sure Word. We preach Christ—"Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God to every one that believeth." We need to come together for an object of far more pressing importance.

Perhaps there never was a period in the history of the Christian Church of greater activity and of more varied agency. But what are the results? Thanks be unto God, multitudes, redeemed by the blood of the Lamb, are living holy and useful lives. But while this is so, how overwhelming the view which presents itself to the spiritual eye! Immorality and crime, infidelity and ungodliness, oppression and squalid poverty rampant in our cities, while the heathen nations, save in some narrow fringes and small portions, are left to live and die in spiritual darkness.

In view of all this, it is surely becoming to ask ourselves, What is the true normal state of the Church of God as regards spiritual life and fruitfulness? Is it as we see it now, or as we have it on record at Pentecost? Unquestionably as at Pentecost. Full of faith and of the Holy Ghost—the Gospel preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven—the apostles and disciples so spake that a great multitude both of Jews and Greeks believed.

Look at the contrast now. Enter almost any of the most evangelical churches; listen to the most earnest preachers. They do not need a Conference as to what they shall preach. The truths which lie at the very heart of Christianity are stated clearly, ably, and earnestly. The hearers are arrested, pleased—nay, edified. But what are the spiritual results? Have conversions been expected or experienced on each occasion? Have believers gone forth from the service with a burning desire and a fresh resolve to live and work for the Master? If not, why not? Shall we say that this is the normal state of the Church? Are there not multitudes of churches where a conversion to God is rarely heard of, and where, though the pastor may be a converted, earnest man, and not a few of the people also spiritual, yet they meet and separate weekly without any prayerful expectation of conversions at the time and in the service?

Conversions do occur, no doubt, wherever the word of God is faithfully preached. Many faithful pastors labour and pray earnestly for conversions, and are burdened because these are so few. Here and there also is found one and another under whose ministry the word is continually fruitful. But I think the most earnest and spiritual labourers would be the first to admit that spiritual impotence and barrenness greatly abound. One may well ask, At the present rate of progress, when shall the masses be brought to submit to Christ? All pastors need the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, to revive the faith, zeal, love, and wholeheartedness of Pentecost. Until it is so, we can expect no advance. We need an efflux of the Holy Ghost from our risen Head, to make us as different from our present state as the apostles were made from what they had been before the ascension of Christ.

Then, as to evangelists, the Church of God, from the first, owes much to their labours, under the Spirit. Churches have been revived, the cause of God extended; great awakenings and additions to the churches have taken place through their labours. But for such evangelists as Whitfield and Wesley, religion and vital godliness would have perished from the land. While this is to be acknowledged with thankfulness, we must never forget that no men or measures, that no organisation or means, can give life or preserve it. If pastors need a constant streaming of life and power from Christ to fit them for their work, evangelists still more so. Spiritual formality and death may settle down upon evangelistic meetings as readily, and perhaps more so than upon the ordinary services of the pastor. One has, at times, with great pain, been a witness of this, as he has listened to the awful verities of our holy faith flippantly stated, the way of salvation set forth with chilling formality, and the offer of Christ in the Gospel made with heartless familiarity; or, it may be, violent efforts made to arouse the emotional nature of the hearers, through appeals to their feelings—bodily exercise, alas! being substituted for lost spiritual power.

And what shall be said of "after-meetings"? Are they not often managed, unconsciously, to manufacture converts, rather than to reap the fruit of the operations of the Spirit? The absence of the power of the Holy Ghost is more easily detected in an evangelistic meeting than in any other. There are no servants of God in greater danger of formality, of mistaking the flesh for the spirit, than evangelists. There are no labourers in the harvest-field whose sickle is so soon blunted, and needs so continually to be sharpened. It would be painful, perhaps invidious, to mention names, but everyone who has been intimately acquainted with the work of revival for the last thirty years could name many true servants of Christ, for a period greatly used in the conversion of sinners, who, while it may be they themselves continued in fellowship with God, ceased to have the power and the privilege of being used in any marked manner as soul-winners. The Church of God, in its members, and as regards its pastors and evangelists, is not in its true normal Pentecostal state.

As to religious Conferences, a special feature of these later years, what shall we say? Beginning with Mildmay and Huntly, which were among the first, they have spread over the kingdom and extended to other lands. As having had some little part in them from the beginning, I think I may say they have done a vast amount of good, and greatly helped the cause of vital godliness, by gaining the attention of multitudes to religious matters who might not otherwise have been reached, and also in elevating the standard of piety in many Christians. I shall also add that, rightly managed, they may still be of much service in many places. But I am persuaded they have well nigh served their purpose, and that something else is urgently needed to effect that which they are not fitted to accomplish.

Let us frankly look at them in relation to the progress of the Gospel, and our present great need. Will these Conferences, by the blessing of God, bring back the Church to its normal state of being full of faith and of the Holy Ghost? Christians meet often in great numbers. Well-known speakers are accustomed to address them on some aspect of Christian life or duty, ably, eloquently, and spiritually. There is a glow of spiritual warmth, and oftentimes a refreshing sense of God's gracious presence. There are also opportunities of delightful and stimulating intercourse with fellow-labourers in different parts of the vineyard. It is to many what one might call a spiritual holiday—what our American cousins would call "a good time." There is, it should be gladly admitted, much good imparted and received. When many Christians come together, and the word is spoken and prayer offered, spiritual effects usually follow.

But, granting all this, what are the results in relation to the masses of the home heathen, and the evangelisation of the world? If we follow the vast majority back to their homes, I fear it would be found that, while one here and another there have been urged forward to a fuller consecration and to a more hearty readiness to say, "Here am I, send me," the vast majority settle down after a time in the usual routine of duties. The waters pumped up have run down again, and trickle slowly in the old channel. The heat generated by contact with others has gradually passed off, and has been succeeded by spiritual coldness.

Whatever views Christians may take of these Conferences, it must be admitted by all they have not to any appreciable extent brought the Church back to its true state of life and power. They have not made a powerful inroad upon the heathenism of the world at home and abroad. We are more and more brought face to face with the sneering infidelity of godless intellectual culture, with the Pharisaism of priestly assumption, with the rampant wickedness of the masses, and the teeming darkness of heathendom. What shall we do? The regular services of the house of God, evangelistic meetings, and conferences are powerless. The disciples before the father of the demoniac, and in the presence of the scoffing Scribes and jeering rabble, need not hold a conference! They have failed to cast out the devil. They have dishonoured their Master. Their sin is ours; their need is ours; their only source of help is ours, the descent of the Divine Master from the mount.

We need a flood of the Holy Ghost. Nothing else, nothing less, nothing more. The one Church of God, in all its branches, needs to be brought back to the "upper room"—to such waiting before God, and to a blessing like, nay, greater than that of Pentecost. Speaking after the manner of men, the little Church then was in a state a thousand-fold more desperate than we are now. But they knew it and felt it. So "these all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication." This is the Church's need now, her hope, her privilege, her duty. This is within our power—united, continued, preserving, prevailing prayer. The pierced hand is upon the flood-gates of heaven. All power in heaven and earth is given unto Him. With Him is the residue of the Spirit. We need a conference not with one another, but with Him, touching this thing.

The Church in her coldness and unbelief has greatly fallen away from the desire to pray and from faith in prayer. She has somewhat of faith in preaching, that is, in man and in truth; but little faith in prayer, that is, in God. Does any intelligent Christian doubt the truth of the statement, or consider it exaggerated? Let him enter any prayer-meeting, so called, and, with rare exceptions, what will he find? Little prayer and much speaking or preaching; little calling on God, but much exhortation. He will usually find a company met not to take hold upon God, but to listen to some instruction from man.

The columns of The Christian, at the opening of each year, bear striking testimony to this sad truth which I am venturing to state. We have a call to united prayer throughout the world. In obedience to this call meetings assemble in various parts of the land. But what is the usual record, your columns being witness? Not accounts of whole companies really met to pray, lying prostrate in heart before God, as Joshua in the Tabernacle; not accounts of gracious weepings before God, as they confess their sins and the sins of their fathers; not accounts of the places being shaken where they are assembled, and multitudes filled with the Holy Ghost—but accounts of so many addresses, admirable many of them, I gladly admit, and fitted to be useful, but not the God-appointed means to bring back power to the Church, or the Church to its proper state of life and power.

The Christian has been greatly honoured of God in its efforts to deepen the spiritual life in the hearts of many, and to extend the kingdom of Christ among the nations. A greater work remains for it still, I believe, if it should please God to use it for this purpose—to call, as with a voice from heaven, Christians, in all the branches of the Church of Christ, who are sighing for the desolation of Zion, who are zealous for the glory of Christ, and who believe in prayer: to call them, I say, to come together for this one great specific purpose—to pray—to wait upon God, to continue in supplication, till the windows of heaven shall be opened and the God of promise shall pour floods upon the dry ground.

We need Pentecost—we need a plenteous rain, in comparison with which the former Pentecost was but the first droppings. We need it, but do we desire it? If so, we must use the God-appointed means. Let us then agree to meet really for prayer. Let us continue in prayer. Let us turn our conferences into prayer-meetings. Let us agree to make 1887 a year of prayer, and God, even our own God, shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

This good work, so long associated with the name of Mr. W. J. Lewis, is still being carried on with encouraging success. Now the winter is approaching, we find, as usual, hundreds of dock labourers and unemployed men sauntering up and down our streets, looking the very picture of misery and want. We have opened our Saturday night free refreshment meeting, where we give each a mug of hot coffee and bread and butter. Hundreds of half-starved men flock in, glad of shelter, warmth, and a friendly greeting. Our band of workers are ready to sing pieces out of The Christian Choir and Songs and Solos. Short addresses follow, full of love and sympathy, telling of Jesus the mighty to save. The men are orderly, quiet, and thoughtful. We hope to continue these gatherings as means are supplied.

The open-air meetings will be continued through the winter season; these are most encouraging. Great crowds, mostly from the neighbouring lodging-houses, surround us. Gospel meetings for children are conducted every Sunday, and are well attended. I shall be glad to forward our last report to any friend interested.

MATCH-FACTORY GIRLS.—An effort amongst the factory-girls of Bow Common was lately commenced with a free tea, at the North-east London Mission Hall in Devons-road. When we say that one firm alone at Bow employs a thousand girls and young women, it will be easy to realise the need for an evening shelter to take them off the streets. They received the particulars of the facilities the Institute would afford them with the heartiest demonstrations. Mr. Chorley would be thankful for help to repeat these free teas once a week during the colder months. His address is 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

For the Young.

LITTLE LUCY.

Only two years old! Yet already little Lucy was a power and an influence in her home. Her sweet sunny face, lighted by two earnest dark eyes; the clustering curls of her golden hair, and the pattering of her little nimble feet, brought pleasure and brightness into each room of that large old house.

Lucy's parents occupied only a portion of the house. There was a lodger upstairs, an old man, left solitary and childless; yet not alone, for the best of Friends was with him. The hours, which might otherwise have hung heavily on his hands, were sweet and sacred with thoughts of his ever-present Saviour, and of the bright home into which he soon hoped to enter. In his room the little maid was ever a welcome guest. With awestruck face and parted lips, she would listen breathlessly while her old friend sat at the harmonium, which was to him at once a companion and a relic of happier times, and played one after another of the old familiar hymns which spoke of Jesus and his love. Young as she was, little Lucy was not long in making these hymns her own; and to hear her baby voice trilling the much-loved tunes, and her infant lips repeating the sacred words with true and unmistakable reverence, brought tears of joy into the eyes of the old man.

There was yet another lodger in that house, but into her room Lucy went but seldom. Though old Mrs. Brooke was kind to the child, and often gave her sweetmeats or a little cake, yet Lucy had heard her mother say, with many a sigh, that it was sad indeed to see one so advanced in years as their top-floor lodger so resolute in closing her ears and her heart to the Gospel message. It was years since Mrs. Brooke had entered a place of worship. To her, as to God's people of old time, had come the offer of life or death, and she had made her choice. She had turned aside from the Father's house, with its abundance of love and blessing, and wandered into the far-off land, seeking her portion among the unsatisfying things of this world, until the very name of Jesus, and the Gospel message of salvation, had become to her as an old-forgotten tale.

"But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith He loved us," was not content to leave this poor sin-stained soul to wander in the wilderness apart from Him; and in the means whereby He drew her to Himself we see a promise of that glorious time when "a little child shall lead them." Yes, to little Lucy, not yet three years old, was given the grandest of all earthly honours, that of winning a soul for Christ.

"Stupid old man," muttered Mrs. Brooke to herself, one afternoon, as she heard the faint distant tones of the harmonium, "I am weary to death of that everlasting droning. I wish—" here she stopped, for another sound struck on her ear, and apparently the effect was more pleasing, for, after a minute's pause, the old woman opened her door, and crossing the landing, leant over the banisters to listen. It was only little Lucy, standing, as she often stood, on the mat at the foot of the stairs, and warbling forth the tune which she had heard and knew so well. But it was not the tune only that Lucy sang. With distinct and pathetic earnestness sounded forth the words—

I will believe, I do believe,
That Jesus died for me.

A moment more, and Mrs. Brooke had returned to her room, and quietly closed the door.

"I wonder what is come to Mrs. Brooke," said Mrs. Phillips, Lucy's mother, on the evening of the following day. "I have not seen or heard anything of her since yesterday morning; I hope she is not ill." The idea once suggested to her mind, Mrs. Phillips hastily went upstairs to her lodger's room, and knocked at the door. "Come in," said a quiet voice, and Mrs. Phillips entered. How astonished was she at the first sight of her usually hard and irritable friend. A soft gentle look had crept over her features, and it would have been hard to decide whether some crushing sorrow, or a joy too deep for expression, had caused so marvellous a change.

At the sight of Mrs. Phillips, however, the tears which filled her eyes flowed thick and fast over her aged face, and her friend, considerably startled, exclaimed, "Why, Mrs. Brooke, what is it? Have you had bad news?"

"No, Mrs. Phillips, no," was the faltering reply; "but, oh, that dear child of yours! She has taught me what I never knew before. As I listened to her yesterday, and heard her singing those simple words of faith in Jesus' death, it came to my old sinful heart as a message straight from Him, and I came back to my room to praise and glorify Him that for me, also, has Jesus died."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Nov. 28, 2 Thess. i. 1—12; Nov. 29, 2 Thess. ii. 1—17; Nov. 30, 2 Thess. iii. 1—18; Dec. 1, Judges i. 1—15; Dec. 2, Judges ii. 1—13; Dec. 3, Judges ii. 14—23; Dec. 4, Judges iv. 1—13.

ORPHANS AT KILBURN.

We have received great blessing during the past year upon our labours. The children are all in excellent health; a number of them have had the benefit of a change in our new Seaside Home at Margate. Those in the Homes are well-behaved, and many of them are, by God's grace, seeking to know more of Him, and to lead holy and useful lives.

Others who have left us are giving satisfaction to their employers. I am constantly receiving letters from friends who have my old scholars in their service, stating that they are a blessing and comfort in the house. The few who have been placed out in business are also doing well. Most of the orphans come into the Home looking miserably pale and thin. It is quite wonderful to see the change in their looks after a few weeks' care and regular living.

With all these encouragements, I think it would be a sad pity to give up any branch of the work. With regret I have to state that there has been insufficient to meet the daily expenses for several months past, and my 120 orphans are especially needing a set of new winter cloaks. It is now seven years since the houses in Cambridge-road were purchased, subject to a mortgage. I have found it very difficult to keep all the interest paid up, and it costs much more in the end. I have already paid nearly £400 for interest alone. What I need for the mortgages, and the £200 lent by a lady for the same purpose (namely, for the purchase of the houses), is the sum of £1345. Will not some of the Lord's stewards deliver me from this burden, for Christ's sake?

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S DINNER SOCIETY.—Sir,—Will you spare us a corner to make known to our friends and the public that the balance at our bankers is now exhausted, and that £100 a week is required to keep open our fifty-four dining-rooms, where we are feeding 12,000 children every week. Help will be gratefully received for this good object.—Your obedient servants,

"ART THOU IN HEALTH, MY BROTHER?"—These words Dr. Thain Davidson took for the text of his last monthly sermon to young men. He showed how much true religion has to do with the bettering of a man's present condition. Someone had said that non-Christian speakers teach a better condition of life in this world, and that Christians preach a future life, making practical men prefer the former. But he affirmed that Christianity had done more for the physical and social elevation of man than all other schemes and systems put together.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IV.—THE ANGEL-LADDER.—PART I.

GEN. XXVIII.

WHEN Esau found that Jacob had stolen his blessing, he hated him, and vowed to kill him. This was nothing less than might have been expected from his headstrong and impetuous nature. These threats came to Rebekah's ears, and filled her with fear, lest she should be deprived of them both in one day—Jacob, the jewel of her eye, by the hand of his brother; and Esau, by being compelled, like a second Cain, to become an out-law for his brother's murder.

But there was one source of relief which presented itself to her mother's love and woman's wit. She understood Esau's temperament perfectly. She knew that a passionate, hasty man is less to be feared than the man who gives no sign of the tumult raging within. Rage like Esau's would soon expend itself in words and threats, and burn itself out, like a quick and furious fire, for want of fuel. If only Jacob absented himself for a short time, all would be forgotten. So Rebekah made up her mind that he should go, for a time, across the desert to Haran, to abide with her brother Laban, from whom she had been parted since that memorable day when, with many a girlish dream floating before her dark eyes, she had started with Abraham's servant for her new home. She did not tell her husband all her reasons—it would have done more harm than good; but she adduced very good and obvious ones, in the necessity of preserving from defilement the holy seed, and of procuring for Jacob a suitable wife.

Isaac fell in with the proposal, and "called Jacob, and blessed him, and charged him, and said unto him, Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan. Arise, go to Padan-aram, and take thee a wife of the daughters of Laban, thy mother's brother. And God Almighty bless thee." And Jacob, not without many a tear, went out from Beersheba, and went towards Haran. And it was on his way that this revelation of the Angel-Ladder was made to him.

I. THE CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH THIS REVELATION WAS MADE TO HIM.—He was lonely. He was not what we should call a young man; he had reached mature years; but it is almost certain that this was the first time of his leaving the shelter of his home. Led afar from home in pursuit of the fleet deer, his hunter brother may often have passed the night amid the wilds, comfortable and content. But Jacob had no taste for such experiences. For him solitude had no charms; he loved to hear the sounds of human voices and the stir of the camp. In the early morning light there may have been an exhilarating sense of independence, freshness, and novelty; but as night drew its curtains over the world, and the stars glimmered out of the depths, and the solemn boulders lay so still on the moorland around him, with no tent for shelter, no fire for warmth, no pillow for rest, there stole over his mind a sense of loneliness and melancholy. This was God's chosen time, when He drew near to his spirit, and said, "Fear not, I am with thee: be not dismayed, I am thy God." And so it has been often. We must be withdrawn from the rush and hum of the busy market-place, if we would see the calm angel faces carved in stone, or hear the thrilling notes of the chorister boys. Recall, for a moment, your first night away from home, as a schoolboy, or apprentice, or servant, or student, and answer, if that was not a sacred epoch in your history, when God took up the trailing tendrils of your love, and twined them around Himself, and you realised his presence and clung to Him as never before.

He was also standing on the threshold of independence. It is a solemn moment when a man enters on independence—fairly afloat like a swimmer without corks; adrift like a boat's crew who have seen the waves close over their ship. Childhood sleeps peacefully, because it has no responsibilities; the flower is sheathed in its green case; the nestling is fed and shielded by the untiring care of the parent bird. But this does not last long, and none need wish prematurely to exchange such dependence for the independence that must needs care for itself. The child must go forth at last to earn his own living, to win his spurs, to stand alone, to choose and act for himself. It is a solemn crisis.

But it is at such a moment that the Almighty, as a wayfaring man, offers his company for the untrodden path. Happy is he who accepts the proffered help, and who transfers the feeling of dependence from the earthly to the heavenly Friend. It is almost worth while being cast off by father and mother, if one may be taken up by the Lord. And when one is willing to be taken up by Him, there need be no further anxiety or care; for directly a human spirit hands itself over to its Almighty Lover, that moment He takes it, and assumes all responsibility, and makes Himself answerable for all its needs. There is but one condition, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." As Queen Elizabeth said once to one of her Court, "Sir, if you will look after my business, I will make yours my care." Would that all the children of God knew what it is to hand over moment by moment, as they occur, all worries, anxieties, and cares, to the compassionate Lord, sure that He takes them straight from their hands! We need never feel, then, as if all depended on our tired brain or failing strength, because the Lord Himself would supply all our need, according to his riches in glory. There is, indeed, no real independence for the believer. To be independent of Christ is to be cast forth as a branch to wither. The secret of rest and fruit and power is an abiding union with Him, which time cannot impair, and death cannot dissolve.

He was also in fear. What should hinder Esau, when he heard of his flight, from pursuing him? He was well acquainted with those parts, could use fleet horses and dogs, and so might track him and run him down. Besides, the country was full of robbers and wild beasts. And it was then that God calmed his fears, by showing him that that lone spot was teeming with angel hosts willing and eager to encamp about him with celestial watch and ward. The most lonely spot is as safe for us as the most crowded, since God is there. It is his presence that keeps us safe amid the crowded city, and it is not in the smallest degree withdrawn when, benighted on some desolate moorland, we lay ourselves down to sleep. Into the low dungeon where the true-hearted prophet lies (Lam. iii. 55), into the prison cell where the heroic apostle awaits his doom (Acts xxiii. 11), into the cabin of the creaking, labouring vessel, threatened each moment with destruction (Acts xxvii. 24), there comes this assurance of One who cannot lie: Fear not; so that we may boldly say: The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.

II. THE ELEMENTS OF WHICH THIS REVELATION CONSISTED.—The Spirit of God always conveyed his teachings to his servants in language borrowed from their surroundings. John's records of heaven are full of reminiscences of the Ægean, which sometimes murmured around the cliffs of his prison-isle as a sea of glass bathed in fire, and at other times broke on them in yeasty foam. David's Psalms make constant reference to the wild hill-country of Judæa, in which so many of them were composed; Daniel's visions commemorate the giant forms familiar to him in Babylon; and Amos casts his prophecies in moulds borrowed from a herdsman's life. So was it here.

Bethel was a bleak moorland that lay in the heart of Palestine. There was nothing remarkable about it; it was "a certain place." The hill-sides and upland slopes were strewn with large sheets of bare rock, most of which lay flat upon their faces, like huge fallen gravestones; whilst some few were standing erect, like the cromlechs of our Druid circles.

Fleeing northwards, the wanderer suddenly found himself overtaken by the swift Eastern night, whilst on this desolate and unpeopled waste. There was no help for it but to lie down on the hard ground, taking the stones thereof as a pillow for his head. And thus he slept, and as he slept he dreamed, and in his dream his mind wove together many of his waking thoughts in fantastic medley. The striking appearance of those huge boulders; the memory that Abraham had built one of his earliest altars there, remnants of which may have been still standing; his last look upwards at that wondrous heaven, studded with the brilliant constellations of an Eastern night; all these wove themselves into his dreams. It seemed as if the huge slabs of limestone came near together, and built themselves up into a gigantic staircase, reaching from the spot where he lay to the starry depths above him; and on that staircase angels came and went, peopling by their multitudes that most desolate region, and evidently deeply concerned with the sleeper that lay beneath. Nor was this all; for from the summit the voice of God fell in flakes of music.

There are here three points of interest. (1) The Ladder. Jacob may have been oppressed by a sense of his insignificance and sin, and distance from home. And it was very pleasant to know that there was a link between him and God. Earth is not a wandering star; it is bound to heaven, not by the golden chains of which our Laureate sings, not by the iron fetters of necessity, as a slave-ship to its captor, not by the silken ties of gravitation which thread the worlds, but by a ladder, denoting communion, fellowship, passage to and fro.

That ladder is Jesus Christ Himself (John i. 31). He took upon Himself our nature, built up from the dust, and in that nature passed upwards from the brow of Olivet, beyond principalities and powers, thrones and dominions, to the very throne of God; and in doing so He has left a trail of light behind, and become the way by which we may approach the High and Lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy. There is no other way; "no man cometh unto the Father but by Him." To neglect Him is to drift past the only medium by which a sinner may come into the Light and Love and Life of God. And yet the weakest and most sinful may climb through Jesus from the verge of the pit of hell to the foot of the eternal throne.

> The sons of Ignorance and Night
> May dwell in the Eternal Light,
> Through the Eternal Love.

Milton, in his sublime poem, tells how Sin and Death followed the track of Satan, and paved after him a broad and beaten way over the dark abyss, whose boiling gulf tamely endured a bridge of wondrous length from hell, continued to the utmost orb of this frail world, so that the wicked spirits of his court might easily pass to and fro to tempt us mortals. That is imagination: this is fact, that there is a Mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus.

Sometimes, when the sky is beclouded, we do not see that across the garden path there sways a ladder of gossamer, linking tree with tree; but when the sun shines it is revealed by its silver sheen. So, as the infidel looks upwards, he can see no bond of union between this atom of star-dust and the metropolis of the universe, until his eyes are opened, and he sees the ladder left by the trail of the departing Saviour. Thank God, we are not cut adrift to the mercy of every current; this dark coal-ship is moored alongside the bright ship of heavenly grace; yes, and there is a plank between them.

(2) The Angels. The angels ascended: there is the ascent of our prayers. The angels descended: there is the descent of God's answers. We are reminded of the afferent and efferent nerves of the body, up which flash the sharp stings of pain from the extremities to the head, and down which come the directions how to act. It would be well to ponder more frequently the ministering care of the angels. They keep pace with every railway train, at whatever speed it travels, which bears some child of God to his appointed destination. They convoy every ship, ploughing its way through the troubled sea, which carries an heir of salvation to the haven where he would be. They encamp with horses and chariots of fire about every city, however beleaguered, in which God's servants are found. They minister to our needs. They prepare for us strengthening meals, when we sink exhausted on the desert sands, and wish to die. They whisper comfort into our troubled hearts. They carry our departing spirits upwards in the hour of death. "And all for love, and nothing for reward." God gives his angels charge concerning us, to keep us in all our ways; they bear us up in their hands. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round them that fear Him, and delivereth them." "They are sent forth to minister to the heirs of salvation."

What comfort Jacob must have got! He seems to have found, to his great surprise, that that lone spot was as thickly populated as the gate of some Eastern town, which is the place of concourse and barter. But it was the gate of heaven; for it seemed as if the populations of heaven were teeming around him, thronging to and fro, and all engaged in the beneficent work of bringing in the needs of men, and carrying out the blessings of God heaped up, after the overflowing measure with which He is wont to give. We need never yield to feelings of loneliness again, if we remember that, in our most retired hours, we are living in the very heart of a vast throng of angels; and we should hear their songs, and see their forms, if only our senses were not clogged with sin.

(3) The Voice of God. God answered his thoughts. He felt lonesome, but God said, "I will be with thee." He feared Esau, but God said, "I will keep thee." He knew not what hardships he might meet with, and God promised to bring him safely back again. He seemed forsaken of friends, but God gave him the assurance, "I will not leave thee." Appearances seemed to contradict the Divine promise, but God said, "I will do that which I have spoken to thee of." These are precious words, but they only belong to those who lie at the foot of that wondrous Cross which unites earth and heaven; if your place is there, you may freely claim all the comfort that they contain.

Is it not remarkable that Jacob did not see these glorious realities until he slept? God was as much brooding in the wilderness before he slept as afterwards, only he knew it not. It was only when he slept, that he came to know it. "Gradually slumber stole upon him, and folded him in her arms; gradually the fever cooled, the excitement subsided, the anxiety ceased. He grew tranquil and still; he lost himself—the flurried, heated, uneasy self that he had brought with him from Beersheba; and while he slept, the hitherto unperceived Eternal Presence came out softly, largely, above and around him. He saw His glory, and heard His voice; the solitary waste trembled, flushed, and overflowed with God."

There is a lesson for us in this old story of how the Lord waited until his servant slept ere He revealed to him the secret of his presence. Is it not true that we need to sleep sometimes in order to see? May we not be rather too wide-awake—too wakeful to the passing things of earth? And would it not be well if we were more oblivious to these things, that our spiritual vision might behold the things which are unseen and eternal?

When the groups of children are playing in the forest glades, and their voices ring out in laughter, all the life of animals and the song of birds is hushed; but when they have gone their way the squirrel springs up the bark, the birds call to each other, and many a beautiful thing glides into the open from behind the trees. "Enter into thy closet and shut thy door." "My soul, be thou silent unto God."

It is impossible to walk with God unless we have these seasons of quiet vision. Some are for ever dwarfed, and driven to and fro by every wind, because they do not make times of respite from the whirl of occupation, and the fret of daily work and care. We need to escape from ourselves, our cares and gains, our personal individualities, in order that we may be at leisure to receive the revelations of God. And if we are to get this blessed sleep, it must be the gift of God in answer to our childlike trust: "He giveth his beloved sleep."

In our next paper we shall detail the effect which this marvellous vision produced on the awe-struck fugitive; but ere we close, we ask you to think of that mystic ladder which descends from the throne of God to the spot, however lowly, where you may be as you read these lines. It may be a moorland waste, a humble cottage, a ship's cabin, a settler's hut, a bed of pain; but Jesus Christ finds you out, and comes just where you are. The one pole of this ladder is the gold of his Deity; the other is the silver of his Manhood; the staves are the series of events from the cradle of Bethlehem to the right hand of Power, where He sits. That ladder sways beneath a weight of blessing for you. Oh! that you would send away your burdens of sin and care and fear by the hands of the ascending angels of Prayer and Faith, so as to be able to receive into your heart the trooping angels of Peace and Joy and Love and Glory.

MR. WEBB-PEPLOE AT OXFORD.

God has graciously visited this "seat of learning." Rich blessing has been given to Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe's short mission to the University, held from November 13 to 16. The church of St. Peter-le-Bailey was filled at the service "for men only." Hundreds of undergraduates listened with eager interest, as the preacher set forth, with a full heart, that Abraham's whole-heartedness for God was the only safe and blessed life to lead.

Then came such an after-meeting as certainly has not been seen since Mr. Moody's visit, in 1882. After explaining God's free gift of salvation, Mr. Webb-Peploe asked all who were prepared definitely to accept it then and there, to rise upon their feet. Something like forty or fifty rose in the church. Then, again, when he asked how many were prepared to trust the Lord Jesus as their Keeper from sin's power, some hundreds of men rose at once—quite three-fourths of all who remained. The two evening meetings on Monday and Tuesday were attended by such numbers as have not been seen certainly for years, and the power of the Lord was present to bless.

Our hope now is that a constant stream of blessing is coming down on the work during the rest of term, and that next term, when Mr. Aitken comes to us, Christian life amongst us may receive such an impetus as shall make its influence felt throughout our land. Why should not Oxford, now celebrated for its latitudinarianism—not long since as the cradle of Ritualism—be the spiritual birthplace of hundreds of men who shall both preach and live "Christ and Him crucified"? Will every renewed heart pray that God may more and more let the working of the might of his power be known? I. O. W.

WANDSWORTH.—The third anniversary of the opening of Standen Mission Chapel was recently held. From the report it appeared that all departments of the work were in a flourishing condition, and every service manifested progress. A commanding corner site has been secured, and the committee are purposing to extend this aggressive work by erecting a building to seat 400 persons.

SARSCUBE HALL, GLASGOW. — The tenth year of the work of this Mission has given occasion for much thankfulness. There have been two months of blessed meetings in the tent, and both here and in the hall many, there is good reason to believe, have heard the voice of the Son of God, and gone forth to walk in newness of life. A true missionary spirit has also been kindled amongst the people. Three young men are now working as missionaries in China, and others who have gone forth from this place are labouring as pastors and evangelists in Canada, the United States, and other parts of the world.

THE BIRD'S NEST, DUBLIN, still stands as a monument of God's faithfulness. Says a recent circular:—"As we walk up the road and listen to the pleasant voices in the school-room, or notice gates and doors standing open, it looks more like times of peace than opposition; yet quite recently mobs assembled and violence was threatened. The present Nest has now been a children's home for twenty-nine years, and many of the bedsteads are getting quite worn out; also blankets have to be provided for one dormitory, with fifty beds." Little books, containing cheering experiences of God's unchangeable faithfulness, are sent on application to Miss Davies, 39, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

MR. J. WOOD, OF BRIGHTON.

We have no wish to say an unkind word of Mr. Wood, of Australia and Brighton, but the watchman's responsibility obliges us to exhibit the red light when there is danger. Mr. Wood's letter in our last ought to be sufficient to show that he is not an able or reliable minister of the New Testament. He thus describes the foundation doctrine of the Agapemone teaching:—

"That the Son of Man had come in judgment over forty years ago, and had judged Satan, concealed in the flesh since the Fall, and had cast him out, and had filled the temple or body of the believer with the Spirit of Glory, as promised by Jesus (John xvi. 11, xvii. 21—24), and confirmed by St. Paul (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17, vi. 19, 20; 2 Cor. vi. 16). My experience during the past three years corresponding to the state here promised and described, I accepted it as true."

But further teaching, not essentially more groundless than the above, he "denounced to be heresy and blasphemous." He did not test by Scripture the astounding assertion that "the Son of Man had come in judgment over forty years ago, and had judged Satan, concealed in the flesh since the Fall," but he accepted it on the basis of his own supposed experience. Even now he does not denounce that which he said he thus received. One so easily misled is, we think, unfitted to be a leader and a teacher in the Church of Christ.

Mr. Wood says that in August he wrote an article exposing the heresy, but has not published it, holding "that promulgation of truth is the most effective way to destroy error." Why, then, did he write the article? But he is surely in error here also; for, when Satan comes as an angel of light, and (as in the Agapemone books, tracts, and letters) leavens the truth with a subtle lie, or conceals a poisonous falsehood beneath an outside covering of truth, those who watch for souls as they that must give account, must warn the unwary, or their blood will God require at the watchman's hand.

We are informed that at the present time one of the recognised leaders of Mr. Wood's teaching is holding weekly meetings in conjunction with the Agapemone sect. The name of this teacher is given under Mr. Wood's own hand in The Christian Standard for November. "If it be true," asks our correspondent, "that Mr. Wood gave up connection with the Agapemone people in July, how is it these meetings are being held by one of his leaders in October?"

There is one test which will at once condemn many of the heresies that are now abroad. The Apostle Paul warned the Ephesians that of themselves should men arise teaching "perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." When we find anyone teaching a peculiar doctrine, the tendency of which is to attach men and women to himself, we have good reason for suspecting it. We return cordial thanks to all our correspondents, both Mr. Wood's supporters as well as others.

POST-OFFICE TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY.—The ninth anniversary of this Society took place last week at the Shaftesbury-hall, Aldersgate-street, E.C. Mr. S. A. Blackwood presided. The secretary, Mr. C. J. Wilkes, read the annual report, which showed that, during the year, thirteen branches had been formed, and that there had been fifteen promises to form branches. The Chairman, Miss Agnes Weston, Rev. A. S. Herring, Mrs. Edmonston, and others addressed the meeting.

MIDLAND COUNTIES Y.W.C.A. CONVENTION.—A very successful All-day Convention for the furtherance of this work was held on November 2. At the morning meeting Mrs. Oatts gave an interesting account of work among the young ladies of Glasgow. At the afternoon meeting, which was attended by a large number, the need of more branches was discussed, and the importance of each secretary making it her aim to educate and lead the workers. Mrs. Menzies and Mrs. Darwin Fox advised the leaders of juvenile branches to get members before they leave the schools. In the evening various interesting addresses were given.

AMERICAN Y.M.C.A. WORK.

THE RAILROAD DEPARTMENT.

This effort had its origin at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1872; it seeks to do a similar work to that done by the Association proper, except that it is limited to the employés of the railway companies. The beneficial effects are seen in the fact that it is now being taken up at sixty points in the United States, and that the railroad corporations during the last year appropriated sixty thousand dollars towards its support.

Mr. E. D. Ingersoll is secretary for this railroad department. He travels over the continent, organising new Associations, interesting railroad men and companies in the work and securing secretaries, frequently from the ranks of Christian railroad men, to carry on the work in local fields. The New York Central and Hudson River Road leads in giving official and financial aid to the work. In New York State twenty branches are now organised, one-half of which are on the above road. Rooms are provided for religious meetings, for educational classes, also for lectures and entertainments. Libraries, and reading, bath, and wash-rooms are supplied. Religious meetings are held, such as Bible-classes and Gospel meetings, for railroad men and their families, in which Christian railroad men seek to lead their associates to Christ. While the Association is not supported by all the railroad men, every railroad man is allowed to use the reading-rooms, but the other privileges are exclusively for those who contribute to the support of the work.

The Secretary in charge visits all the stations of the N.Y.C. & H.R. and West Shore roads on the west side of the city, and seeks to do personal work with the men in the offices and shops, or in the yards. He visits their homes with words of encouragement and comfort, brings them interesting reading matter when they are sick, and in every way possible seeks to influence them for Christ. Assistants, at each of the reading-rooms, act as librarians, welcome the members as they visit the rooms, and attend to the details. The attendance at the rooms, outside of entertainments, averages about sixty-five per day, the rooms being open from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. If further testimony were needed it could be found in innumerable acts of the companies and their managers giving sanction and support to the Association in all its progressive movements; but the latest and grandest tribute is the offer of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt to erect a handsome building near the Grand Central Depôt for the more perfect development of the work. This building will cost 100,000 dollars, and will be ready for use early next year.

PIONEERING IN INDIA.

I and my wife left Colar about a year ago, and have taken up an unoccupied and neglected district in which are many thousands of people who have never heard the name of Christ. Not only this; there is no Christian school here, and no doctor to help the sick and suffering, numbers of whom flock to us for medicines, which we give freely to them. Hundreds are thus brought under the sound of the Word whom we could not otherwise reach. A Christian school will be opened, I trust, as soon as a suitable teacher (Native Christian) can be found.

As yet I and my wife are alone. We trust others will join us soon. We are only just beginning, and all is, humanly speaking, up-hill work. Much has to be done besides evangelising.

WILLARD TRACT DEPOSITORY.—At the fourth annual meeting of this establishment in Toronto it was stated that there had been given out for free distribution during the year some 350,000 Bibles, books, tracts, cards, &c. These have been sent to all parts of the American continent, and a goodly number to other parts of the world. The large hall was well filled with friends of the Depository, met to join in praise to God for the blessings of the past year.

INSTRUCTION IN TEMPERANCE.

By Miss FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Nothing so good has ever before happened to the children of America as that they are to be taught about themselves—the greatest empire over which they will be called to rule. The wisdom of beginning with the beginners is the crowning wisdom of the plan, and will increase, beyond all computation, the sum of human happiness. How to be well is no small part of that other problem—how to be good.

Experiment should enter largely into my plans. I would try to develop a health-conscience in my pupils, showing them the sacredness of the temple in which their spirits dwell, and the painless, happy way in which they might live if obedient to God's law, made for their highest good, and written in their members. I would organise them into a health club, and try to arouse a genuine enthusiasm in them for wholesome, cleanly ways of living. In all respects I would diligently try to be an example to the flock in my own daily life, asking nothing of them in respect to dress, diet, exercise, &c., that I did not myself observe. I would request my pupils to tell me of illustrations noted by them in which the laws of health were violated; and I would try to show them the relation of a sound body to a sound mind and a good conscience. The Gospel of purity in word and deed should be discreetly taught, and every effort made to impress the motto, "Keep THYSELF pure." In the higher grades I would circulate the White Cross literature, which is singularly exalted in tone and free from hackneyed or technical expressions.

I would teach the unscientific nature of such expressions as he drank too much"; "he smoked too freely"; "he was a moderate drinker"; "he indulged to excess"; showing that since alcohol and nicotine are the attractive ingredients in all use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco, any use of these things is harmful because both are poisons, notoriously injurious to the tissues of the body and the temper of the soul.—Journal of Education.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE IN AUSTRALIA.

The Australian papers contain detailed reports of Mr. Noble's labours in different parts of that continent. After a visit to Brisbane, an account of which is given on another page, he proceeded to Sydney on September 13, and remained till September 24, when he went to Melbourne, receiving a public welcome in the Grand Hotel. He held services in the Temperance Hall during the whole of the week ending October 2. Meetings were afterwards held in the suburbs of Melbourne, and in Ballarat and Geelong.

THE PEACE SOCIETY have just issued a useful paper in which the question is put, "Where are the millions gone?" Referring to the tremendous sums spent every year upon the army and navy, they point also to the charges of extravagance lately made, and to the little hope there is of these abuses being remedied. "Any real progress towards pacific retrenchment," it is added, "must come from the people's determination." It is suggested that it would be well to form a network of local Leagues for promoting that administrative reform which, at one period, the late Mr. Samuel Morley and a few others were anxious to bring about, but which neither they nor any other Englishmen have yet been able to secure.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE WORKERS' UNION.—At a Conference of members held on Saturday week at the Leopold Rooms, Ludgate-circus, it was decided to invite the ministers of London to bring before their members and congregations the question of individual responsibility in respect to the temperance cause, as a part of practical Christianity. It was also agreed to ask the temperance societies of the metropolis to co-operate in holding a Personal Effort Mission in the new year, to culminate in a jubilee demonstration on the ninth anniversary of the introduction of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Movement by Mr. William Noble to this country. The General Secretary will gladly accept promises of co-operation, and respond to applications for further particulars addressed to him at 134, Hoxton-street, London, N.

MOSAIC.

Our souls, love-dowered by the heart of God,
Do impress take and make, through men and things:
And taking, making thus, we are life's kings
Who sway, unfettered, truth's divining rod.

For all who, heaven-called, have kept the tryst
That love and truth convened 'twixt life and light,
Are Christ's in deed, are fighting God's own fight,
Are eyes to those who, blind, his way have missed.

So every soul that draweth to the Light,
And holdeth forth therefrom a witness true,
Is God's own lamp, whose radiance shall endue
Earth's darkness with the power of perfect sight.

And day by day, unseen, perhaps unknown,
These lives are marching o'er the world's soiled pave,
Are lingering by the mart, the mount, the grave,
Until their impress into each have grown.

Oh, Life-mosaic, fitting, one by one,
The pieces in the pattern He hath planned!
Thy ministry and message so command
Truth's homage, that thy task will soon be done.

And o'er the earth, as floods of radiant day,
Shall float the banner that is Love and God;
And sun-crowned hills, and humble daisy-sod,

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY.

Strong proof of the value of addresses on Christian Evidences was given at a meeting held in the Congregational Church Schoolroom, Robert-street, Grosvenor-square, on a recent evening. During the past summer, what has been called a Christian Evidence Mission has been carried on in Hyde Park, by Mr. Dunn, who, as a voluntary worker, has given thirty-eight lectures out of seventy-seven, delivered between May 14 and September 23. These lectures have been attended by upwards of a thousand people each evening. Much interest is manifested; numbers remain behind for a considerable time discussing the subject.

The object of this meeting, over which Mr. C. F. Dowsett presided, was to present Mr. Dunn with a testimonial, subscribed for by some of those who had heard his lectures. The Christian Evidence Society at the same time presented him with a number of books, in acknowledgment of his services. During the evening several young men testified to the advantage they had received from the addresses of Mr. Dunn and others. Some had been stirred up to an earnest study of the subjects thus brought before them; others, who had been inclining to Secularism, had been restored to Christ; and by one it was said that a Salvation Army captain, to whom he had gone for advice, had remarked, "It is very strange how many who have come to me this summer have confessed that they were led to do so by what they heard at the Christian Evidence Society's lectures in Hyde Park."

Y.M.C.A., BATH.—Mr. Stooke, the secretary writes to say that the Association is sadly in want of larger and more suitable premises. The Christian Evidence lectures by Prebendary Anderson are, he adds, largely attended, but the reading-room has every week to be emptied for this lecture, while the largest spare room will only hold twenty-five persons.

"LETTERS FROM SPAIN."—Very encouraging accounts of evangelistic work in Spain are given in this little paper. The people crowd to the meetings, and the remarks made show their appreciation of the ministry of the Word of God to them. One man, for instance, said, "I could stay and listen for two or three hours more," and another, "This preaching is for the poor." One to whom a copy of the Gospel of St. Matthew had been given in another place, said, in welcoming the missionary, "Reckon us as your friends, who are ready to do anything for you." The children are also being gathered together for teaching on Sundays, and much good work is being done amongst old and young.

TEMPERANCE PROGRESS.

A VERY gratifying tribute to the success of temperance work was furnished last week, by its most ardent opponents, at the fifty-sixth yearly dinner of the Licensed Victuallers' Protection Society. The chairman, Mr. R. Gent-Davis, said:—

> He had deep sympathy with the hardships under which they had suffered during the last few years. There had been a very steady succession of attacks upon their trade, and he much regretted that they, who were recognised by the Government as supplying a great part of the revenue of this country, should be so steadily worried and harrassed by repressive legislation.
>
> With regard to the trade, nobody knew better than their enemies how greatly and how highly they were esteemed as being one of the public institutions characteristic of the English nation. Why was it that an institution which could date back for so many years could not have six months of peace or rest without being threatened by Early Closing Bills, which were the bane of the existence of licensed victuallers in the country? Their opponents were always pounding away at them, and gave them no peace; but they had done this for them, they had drawn them closer together, and had converted them into a great and powerful society.
>
> There were two distinct objects set forth in the rules of the Society. The first was to protect their interests from mischievous interference—from interference that might in some cases leave many—he hoped none in that room—helpless and homeless. Their trade was a difficult but necessary one, and unless they wished to revolutionise the habits of the people, there was no reason why it should be subject to the persecution to which it had unfortunately been. He hoped that those members of the House of Commons to whom they looked for support would earnestly endeavour to protect their interests.
>
> A gentleman named Caine—a member of a former Liberal Government—had published a most remarkable book on Local Option, which seemed to him utterly un-English and uncalled for. On the other side, he would refer to the opinion of a sound judge, Lord Bramwell, who said: "Punish the mischievous drunkard, punish the man who sells drink to the drunkard, but go no further, and trust to the good sense and improvement of mankind."
>
> The rights of property should be maintained, and if any scheme affecting them should be presented to the House of Commons, it was their right and their duty to make sure that in any scheme of confiscation the most ample provision for a generous scale of compensation should be included.

The brewers are evidently alive to the inconvenience of becoming "helpless and homeless" when it applies to any of their own number, but they have no feeling for the multitudes who are rendered so by their abominable traffic, nor do they make any "provision for a generous scale of compensation" for their victims, such as they demand for themselves. The teaching of Christ is fortunately of more value than that of Lord Bramwell, and the righteous Judge will not "punish the mischievous drunkard" and acquit those who made the drink which caused his fall, and became wealthy through his ruin. We rejoice that much good has been accomplished in the temperance cause, but more remains to be done. Baron Huddleston, while presiding at Winchester Assizes on the same date as the above meeting, said:—

> It was beyond doubt that three-fourths of the crime of this country was traceable, directly or indirectly, to the abuse of drink, a remark which he said was made 200 years ago in the same circuit by Chief Justice Hale, and it was lamentable to think, that with all the improvements in the ways and comforts of society, and notwithstanding the efforts made by zealous and earnest persons, the same observation applied now.

It would be a pity for this "highly esteemed," "great and powerful" society to exist in vain; and if those who have the truest interests of the people (more than their own) at heart, will bestir themselves, its report next year may not appear so favourable as that upon the improved condition of the drink-stricken portion of the community.

CARRUBBER'S CLOSE MISSION.—A Gospel Temperance demonstration was recently held in connection with this Mission, when Mr. G. A. Barclay, President of the Mission's Gospel Temperance Society, who has been on a six months' tour through Canada and the United States, described some of the remarkable experiences he had met with. In many cities and even outlying places in America, he said, he had not only met former workers with them, but also men and women who, in Edinburgh, had been reclaimed by the operations of the Mission, and were now filling honourable positions in the great dominion of Canada, and also in the republic of the West.

MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.

THE eleventh report, lately issued by Mr. Daniel Matthews, the manager of this Institution, gives a graphic review of the difficulties and encouragements, the lights and shadows of their work. The average number of blacks and half-castes at this station during the past three years has been 100 In diary form the manager supplies us with a very interesting glimpse of the events that make up the life of this little colony. Notwithstanding many hindrances, the progress made, both socially and religiously, is very encouraging.

The Government, stimulated by Christian friends, have themselves undertaken the work of protecting the few remains of the aboriginal tribes of New South Wales. We are glad to see, from the accompanying report of the Aborigines' Protection Association, that a liberal subsidy has been granted for this purpose, and that now, therefore, there is a fair prospect of the aims of the Association on behalf of these neglected people being carried out with less of strain upon those who hitherto have had to bear a very heavy burden.

A lady correspondent sends to us an interesting account of a visit to this Mission in September last. She says:—"We were much pleased to see some very favourable changes in the Mission since our visit of last year. Fourteen comfortable four-roomed cottages for the married couples, with tidy gardens fenced in round them, are now finished and occupied. The old school-house is much improved, too, and looks so tidy and comfortable. Mrs. D——, who has lately come here as Matron, has already found her way into the hearts of the people. We are taking cottages by turn in the evening, and trying to teach the people the duty and privilege of family prayer in their own homes."

The writer also describes a visit to the Aborigines at La Perousse. Here the natives had themselves built several huts with materials given them by the Government. There is a week-day school near, but only very occasionally does anyone come to speak to them of spiritual things. They all understand English, and gladly listened to an address from John iii., telling of God's love to them, and joined heartily in singing some hymns from Songs and Solos.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH.

THE promoters of the work so successfully carried on in this commodious mission hall for the past two years, commenced, on Wednesday, Nov. 10, a new effort which promises to yield an abundance of spiritual fruit. In Wandsworth, during the winter months, many men and women are, unhappily, out of work; it was resolved by the committee to invite some of this class occasionally to tea. To the first invitation, given to men only, nearly two hundred responded.

The appearance of the men at their simple meal was truly touching, and their excellent conduct was manifestly matter of surprise to the Christian workers present. After cheerful Gospel singing and fervent prayer, bright, telling addresses were delivered by William Taylor, formerly a navvy, whose services are always acceptable at Down Lodge Hall, and by his son, whose work as a missioner has been greatly blessed. Those who were willing to forsake sin and commence the new life were invited to remain for personal conversation. Some of the men were found to be under deep conviction; and it was a joy to their helpers to "show them the way of God more perfectly."

LLANELLY, ABERGAVENNY.—In connection with the Church work at this place there is a mission-room in which weekly services and Sunday-schools are held. To meet costs of necessary repairs, Miss E. Griffiths, Llanelly Rectory, Gilivern, Abergavenny, will be thankful for any help. A sale of work and fancy articles will be held early in the New Year.

IRISH CHURCH COLPORTAGE MISSION.—The special object of this Mission is to sell the Scriptures and religious books to the Roman Catholics of Ireland, and in this it has been largely successful. A colporteur is sent to any particular diocese for £4 a month. Help is specially asked for the work in Kerry. Information can be obtained from Rev. J. F. Bickerdike, 4, Windsor-road, Rathmines, Dublin.

THE NOON-DAY HOUR OF PRAYER.

186, ALDERSGATE-STREET, E.C.

BULGARIA.

PASTOR TONJOROFF, on Tuesday week, said that country had been long sunk under a twofold oppression—religiously, under the Greek clergy, and politically, for five centuries, under Turkish rule. Thirty years ago, by a religious but not a spiritual revolution, they were delivered from the oppression of the Greek clergy, but were in the same spiritual darkness as before. For the spread of true spiritual religion amongst the people, they were entirely indebted to the English and American Bible Societies. In the sixteen years since the Gospel was first brought by these agencies, fifty places in Bulgaria proper, Roumelia, and Macedonia, have been opened where men come together to examine the Word, to sing, and to rejoice in a full and free salvation in Christ Jesus.

When in this country nine years ago, he was much struck by what he saw at Mildmay (especially the night-school carried on there), and by the Y.M.C.A. organisations. On returning to Philipopolis he tried to introduce something on the same lines. A few young men united together for this purpose, and in a short time there were 150 Bulgarians Greeks, Turks, and Jews in the school. The work went on splendidly, and many of those now in good positions as advocates in the other spheres of usefulness owed all their acquirements to the night-school, while, more than that, some had also been brought to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. He spoke also of encouraging work in the prisons, where in every room there are Bible pictures, and where the prisoners listen most attentively to the preaching of the Word. He concluded by asking Christians to pray for Bulgaria in this time of trial, and for the Christian work so well begun there.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

On Friday Mr. Wookey mentioned a touching incident that had come under his notice only the previous day. An orphan boy, whose mother when dying bade him be honest, after wandering about for some time, was noticed by a railway porter in a destitute and nearly naked condition, and taken to his own home and there cared for, though he had several children. Ultimately, the boy was admitted into Dr. Barnardo's Home. He knew there were many of the Lord's servants in humble circumstances who were continually, like this man, doing little acts of kindness for the poor in their own simple way.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S KINDERGARTEN.—We are grieved to get the following request from our devoted sister, Miss Mittendorff, but we hasten to comply with it:—"Will you kindly state that I am willing to give German lessons, or knit socks and stockings, in order to earn money for the Orphan Home, as we are really distressed." The Home is at Clayton House, Epsom, and the London Office is 2, Aberdeen-place, Maida-hill, N.W.

MISSIONARY VISITATION—Miss Lloyd and Miss Cavendish, who work in connection with Mrs. Meredith's mission, are about to visit some of their sisters labouring abroad. They propose to leave for Egypt and other places soon after November 30. They will accept invitations to visit women's missions. They desire to cheer the workers in these distant fields. Communications should be addressed to the Missionary Institute, 143, Clapham-road, S.W. Meetings for commending these sisters to the Lord in prayer will be held in the Conference Hall, Clapham, on Nov. 30, at 4 and 8 p.m.

SOLDIERS IN DUBLIN are well looked after. The Home and Institute situated outside the Phœnix Park gate provides beds for about seventy persons per night, and during the year with which the last report deals 3700 availed themselves of the accommodation, whilst the total number of visits paid to the Home, including those who slept during that period, exceeded 36,000. The dormitories, library, reading-room, lavatories, and refreshment-bar are all kept in the most perfect order, and all are well patronised. With a Christian lady (Mrs. Packard) as resident superintendent, and an earnest man and wife as practical managers, the soldiers find their needs well met, and gladly avail themselves of such excellent provision. Then in the centre of the city Miss Fry has transformed the well-known Tract Depôt at 9, D'Olier-street, into reading and sitting-rooms for the military and constabulary, and holds evening meetings for them, as well as a large gathering of some seventy men at Merrion Hall on Sunday afternoons. These branches of the Lord's service are well worth a visit from Christian friends spending a day or so in Dublin.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

SUNDERLAND AND NEWCASTLE CONFERENCES.

Conferences similar to that held at Manchester, reported in our last, were held at Sunderland and Newcastle last week. Much interest was manifested by some, though not by many, local ministers and friends. As the same speakers gave substantially the same addresses at both places, we shall embody them in one report.

At the preliminary prayer-meeting at Sunderland, Rev. Canon Scott Moncrieff said he was greatly astonished at the little interest taken in foreign missions, in view of the fact that the evangelisation of the world is the proper work of the Church. Throughout the meetings frequent reference was made, and the deepest sympathy expressed concerning the martyrdom of Bishop Hannington, the continued captivity of Mr. Mackay, and the recent martyrdom of the heroic native Christians in Central Africa.

THE JEWS.

Rev. Isaac Levisohn, a young Russian Jew connected with the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, illustrated, from his own experience, the little faith which Christians have in the conversion of the Jews. A good Christian lady in Scotland sent a sum of money to a minister for various missions, adding, "Please don't send anything to the Jews." I called upon the lady; but when she saw my card she said she did not wish to see me, as she took no interest in the Jews. I replied that was why I wanted to see her. She asked me, "Do you think a Jew can be a Christian?" I asked, "Was Paul a Christian?" "Yes." "Are you?" She hoped so. "What converted Paul and you?" "The grace and power of God." "Is not, then, the grace of God sufficient to convert a Jew?"

There are only 250 missionaries to the Jews in the world, yet there are 100,000 Jews who are now Christians. I go for my information as to progress to the Jews themselves. A Vienna paper says that such missions are a miserable failure. Only 263 professed Christ in that city in 1884. Of these 13 were lawyers, 9 physicians, 1 dentist, 4 booksellers, 2 military officers, 5 magistrates, and 17 manufacturers. The rest included University professors, students, governesses, and others whose social status was not ascertained. Surely this is great cause of rejoicing. Nearly six hundred Jews professed Christ through our own Society last year. A Jew becomes a Christian at the loss of everything. The son of a wealthy banker baptized at the same time as myself, cast off by his friends, became a shoeblack in Whitechapel. I asked him how he could stoop to such a mean occupation. He replied, "Isaac, call it not a mean occupation; it is holiness to the Lord. For Christ's sake I do it." He saved enough to emigrate to New Zealand, became a farm labourer, then a farmer, and built a house, not to live in, but a hall in which to gather others to hear of the same Jesus by whom he had been saved. When he had a holiday, he went, not to the seaside, but to the villages to tell the Jews the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Rev. E. J. Prout, District Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, said that his Society was the warmest friend of all missionary societies, corresponding with and giving help to all. In the West Indies the negroes say a man without a wife, or a woman without a husband, is like half a pair of scissors. So is the Bible Society without a missionary society, or vice versâ. Numerous illustrations were given of salvation having come to persons in all ranks of life, and in all countries of the world, through the distribution of the Scriptures.

MOHAMMEDANS.

Mr. Edward H. Glenny, Secretary of the Mission to Berber Races of North Africa, connected Mohammedans with Ishmael, and with the promises given to Abraham concerning Ishmael. There are 170 millions of Mohammedans in the world. Islamism took its rise thirteen centuries ago. If we take the average number in the world at 75,000,000, then 300,000 millions have lived and died, and gone beyond the reach of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Mr. Glenny described the work of the Mission which he represents in Morocco, Algeria, and Tunis. Men are wanted, and women even more so. Men can speak to men only, but women can speak to men as well as women. In Tangier, the first man who was taken into the Medical Mission Hospital has been led to Christ. So also, it is hoped, have two women, during the short time that ladies have been at Arzila. In another address, Mr. Glenny described the condition of the Soudan, which he divided into Western, Central, and Egyptian. Entrance must be by the rivers. It is a most promising field for mission work. We recommend to our readers the quarterly periodical "North Africa," published by Messrs. Partridge & Co.

WOMAN'S WORK.

Mrs. Backhouse referred to the first and second chapters of Acts. She used to think that cloven tongues fell only on the Apostles, but it was on the women also, and now the Church is waking up to the importance of woman's work.

Mrs. Osborn, of Cape Town, said our own people abroad, soldiers and sailors, are often stumbling-blocks to the heathen, and return to England the worse for our neglect of them. Colonists need, on landing, a helping hand. She saw a sad letter from a soldier, saying how hard it was for them. Drink is nowhere so bad as at the Cape. Six people can get drunk for sixpence, and such bad stuff. It kills the natives, and the Government has taken off the excise lately, so that it is ruining the people more than ever. One lady wanted to pray with a man, but he said, "Don't remind me—I can't bear it!" Drink kills all the good in them. There is much room for work there. Why not go to South Africa for a holiday, instead of nearer places, where you have not the same opportunity for work? I had the joy in Edinburgh and Glasgow of meeting some who had been converted in the Soldiers' Home and Sailors' Rest. The danger to some of the young lads in the mercantile marine is dreadful. We are trying to reach them.

If we can't go ourselves, let us send a substitute, as people had to do at the Cape in the native wars. We try to get the soldiers and sailors to see that they have something to do in representing a Christian country and Christ. We speak to the blacks in our meetings. We want our work to be self-supporting.

Miss Poulton, representing the British Syrian Schools, said their object is to reach the women of Syria. There is a castle on the Lebanon, the courtyard of which, twenty-six years ago, was knee deep in Christian blood; now twenty princesses from that castle are in the schools. The Moslem children seem to pick out the texts which speak of Christ as the only Mediator. Perhaps some day we shall be able to send some of the 1500 women whom Mr. Glenny wants, to work among the Mohammedans of North Africa. Miss Poulton gave some touching narratives of the blind who had been converted through reading the Gospel of St. John with their fingers.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Dr. Maxwell, speaking of China, where he had lived, said there were open doors throughout the land. He gave many encouraging illustrations similar to those he gave at the recent Mildmay Conference. Much work is being done outside of our Church organisations, but what might not be done if these vast organisations were awakened to the crying need?

Dr. Caley, who had studied at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and is going out to China, appealed to young men present, some of whom had been his fellow-students.

CHINA.

Rev. D. MacIver, Presbyterian Missionary Society, said his Society, he believed, had its birth in Sunderland. Here, in 1847, Wm. C. Burns was ordained and sent forth. Some time ago, a French statesman said China was a quantity which need not be taken into account. It is not so now. If we do not evangelise China, she will heathenise other nations. It is full of idols. But worse than idolatry is Agnosticism, which has its historical development in China. One of Confucius' disciples asked what he knew of the spiritual world. He replied, "We know not life, how shall we know death?" All their thought and conception is about food, drink, and clothing. "Show us a new invention: we don't want to hear about the other world." They are perishing for lack of knowledge. This constitutes the need.

There are many encouragements. Fifty years ago it was a capital offence for a Chinese to be a Christian; now you can preach the Gospel with more liberty than in many places in Europe. In the north, south, east, and west there is no interference. Fifty years ago there was scarcely a convert; now there are 30,000. Here is the photograph of an old man, poor as can be. He said, "Pastor, if it were not for the love of God, I should be too sorrowful to eat or live." He has three sons, all lepers. He has done more real Christian work than many earnest workers. There are many lepers in South China. God has marvellously used some of them for the spread of the Gospel. In a city called The City of Eternal Security, where no white man had been, men and women crowded to see the white "demon." For hours we had to satisfy their curiosity so that we could not eat. At length, at midnight, a Chinese scholar invited me to his room, where I explained the Gospel to him. He professed faith in Christ, and here was formed the nucleus of a church. Are the converts genuine? They compare very favourably with English Christians. They give liberally. At Amoy, they subscribed £700 out of wages of 4d. or 6d. a day.

It is not the work we do but the work we cannot do that kills us. Could not those at home go and help lonely missionaries abroad? The saddest thing to the Chinese missionary is the opium question. I have preached to crowds of hundreds and thousands, but never without having this thrown in my teeth. Thousands of Chinese are ruined year by year by this cursed thing sent there by England. It is impossible to exaggerate the evil. It is a curse, and a curse only. Letters from Chinese friends to-day say, "Be in earnest: send more missionaries, more help." It is the individual duty of every member of Christ to be a missionary at home or abroad.

Rev. C. G. Moore, China Inland Mission: It is most evident that the Lord Jesus Christ has taken in hand this blessed work of evangelising China. How far are we prepared to co-operate with Him? I thank God mission work is being taken out of the region of romance and sentiment, and becoming a matter of plain loyalty and duty to Christ. I like that word duty, it goes on all fours. The King will rely on men who love the word duty. I would a thousand times rather my boy gave his life to dark heathen China than be Prime Minister of England. Parents would rather seek a high place for their children than that they should be missionaries. They wish them to get to heaven, but by the way of earthly success. But Christ is seeking to bring home to his people that the great thing is to live for Him. With regard to family worship, monotony comes through sameness of circumstances. Years ago I took a country for each day of the week. We got all the information we could about them, and prayed for them by name. Our church prayer-meetings have troubled me. In some places they are sick unto death; in others they are dead and buried. I have an antipathy to monthly missionary prayer-meetings, as though once a month we would forget our own little affairs, and think of the great world. We need more labourers and more power. They will come when our prayer embraces the whole world. Let your heart go out, and God will bless you. "Give, and it shall be given unto you.

Mr. C. STANSFELD WILSON, referring to the twenty young men and women who, on the previous night, offered themselves for missionary work, exhorted fathers and mothers not to hinder the Lord's work by keeping them back. If the Lord calls them, let them go. He gave some interesting anecdotes in furtherance of this.

JAPAN.

Rev. G. ENSOR, the first Church Missionary to Japan, said many persons are occupied with the difficulties of their circumstances. Circumstances never made a sinner or a saint, a Christian or a worker. England is a great naval and commercial power, with a fitness for colonisation possessed by no other nation. What is the design of the Most High in this? Surely that we should spread the Gospel of Christ. Mr. Ensor spoke at length of the commercial, political, and other advantages of England. When he went to Japan, Christianity had to be stripped of its Church accessories—no surplice, no gown, nothing but the old, old story. The man that goes to a new country learns something about the Gospel he never knew before. I once had a service kneeling, with doors closed and windows barred; I prayed with a few men, that through the length and breadth of the land the Word might spread. One of these men had three times dipped his hand in blood. I told him of the Saviour, and those hands bore the fetters in prison for the sake of Christ. I had a garden round my house, but there was a Japanese officer to report any native who entered, and three hundred pieces of silver were offered for information of anyone who became a Christian. Since then young Japanese have been trained there in the knowledge of Christ. In Yeddo there is an Episcopal Church, but it is independent, paying its own way. Every stick and stone has been paid for by themselves. It is stranger than fiction, more romantic than romance. England is saturated with the Gospel. A lady visiting from house to house in Bath received no answer at one of them. At length a man's head appeared at the top window. "Be you come with a tract?" "Yes." "Then you be the seventeenth to-day, and I can't come down." One would have been enough; the other sixteen might have been in Japan.

INDIA.

Mr. SCOTT MONCRIEFF, a retired Indian merchant, spoke of work in India. It amazed him how little honour was paid to translators. We employed our most wise and sanctified scholarship on our Revised Version, and yet we almost overlook those who, in China, India, Japan, and other countries, give them the Scriptures in their own tongue. He gave many intensely interesting anecdotes of conversion among Brahmins, Hindus and Mussulmans.

Rev. F. B. MEYER, of Leicester, closed at Sunderland with an address bringing closely home to every conscience that we are not our own, but bought with a price, and, therefore, belong entirely to Him who redeemed us by his blood. A solemn season of consecration followed, and several came forward for mission work, in addition to eighteen on the previous evening.

POOR CLERGY AND BOOKS.—Writing to us on the subject of "Clerical Poverty," and on the need that many of the clergy have for commentaries and books of reference, Mr. John Shrimpton directs attention to the Church of England Book Society (11, Adam-street, Strand), which was established to meet this want. "Few," he says, "can realise the gratitude expressed by those to whom the committee have been enabled to send free parcels of books." Grants are also made to missionaries in heathen lands. Any who can help in this are requested to communicate with Mr. Shrimpton.

"EARLY WATCH SOCIETY."—This Society has for its object the daily securing of half an hour before breakfast for prayers and the reading of God's word. Those who know by experience the value of this quiet time with God before entering on the duties, trials, temptations, perplexities of the day, would urge young Christians to practice the little self-denial necessary, in order to regularly secure the early morning hour for this purpose. All who wish to join this Society, or to know further particulars, are asked to communicate with Miss Pascall, Sutherland House, Great Yarmouth.

SAILORS' HOME, DUBLIN.

HERE, as in every other port, "Jack ashore" is beset with temptation to all kinds of sin. While we owe so much to the skill and labour which bears us safely from port to port as occasion may require, we little think, perhaps, of all that the sailor's life involves, both of physical and moral hardship. The Sailors' Home, of which the worthy Earl of Aberdeen is patron, endeavours to counteract these by providing comfortable accommodation, interesting and instructive literature, and other means calculated to undermine the adverse influence which the sailor has thrust before him, whenever he steps on shore. The premises are admirably adapted for the purpose, both as regards position and capacity.

There is considerable scope for personal work, and if any of our readers resident in the neighbourhood could give a little spare time to it, very much more good might be done. Visitors to the city, too, would cheer those engaged at the Home by paying it a visit, and thus encouraging them in what is generally a trying and difficult work. The address is 19, Sir John Rogerson's Quay, and the secretary is Mr. W. S. Ward, R.N.R. Special rooms are set apart for officers, and a navigation school is also a useful adjunct.

FLOODS IN FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—I know that the beginning of winter in England is not the best time to ask you to make an appeal for foreign distress, but the suffering and misery brought on the South of France by the floods are so dreadful that I cannot resist the impulse of my heart to beg you to say a few words in THE CHRISTIAN on behalf of these poor people. I have before me columns and columns of heartrending letters from the districts where the two rivers, the Rhône and the Durance, have ruined everything. The French people never fail to respond nobly to any cry of distress, but the need is so immense! It is not a matter of individuals and houses, it is of whole families and villages, farms and crops en masse. It makes one heartsick to realise it. Never was the Rhône so flooded. Tables and chairs were met by an Algiers steamer sixty miles out at sea, telling their own story, an empty cradle, and who knows what?

The rivers are going down, even now, very slowly, and rain fell again. In one place the whole potatoe-crop was deluged in the ground, with no chance of digging them out, when the snow came and finished all hope, with a coating three feet thick. I feel it is useless attempting to describe the misery, which is all the worse coming at the beginning of winter. If you can make an appeal to your readers, I shall be most thankful. Subscriptions are received at the office of one of the Marseilles dailies, and published every morning. Address: Au Bureau du Petit Marseillais, 15, Quai du Canal, Marseilles, "Pour les Inondés."

Yours faithfully in Christ,
M. E. PRINSEP.

Hotel du Petit Louvre, Marseilles.

THE SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—The Leaf from our Ship Log gives some striking illustrations of the value of Miss Child's work among the sailors at 173-4, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway. Contributions are asked for the Christmas Boat, that it may be as full of useful articles as in past years.

RESCUE WORK IN PORTSMOUTH.—A Home of safety for fallen and friendless girls was opened in March last, at 1, Hale-street, Church-road, Landport, and since then thirty-one girls and two children have found a shelter there. It is desired, as soon as possible, to remove to a larger house, in order to make the undertaking self-supporting by needlework, laundry-work, &c.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—At the annual meeting of the Tees branch of this Mission, held recently at Middesbrough, the Archbishop of York, after pointing out some of the dangers to which sailors are exposed by "land sharks" and by the floating public-house which often followed them to sea, said the interest in the sailor's condition was of very recent growth. This Society might well take courage for the immense amount of progress that had been made. At the present time there were 25 chaplains connected with it, 46 scripture readers, 661 mission-helpers at sea, with 42 stations occupied at home and abroad, steam launches and other boats for the use of the chaplains, and 42 seamen's churches, institutes, and mission-rooms.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

SPAIN.

IN the last "Circular" Mr. Armstrong, writing from Valladolid, says:—"The Spaniards were formerly a sober people; now they have learned to drink, and that not their own pure wine, but wine mixed with brandy, which comes from Germany. The bad effects in this hot climate may be imagined; crimes, murders, and suicides are greatly on the increase." Mr. Armstrong also remarks with pain that the passion for bull-fighting reigns everywhere. It is the favourite amusement of children and girls, and the effect on the population is deplorable. Nevertheless, progress is made; many portions of the Scriptures are sold by the thirty colporteurs under the direction of the Secretary for the Bible Society in Spain, and by others. More evangelists are greatly needed.

ZAMBESI.

The concluding part of M. Coillard's letter in this month's Journal des Missions is of special interest. The King Robosi or Lewanika received M. Coillard with great friendliness, and eagerly desires, whatever his motives may be, more missionaries to teach his nation." "When will they come?" is the question that the missionary passes on to the Directors and French Churches; it has happily been answered by the departure of M. and Madame Jalla and M. M. H. Dardier, a medical missionary for Zambezi. The graves of their queens are regarded as sacred places and as "cities of refuge," and are respected as such, even in times of revolution. Notwithstanding this there is scarcely a country where more human blood is shed. It is hard to find a grey-haired chief; they do not live to grow old. The atrocities committed on little children and women cannot be described. A mission station has been selected in what appears to be a healthy district.

Intelligence has been received of the safe arrival on the Congo of Mr. and Mrs. Holman Bentley and the four missionaries who accompanied them.

Two cases of cannibalism have lately occurred in the island of Marquise, which shows that progress in civilisation is very slow, though the Catholics have had a monopoly of the island for forty years.

Mr. Morin, of St. Louis, Senegal, writes of great encouragement among the freed slaves and the schools for boys and girls. This is a French Colony very much under the influence of Romanism, which adds greatly to the labour of evangelising.

In the neighbourhood of Cuddapah, South India, a notable spiritual movement has begun. In one village five of the leading men have professed faith in Christ, and their influence upon others is so great that the inquirers are numerous.——In response to Hon. I. Keith-Falconer's request for a medical missionary for Aden, the Foreign Missions Committee of the Free Church of Scotland have appointed Dr. B. Stewart Cowen.

Miss Isabel Angus (daughter of Dr. Angus, Principal of Regent's Park College) has volunteered to go and labour at Bhiwani, about one hundred miles from Delhi, though in all probability she will be the only European resident in the place.——Rev. E. Vanorden writes from Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, of a visit he paid to Bazé, the terminus of the railway, near the frontiers of the Oriental State. He conducted services that were much appreciated; the people expressed a desire to have a permanent worker among them.——It is intended to found in Leipzig an establishment specially designed to train theological students for mission work among Jews.

Mr. Joseph Clark, of the Congo Mission, writing on October 12, reports further conversions at Mukimbungu, Lukungu, and Palabala. At the last-named place, where he is stationed, the chiefs are opposed to the work. Mrs. Richards and Miss Harris have both returned to their posts—the latter being married to Mr. Harvey. Mr. Eddie is on the way home to recruit.——Mr. George Sturge, a member of the Society of Friends, is paying in ten instalments 5000 dollars to the English Presbyterian China Mission.——Evangelistic work is regularly carried on amongst the women and girls of Wannargonne (India), by the Society of Woman's Work for Women.

THE FEMALE IMPOSTOR AGAIN.—We have so frequently warned our advertising friends against the devices of "the respectable-looking woman" who answers advertisements in person, and manages by a plausible story to extract money "for her return fare to the country," that we are getting rather weary of the process. We inserted a prominent caution in our issue of Sept. 30, but we have received a letter from a lady in the South of London, detailing the same tale, which in this, as in many other cases, has proved so successful. We have always been puzzled to imagine how such an unlikely, though plausible, story could be believed without corroboration. As long as people are so credulous, clever impostors will continue to flourish.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of the work of Rev. R. W. McAll, of Paris.

Our readers may like to know that the cheap illustrated edition of "The Pilgrim's Progress" can now be had from our publishers.

The following extract from the letter of a young man recently brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, ought to be laid to heart by all parents and heads of schools:—

> I am a young man under seventeen, and as long as I can remember have been living a life of sin, and what I then thought pleasure. I was in a boarding-school within a few days of five years, and nearly all my companions were as bad as, or worse than, myself.

Mr. A. MacKeith, of Glasgow, so well known as a successful worker among the young, writes:—

> I am delighted to find you turning the attention of God's children to Bunyan's "Pilgrim." I know nothing more calculated to counteract the false teaching of the day than that grand old book. It has been my privilege, along with two friends, to use it for Gospel purposes all over Scotland ever since our dear friend Mr. Moody left us, and so anxious are the people to see and hear, that we cannot find buildings large enough to contain them.

The article by Rev. H. M. Williamson (page 4) is a most important one. Every revival of Divine life in the soul has been brought about through humiliation and confession and pouring out of the heart in prayer to God. It is earnestly to be hoped that the coming Week of Prayer will be preceded by much individual heart-searching, and that in much larger numbers than ever before, and with intenser thirsting for the living God, his people will unite to seek his face. And, as a consequence, that much more time may be found necessary to be devoted to such meetings, and that a far larger proportion of it may be occupied with prayer, and less in addresses, than in recent years.

"Starved to Death in the City" was the ghastly headline to a newspaper paragraph last week. The poor unfortunate was Helen Malone, a widow, residing in a room in Bishopsgate. Because she declined to enter the infirmary, her relief was stopped, though, it is added, "it was her own fault, as she refused to fetch it." It seems incredible that a woman would starve rather than fetch relief—if she were able to do so. Anyhow, the relieving officer was surely morally, if not legally, bound to take relief to the woman if she did not fetch it. Alas for "man's inhumanity to man."

We notice that the Hammersmith Police magistrate has imposed fines on several tradesmen for obstructing the footway, by placing goods on it in front of their shops. He even goes so far as to apply the Act to goods suspended above the sidewalk, though they may be hung as high as the house. If the provisions of the Act are so stringent, we want to know how it is that brewers' draymen are permitted, without let or hindrance, so far as we have observed, to obstruct the footway in lowering their wares into the cellars of the drink-shops during traffic hours. Are publicans expressly exempted? If not, why are they practically exempted?

"An English Mother" sounds another warning through the pages of the daily press, as to the devilish devices of those who engage in the vile business of luring young women abroad by false and specious promises of employment. An orphan girl, in this case, was narrowly "saved from a fate worse than death." The "English Mother" writes:—

> I want to impress upon all girls seeking situations abroad (which many are anxious to do on account of the higher salaries offered, and the advantages of learning the language, &c.) to accept no situation through any agency whatever, however apparently straightforward its business transactions may be, unless they have the name and address of the lady abroad (not the agent) who engages them, with references to the British Consul, and the Chaplain of the Embassy, and time to verify such references. I have young daughters of my own, and I give this warning with a heart full of anxiety for those girls who are so unfortunate as to be left to get their own living, without mother or capable friend to advise them.

We are doubtful if many of our readers would suppose that the following verses are taken from a Protestant source, and the fact that they form portions of a hymn to the Virgin which appears in the parish magazine of a London Protestant Church is surely a remarkable sign of the times:—

Lady and Queen of Heaven,
Here, on earth, we would serve before thee
In thy very court at last to adore thee.

Mary, Mother and Queen,
Bring us at length where the angels lean
Choir on choir beneath thy grace;
Bring us to that hidden place
Where face to face thou art seen,
O Mary Queen.

A few months ago Mr. Stead wrote in The Contemporary Review a remarkable paper on "Government by Journalism." In the current number the subject is continued under the title of "The Journalism of the Future," in which is outlined an ingenious and far-reaching system, enabling the coming Editor to gather the public opinion of the country upon every burning question, from 600 to 1000 selected but voluntary correspondents, in as many towns and cities.

> By this co-operation between a newspaper and selected readers, it will be possible to focus the information and experience latent among our people as it has never been done before, and to take an immense stride towards the realisation of the conscious government of all by all, in the light of the wisdom of the best informed. [Our italics.] The mere fact that in every town a score of persons, from the mayor to the bellman, were certain to be called upon, as a matter of course, to express a deliberate opinion upon social or political problems before a leading journalist ventured to declare what was the public opinion of the nation, would have an incalculable influence in purifying our democracy, in compelling thought, and in quickening popular interest and [in ?] public questions.

That the system here suggested would be an immense advance in journalism, and might be of great utility to the nation, is beyond dispute; but the King or Government capable of using wisely the information gained "must be just, ruling in the fear of God." Governments already have abundant information not only of opinions but of facts relating to their subjects; but do they use it rightly? Do they "judge the poor of the people; save the children of the needy; and break in pieces the oppressor"? And would Demos rule more righteously than Aristos? Let History reply. "The conscious government of all by all, in the light of the wisdom of the best informed," never can be realised, until "a KING shall reign in righteousness," and "the saints possess the kingdom."

The Daily News, the other day, closed an article on the visit of a correspondent to a pestilent lodging-house in Southwark with the following lamentation on things as they are, and expression of the groan of the travailing creation for the coming deliverer:—

> No one takes the trouble, no one follows up poverty, misery, and squalid crime, as a physiologist follows up the symptoms in a sick worm. The constituted authorities of politics and religion just look in on the subject from time to time, now in an Act of Parliament, now in an appeal from the bishops and clergy of all denominations, in anticipation of a coming winter in the East-end. Beyond that "Israel does not care, my people do not consider." One day, perhaps, the true deliverer will come, some man who will know how to make us truly feel for one another, and grow sick and ashamed of most of the vanities of art, science, and literature, as well as of the luxury, that at present fill our profitless lives.

Yes; the True Deliverer is coming, and will do all that, and much more than that.

The groans of nature in this nether world,
Which Heaven has heard for ages, have an end.

The singular spectacle in Brussels a few days ago of a procession of a thousand women in black, bearing a petition for the release of their unfortunate relatives imprisoned for participation in the recent riots in the mining districts is likely to have a very practical result. Though the women were not permitted to go to the House of the Legislature, as they had proposed to do, they were allowed to present their petition at the Town Hall.

The King at the same time opened the Legislative Chambers, and in his speech referred to the strikes. He stated that clemency would be extended to the rioters, and added that the Government would submit measures for the formation of professional bodies to establish bonds of union between heads of manufacturing establishments and their workpeople; to regulate hours of labour of women and children; to repress abuses connected with the payment of wages; to facilitate the construction of workmen's dwellings, and to aid in the development of provident institutions for relief in times of sickness, pensions in old age, and life assurance.

This is a noble programme, and its completion will do much to remove the bitterness between capital and labour, which recent events in Belgium and France have done so much to intensify, and all Christians who long to witness the spread of that kingdom of "peace on earth, good will to men" will devoutly pray that the labours of those who are dealing with these matters may succeed and be blessed.

We have never felt or shown reluctance to express sincere regret when we have unwittingly misrepresented anyone, atheist or otherwise. Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, therefore, utters a very unwarrantable insinuation when, in The National Reformer of November 14, referring to this journal, he says:—

> It seems utterly hopeless to expect anything like fairness from our pious opponents.

In a recent issue we referred, on what we believed to be good authority, to a lecture in which Mr. Bradlaugh was said to have cited 1 Kings xv. 5, with the last clause of the verse omitted, so as to cast obloquy on the Scriptures, It appears that Mr. Bradlaugh has denied, in a letter to The Church

The Christian.

CHRIST'S COMING KINGDOM;

Or, THE LORD'S REIGN ON EARTH.

By HENRY VARLEY.

The Christian says:—"It is refreshing, in an age of feeble utterances about fundamental truth, to meet with a writer so fearless and outspoken as Mr. Varley. He knows his Bible well, and makes it throw helpful light on our Lord's coming."

The Christian Commonwealth says:—"Mr. Varley has given us a thoughtful, reverent, and suggestive book.''

London: Whiting & Co., 30 and 32, Sardinia-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.; may also be had of Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and of all Booksellers.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

CONTRIBUTIONS SOLICITED TO CLOSE THE YEAR'S WORK FREE OF DEBT.

In the course of a very few weeks the work of 1886 will be brought a close. THE LORD HAS THUS FAR very graciously sustained the HOMES and OPEN ALL NIGHT Refuge; indeed, not one good thing has been lacking.

VARIOUS MISSIONARY WORKERS have brought or sent no less than ONE THOUSAND THREE HUNDRED AND THIRTY young women and girls as applicants for admission, and to the utmost CAPACITY of the HOMES every suitable case has been promptly welcomed.

Amongst this large number were girls scarcely in THEIR TEENS, others saved just on ENTERING the DOWNWARD COURSE, and many sunk in the LOWER DEPTHS of sin, but all alike needing the salvation of the LORD JESUS CHRIST, as well as temporal succour.

Reviewing the experience of THIRTY-FIVE YEARS, the fact is recorded with great thankfulness. The Lord has GRACIOUSLY DISPOSED the hearts of HIS SERVANTS to contribute all necessary funds, and His faithfulness in time past leads to the anticipation that His stewards will be both enabled and disposed to subscribe ALL THAT MAY BE NECESSARY in relation to the work of 1886.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott will, as usual, gladly receive donations.

Office: 200, Euston-road, N.W.

ORPHAN GIRLS who have lost both parents, descended from respectable parentage, are received between the ages of 6 and 11, from any part of the United Kingdom, into THE HOME FOR FEMALE ORPHANS, Grove-road, St. John's-wood. They are clothed, boarded, and educated free of all expense, and on their leaving at the age of 16 to 17, are, if possible, provided with situations, or are delivered to their friends.

The next Election will take place in January, and Candidates may now be nominated. Those early on the list are usually the successful ones. An annual subscription of half a guinea, or more, constitutes a Governor, and confers the privilege of one vote at each election for every half guinea subscribed; a donation of five guineas or more constitutes a Life Governor, and gives one vote at each election for each five guineas. Funds will be very thankfully received.

Forms of nomination, and all particulars, may be obtained on application (by letter) to the Hon. Secretary at the Home. President.—The Right Hon. The Earl of Aberdeen. Bankers.—Messrs. Williams, Deacon & Co., 20, Birchin-lane, E.C.

E. B. RANDALL, Hon. Secretary.

TO SAILORS' FRIENDS.—The Committee of the Sailors' Bethel, Gravesend, are in great need of funds. Many destitute seamen were helped last winter. 2,500 Bibles and Testaments were given to sailors from all nations. Reports will be sent on application. To be sold to benefit the Mission, a splendid oil-painting, Christ blessing bread, for £3 10s.; an Aureophone, plays many tunes, £2; and 96 magic lantern slides, £3 10s. Old copies of CHRISTIAN or other papers thankfully received. Society unsectarian. All are invited to see the Bethel and its work.

J. T. CHAPMAN, Hon. Sec.

AN EARNEST APPEAL for eighty £5 notes.—The Committee of the Latymer-road Mission earnestly ask for help from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN. The funds are unusually low, and in order to close the present year free of debt, upwards of £400 are wanted.

The expenses of the Mission at this time of the year are very heavy.

The children are looking forward to their usual Christmas Treat, and the Committee wish to have funds in hand for their Soup Kitchen and Relief funds.

Many poor people are already applying for assistance, but our exchequer is exhausted.

The following are some of the Agencies:—

Gospel Meetings, Temperance Meetings, Evening Shelters for Boys and Girls, Sick Benefit Clubs, Soup Kitchen, Invalid Children's Dinners, Relief Fund, Savings Banks, Mothers' Meetings, Infant Nursery, and many other Meetings, too numerous to mention.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT will receive subscriptions, however small, which may also be sent to Dr. J. H. GLADSTONE, F.R.S., 17, Pembridge-square, W.; or to AULAY MACAULAY, Esq., Hon. Sec., Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting Hill, W. Visitors are always welcome.

A PRESSING NEED.—The Committee of the Children's Convalescent Home, Abbotts Hill, Ramsgate, are in need of a Harmonium. Has the reader one to spare? Mrs. S. is warmly thanked for her kind gift of a piano.—AULAY MACAULAY, Hon. Sec., Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting Hill, W.

SERMON LANE MISSION.—Funds are urgently needed to give about 2,000 Dinners, consisting of a pint of good hot soup and one pound of bread, to the poor advertising-board men, match sellers, shoeblacks and street vendors, Tuesday and Thursday, Cattle Show week. Also Christmas Dinners for about 1,000 poor of the neighbourhood, and Soup Dinners for the unemployed two days weekly during the winter months.
GEORGE FULLER, 54, Liverpool-road, Islington.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For visiting and relieving the sick poor by an unpaid agency.

The 101st Annual Meeting will be held at the Mansion House, on Friday, Dec. 17, at 3 o'clock.

Principal E. H. VINE, M.C.P.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The under-mentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED ON HIGH GROUND, WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA, on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and a first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

THE PAPACY:
Its Position, Policy, and Prospects.
BY
Rev. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.,
Author of "History of Protestantism;" "The Papacy: Its History, Dogmas, Genius, and Prospects;" "Egypt and its Future," &c.

Reprinted from "The Christian" of September 30. Revised and extended.
Printed in LARGE TYPE.

"There is another weapon for the coming conflict to which I can refer in only a single sentence: I refer to the Infallibility. The decree of the Infallibility (1870) throws its shield over all the Popes of past ages; over all the bulls and edicts of past ages; over all the pontifical doings of past ages; over all the ex-cathedrâ utterances of past ages, and the Syllabus among the rest—which it declares "infallible." In that Syllabus Pius IX. teaches that the Popes of former days in their public transactions with kings and nations never exceeded by a hair's breadth their just rights and prerogatives. The present Pope in an Encyclical not yet a year old, expressed his approval of the Syllabus. But surely the man who justifies as right and righteous all the doings of the Papacy in the past—the excommunication of kings; the overthrow of governments; the interdicts on nations; and the crusades against religion—is prepared to renew all these atrocities in the future whenever the time shall be fitting. There can be no uncharitableness in believing this. But we have here to do with the "Infallibility" as an instrument to work with. It gives tenfold power to the Pope's hand. The Infallibility it is that gathers up all the instrumentalities we have enumerated before; combines them into one tremendous mechanism; and makes the working of that mechanism swift and crushing. It strikes with the promptitude and power of omnipotence. Take a moment's survey of it."

THE LIFE OF JOHN B. GOUGH,

The Great Temperance Orator.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

In these eight-and-twenty columns of clearly-printed matter, all the main incidents of this eventful Life are recorded with vividness and force. The work has met with general commendation.

Price for Distribution, 7s. per 100.

This LIFE-SKETCH is attractive in appearance, interesting in matter, and excellently printed. Employers of labour and all interested in the welfare of the working-classes will find it a most suitable narrative for free distribution amongst the workers. It is to be hoped that its circulation will result in many a moral and spiritual reformation.

"We have received from the enterprising publishers a PENNY EDITION of the LIFE OF JOHN B. GOUGH, the great Temperance Orator, that ought to be read by all. In eleven brief chapters the chief events of Mr. Gough's career are gone over. His childhood and youth in Kent; his journey to America; the death of his mother; his drinking habits; his taking the pledge; his active work for God and Temperance; and his last days—are all clearly described. 'Band of Hope' leaders ought to see that this work is circulated by thousands among all classes of the community. Most people will read a short story, especially if it is beautifully illustrated, as is this story of J. B. Gough. It is a perfect marvel of taste and cheapness."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT have published a splendid PENNY pamphlet on the Life and Work of JOHN B. GOUGH. . . . We could wish every parent in the land possessed a copy, and every young man also. . . . Reader, get it: it will do you good!"—Christian Treasury.

"This cheap biography of the great Temperance Orator will interest the million, and deserves a very wide circulation."—Word and Work.

"It is a wonderful PENNYWORTH; and we trust that it will be distributed by thousands, as it deserves to be."
Nonconformist and Independent.

"It is a marvellous PENNYWORTH; and ought to sell by scores of thousands."—Gospel Magazine.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS:

An Affectionate Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD.

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER; and a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is the sisterly tribute which Frances, in tears and loneliness, brings to lay on Mary's grave—a tribute as full of fragrance and touching beauty as the life whose memory it seeks to perpetuate was full of sweetness and innocence. It is more than a tribute; it is the fulfilment of a solemn commission breathed from the lips of the dying—a commission that might have adorned the lips of Jesus in the hour of his agony: 'Tell everybody to be good.' In this way the one whom she most loved—if a sister's can exceed a mother's love—the one to whom she was most dear, seeks to discharge the dying trust. How faithfully, how transcendently she has performed this duty, you have only to read to ascertain."
From the Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER.

FROM THE PREFACE.

This little volume may, I hope, awaken in some minds thoughts of a devotional character. Some of the ideas contained in it came to me in a chamber of sickness, which was at one time expected to be my chamber of death. The thoughts were pleasant and soothing to myself. May they, by God's blessing, be so also to some of my fellow-pilgrims. A. L. O. E.

"The style in which the narrative is written is at once simple and elegant, bearing in its natural form of expression, almost on every page, the impress of truth. There is no raving, no exaggeration, nothing that savours of dark and mysterious insinuations; nothing but the expression of deep regret that, under the sanction of the religion of Christ, such a system should be tolerated."—Berwick Warder.

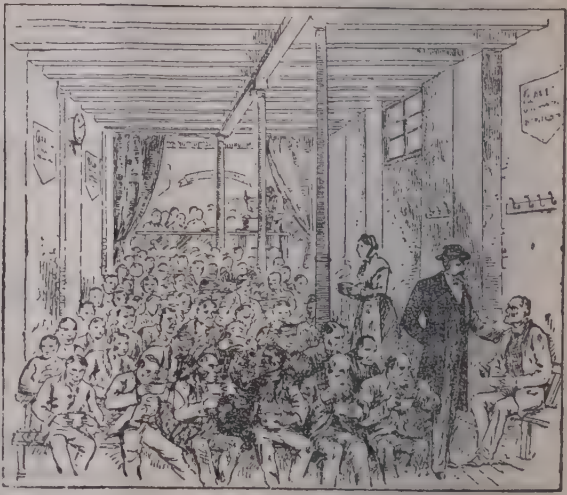
NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.

COMMENCED AT KINGSLAND, N.E., 1865.



SPECIAL APPEAL,

WINTER—1886-7.

May we plead for the assistance of the Christian reader for the above Missions, in SIX very poor and destitute localities of the East and North of London, embracing Mission Halls at Kingsland, Millwall, Poplar, Bow, Stoke Newington, and Old Ford.

We specially plead for the work amongst—

DESTITUTE DOCK LABOURERS AND SAILORS.
(We gave 5,000 dinners to these last Winter.)
MATCH FACTORY AND OTHER GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN.
THE DESERVING UNEMPLOYED POOR.
DESTITUTE CHILDREN (food and clothes).
TWO WORKING LADS' INSTITUTES.
MISSION HALL EXPENSES AND MISSIONARIES.
PURCHASE OF THE STOKE NEWINGTON MISSION HALL.
(£700 required, towards which we have only £150).

Our immediate needs are more than £1,000, towards which the smallest contribution will be most gratefully received and acknowledged if sent to the Editors, or to

Yours very respectfully,

Postal Address:—2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, London, N.

Hon. Auditors: Messrs. Jones, Hill & Vellacott, Chartered Accountants, 1, Finsbury-circus, E.C.

Drafts should be crossed "Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co," 54, Lombard-street, E.C., to whom they may be paid direct if preferred, to the account of "The North-East London Gospel Missions." Pamphlet entitled, "Words of Life and Deeds of Love," illustrated, with Balance Sheet, sent on application for two stamps.

Parcels of worn clothes, boots, shoes, or bedding would be gratefully received and carefully distributed.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

IMPORTANT CONDITIONAL GIFT.

To the Readers of "The Christian."

Dear Friends,—Since the last Supper to the Criminal Classes, presided over by Lord Coleridge, the number of applications on behalf of falling and fallen men and boys has largely increased, no doubt partially owing to the urgent appeal made by the Lord Chief Justice commending more lenient sentences and mercy in first offences.

Within the last three months no less than fifty-six lads of tender age have been handed over to our care by various judges and magistrates. Consequent upon this pressure is our present low financial condition. We deeply regret that at this moment we are quite £1000 behindhand, which we are most anxious to obtain at once to clear off pressing liabilities. We have just received from a friend of the Mission a generous offer of £100 towards clearing off this debt provided that nine others will do the same by the 31st December.

Donations towards the accomplishment of this desirable object should be sent to the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street; or to

Yours sincerely,
GEO. HATTON,
Supt., St. Giles' Christian Mission.

4, Ampton-street, Regent-square.

JAMES NISBET & Co., 21, Berners-street, W.

Times, having so quoted the verse. Not being diligent students of our High Church contemporary, we were in entire ignorance of the fact of this denial, or we should certainly not have alluded to the matter.

In the same issue of Mr. Bradlaugh's paper, as that in which he attacks us for unfairness, we observe he prints a letter recently sent to The Church Times, in which the charge of misquotation against Mr. Bradlaugh is specifically reasserted by one who was present on the occasion, and who states that several of his friends also heard the misquotation. Mr. Bradlaugh again denies, but admits in effect that he quoted 1 Kings xiv. 8, where the qualifying clause "except in the matter of Uriah the Hittite," does not appear in the text. Even accepting Mr. Bradlaugh's version of the affair, it seems to us a striking example of that "unfairness" of which he so strongly disapproves, to lay stress on the latter passage as a complete statement of the case.

Our greatest regret in connection with the matter is that Mr. Bradlaugh should employ his undoubted gifts and influence to overthrow a faith that has done so much to elevate and bless humanity, to put it on the lowest ground. We are glad to believe, however (vide Mr. Woffendale's paper, The Light of the World, for November, Kensit), that infidelity and so-called "Secularism" are on the decline in London. We do not despair of one day seeing Mr. Bradlaugh earnestly upholding the faith he now labours hard to destroy.

We rejoice to find our youngest contemporary, The British Weekly, justifying its existence by vigorous defence of fundamental truth. It records the recognition of a Congregational minister at Newcastle, "who preached (shall we say?) on Prince Krapotkine and his socialistic theories," while in the evening another minister "delivered the charge to the Church." This incident is not cited as representative of Nonconformist life in England; but yet as symptomatic of tendencies, which in a greater or less degree affect all churches. The following is the worthy conclusion of a noble manifesto on behalf of the truth.

"You may revise hymns and strike out all references to the Divinity of Christ and his Atonement; you may volatilise or torture certain texts so as to give the meaning you wish; but you cannot read the Bible or chant Psalms without having the lie constantly given to your doctrine. Religious teachers may say they do not understand the Atonement, but their hearers understand it well enough and give God thanks. Preachers may differ from our Lord and his Apostles, but hearers think that if there are wiser teachers than Jesus, Paul, and John, they have not yet listened to their voices. Preachers may speak of aspirings and followings after the ideal while they keep a vow of more than Trappist severity of spiritual silence towards the Son of God, but their hearers will not surrender the present love of Christ, the one abiding good that has come to them through the frustrated and broken years. If the determined effort now made to have the Divinity and Atonement of Christ ignored or left open in the Congregational churches should succeed, it will be found that the very life of these churches has been chilled and withered. The preaching of the idyll of the Galilean peasant, who by an early and cruel death passed over to the ranks of the silent majority, is no more than the vision of shining waters in the desert to men who die of thirst."

Canon Body is eloquent, and, when he chooses, evangelical to a degree. Nothing could be better as a statement of what true conversion is than the following, which we take from the report of an address in a London church last week:—

> What is conversion? It had three stages—(a) conviction of sin; (b) peace through faith in Christ; and (c) surrender of the will to Christ. In other words, it involved repentance, faith, and obedience. It was not a turning, as many thought, from misery to happiness, but from sin to righteousness, from disobedience to obedience, and from the devil to God. One much experienced in dealing with human souls, who had only recently died, said that all conversions which did not involve deliberate turning from sin to righteousness, sooner or later came to nothing. Men were only half converted who only took Jesus as their Saviour, and did not throne Him in their hearts as Christ their King. It must be a real conversion of character issuing in conversion of life. All other conversion was a delusion.

So far we are quite at one with the eminent mission preacher; but when he departs from the simplicity of Scriptural teaching and lapses into bald and unadulterated sacramentarianism, we must protest. We would not utter a word in derogation of the importance or value of the Lord's Supper as a means of grace. But to say, as Canon Body went on to say, that "in Bible days the Eucharist was the sun of the Christian system, round which all other means of grace revolved," is, in our judgment, to exalt the memorial feast to a place it was never intended to occupy; and is an error of the grossest and most dangerous kind. It is of the essence of Ritualism, and is as unscriptural, according to our understanding of the Scripture, as the kindred dogma of baptismal regeneration.

Another statement by the Canon is almost equally objectionable, and contains the germ of serious error:—

> Christians think of their churches as places for saying their prayers and hearing sermons, and not enough as the place where the living Jesus meets his people and gives them his cleansing gifts.

This notion as to the special sacredness of buildings that are used for the public worship of God, lies at the root of most of the modern formalism which does duty for religion with so many church and chapel-goers. We recollect once hearing Dr. Adolph Saphir say that the assemblies of the early Christians were not for worship (which could be offered in their own homes) so much as for the united study and exposition of the Scripture. If this were more generally understood, there would not be less true worship, but it would be more "in spirit and in truth," which is the only acceptable worship in the sight of God.

The reunion of the various Methodist bodies is now being energetically advocated in The Methodist Times, which, with its able editor, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, may be said to represent the modern progressive liberal element in "Wesleyan Methodism." The proposal is warmly supported by four ex-Presidents of the original body, bearing the well-known and honoured names of William Arthur, Alexander McAulay, Ebenezer E. Jenkins, and Charles Garrett. Many possible advantages of such union and reunion are obvious: e.g., co-operation instead of competition; brotherly-kindness in exchange for bitterness; the saving of labour and expense; "the survival of the fittest" preachers; and the union of two or more small and now rival congregations under a more competent ministry.

But the union of those who are of one mind as to Methodism is only a step towards a larger union. There is more vital power of cohesion in Christianity itself than in any one phase of it. The union and reunion of Methodists must in consistency be followed by the union and reunion of Christians—the gathering together in one of the children of God who are scattered abroad.

It is possible that the union and reunion of Methodists, or of Presbyterians, might develop into a powerful despotism, a tremendous tyranny. And this will certainly be the case unless the unification, whenever and to whatever extent it takes place, is accompanied by a proportionally increased spirituality and largeness of heart towards all Christians. A united and almighty Methodism is not the world's need, but united and almighty Christianity. The heart of the Lord's last intercessory prayer before He suffered, was "that they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me."

A secretary of one of the largest foreign missionary societies writes:—"I wonder at the amount of valuable matter got into a single number of THE CHRISTIAN. It is something marvellous, having regard to the variety and the quality of the information. One cannot but feel that there are thousands who now never see it, who, if they could be induced to read a single number, would not be without it in future." The same post brings us an appeal from Auckland, hoping that we may make THE CHRISTIAN better known in New Zealand.

As another year is drawing to its close, it is a fitting time to ask our readers if they will each kindly and energetically co-operate with us in extending the circulation and enlarging the influence of this paper. We send it freely to many foreign missionaries, and not a few friends do the same with their copies after reading them. We will send the names of missionaries to any who desire to send them their own copies, or to specially subscribe for this purpose. No missionary in the world should be without it. We will send it post-free, for a month, to any minister, Sunday-school superintendent, teacher, or any other interested in evangelistic or missionary work, and likely to become a constant reader, on receipt of four stamps with the address. Every one of our friends might thus introduce it into some new sphere. Will you?

"The foes from whom 'the organised drunkard manufacturers in the United States' have the most to fear" (says The New York Herald) "are educated women." Whereon The Newcastle Daily Leader truly remarks:—"Our educated women are hardly heard of as yet in opposition to the drink interest in England, whereas in America over one hundred and twenty thousand of the brightest women are organised, actively associated, and publicly and mutually pledged against the trade."

A MINISTERS' CONFERENCE.

BY ONE OF THEM.

A Conference of Congregational ministers was held in the Institute, Priory-street, Hastings, on Nov. 16 and two following days. It was called for the special purpose of waiting upon God, and for consultation about the more successful discharge of the work of the ministry. About ninety ministers were present. The season was a hallowed one, and will long live in the memory of the brethren who, "with one accord," yearned for a new baptism of the Holy Spirit's power.

Rev. W. Guest, who had taken a leading part in convening the Conference, presided at the first meeting, and delivered an address on "Spiritual Life and Congregationalism." He reminded us that in former times meetings were much more devoted to the quickening of the minister's own religious life and personal devotedness. The quickened zeal and devotedness in the Established Church is owing not so much to Church Congresses as to diocesan and the more private clerical conferences. He remembered how at the memorable Chester Conference John Angell James delivered a powerful address, showing that "to have a better world we must have a better Church, and to have a better Church we must have holy pastors." He condemned recourse to doubtful expedients, and the accommodations of the Divine message to a worldly taste. There must be no falling back on substitutes for spiritual energy, no seeking to attract by what is entertaining, artistic, formal, and musical. We must rely for prosperity on the Spirit of God.

Rev. J. B. Figgis read several texts referring to God's appointment of "watchmen." Searching questions as to faithfulness promoted among those present a spirit of profound humiliation. Our ordination vows were recalled. Had we been faithful to our promises? Are we instant out of season? We need not walk on stilts, but let us remember the solemnity of our calling. "The Lord is with us as long as we are with Him;" no longer. Have we not grieved the Spirit and wounded Christ in the house of his friends? How about temper? Is our money all consecrated? Are we clear of covetousness? Pure in life, deed, heart, language, and imagination? As to reading: the late David Thomas, a giant among us, said, "I never read a sceptical book unless I can give God a good reason for doing so." Mr. Haslam says, "You can make yourself anything you like by your reading." As to controversy, if we must take part in it let it be in the spirit of meekness and love. Do we want other congregations to prosper as much or more than our own? A pious man, with seven sons in the ministry, could not pass a Baptist chapel till he felt that he could pray God to bless it as much as the parish church. We shall need much of this spirit in these days of controversy.

Presiding at the evening meeting, Rev. C. R. Howell read 2 Cor. iii., and reminded us how Moses, instead of meeting in conference with his brethren about his work for God, was called to forty days of unbroken communion with God. The result was seen in his fortitude, meekness, and all but self-effacement. An abiding glory may clothe those who will commune with God now, and submit to the same spirit of self-effacement.

Rev. Professor Cave, of Hackney College, read a very suggestive paper, giving plans for making meetings of the Church "means of grace."

Rev. Dr. Clemance said: We are longing for a better and holier state of things in our churches. God is willing to grant this. All needed help is provided. Our Lord said, "I will pray the Father, and He will send you another Comforter;" which words might mean, another "instead of," or another "as well as" Myself. So we have two Paracletes. The word is the same. Paraclete means a great deal more than Comforter, Advocate, or "Helper" (Marg. reading R.V.); it means, one called in to stand by one's side, to undertake his cause, and see it carried through. We have two such helpers. We need them as penitents that we may hear the voice of pardon; as believers, that we may have deeper assurance of the truth; as ambassadors—that the world may not put us to shame. What are their mutual relations? One is above, the other below; one helps from the Throne, the other helps us to send up prayers of love to the Throne; the help of the Son is by the appointment of the Father, the help of the Spirit through the mediation of the Son; the one helps by his sacrifice for sin, the other by "convincing of sin, and by showing to the needy heart a full Christ." One, in heaven, prepares the place for us; the other, on earth, prepares us for the place. As ambassadors—while Christ pleads above that sin may not put us out of court; the advocate below inspires us with strength that the world may not put us to shame. Scepticism is calling out for a verifying process. The Spirit works within us, and enables us to see the things of God. Instead of trusting to the power of argument, let us trust the power of the Spirit, which can make the argument tell in the right way.

Rev. Mr. Perkins said we sometimes make the mistake of waiting for revival till God shall give us special indications of his willingness, whereas He is always willing to pour out the blessing. Rev. Mr. Brierly: The Spirit may be quenched by our want of charity, and by our want of boldness in regard to his message. Rev. Mr. Jukes: We shall be blessed in proportion to our receptivity, and this will depend on our prayerfulness, on our deeper study of the Word; and we must plead for the Master's enthusiasm. Rev. A. D. MacMillan uttered some strong words about modern amusements. Rev. Professor Cave urged that instead of a short monthly Church meeting for the transaction of business, or on some other evening occasionally, the members of the Church should meet for the quickening of spiritual life.

Rev. W. Crosbie, in an address of much power, spoke on Acts iv. 24—35: "When they had prayed." Everything hinged there. It always does. Here we have a model prayer. Distinguishing characteristics—(1) United; (2) Believing; (3) Earnest; (4) Scriptural; (5) Practical; (6) Christ-honouring. What was the answer? The place was shaken. They were all filled with the Spirit. They had been filled with the Spirit before, and had not lost what they then received; but spiritual capacity was now increased for greater measure of the Spirit. To this development there is no limit, for God is infinite. Results of the answer—(1) The multitude was bold to speak of Christ; our preaching must have the ring of reality. (2) Union; the true solution of the question of union lies in being baptized into fellowship with Christ. (3) Property consecrated; the true communion is not in saying "yours is mine, but mine is yours." (4) Witnessing to the resurrection. (5) Great grace.

An hour was spent in prayer, before the public meeting held in Robertson-street Chapel. At this last meeting on Wednesday, Rev. C. New presided. Rev. Mr. Ramsey, Dewsbury, delivered an address on "The Appetite for Prayer." He said some have lost this appetite. No spiritual plight more pitiable. The poor fishermen at Labrador said to a travelling missionary: "Don't be afraid to give us too much prayers; we are hungry for prayers." The cultivation of private prayer conditions our observance of social and family prayer. He who said he "watered his couch with tears," said also, "One thing have I desired of the Lord," &c. Avoid what will lessen the appetite for prayer, places of levity, &c. Do more work for God, and as servants you will feel need of waiting on God to renew your strength.

Rev. Professor Cave: Some years ago people said to me, "You seem a changed man!" I am. I knew something of peace in Christ, and yet I was a changed man since I found the fifth Gospel in the ideal church as sketched in the Acts. Now I believe in modern Pentecosts; not merely in the salvation of one here and there, but of many by one sermon, if only you and we look to God. The Spirit is ready to bless us when He can do it without injuring us. Are you ready? The two conditions of modern Pentecosts are Apostolic preaching and Apostolic praying. You Christian people make your pulpits. If you want literary effort without the Gospel, you cannot expect souls to be saved. Pray that pastors may have holy boldness. It is prayerlessness that restrains the blessing.

Rev. Henry Simon spoke of the rivers of living water which Christ promised should flow from those who should believe in Him. We really live when He fills the horizon of our vision. Rivers shall flow from the believer; it seems too good to be true.

Rev. Mr. Brierly spoke about the Christian education of children. We are enthusiastic as a nation now about education. So are all the Western nations. But secular education is not enough. Parents neglect to deal personally, and in a loving spirit, with their own children in the matter of salvation. They put the responsibility on the minister. Then by and by the time comes for a lad to leave home for school, and the father says, "be a good lad," and the mother says, "read your Bible;" but they have not made the boy feel that they longed for his second birth. God makes us parents that we may have this joy of seeing our children new born. The master at school often shifts the responsibility of close dealing with the scholar on the minister, and the lad goes into the great world without being led to think of his personal relation to God, and without the restraining influence of religious principle. Deal personally with them. Take your children aside, and pray with them. If they are absent, write to them.

Next morning the subject was, "Conversion of Souls: The Hindrances and Encouragements of Modern Times." In an admirable address, Rev. Mr. Ramsey said: I shall never forget how, at the very beginning of my ministry, an old woman I visited, a believer, asked me, "Are you having your hire?" "What do you mean?" "Are you having your hire? you know souls are your hire." One great hindrance is the lack of strong conviction as to the necessity of conversion. Much of this arises from the doubting spirit of the age—a spirit fostered by the secular and semi-religious Press. Then we are hindered by the flagrant worldlines of the day, seen in the passion for business that fortunes may be made, and in the passion for amusement. Our labours are marred by the multiplied efforts made under the sanctions of piety to provide most frivolous amusements to raise funds for the cause of God. Stand up against this tide of worldliness. Then we are hindered by the inconsistencies of professing Christians. Encouragements are found in the great temperance reform, and in the rapid increase of education, which affords a wider field for the diffusion of the truth. More persons can read, and we must make more use of the Press. I have for years circulated leaflets I have written. There is a growing attention to the question of the probability of the salvation of very young children. May God give us what Paxton Hood called "the instinct for souls."

Several of the brethren spoke of their methods of work in trying to win souls. The series of meetings was brought to a close by a united Communion in Robertson-street Chapel.

BRIXTON Y.W.C.A. held its sixth anniversary on Thursday, November 11. Addresses were given by Revs. N. A. Garland, J. Gledstone, and A. E. Foster. The report spoke of great progress and much blessing during the year. Early and late teas were given the following week, and were much appreciated. The junior members met on the 25th.

BROMLEY-BY-BOW.—The first annual meeting of the evangelistic band in connection with Berger Hall was held on Friday, Nov. 12, Rev. Knight Chaplin presiding. The report read by Mr. J. V. Harris, Secretary, showed that 92 indoor meetings, and 37 open-air meetings had been held in all parts of London during the past year. A goodly number have professed to receive Christ as their Saviour. Addresses were given by the Chairman, Miss Guinness, and others. This band consists of twenty working-men, most of whom have been rescued by the Mission in Bromley, in connnection with the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions. They are open to receive invitations to conduct Gospel or Gospel Temperance meetings in any part of London. Mr. J. V. Harris, 56, Venue-street, St. Leonard's-road, Poplar, E., is Secretary.

THE TWILIGHT CONTINENT.

LETTER FROM BISHOP TAYLOR.

Two years ago I decided to plant self-supporting missions as early as practicable in Upper Kassai countries, in the heart of South Central Africa—countries till within the last three years unknown to history, hence not pre-empted by any missionary society. The only route then known by which to reach that region was by the old caravan path of Angola, and I planted last year a chain of missions, extending along that path inland 390 miles. Later I determined to adopt the Congo and Kassai route, more recently explored, and to extend my Angola missions south and east to nations equally needy. So this year I have taken nine missionary men and one lady up to Stanley Pool, and founded a receiving and supply station at Kimpoko, twenty miles east of Leopoldville.

On a personal acquaintance later with Lieut. Weisman, and with Dr. Rolf, who explored the Sankoora in a Congo State steamer, demonstrating it to be a great steamboat waterway across the Continent to the neighbourhood of Nyangwe, on the Lualaba, I have become more and more deeply convinced that the Lord will have me plant along those rivers large forces of holy men and women to give light to millions of people, who for countless ages have been sitting in darkness. But, with the present steamer facilities of the Upper Congo, I have found it utterly impossible to get passage up the Kassai for even one missionary. A schooner can be used on the Congo, but not on the Kassai, which, though as large as the Congo above the junction, is so crooked as to preclude sail vessel navigation. So we are bound to have a steamer of our own, for the Upper Congo waterways, or fail utterly to advance beyond Stanley Pool.

The cost of a suitable steamer—construction, freights, transport 237 miles on the shoulders and heads of native men, and re-construction and equipment at Kimpoko—will amount to a sum total of £4000. "A large sum of money!" Yes; but five of my missionaries have laid on the altar of Africa's redemption their blood and bones, and I have now at the front in South Central Africa fifty-three who are "living sacrifices" on the same altar, ready, at the bidding of the King, to be "offered up" now, or to be "used up" by years of toil. If four thousand men and women who pray for the salvation of the benighted millions of Africa, yet not called on to give their lives, will give each £1 for our steamer, they will furnish us a propelling force on which our whole movement hinges. Without it we can accomplish in the great Congo basin nothing at all; with it, by the will of God, we will build Gospel lighthouses in those dark regions with a rapidity that will astonish angels and men, and thrill the Saviour's heart with gladness.

My missionaries are well, happy, and hopeful. I am now on my way to England to arrange for this steamer, and get it under contract before I leave again for Liberia, about January 1 next. I expect to spend a few months in planting self-supporting missions among the neglected native tribes of the Liberian Coast and about the 1st of June, 1887, to join the ship conveying our steamer and our South Central Africa expedition of missionaries for the coming year, and proceed with them to the Congo. So those who will take stock in our steamer will please pay over the £1 (more or less, as they wish to give) to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, who will acknowledge receipt in their journal, and pay it over to my bankers, Messrs. Fowler Brothers, Victoria-street, Liverpool. Respectfully submitted in prayer and faith, by

SS. St. Thomé, WILLIAM TAYLOR.
Off the Coast of Africa, Nov. 1.

Y.M.C.A. WEEK OF PRAYER.

THE Week of Special Prayer for young men appears to have been largely observed at the Y.M.C.A.'s in London and the country.

At Exeter Hall the meetings were largely attended, and special addresses given. At the Leadenhall-street and Burlington Hall (Regent-street) Branches, the spirit of prayer has been very manifest, and there is expectation of blessing to follow. At the South Branch, Fentiman-road, the rooms were crowded with young men. The meetings were times of great refreshing, and anxious ones were spoken with. The Westbourne-grove Branch joined heartily in the arrangements for the week. At Stratford a prayer-meeting was held every evening. At Hammersmith, Camden-road, Hackney, and Croydon, there was special supplication, as well as special addresses. At Stafford Rooms on Wednesday evening the large hall was nearly filled with young men from the shops of the neighbourhood. This was a season of great spiritual power and blessing. At the Hampstead Branch sermons were arranged to be preached at most of the churches and chapels, and a four days' mission to young men was held at the new building in Willoughby-road. Twelve local pastors gave special sermons in connection with the Finsbury Park Branch on Sunday last or the preceding Sunday. Services were held at the Hall of the Association, conducted by Mr. T. Shuldham Henry and others; there have been tokens of marked blessing.

THE PROVINCES.

At Brighton twenty-five ministers and clergymen preached special sermons to young men on Sunday, and the large Assembly Room was well filled every night during the week. Earnest prayer was also made for the ensuing mission to young men. A ten days' mission to young men at Bournemouth, by Rev. W. Mowll, has been greatly blessed. Many souls have been saved, and backsliders restored. The meetings have been crowded, and deep interest manifested. At Leeds and Plymouth an earnest spirit of prayer prevailed, and aggressive evangelistic efforts for the extension of Christ's kingdom have been arranged. The meetings at York have been blessed seasons to those present. The Cardiff secretary writes, "We have much to thank God for, and for the work of the Lord in our midst." The attendance at the various meetings in Birmingham has been larger than on any previous occasion. Earnest prayer was offered on behalf of the young men of the town, and it is believed the work of the Association will be greatly stimulated thereby. Sermons to young men were preached in thirty-six places of worship in Bristol, and the subject has been taken up most heartily, parents and friends having been requested to make it a matter of family prayer. The meetings held during the week at the Institute will be followed up until the mission to young men by Mr. George Clarke. Meetings for prayer were held at Bath, and a sermon to young men was preached by Prebendary Anderson.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For widespread awakening in Dudhope Mission District, Dundee.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings and Bible-readings at Woodgrange Baptist Chapel, Forest Gate.——For blessing on a mission by Messrs. Armstrong and Dymond, South Shields.

WALDENSIAN MISSIONS.—At the Synod, held in September last, after the Ordination Service, when four students were set apart for the ministry of the Word, union with the Free Italian Church was decided upon, 69 votes being recorded in favour of this step and only 4 against. The United Church will be known as the Evangelical Waldensian Church until, as is hoped, the day come when the great increase of its numbers, or its union with other Italian Waldensian Evangelical denominations, will admit of its taking the name of the Evangelical Church of Italy.

HOLLOWAY EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—The twentieth anniversary of this Mission was celebrated at Warlter's-road school-room, Camden-road, on Nov. 11. Mr. W. Green, Rev. G. Playford, Messrs. R. Paton, Colin Young, and others addressed the meeting, while some of those who had been blessed by its instrumentality came long distances to testify. Mr. Putterill, the Superintendent, stated that during the year 249 open-air services had been held, and 450 Gospel, prayer, and temperance meetings in the hall. During last winter free breakfasts and teas were given to over 1000 of the poor and unemployed in the district.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

CHELTENHAM.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH have made an encouraging start to their Cheltenham mission. A very sympathetic feeling manifests itself among the Nonconformists of the town, and the interest in the mission is growing among all classes.

SOUTHAMPTON.

A successful mission of seventeen days, held by Mr. Stephen J. Crocker, of Bristol, at Hunt's Assembly-room, Southampton, was brought to a close on Tuesday, November 16. The services have been well attended on week evenings, and crowded on Sundays, mostly by the working classes, in whose interest they were specially held.

YARM-ON-TEES.

Mr. H. Thorne has concluded a most successful nine days' mission connected with the Y.M.C.A. in Yarm-on-Tees. Noonday prayer-meetings and afternoon Bible-readings were very satisfactorily attended. Each week evening Mr. Thorne addressed crowded evangelistic meetings; his earnest and powerful appeals were blessed to the conversion of souls, and to the stirring up of those already on the Lord's side. All denominations joined in the work, and a united mission choir led the singing.

DERBY.

During the past twelve days a special mission has been held in the Episcopal churches of this town. Canon Lifroy, Canon Fisher, Dr. Morris, Father Black, and other earnest mission preachers have addressed the crowds that filled the churches from end to end. A general awakening seems to have taken place. Mid-day meetings have been held for business men, besides separate meetings for men and women in all the churches. The purity question has been made prominent. The Methodist and Baptist churches are now taking up the work, and for another twelve days the work will continue.

A. J. D.

WEST NORWOOD.

Mr. Richard Weaver has recently concluded a ten days' mission, which has been attended with most encouraging spiritual results. Auckland Hall was crowded to excess, and night after night inquirers professed to have found the Saviour; at the close of the mission many bore public testimony to this effect. Mr. Weaver's addresses were remarkable for their faithful and fearless references (perhaps a little uncommon now-a-days) to the awful doom of the unsaved; and to this might in some cases be traced the deep concern which afterwards gave place to joyful assurance of acceptance with God.

ASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Rev. W. H. M. Aitken, assisted by Rev. J. Stephens and Mrs. Crouch, have conducted a mission in this place. In spite of unfavourable weather, the congregations increased in size and interest from night to night. Mr. Aitken visited some of the factories in the parish, and made a great impression. Many whom he thus met came afterwards to the church, and some were found anxiously inquiring the way of salvation. The men especially were attracted by his preaching. On the second Sunday upwards of five hundred attended the special service for men in the parish church, and on the last Sunday even a larger number listened with profound impression to Mr. Aitken's stirring appeals.

Mr. Stephens attracted large numbers of children. The hearts of many were touched; some were led, it is believed, to give themselves to the Lord. Mrs. Crouch's meetings for women were crowded every day, notwithstanding the rain. Many whose homes are full of sorrow were led to seek strength and comfort from the God of all comfort.

A mission hall has been opened in Oakley-street, Westminster Bridge-road, in connection with Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road.——A large sum has already been promised for the West-end Wesleyan Mission, and there is little doubt the required £50,000 will be raised.——Evangelistic services by Independent ministers amongst villages in the south-west corner of Dorsetshire, have been very successful.——Mr. Moody, after a season's work at Auburn, New York, visits Harvard University (Boston), the students of which are supposed to be unusually "hard" in religious matters.——The Church Army will soon commence work at Southampton and Hastings.——Mr. Richard Weaver will commence a mission in connection with Mr. J. Quarrier's work, Glasgow, on Sunday, 28th inst.——Mr. Charles James, of the Gospel Purity Association, has addressed meetings at Derby and Burton-on-Trent.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION

At the annual meeting of this Association, held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday of last week, the Bishop of Southwell, as chairman, said their work must be aggressive, and they could not expect it to be popular. He was thankful for the earnestness which many young men were showing in regard to it.

Mr. Percy Bunting said a great deal of work done in connection with the foreign traffic in girls, and of the visitation work, could not be tabulated. In the coming session of Parliament they hoped to get the law amended in two directions. The first was to make street solicitation criminal for vicious men, and the second, to give power to magistrates to remove children out of the control of their parents where it could be shown that these were unfit to have the care of them. There were many cases in which children were brought up in workhouses and other institutions; their parents who had deserted them came forward and claimed them after a certain age, and this for the basest of purposes, so that the work of training was thrown away.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant, as representing the Rescue and Preventive Committee, spoke first of the necessity of having preventive work thoroughly organised all over the kingdom. The Committee had investigated into the well-known fact, that soon after the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act numbers of girls disappeared from off the streets. They ascertained that the majority of these girls were living at home with dissolute parents, who, alas! were using the rights of parentage without discharging its duties. Referring to night shelters, she spoke of the importance of furnishing the police with the addresses of all such places in the different localities. As to their necessity, she gave a painful illustration in the case of a child of twelve years of age, who was picked up in the streets late at night "dead drunk." Though sent into the country, and tended with every care, she died six weeks after. Earnestly, too, she pleaded on behalf of the pantomime children, and urged that neither grown-up persons nor their children had any right to take their pleasure at the expense of others. At what a fearful expense to these poor little ones, from three to eight or ten years of age, this Christmas pleasure was given, she well showed. In such an atmosphere as that in which they spent so many hours, the physical effects were most disastrous, and, as a consequence, at a very early age they become depraved, blazé, and morbid. One pitiful case she mentioned, as showing the injury to the moral system. One poor girl, notwithstanding that she was suffering acutely from rheumatic fever, persisted in going on to the stage, till in her agony she fell down, and was thence carried to the London Hospital. Such was the spell of fascination woven around this poor child's mind by her association with the stage, that not one word of the simple stories of Jesus and his love, with which the nurse tried to soothe her pain, had any effect upon her. In her death agony she desired that her tights and spangles might be put on the bed in front of her, that thus she might be reminded of scenes in which she had mingled.

Important information as to the work of the other sub-committees was given. One of the worst houses in London had been closed through the intervention of the Association. The rules of the Association had been altered by the substitution of the word "minors" for "girls," so that now boys also would be protected from depraved persons.

Among the other speakers were the Bishop of Bedford, Mr. W. T. Stead. Mr. Francis Peek was elected treasurer in room of the late Mr. Samuel Morley.

In the evening a Conference was held of workers for various associations in town and country. Encouraging reports were given of the progress made in the work at home and abroad. A very gratifying account was given by a German officer of the extent to which the import of German girls into London for evil purposes has been checked. It was again announced that the Committee propose to draft a Bill amending the Criminal Law Amendment Act, which will be introduced next Session, embodying those alterations recommended by the judges, and stopping the loopholes through which criminals at present succeed in escaping.

A VERY GRAVE SUBJECT.

The relation of British rule in India and our Crown colonies and dependencies, to Christian Missions and Social Purity—a matter of the most serious interest to the Christian churches of Great Britain—was the subject of a lecture given last Monday evening by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, editor of The Sentinel, in the Friends' Meeting House, Uxbridge.

After a long and heroic struggle, he said, the British people abolished slavery in Jamaica and our other West Indian Islands. Now, without the knowledge of the British people, British authority had, in that hard-won citadel of freedom, replaced the infamous system of slavery to labour by the more infamous system of slavery to lust. According to a recent Parliamentary return, procured by Professor Stuart, M.P. (after much effort and with small official help), down-trodden women, under elaborate enactments, are in those islands officially registered to minister to the passions of profligate men. Notwithstanding that the British people purchased the abolition of slavery in the West Indies at the cost of twenty million pounds, in Jamaica, in Trinidad, and in Barbadoes, the law to-day says, in effect, that women, if sufficiently poor and wretched and friendless and down-trodden, possess no rights that white men are bound to respect.

When Malta became one of the possessions of Great Britain, the land of an open Bible, British authority establishes the system, not of the repression, but of the regulation of vice. Fifty years ago the Fiji Islanders were a race of fierce cannibals. Now, out of a native population of 112,000, nearly 100,000 are members of the Wesleyan Church alone. In 1874, the Fiji Islands were formally ceded to Great Britain. Eight years later, the system of regulated vice was thrust upon the islanders. Labuan, an island close to Borneo, on the road by sea between India and China, although a small place, strikingly illustrates a feature of British rule, where there is no Christian public opinion. A Labuan ordinance expressly provides for granting a "license" to keepers of immoral houses, and for the official registration of Malay and Chinese female inmates.

Mr. Dyer next referred to the British Colony of Hong Kong. Having planted ourselves there by force in 1841, we proceeded to illustrate the moral standard of British rule, first by forcing the opium trade upon China, and then by establishing the institution of licensed impurity. The abominations and cruelties perpetrated upon Chinese women, in the name of our Queen, at this place, cannot be described in these columns. When, a few years ago, Sir John Pope Hennessey was Governor of Hong Kong, he one day asked a leading Chinese merchant of Canton, why he did not send one of his sons to enter upon business in such a prosperous British colony. The merchant promptly declined on the ground of solicitude for his son's moral welfare, characterising Hong Kong as a sink of iniquity, and indignantly referring to the treatment of Chinese women under the British system of licensed vice, in attempting to escape from which some had met with death. In British India there is a native population of over two hundred millions. It is sometimes said that we held India as a trust from God in the interests of civilisation and Christianity. But whereas in Great Britain trading in vice is illegal, in India British authority has enacted that keepers of resorts of impurity, and the female inmates of such places, shall, under certain regulations, be regarded as engaged in a legitimate and authorised "business" (vide "The Indian Contagious Diseases Act, 1868"). Other very dark features of legalised iniquity in India were referred to, to illustrate that it is not without cause that so many Hindoos turn with aversion from the religion of a people who, professing to hold India in the interests of Christianity and civilisation, by the action of their Government regard a vast number of Hindoo women as fit for no better purpose than to be the legalised slaves of lust.

British authority has planted the same system in Gibraltar, Ceylon, St. Helena, the Straits Settlements, the Cape of Good Hope, and not least in Burmah, although that country has only been ours a few months. The system was also established by us in the Ionian Islands, before they were ceded to Greece. There is reason to believe that this list of places has not exhausted the black catalogue. If the sun never sets upon the British flag, it never sets also upon the institution of legalised impurity under British authority. While the Churches of Great Britain are, with great sacrifices, sending forth missionaries to tell of the Saviour's love, and to point the way to God and heaven, the Government are establishing and maintaining around the world an institution which is an open defiance of the plainest teaching of God's Book, and the way to perdition to all who succumbed to its deadly influence. A solemn responsibility rests upon the Directors of missionary societies, Christian teachers, and members of the Christian churches generally, to take steps to put an end to this Government iniquity.

At the close of the address a memorial to the Government was adopted, demanding the immediate abolition of the system of regulated vice in India, and in all our Crown colonies and possessions. The complete lecture will be published by Messrs. Dyer Brothers, 31, Paternoster-square, London, E.C., for circulation among the members of Christian churches, price six shillings per 100.

A GOOD WORK AT BARNES.

We have on several occasions during the past few years recorded something of the mission work carried on at Barnes, among a crowded industrial population by the Misses Wilkinson. Notwithstanding opposition from some who ought to be their foremost helpers, these devoted young ladies have bravely persevered, and they are reaping the fruits of their labours. The congregations have much outgrown the little mission hall, and it is hoped soon to build a larger one; a lady has promised to defray the cost of a site when a suitable one can be secured.

A sale of work is to be held the first week in December, in connection with the Mission. Knowing a little of its history we mean to have a small finger in the pie, and any of our readers who will do likewise can be certain they are entering into a profitable partnership. Parcels of saleable goods may be sent (carriage paid) to Miss Wilkinson, Morden House, Barnes, S.W., during the next ten days.

YOUNG CHRISTIANS IN MANCHESTER.

After a Missionary Conference, where the importance of early training our children for Christ and his work had been urged, it seemed fitting that there should be some special meeting for the young. On the Friday evening a gathering was held in the Conference Hall, to which young Christians and those who in early life had come to the Saviour were specially invited.

After some bright loving words from Miss de Broen and Mr. Kirlew, one and another told the young people with what thankfulness they looked back upon their own early conversion. Then some younger people present, in very simple, brief style, confessed their trust in Christ. It was interesting to notice that amongst the chief human instrumentalities through which God had blessed them, were special services for the young, the influence of Christian companions, blessing on Bible reading and teaching, and on personal conversation and letters.

BALYMENA Y.M.C.A.—At the annual social meeting, the secretary, Mr. Forbes, stated that there were now seventy-one members, and that the Association was in a prosperous condition. It is hoped that the local reading-room and library may soon be opened.

JOHN XIV. 2.

A YOUNG Christian asks for an explanation of John xiv. 2, as an infidel fellow-workman scoffs at the idea of one house having many mansions. The following note from "The Speaker's Commentary" answers the question:—

"1.—My Father's house. — The spiritual and eternal antitype of the transitory temple (ii. 16) in which I have the right of a son (comp. viii. 36). Even as the earthly Temple included in its courts many chambers (1 Kings vi. 5, 6, 10; Ezek. xli. 6), so it is to be conceived of the heavenly, as far as earthly figures can symbolise that which is spiritual.

"Many mansions.—There is room enough for all there: though you may find no shelter among men (xvi. 1, 2), you shall find it amply with my Father. Mansions.—The rendering comes from the Vulgate mansiones, which were resting-places, and especially the "stations" on a great road where travellers found refreshment. This appears to be the true meaning of the Greek word here, so that the contrasted notions of repose and progress are combined in this vision of the future."

CHURCH ARMY. — Canon Wilberforce has commenced Church Army work at Southampton. The evangelists recently dispatched from the London Training Home are reported to have commenced with great success in Canada and Nova Scotia. A small contingent is expected to go to India and China next year.

REV. F. TUCKER.—We learn with deep regret that this venerable servant of God, late pastor of Camden-road Chapel, had an attack of paralysis last Thursday, which will prevent him from taking part again in any public service, should he recover. He has been preaching in the provinces, and in London almost constantly Sunday by Sunday, since his leaving Camden-road.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—The annual meeting of the work carried on at the hall in Webber-street, Blackfriars, was held on Tuesday, Nov. 9. The missionary, Mr. N. S. Licence, gave an interesting and encouraging account of the work of the past year. There is urgent need of a lady to conduct a mothers' meeting in this district.

POOR BOARD MEN.—For many years past the friends of the Sermon-lane Mission have given a meal of pea soup and bread on Tuesday and Thursday during cattle show week to the advertising board men, match sellers, shoe blacks, and street vendors. Mr. George Fuller, Superintendent, 54, Liverpool-road, Islington, N., appeals for help that they may be able to feed all and to turn none away. Many of these starving men have got wives and children to support, and are out of employment many weeks before cattle show time.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.—The work carried on by Mr. Wheatley in restoring to paths of honesty those who have come within the lash of the law has developed so greatly of late that the Mission is in sore straits for the wherewithal to continue its operations. "I will do right, if you only give me this chance," is an appeal that Mr. Wheatley cannot resist, but he is much hampered by lack of funds. We learn that a kind friend of the Mission offers £100 if nine others will give a like amount, in order to wipe off arrears before the end of December.

UNION HALL MISSION.—On Thursday last largely attended and representative meetings of Christian workers were held at Union Hall, afternoon and evening. Much praise was offered for blessing given upon the work of the Mission in the past summer and autumn. In the afternoon a stirring address was given by Lord Radstock, on the life of Christ in the believer. A number of friends took part. In the evening the large hall was well filled, and addresses on individual preparedness, power, and fruit-bearing were delivered by a number of friends. All felt they had been in the presence of the King, and had heard his voice.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—During the month of October the total number of texts sent out with bouquets, ornamental cards, and lavender bags amounted 31,435. We rejoice to know that this means for the distribution of God's Word has been blessed in the conversion of many souls. Request is made for articles of clothing, &c., which, through the various missions, may be distributed with the word of life to the poor at the approaching Christmas season. It is also suggested that in the present scarcity of fresh flowers, everlastings and evergreens and grasses may be sent to supply their place. Communications should be made to Miss Dove, 110, Cannon-street, E.C.

The Book World.

JESUS: A POEM. By C. T. C. 2s. 6d. J. E. Hawkins. The preface to this little book is most touching; it contains a life-story which prepares the reader for much that follows, and certainly disarms criticism, which might otherwise severely handle the metrical irregularities of the verse.

THE ROSES OF RINGWOOD: A Story for Children. By EMMA MARSHALL. 5s. Nisbet & Co. A charming, healthy story of two beautiful, yet strikingly diverse characters. As character-sketches, they are well and finely drawn; as children, they are natural, and not too perfect to serve as patterns for the real young people who make their acquaintance in these refreshing pages.

A TALE OF OUGHTS AND CROSSES. By DARLEY DALE. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Marie and Jacques are children of such an unpleasant, and, happily, rare type, that we should hesitate before putting this record of their improbable exploits and various ill-doings into the hands of our young friends. The second part of the book is by far the better—it would have been better still for general reading without the two concluding chapters.

YENSIE WALTON'S WOMANHOOD. By S. R. GRAHAM CLARK. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This very attractive American story will be welcomed by all who recollect reading the narrative, from the same pen, of the heroine's early life, to which this is the sequel. It introduces us to phases of Christian work among the poor in a great city, that are seldom treated of in works of fiction. The author might have spared the reader the vexation of sympathising with heart troubles and long-drawn sorrows arising from the malicious act of a jealous woman; but we suppose such things do occur in real life. Poetic justice comes to the rescue before the story closes, and it is in many respects as helpful and stimulating as it is clever from a literary and dramatic point of view.

THE LIFE OF JOHN WESLEY. By JOHN TELFORD, B.A. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Wesley's life has always had a fascination for lovers of devout and helpful biographies. Mr. Telford's rendering of it will lose nothing in comparison with those of other workers in the same field; in fact it will gain by such a comparison, for it throws fresh light on the earlier part of the renowned preacher's career. It is the result of wide reading and careful examination of all possible sources of information. It is written with a graceful ease and force of expression which carry the reader from chapter to chapter with deepening interest. We know few books published this autumn which would form a better Christmas present for a lad or a young minister; it would teach the one how life should be lived, and the other how the Gospel should be preached.

ANNALS OF THE EARLY FRIENDS. By F. A. BUDGE. 4s. Samuel Harris & Co. It is a pleasure to see the second edition of this book, showing that the attempt to pourtray the lives of those men and women who stood out in the forefront of the battle for religious liberty in the days of the Commonwealth has been a success. They are here pictured in such a way that those who have neither time nor inclination to unearth them from the ponderous leather tomes in which their deeds and thoughts lie buried, may read and enjoy. Contemporaries and immediate successors of George Fox are here grouped into companies; their unwearied journeyings "for the spread of truth;" their bonds, imprisonments, and martyrdoms; the manner and matter of their teachings, and the salient points of their character, are brought out in a vivid and interesting manner. The book is further enriched by a valuable preface, by the late Edward Backhouse, of Sunderland.

A HANDBOOK OF BIBLICAL DIFFICULTIES; or, Reasonable Solutions of Perplexing Things in Sacred Scripture. Edited by Rev. ROBERT TUCK, B.A. Elliot Stock. The editor of this "Handbook" explains in his Preface how his connection with it is that of editor rather than author. Having been for the last twenty years collecting and noting down explanations of Scripture difficulties, as given in various magazines and books, he has at last presented the result in its present form, to aid Sunday-school teachers, or ministers, or Biblical scholars, by enabling them to have at hand a convenient summary of answers to objections and of solutions of difficulties, such as present themselves to the Bible student in the course of his reading. The number of names given as authorities for the solutions offered shows extensive reading, and the well-known character of many of the writers is a guarantee of the soundness of their opinions. The work seems well executed, and has the advantage of a good index, both of topics and of texts.

– Rev. C. A. FOX is first in the field, in point of time, with his New Year's Address, WITHOUT FAIL (2d. S. W. Partridge & Co.), and we venture to predict that in point of profit it will take no second place. Its theme is the never-failing faithfulness and helpfulness of God in his promised perpetual presence. Mr. Fox works it out in his own attractive, systematic, and practical way. We trust many a believer will take the motto title of the little book, and by the aid of its comforting pages put the matter to the proof throughout the coming year.

MESSRS. J. F. SHAW & CO.

Messrs. Shaw's parcel contains, as usual, some of the best and prettiest narratives of the season. There is variety of authorship, subject, style and price, and the spirit of the whole may always be relied upon:—

First on the list, of course, is Miss Emily Holt's new historical tale, IN ALL TIME OF OUR TRIBULATION (5s.). No æsthetic devotee ever anticipated more eagerly the finding of a rare specimen of the antique, than do we the arrival of a story from Miss Holt's wonderful mind and pen. This time we are certainly not disappointed; indeed we never are. The leading characters in the tale (which in its most important outlines is a true one) are Edward II. of England and his vain, unscrupulous consort, Isabelle of France. The picture we get of matters political, social and religious in those bygone times is a very vivid and instructive one, and we linger over the pages with a sort of reluctant delight that fears to reach the last one sooner than we would. But this author's tales are among the few that will bear to be re-read. Pray, Miss Holt, do not keep us waiting too long for the sequel to this. —DICKIE'S ATTIC, by Catherine Shaw (3s. 6d.) is one of the most beautifully told stories from this gifted pen. A little child is saved by his sister's love from a fate worse than death, and, by a chain of skilfully worked-out incidents, is at last found in the home of a young couple who have lost their first child.—HIS GUARDIAN ANGEL, by Emily Brodie (3s. 6d.), is an excellent book to an elder sister. The evils of drink are forcibly and delicately pointed out in the story, which is one of real worth.—OUR SOLDIER HERO, by M. L. Ridley (3s. 6d.), is a noble story, in which the miseries and pitiful sorrows of war are faithfully depicted. In the death of the hero, we have a pathetic picture of the Christian soldier meeting his Saviour on the battle-field.—YOUNG ISHMAEL CONWAY (2s. 6d.) depicts the early life of a boy, self-willed, hard, obstinate in his unregenerate ways, suddenly brought into the fulness and beauty of the life of the Gospel through hearing a young Swiss sing and preach. The author has written a book that will win golden opinions.—FAIRY PHŒBE, by L. Taylor (2s. 6d.), is a touching and truly beautiful narrative of a little orphan taken into his home by a Christian policeman; she is stolen therefrom, and gets into the clutches of those who train children for the stage. The book should speak loudly to the hearts of many Christians who have given scant thought to the evils of the stage. —JONAS HAGGERLEY, by Rev. J. Jackson Wray (3s. 6d.), is a perfect study of character. The moral of the tale is that the sowing of sin brings a harvest of thorns. Those who know the style and power of Mr. Wray in fiction will find that in this volume his reputation is fully sustained. — MAGGIE'S MISTAKE, by Mrs. Lucas Shadwell (3s. 6d.), is a story to give to young girls going out into domestic service; full of solemn warning against that which led poor Maggie to experience the shame and sorrow of a year in prison. The Gospel is beautifully interwoven with the incidents.—OUR WINNIE, by Evelyn Everett-Green (1s. 6d.), tells of a little girl who lives on an invalid couch, talks in the most wonderful way of things in this life and the next, and dies on the last page. The author can do better things, and it is a pity to write for children what certainly strikes their seniors as being far from healthy or probable.—HOW HETTIE CAUGHT THE SUNBEAMS, by G. P. Dyer (1s.), is a happy story of a happy little life, made so by healthy discipline and useful experience.—HUMP AND ALL, by C. Lockhart-Gordon (6d.), is redolent of sweet, simple goodness in the character of "Wee Davie." But would not it be well now and then to let some of these good children live?—Nos. 25 and 26 of SHAW'S HOME SERIES come in the same parcel. For sixpence one gets a good story, well told, and with the guarantee that it is by a writer of known excellence. The two before us are "Rob and Mag," by L. Marston, and "Silverdale Rectory," by Grace Stebbing.

A Series of papers on "Bible Trades and the Lessons they Teach," from the pen of Rev. Dr. Hiles Hitchens, will be commenced in the December number of The Quiver.

Penny Dinners (3d. 9, Eastcheap, E.C.) contains prize essays, issued by the Central Council for Promoting Self-supporting Penny Dinners, and deserves the attention of social reformers.

Busy Bee (G. Stoneman) is an excellent story of real life among the very poor in London, written in order to awaken the sympathy of young readers for the efforts made to bring straying lambs into the Saviour's fold.

Heavenward (Castell Bros., 27, Warwick-lane) is one of the best and choicest text books we have seen. There is a text for each day in the month, with a lithographed illustration in fifteen colours, and suitable poetical extracts.

Miriam; or, The Little Maid of Israel, by Rev. St. Vincent Beechey (Skeffington & Son, 163, Piccadilly), well points the lesson taught by the story of the Hebrew maid; it will be found very useful for giving to young girls.

Gospel Stories for Old and Young. 1d. Alfred Holness. This new series of books is likely to do good service in the conflict with pernicious literature. The stories are most interesting and telling, of a kind to take hold on the imagination of the young.

The Great Question Answered (1½d. Aird & Coghill, Glasgow) is an interesting address to the young, by Rev. William Duncan, on the themes "God is Light," "God is Love," and "God is a Consuming Fire." All the World for Christ (same publishers), by the same author, will be found helpful in cultivating a missionary spirit amongst the young.

The Poverty of Wealth. 2d. John Heywood, Manchester. This little pamphlet well sets forth the danger which threatens the happiness of the country through the money monopolies of the present day, and shows how too often the noblest duties of life are neglected by the well-to-do, as well as that the "poverty of wealth" may indeed become the "wealth of poverty."

"God and You" (1½d. Aird & Coghill, Glasgow), by Rev. C. A. Salmond, M.A., contains twelve short talks with the young folks, most of which will be found useful. We do not, however, agree with the idea propounded in one, that fear (of God) was the secret of Paul's courage. Rather, we should say, it was trust: he was enabled to endure "as seeing Him who is invisible."

The Christian Treasury for 1887 will contain among other interesting matter a series of papers on Standard Bearers; or, Heroes of the Early Scottish Faith; an Episode in the History of the Huguenots, in twelve chapters; biographies of Great and Good Men and Women; reminiscences of Early Days in France, and a high-class story, entitled "Screens and Curtains," by Lady Hope.

Christmas Annuals. The Little Folks Annual for this season is an entertaining story called "Great Uncle Hoot Toot," by Mrs. Molesworth (6d. Cassell & Co.). The highly-coloured frontispiece will extort the admiration of youthful eyes, and the "Prize Puzzle Competition" will tax their powers considerably. We have gone through the questions, and in most cases have been obliged to "give it up." Ring the Bells, the Christmas number of Home Words, and Goodwill to Men, the Christmas part of The Fireside (Home Words Office), are at once solid and seasonable.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Sunday at Home. 8s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This volume is of more than usual literary worth. Many of the papers, such as "The Jews in Italy," are classical studies; others, like "German Hymn Writers in the Nineteenth Century," show us something of the glow of holy fire that burns in the hearts of so many pious men in the present day. It is pre-eminently a book that will elevate and refine the mind.—The Leisure Hour. 8s. 6d. Same Publisher. This companion volume conducts us on many a delightful journey in other lands as well as our own, and contains besides much of mental entertainment on a variety of subjects. The illustrations, as also those of The Sunday at Home, are well produced, and do justice to the text.—Spare Minutes. Hatchards. This annual is a pleasant companion. The stories are bright and freshly written, and the varied contents are of a character to add to the number of "silent workers" for Christ of whom here we have some suitable illustrations.—After Work (Stoneman) is a capital volume for the family. It is a perfect mine of information on religious and social subjects, and the tone throughout is true and inspiring.—Early Days (1s. 6d. 66, Paternoster-row) makes an attractive volume for the children, with plenty of engravings, and bright, happy stories.—Good News (4d.), The Gospel Trumpet (6d.), and The British Messenger (1s.). Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. The value of these aids to the clear shining forth of the Gospel light in all parts of our land is well known. The volumes are printed in good readable type, well illustrated, and with their short, bright stories, should make telling Gospel messengers.—Our Own Magazine. 2s. 6d. 48, Paternoster-row. This beautifully got-up volume, issued by the Children's Special Service Mission, will be highly prized by all who desire the dissemination of sound Scriptural teaching for the young. There is a large amount of Scripture illustration that will be found very helpful to Sunday-school teachers.—Old Jonathan. 1s. 6d. Collingridge. The sayings and pencillings of Old Jonathan in this favourite periodical have won for it a place in a large number of homes, and the volume is a charming gift-book for the season. The nature of its contents makes it valuable as a district and parish helper.—The Welcome. 7s. 6d. Partridge & Co. This well-known and favourite periodical forms a very handsome volume. The amount of entertainment stored up within its covers is immense; the subjects treated of are of the most various description, including something for all—for the children and the student as well as for the grown-up members of the family.—Day of Days (2s. Home Words Office) affords a collection of entertaining and helpful reading on a variety of subjects. Its short biographies, illustrations of Gospel truths, and pieces for the young make it an attractive and readable volume.

ALMANACKS, CALENDARS, AND POCKET BOOKS.

Friend of Missions Almanack. 1d. Partridge & Co. This sheet almanack will prove an effective aid to missionary work. The texts are printed in large type, and attract the eye at a glance.—On and Off Duty Almanack. 1d. Marshall Bros., 3, Amen-corner. This representative of the Christian Policemen's Association will find acceptance with many outside their ranks. The illustrations are very telling.—The One Thing Needful Almanack (1d. Partridge), in its matter well illustrates its title.—The Golden Text Calendar (Alfred Holness) has for its motto text the very suitable and suggestive one, "I will watch to see what He will say unto me."—The Believer's Almanack (1d., same publisher) is much more than a mere calendar, containing as it does much that will cheer and strengthen believers young and old.—Faithful Words Almanack (1d., same publisher) should have a place on some wall in every house—illustrations and texts are alike so striking.—The Golden Grain Almanack and Christian's Text-book. J. E. Hawkins. These almanacks, at prices commencing at 1d., also in limp cloth 4d., interleaved 6d., and with diary as a pocket-book at 1s. 6d., well maintain the reputation they have achieved. There are some excellent hints to believers on walk and service in the opening address.—The Religious Tract Society Pocket-book and Scripture Calendar has a chromo of Her Majesty as she appeared at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, in 1836, and will prove a useful pocket companion. The Young People's Pocket-book (same publishers). Besides the usual contents, this has many notes both interesting and valuable, and is embellished with a coloured frontispiece of "The Young Queen" receiving the statesmen who conveyed to her the intimation of her accession to the throne.—Christian Remembrancer. 2s. 6d. Suttaby & Co., Amen-corner. This pocket-book occupies a worthy position amongst its competitors. It is in its sixty-eighth year of publication, and the literary portion is of quite exceptional value, embodying much evangelical truth. The blank leaf, faced by daily texts for a week, is also especially convenient for memoranda.—Old Jonathan Almanack (1d. Collingridge) is well illustrated, and besides the daily texts has much that will be found useful for reference.

Mission and other Appeals.

Rev. W. J. Temple (21, Maud-road, Plaistow, E.) wishes to resume the free meals given last winter at the schoolroom in West Ferry-road, Millwall; to the poor the Gospel is preached.

Woolwich Soldiers' Home.—The annual sale in aid of this Home will be held in the hall of the Home on December 16, 17. Contributions of work, texts, books, fancy articles, also fruit, vegetables, and flowers, will be gratefully received by Mrs. Digby Dent, at the Soldiers' Home, Hill-street, Woolwich.

Waldensian Church Missions in Italy.—Rev. Prof. Vinay, librarian of the College Library, Torre Pellice, appeals to the people of Great Britain, to authors and publishers of suitable works, for books. The library is, it appears, very small—"the pastors deplore the want of new works, and even the students find little to read in it." Any who can respond, and thus do something in advancing the spiritual and intellectual good of the Waldensian people, should write to Major Frobisher, 118, Pall-mall, S.W.

Gleanings.

TEMPERANCE.

In Denmark, it is illegal to sell intoxicants to persons drunk, or under sixteen.——The jubilee of South Australia is to be celebrated next year; it is intended to hold an International Temperance Convention.——The Paris correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says the great increase of drinking there suggests the need for an energetic temperance society.

The annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, held at Minneapolis, Minnesota, was attended by delegates from all parts. The Union has now 4000 branches.——The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Philadelphia has announced that if any of his people sell drink on Sundays, they must leave the Church.——Boston is said to be ruled by sixteen manufacturers and wholesale liquor dealers, who control 13,000 votes.

In The Church of England Temperance Chronicle, a lady urges Bank Holiday temperance meetings.——The late Lord Mayor of Tynemouth, Mr. J. Elliot, closed his year of office with a breakfast to the Corporation at which no intoxicants were supplied.——Attention has been called to the facilities provided by law in Scotland for starting bogus "clubs" for drinking purposes.——At the Soldiers' Home, Woolwich, temperance work is prosecuted with encouraging success.

The Pall Mall Gazette says 1000 bottles of wine were provided for the Lord Mayor's banquet.——Gospel temperance concerts are to be held every Saturday night at the new Central Hall, Manchester.——Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, is famed for its temperance work; 1000 persons have been added to the membership in three years.——The Manchester and Salford Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, traces the frequent re-committal of prisoners to their inability to resist temptations to drink.

Some two hundred prizes were on Saturday week presented to students in training colleges and scholars in elementary schools for essays and reports on temperance, written in connection with the educational work of the National Temperance League.——At an open-air meeting of the Gospel Temperance Crusade, in Nottingham, the magistrates were strongly censured for having granted fresh public-house licenses.——A granite monument has been placed over the grave of the late Mr. Joseph Livesey, at Preston.

Archdeacon Farrar, in a recent address, said the hope of temperance reformers was in the rising generation, who could prove in their individual experience that intoxicating drink was neither a food nor a source of vigour or health.——Colour-blindness and other defects of vision are admittedly caused by tobacco smoking. As a German is rarely seen without a pipe, the cause of their imperfect sight is evident.——The Barnsley magistrates recently committed Isaac Wainwright, miner, for one month, without a fine, for taking a tobacco-pipe into the workings.——Mr. William Forbes has held Gospel temperance missions at Crewe and Peterborough.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The death is recorded of Rev. John James, a well-known Welsh minister in connection with the Calvinistic Methodist Church; of Dr. Robert West, editor of the Chicago Advance; of General Arthur, formerly President of the United States; and of Dr. M'Clean, Bishop of Saskatchewan.——Mr. Martin Tupper is reported to be seriously ill.

Miss Isabella Tod, of Belfast, has been presented with her portrait by a number of friends, in appreciation of her work, social, educational, and political.——Miss Irby writes to the papers advocating her work among orphans at Bosnia; the Christian education of the girls, she says, is one of the chief means for the uplifting of these down-trodden peoples.

There are now six hundred members on the books of the Sydney Women's Prayer Union.——The Government of Japan is said to have forbidden lectures against Christianity in that country.——Over 4000 children were refused admission to board schools in the metropolis on one Monday recently, owing to their fees not having been paid.——Mr. Francis Fry, of Bristol, who recently died, was said to be possessed of the largest and rarest collection of Bibles in the world.

The report of the Manchester Salford Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society states that of those who had been helped by the Society, fifty men and twenty-one women were found to be working well.——The Jubilee Fund of the North of Wales Congregational Union has reached the sum of £38,000.——The Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting-hill, have opened a registry office for servant girls.——The natives in many parts of India are responding warmly to the efforts for the promotion of purity in that country.

Referring to the case decided by Mr. Justice Brett last week for nullity of marriage, The Pall Mall Gazette says: "Miss Scott is by no means the most pitiable instance of the result of the ostrich policy of bringing up girls in ignorance of the world and its ways, in the belief that there is safety in lack of knowledge."——In sentencing a woman to eighteen months' imprisonment with hard labour, at the Yorkshire Assizes, for conniving at the ruin of her niece, aged fifteen, Mr. Justice Hawkins said people such as she were the most dangerous pests of society; he hoped the sentence would be a warning to others,

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,600 poor Boys and Girls.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE,

for as yet but very little has been received? Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale, remember that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curious musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, etc., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as of the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say,

Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque (made payable to J. T. Page) to any part of the country.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Hall of the "Edinboro' Castle."

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, etc., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo now desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

18 TO 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, NOV. 28.—EZRA VI.

2.—There was found at Achmetha, in the palace.—"Achmetha is without doubt the Ecbatana, or Agbatana, of the Greeks; the Persian name for which, as we find in the Behistun inscription, was Hagmatana. Its discovery at Ecbatana harmonises with incidental notices in Herodotus and Ctesias, which show that that city was the capital of Cyrus."—Sp. Com.

3.—The height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits.—"It is difficult to reconcile these dimensions with expressions in Zechariah, Haggai, and even Ezra iii. 12, which imply that the second Temple was smaller than the first (see Zech. iv. 10; Haggai ii. 3). Solomon's Temple was but 30 cubits high (1 Kings vi. 2), and even including the side chambers, not more than 40 cubits wide. Perhaps we are to take the dimensions here set down simply as those which Cyrus required the Jews not to exceed, and to understand that in fact the building raised fell far short of them."—Ibid.

6.—Now therefore, Tatnai, &c.—"The decree of Cyrus having been given (3—5), the author passes without notice to the words of the decree of Darius, which was grounded upon it, and which probably recited it."—Ibid.

17.—And offered at the dedication of this house of God.—As compared with the abundant offering of Solomon at the dedication of The temple he built (1 Kings viii. 63), this might well be called "the day of small things" (Zech. iv. 10).

22.—The heart of the king of Assyria.—It is evident that the king of Assyria means Darius in this place, who as ruler of the former realm of Assyria is thus designated.

MONDAY, NOV. 29.—EZRA VII.

1.—Now after these things, in the reign of Artaxerxes king of Persia.—"These words mark naturally some considerable interval. If, with most commentators, we take the 'Artaxerxes' of the present verse for Longimanus, the interval from the sixth year of Darius Hystaspes to the seventh of Longimanus (ver. 7) will be one of fifty-seven years. The occurrence of this interval makes a remarkable break in the book of Ezra, and justifies commentators in regarding it as composed of two distinct parts."—Sp. Com.

6.—A ready scribe in the law of Moses.—"The same expression occurs in Ps. xlv. 1, where our translation has 'a ready writer.' The scribes of the time of Ezra, and of later Jewish history, were students, interpreters, and copiers of the law. The emphatic application of the title, 'the scribe,' to Ezra, marks the high honour in which the office was now held."—Ibid.

9.—The good hand of his God upon him. For Ezra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord.—The connection thus recognised between the application of Ezra's heart to the law of God, and His hand being upon him for good, recalls the promise of Psalm i. to the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord, &c.—"Whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

25.—After the wisdom of thy God, that is in thine hand.—Comparing this with ver. 14, "according to the law of thy God which is in thine hand," it would appear that both expressions, "the wisdom of thy God" and "the law of thy God," refer to the Holy Scriptures; so much, at least, as Ezra then possessed, which would be nearly the whole of the Old Testament.

27.—Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers, &c.—With this abrupt transition from the words of Artaxerxes to those of Ezra, the language also changes from Chaldee to Hebrew, continuing to be Hebrew to the end of the book.

TUESDAY, NOV. 30.—EZRA VIII.

21.—Then I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God.—Anticipating enemies on the journey, Ezra would not seek the aid of man to help him against them. He was "ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers," for they had already told the king that "the hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him." Would that Christians could feel more of this shame at the inconsistency which so often leads them to speak to the world of what God can do, and then tempts them to look to the world to help them to do it.

31.—The hand of our God was upon us, and He delivered us.—"They shall not be ashamed who put their trust in Him." By being ashamed not to trust God, Ezra was in the end not ashamed of having trusted Him.

35.—Twelve he goats for a sin offering.—"The sin offering preceded the burnt offering as the necessary basis of an acceptable burnt offering. The sin-offerings availed as an atonement for the sins of all Israel, and the burnt offerings typified the surrender of the entire nation to the service of the Lord. Thus the fact that these were offered for all Israel was an actual declaration that they who had now returned were henceforth resolved, together with all Israel, to dedicate their lives to the service of the Lord their God."—Keil.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 1.—EZRA IX.

1.—Doing according to their abominations.—"This translation is somewhat too strong. The words of the original are: 'The people of Israel . . . have not separated themselves from the people of the lands in respect of their abominations.' The mixed marriages had prevented that complete separation of the people of God from the idolatrous rites or 'abominations' which the law required."—Sp. Com.

The LXX. translation and the Vulgate both take this milder view, and the Douay translation of the latter is, "have not separated themselves from the people of the land and from their abominations."

8.—A nail in his holy place.—"The expression is figurative. It refers to a nail or peg stuck into the wall to hang any kind of domestic utensils upon (comp. Isa. xxii. 23). Such a nail was the place of God's sanctuary, the Temple, to the rescued community."—Keil. But this was only the nail spoken of in Isa. xxii. 25, which he there predicts "shall be cut down, and fall," whereas "the nail in a sure place" of ver. 23, points to a person, Eliakim, typical of Christ, of whom the Lord says: "I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place, and he shall be for a glorious throne to his Father's house."

9.—For we (were) bondmen.—The verb supplied should be the present "we are bondmen." The Babylonish captivity was the commencement of a bondage of the Jews to Gentile power, from which they have not yet been delivered. The four beasts of Daniel vii. represent successive phases of Gentile dominion, until the coming of the Son of Man.

15.—Thou art righteous.—"Righteous, by so sorely punishing this once numerous nation, of which only a small remnant, which has escaped destruction, now exists."—Keil.

THURSDAY, DEC. 2.—EZRA X.

"While Ezra was making this confession before God a numerous assemblage gathered around him, and wept aloud. From this point onwards Ezra relates the further course of events in such wise as to cast his own person into the background, and speaks of himself in the third person."—Keil.

3.—Let it be done according to the law.—"I.e., let a formal bill of divorcement be given to each foreign wife, whereby she will be restored to the condition of an unmarried woman, and be free to wed another husband (see Deut. xxiv. 1, 2)."—S. C.

17.—And they made an end with all the men.—"The business occupied the commission three full months. In some cases it may be presumed they had to summon persons before them who did not wish to part with their foreign wives; in all they had to assure themselves that the wives were foreign; finally they had in every case, where they decreed a divorce, to make out "the writing of divorcement, to which the woman put away was entitled, as evidence of her having been a wife and having become free."—S. C.

44.—All these had taken strange wives.—"The guilty persons were, it would seem, 113 in number. They comprised four members of the high-priest's family, thirteen other priests, ten Levites, and eighty-six Levites belonging to at least ten distinct families."—Ibid. Compare with this rigid enforcement of the rule of Israel's separation from other nations, the permission accorded to one Christian partner to live with the other though a heathen (1 Cor. vii. 12) on the ground that the heathen partner was "sanctified" (i.e. for association) by, or in, the believing one. Such putting away as is here described of wives and children is not required in Christianity. But that such mixed marriages are not to be entered into by Christians is clear from "only in the Lord" (1 Cor. vii. 39).

FRIDAY, DEC. 3.—NEHEMIAH I.

This is the last historical book, as Malachi is the last prophetical one, in the Old Testament. There is no more wonderful story of Providence and prayer in the whole Bible than that in Ezra and Nehemiah. Prayer and effort, and the relation between human effort and Divine blessing. Carey's motto was, "Prayer and pains will do anything."

Ezra gives an account of the re-building of the Temple, while Nehemiah gives an account of the re-building of the walls. The inward work was done first, and then the outward. It was a time of revival and of real work. The walls were finished in fifty-two days. Nehemiah reforms the civil and religious condition of the children of the captivity, and he restores the Temple services.

There is much in this book which is helpful and suggestive for Christian workers. It is a picture of spiritual work, the building of a Temple not made with hands, which the Church of Christ has in view. It is illustrative of union and communion in labouring for the Lord. It is so full of active life, and yet shows that it is possible to hold communion with God. Work to have God's blessing and success must have its foundation in prayer. The heart entirely with God goes from prayer to work. There are only two chapters in which it is not recorded that Nehemiah or the people offered thanksgiving or prayer.

Three things were used in the work: the sword, the trowel, and the trumpet. We must fight with the sword of the Spirit, work with the trowel, and encourage each other with the rallying sound and stirring notes of the trumpet (iv. 20; Judges vii. 18—20).

Nehemiah was a man of prayer and praise, great piety and perseverance; a man of great sympathy with his fellow-men, a true patriot. Most unselfish and humble, yet bold and courageous in God's cause. His faith and trust were in God alone.

In chap. i. he is a man before God for his people. Action was not the first thing, but earnest prayer; he looked to God for guidance, and waited for orders before setting to work. He was a man of prayer and practice. He was spiritual, yet practical and business-like. There was a strong undercurrent of prayer running through his daily life. He looked upon all things and all people in relation to God. He saw no impossibilities. Because all things are possible with God and to him that believeth.

He waits patiently till God opens the way, then he acts without hesitation or fear. Difficulties send him straight to God, dangers keep him close to God. He lost sight of self, and saw God. He saw God going to rebuild the walls, not Nehemiah. Many sigh over abuses; he sets to work.

Four points: (1) Striking quietness and collectedness. Waiting times cannot be dispensed with. First thing is to have an interview with God. (2) Spirit of deep humiliation and conscious unworthiness, yet not hindering boldness of access. True confession of sin. (3) Reminds God of his promises. They are the ground of prayer. Powerful plea, "Remember." (4) Claims of redeemed family recognised, though sin and failure.

Three pleas used: God's character (5), God's promises and Word (8), Covenant relationship with Israel (10).

The prayer finishes with a direct request for present need, put in most simple, earnest, definite form. No less than four quotations from Deuteronomy. Note the words, "before the God of heaven." He prevailed with God, with men, with the king, against the enemies, and upon his own people.

SATURDAY, DEC. 4.—NEHEMIAH II.

A man before his people for God. His commission and journey. His preparation and plans. 3.—Beautiful illustration of the use of silent, ejaculatory prayer. He prays to the God of heaven, and makes request to his earthly master. 8—18.—The recognition of the hand of God.

12.—What my God had put in my heart.—All of God, all from God, all for God.

13.—Goes out to reconnoitre. No laziness, no waste of time. He sees for himself, his heart is stirred, and by word and example he set others to work.

17.—Calls a workers' meeting. Then said I, . . . Ye see . . . Come and let us build. 18.—And they said, Let u rise up and build. So they strengthened their hand for this good work.—Unity snd co-operation in work. 19.—But.—Opposition. Hinderers at work—scorns, sneers, and ridicule. God's servants must expect this. 20.—His answer, The God of heaven, He will prosper us; therefore, &c. God for us, God with us, He will make his people willing (Ps. cx. 3). There will be difficulties, but God's work shall prosper, not success at once from man's view. Ye have no portion.—Their hearts not right; they were excluded from the work. Can't do real work if no portion in Christ, no saving knowledge of Him.

MRS. MEREDITH desires to lay before her friends the following statements:—

That Nine Elms House is no longer large enough for the Industrial Work of the Prison Mission.

That, by removing the plant to the new premises of the Association, there will be greater facilities for both the spiritual and temporal work of the great Rescue Mission.

That the money to be realised by the sale of the Nine Elms property is not nearly enough to erect the new building required for the accommodation, in separation, of the women and girls brought from criminal life to the care of the Sisters of the Nine Elms Association.

When all their Institutions are in one place, the expenses of the whole will be greatly lessened. Mrs. Meredith esteems it a duty to provide for the carrying on by others of work which has been blessed of God, and recognised as a successful agency for rescuing perishing criminals.

She therefore earnestly appeals for help and sympathy in this effort to put her house in order, and to leave a permanent establishment in which the servants of Christ may continue the work she has been privileged to begin.

Money for this Fund will be gratefully received by

MRS. SUSANNA MEREDITH,

ON THE DEEP SEA.

FIVE YEARS AGO a visit paid to the North Sea Trawling Fleets proved, by God's Providence the commencement of a new and happier epoch for the Deep-Sea Fishermen. Until the year 1881 thousands of our countrymen had toiled—not only in all weathers, at all seasons, and in daily perils of their lives, but —in complete isolation from all Christian or moral influences.

TO-DAY seven Mission Smacks cruise in the North Sea, serving as Church, Dispensary, Temperance Hall, and Club.

Two of these vessels were equipped at a cost of £4,550, and presented to the Institution by generous donors. The remaining five were originally private property, and merely lent for missionary purposes, and although a considerable portion of their purchase money has been defrayed during the current year, a sum of £6,000 still remains to be cleared off before they are free from mortgage and registered in the names of Trustees as the unencumbered property of the Mission.

Moreover, SEVEN VESSELS CANNOT MEET THE REQUIREMENTS OF TWELVE FLEETS, and all persons on shore who revere our beloved Queen (which every one DOES) and sympathise with the storm-tossed smacksmen (which every one OUGHT to do) are invited to contribute towards a special fund, to be styled the "Queen Victoria Purchase and Endowment Fund," in order that these Mission Smacks may be sent forth as at once a Memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee and as Heralds of Mercy from the King of kings, ministering healing and comfort to the bodies, and peace and gladness to the hearts, of the fishermen.

Sums received for this object will be paid to a special Deposit Account opened in the names of Trustees at Messrs. Gurney & Co.'s Bank, Great Yarmouth.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

Trustees: The Duke of GRAFTON, K.G.; and others.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BOTH LUNGS DISEASED—CASE of a YOUNG WIFE AT EBBW-VALE, Mon.

This case was most earnestly recommended to me by Rev. JOHN HARRIES, Wesleyan minister, of Tredegar-road, EBBW-VALE, in October of last year (1885). A statement of the case was prepared and sent me according to the question-sheet furnished by me.

Among the particulars thereof may be noted that there had been "chest disease on the mother's side, and various relatives had died. She had been ill four months, commencing with cold. Inflammation of the right lung followed. The cough had increased in violence, inducing vomiting. The phlegm was creamy and purulent. The breathing was very bad. There was much hectic and night perspirations. The patient was losing flesh fast. The doctor who had attended her reported that the right lung was diseased in tissue, and the pipes of the left affected, saying, she may linger on till March at the most."

As a matter of course the best advice was given her, and medicine sent.

An attack of bronchitis coming on (through sudden change of weather in November, no doubt), the first letter stated she had got over that, and there was some slight improvement. Before three months had expired she was "greatly improved." (In cases such as this there will be fluctuations, but passing over these, there was a gradual progress towards recovery manifest to every one.)

By the summer she was able to get about well.

On the 30th Sept. I received a letter from her father, of 21, Queen-street, Victoria, Mon. He says: "It is my duty to let you know of the benefit my daughter (Mrs. Law) has received from your valuable medicine. She was given up by the doctors, but now she is able to get about and walk two or three miles, and attend to her domestic duties. She is a wonder to all around. Our minister says it is like magic. She feels she cannot speak too highly of you, or make your name too much known."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

YEARS.	TEMPERANCE SECTION.		GENERAL SECTION.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

REV. ROBERT W. McALL, F.L.S.

THE evangelisation of great cities is a problem which to-day challenges the first attention of the followers of Christ. The McAll Mission in France offers such a happy solution of this problem, realised under such difficult circumstances, that our readers will certainly welcome a few words regarding its founder and its work.

ROBERT W. McALL was the only son of Rev. Robert S. McAll, LL.D. He was born at Macclesfield, Cheshire, in 1821. Though converted at an early age, he shrank from the sacred responsibilities of the Gospel ministry—the life ardently desired for him by his father—and gave himself to the study of architecture. He displayed special aptitude for this profession, and gave promise of a brilliant career.

But suddenly the whole purpose and life of the young student were changed. One Sabbath evening in December, 1842, at Union Chapel, Islington, he received an unmistakable call to the ministry. It was not the sermon. It was the still voice of God which clearly said to him, "Go, preach my Gospel." At that call the aspirations and hopes which a moment before had animated him, faded away. He was consecrated to a new life. After due study at the Lancashire Independent College, he was ordained at Sunderland in 1848. If nearly a quarter of a century of pastorate in England is passed over with scarcely a notice, it is not because it did not receive significant blessing, but because of our impatience to arrive at his call and mission to France.

After the siege of Paris, and the terrible reign of the Commune, in August, 1871, Mr. and Mrs. McAll found themselves for a few days of vacation in Paris. Profoundly moved by the physical, social, and moral distress about them, they could not quit Paris without leaving with the people some testimony of the Divine pity and redemption. At that time one of the most desperate quarters of Paris was Belleville. Here the smoke of the savage conflict with the Communists had scarcely cleared away. There were still heard the mutterings of rage and vengeance. Here came these two foreigners quietly, but boldly, distributing portions of God's Word and Gospel tracts. To the delighted surprise of Mr. and Mrs. McAll, these offerings were kindly received. One of the ouvriers of Belleville added to his expression of thanks for the little book, "If you or some one will come here and teach us these truths, we shall be glad to welcome you. I speak for a large class of this community, who are quite done with the Church of Rome, and who yet feel the need of the knowledge of the true religion."

(From Photograph by Ch. Reutlinger, Paris.)

This was at the corner of the Boulevard de Belleville and the Rue de Belleville, a spot now sacred in the history of missions. This was the call which has so interested God's children wherever it has been known. To Mr. and Mrs. McAll this workman of Belleville spoke as the messenger of God. Confirmed by the conviction of French pastors and Christian workers they promptly obeyed this call. On the following November we find the two foreigners once more in the streets of Belleville, not now for an evening's promenade, but to live and labour among these people.

Serious questions were involved in the step—the leaving of home and fatherland, the living among the Socialists of Belleville, the renouncing of all salary and the living upon their limited income; and the necessary expenses of the proposed work. More staggering still were the problematical features of the work itself. Called by one workman whom they were never to see again; foreigners so habitually disliked by the French; imperfectly acquainted with the language; surrounded by a vast multitude of scoffers whose hatred of God and man found utterance in the impious cry, "Ni Dieu ni Maître"—what could Mr. and Mrs. McAll do? This was a question they never stopped to ask. The difficulties were the part of their Lord who had called them. Their part was to be "not disobedient unto the heavenly vision;" so they went forward in faith.

Special reference is here due to Mrs. McAll. She is the daughter of Rev. D. B. Hayward, of Manchester. France had bitterly suffered from the influence of an unmarried priesthood. The consequent evils had corrupted society and the family. What an unspeakable blessing that Mr. McAll brought with him to Paris his accomplished Christian wife! Her part in the Mission has been incalculable. Her remarkable physical endurance has enabled her to accompany Mr. McAll in fatiguing journeys, and to innumerable services. Her musical talent has provided for the réunions a service of delightful song, and has given to all French-speaking people one of the best collections extant of hymns and tunes for social meetings. Her social qualities have made welcome crowds of strangers from many lands, and attracted many souls to her Saviour. Above all, her consecration has attained a self-abnegation which finds fitting companionship in that of her husband, and which is of inestimable consequence to the success of the Mission.

After long and prayerful deliberation with pastors and Christian workers of Paris, Mr. and Mrs. McAll matured their plan of action. On January 17, 1872, the little shop, 108, Rue Julien Lacroix, near the Rue de Belleville, was opened, and the passers-by invited to enter. Forty-five accepted this first invitation. They found inscriptions upon the walls, many of the people being ignorant that these were from the Bible. They were offered a little book of French hymns, and politely invited to a seat. They were asked to sing together one or two of the hymns, led by the little harmonium played by Mrs. McAll. A few verses were read from the Word of God. It was the first time that many of them had seen a Bible. They sang again. Then followed two short Gospel talks. They were told just what they knew themselves to be, and they were offered just what they most needed. All was so simple that a child could understand, all so free that a beggar might receive. Once more they sang together. They were cordially invited to the next réunion, and after a short prayer were bid au revoir. Not least of all, Mr. McAll hastened to the door to take each one by the hand, and to speak to each a kindly salutation.

To these people this service was a new revelation of Divine love and of human sympathy. Two wonderments arose in their minds—(1) Why had such things been so long hid from them? (2) Why had these foreigners now come to tell them? They would know more of this matter, and gladly came to the next réunion. Others passing accepted the invitation to enter. The little room was full. Better yet, souls promptly responded to the loving message of the Gospel.

What a joy to Mr. and Mrs. McAll. They had said to themselves, "It is worth while to fail in such a cause." But they were not to fail. How little did they then dream of the great things to which their Lord had called them! One mistake they had made—the little room was all too small for them. A large ballroom, 112, Rue de Belleville, was leased. More chairs were bought, and the people were invited to enter. This large room was at once crowded. The work broadened and deepened. Schools for children were held on Sundays and Thursdays. The children were delighted with the new sweet stories of the Bible, and with the bright songs. Mothers' meetings followed, Bible-classes for young people, visitation from house to house, distribution of tracts, Gospels, &c.

Then came the call to open a second station; then a third and a fourth. These calls were obeyed in the same trusting spirit as was the first, and with the same Divine blessing. Once more the Lord bids his servants "Go forward;" this time, not to another quarter of Paris, but to other cities of France. Anxiously they listened to learn if this were indeed the voice of God. The moment there was no mistaking, they gladly obeyed. To Lyons, to Marseilles, Bordeaux, Nantes, and to many another city of France, the McAll Mission went, even to Corsica, Algeria, and Tunis. And to-day the little room at Belleville has become a hundred stations, in which last year were held over sixteen thousand services, attended by nearly one million of souls. We might rest here, to consider what God hath wrought, were the call not urgent to still more extended endeavour. It really seems as though the purpose of God, voiced to Mr. McAll by that ouvrier of Paris nearly fifteen years ago, meant in its fulness, "Thou shalt call a nation."

No one can follow the history of this Mission without being impressed that from first to last it has been ordained of God. No man ever devised it. Every step has been taken only in obedience to the suggestion and direction of God. Another inviting feature of the McAll Mission is its simplicity. There are few paraphernalia. The shops or stores are often of the plainest. But they are wisely chosen on the busy thoroughfares, where the people are. And the service has no other aim than the immediate salvation of souls. All controversy is forbidden. No laboured attacks upon the Church of Rome are allowed—nothing but the direct, simple preaching of the Gospel of Christ.

A professor of one of the American Colleges, now in Paris, says of the McAll Mission:—"I have attended many services in many stations, and I have never heard a better average of pure pointed Gospel than at these réunions." To hear this Gospel the multitudes come, and come again. Not only the destitute classes from the desperate quarters, for stations are now opened in the very centre of Paris, crowded with the promenaders of the boulevards, or with men of business.

God has wonderfully provided men and means to accomplish the work. Helpers have come from Great Britain, America, and from many lands. Prominent among these were the lamented Rev. G. T. Dodds and his devoted wife, followed by Rev. C. E. Greig, Rev. S. R. Brown, Mr. Wm. Soltau, and others, and a noble band of consecrated women; and these not from one particular church denomination, for the McAll Mission is interdenominational in its workers and in its work. Its creed is that of the Evangelical Alliance. It offers a happy instance of harmonious working together of God's children from many lands and of many sects. And this not to build up a particular church; but, having won these souls to Christ, to seek to connect them with one or other of the various evangelical churches of France.

A large part of the labour has been accomplished by French Protestant pastors and laymen. In the McAll Mission those devoted brethren have found what they have so long prayed for—access to the multitudes who were wearied with Popery, and who yet knew no other alternative but atheism. As these increasing multitudes thronged the réunions populaires, many a Christian worker has gone down with Mr. McAll to the streets and lanes of the cities of France to greet this populace and tell them of the Christ. Noble French pastors, like Pastors Fisch, Théodore Monod, Recolin, De Pressensé, Bersier, Dhombres, Hollard, and many others; and such laymen as MM. Saillens, Réveillaud, Sautter, &c. And outside of Paris the call has often come from pastors who have voluntarily assumed the main responsibility of the work.

The question will be asked, "Whence has come the financial support for so large a work?" Rents are costly in principal streets of large cities. The salaries, though small, are many. God has not only turned the hearts of true men and devoted women to do the work; He has in most unexpected ways provided the silver and the gold. From the very first, THE CHRISTIAN has made known the progress of the Mission, and forwarded the goodly offerings of its readers. Rev. Horatius Bonar, D.D., wrote that thrilling book, "The White Fields of France," and thus secured enlarged response. Leading Christian philanthropists have formed local committees in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and other cities, for the systematic support of the McAll Mission. And America has organised a national association, pledged to aid the work. It has been accepted as a precious seal of the Divine blessing that, while there are moments of painful lack, and while the progress of the work is greatly limited by scarcity of money, yet wherever the story of the Mission is told, God directly moves his children to respond for its support.

If the review of the life of Mr. McAll has led to an account of this Mission, it is because there is a McAll stamp upon the Mission which cannot be effaced. It is wonderful how the man enters into every detail of the work. Those years of his early manhood devoted to the study of architecture were not lost. Mr. McAll is emphatically an architect. From the first foundation, to the present superb yet growing structure of the Mission, Mr. McAll has been a wise builder with God, and throughout we find the happy impress of his character. Mr. McAll's simplicity of life, his sacrifice in giving up all salary, his rigid economy, his untiring industry, his entire self-abnegation, his patient forbearance, his modest reserve in whatever concerns himself, and his resolute daring in whatever concerns the work of God—all these have given form to every department of the Mission. Against his urgent protest his very name has been stamped into the work, and this not in France only. In Belgium and Switzerland Christians have organised what they call "McAll Missions," and the example is about to be followed in Italy and America.

Mr. Moody, at a meeting of the business men of Chicago last winter, said:—

> I consider the McAll Mission the model mission of the world. This is just what we want here in Chicago, and in every one of our great cities. A mission, not in churches or chapels, but in shops right on the busy thoroughfares, where the people are; many of them open every night of the year, with a band of devoted men and women, who go from station to station, thus giving a needed variety, and who have but the single aim to win lost souls to Christ.

But if the McAll Mission bears happy impress of the character and effort of its founder, let it not be imagined that it is a "one-man enterprise." Significant among the qualities of Mr. McAll is his capacity to draw others about him and set them at work. A committee of directors has been organised of carefully-chosen men who are personally engaged in the work, who share with Mr. McAll every responsibility, and who consider every question as to the conduct of the Mission. Every precaution has been taken to put the work upon a basis giving promise of permanence.

What emotions of wonder, of gratitude, of responsibility, must such a sketch as this provoke! France, the land of the Huguenots, for the first time enjoys religious liberty. An Englishman is called of God to lead the van of those who are to preach Christ to multitudes tainted with immorality and infidelity. And whether in the cities of the interior of France or on the Missionary Boat in her harbours, whether among the desperate classes of the Faubourgs or the fashionable crowds of the Boulevards: wherever the Gospel is preached it is welcomed and blessed. And how unspeakable is this blessing! What saving of souls! What cheering of hearts! What changing of men and of homes! A woman was taunted with the fact that her husband had changed his religion. "But you do not understand it," replied the woman. "My husband has not changed his religion: religion has changed my husband." And what is true of the man may be true of the nation. What blessing to the world were France thus changed! What an inestimable privilege to-day that we all may co-operate with such a man as Mr. McAll, in the fuller advance of such a Mission.

W. W. NEWELL, JUN.

GROVE-ROAD MISSION, ESSEX.

THE history of this Mission is well worth a note. Originally, the "field" was an encampment of over two hundred gipsies on the borders of Epping Forest, which a gentleman living in the neighbourhood, knowing of the distress existing amongst them, was in 1877 moved to visit. He helped them in various ways, and whilst going from tent to tent distributing little gifts of food or clothing, found opportunity to speak to them of God and his love. In the following summer, open-air services were held on Sunday evenings in the encampment; and the gipsies, their confidence having been won by the sympathy of their kind friend, gladly attended. Before winter came they pleaded that these Gospel services might be continued, and an old army tent was procured. Next winter, two rooms were hired, the work having by this time largely increased, and including visitation of the sick, both amongst the gipsies and the labouring classes living near.

The spring of 1880 found the work in a flourishing condition, the two rooms being at times crowded to excess, so that the necessity for larger accommodation was talked of; ultimately a large loft, suitable for the purpose, was adapted to the needs of the Mission. A Sunday-school and Monday evening prayer-meeting were added to the Thursday and Sunday evening services. So the work grew, between 100 and 150 people assembling in this loft. Then came the necessity for another move, this time to a permanent home, erected at a cost of about £750, and which was opened in January, 1883. Other agencies were added, and the work extended very considerably. Now it is proposed to acquire a small piece of ground at the back of the mission-hall, and to erect a day nursery and reading-room, with rooms for a resident mission keeper. Mr. E. Hobbs, Chelmsford-road, Woodford, will give further information to any interested friends.

DR. WHYTE'S PRAYER-MEETING.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Tuesday evening prayer-meeting in Free St. George's, conducted by Dr. Alexander Whyte, the able and earnest minister of the congregation, has become one of the features of Edinburgh ecclesiastical life. It is a centre of attraction to many. Those who are wearied with the toil and moil of business find rest in it; students go to it to get inspiration; and hundreds of men and women are lifted by it to higher levels of thought and feeling. Last winter Bunyan's "Holy War" was the subject of meditation; this winter the same writer's "Grace Abounding" is being taken up. Dr. Whyte has an unbounded admiration for John Bunyan. He thinks that his "Grace Abounding" should stand high up in the list of best books of autobiography and experimental divinity. For this reason he has selected it for exposition.

In his opening lecture he struck the key-note of what he is to say, in the old yet ever new text: "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief." Bunyan tells the nature of his book on the title-page. His preface has driven many a man from reading more; but it has drawn gracious souls to examine the succeeding pages more closely. It is a terrible book. It must be so to be honest, for it deals with sin, with death, and with judgment. It is not a book for the nursery, or for babes in Christ. It is written in the maturity of intellect and spirit of a Christian man, and it is handed to all those who put manhood into their religion. Some passages in it are powerful enough to be the composition of the Psalmist. It is Pauline in its nature, for its author sat at the feet of the great Apostle.

In his second lecture, Dr. Whyte made some striking comments on the texts God sent to Bunyan, and which were helpful to him in the early stages of his religious experiences. He intimated that in his third lecture he would give some of the texts God sent to himself, and asked his audience to prepare themselves to hear it by looking back and seeing what God had done for them. This intimation had the effect of drawing an immense congregation, some of whom, probably, came more out of curiosity than out of desire to receive good. Dr. Whyte was at his best. He looked his hearers straight in the face, and spoke out boldly. He began by referring to Bunyan's critics. It was very daring on the part of one who was a tinker's son and a tinker himself, who never sat at Plato's feet, and borrowed his Latin, to call, by implication, such men as Macaulay, Sir Walter Scott, and Anthony Froude, Philistines. They were giants, and he sighed and slept under hedges; yet he has beaten them with their own weapons. None of them can touch the literary heights to which he soared, and his spiritual experiences are a sealed book to them. When God speaks, philosophers become Philistines. Bunyan wrote not for the critics, but for his own persecuted congregation. He achieved a great success. Byron woke up one morning to find himself famous. Bunyan passed through the same experience; but his fame was thrust upon him—he did not seek it. He worked for his little Baptist flock, and spoke to the souls who had refreshed him in his ministry. He cleared the house of strangers, and gathered his children around his knees, so that they might suck drops of honey out of the dead carcase of their father's life. He quickened old sorrows and resurrected old sins. There is no way of keeping the life clean like looking back at the hole out of which you were dug.

Dr. Whyte said he would follow the example set by Bunyan. He would shut out the criticising Philistines, and gather his children to his knee to tell them what the Lord had done for him. He bought his Bible—the Bible peculiarly his—when he was eighteen years old. It is as sweet to him as the kisses of his child, and has been his inseparable companion. He took it with him to Aberdeen, when he went to study Latin; to Edinburgh, when he went to study divinity; to Glasgow, when he went to experiment in preaching; and to his holidays in various lands. He has left instructions in his will that it be put in his coffin; he could not sleep soundly without it. And when he wakens up at the Last Day, he will seize it again, and never let it go until he knows beyond doubt that he is justified and accepted. Its fine binding is tarnished with frequent use. It has in it plates known only to himself, and pictures of heaven and hell and salvation invisible to other eyes. Is your Bible tarnished in binding? Is it your inseparable companion? If you forget it when on a holiday, God will forget you when He enters into his kingdom.

His oldest memory is the Word of God taking hold of him in early boyhood. He stood beside William Burns as he preached Disruption truth to Disruption hearers. The text, "A brand plucked out of the fire," went like an arrow to his heart. He has never forgotten it. What was your first text? Do you remember it still? Bunyan asks the question, "Did you ever lie crying under a hedge for mercy?" You have been in a ditch sinning; have you been in a ditch repenting and praying? Those who are deepest in the hedge will be highest in gloryland. It is not necessary for every man who goes to Heaven to creep through the hedge, but you will never understand "Grace Abounding" unless you have lain under a hedge crying for mercy. It was counted a sign of incipient insanity in Bunyan when he crept under hedges. Would to God that many readers and writers were touched with this divine dementation!

Another question this relentless tinker asked was, Did God ever seem to fight against you? The speaker well remembered such a battle. For weeks and months there was a struggle as to whether he should say to God or God to him, "Thy will be done." A crisis was reached one night in a country house. He went out in the early morn into the garden, and there the words of the 22nd Psalm got hold of him: "O my God, I cry in the day time, but Thou hearest not; and in the night season, and am not silent." Then came, "Thou art holy," and such a vision of God's holiness, "that he felt his sinfulness and nothingness." "I am a worm, and no man." That was the turning-point of the struggle. He yielded, and ever since that summer morn he has found tranquillity in God's name.

Another question Bunyan asked was, Had you ever songs in the night? The lecturer had. Like Luther, he loves the Pauline Psalms—the 22nd, 51st, and 130th. They speak of God's righteousness and salvation. God is everything in them. His special song in the night is the 22nd Psalm. That Psalm is, in his Bible, obliterated with a sinner's tears and a student's ink. Have you any obliterated passages in your Bible? Once the Word of God gets commission to follow a man, it keeps following him. The concluding part of the address was the narration of an incident in which Dr. Whyte experienced a holy joy through the words, "We have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ," coming to him, and an earnest appeal to his hearers to seek this peace.

Our outline fails to convey the sense of power and the heart-searching grip visible in this noteworthy revelation of a minister's spiritual experience. Dr. Whyte can never be interpreted by written words; he is to be known only when seen and heard. The personality of the man infused into what he says is by far the larger part of his sermons.

ONWARD MISSION (York-road, Wandsworth).—This work is carried on in a shop, which has been converted into a hall, the other rooms of the house being used as class-rooms. The work is growing, and there is need of additional help, especially for the ragged-school on Monday evening, when children have had to be turned away for want of space and teachers. A Christian lady is wanted to take a class of senior girls and young women meeting on the same evening at 7 o'clock. Particulars may be obtained at the hall, or of Mr. F. Cochrem, 1, Draydon-villas, Merton-road, Wandsworth, S.W.

STUDY, PULPIT AND PEW.—2.

REV. CALEB HOLLERT.

"WHAT o'clock is 't, sir?" whispered Bill Dallen. "Just eight," replied Rev. Caleb Hollert.

"The wife's not back yet?" "No, but I'll stay with you till she comes."

"Thank 'ee, sir. Will 'ee say them words again, sir?" "'For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost;'" softly repeated the minister.

"An' ye 're sure He said it Himself?" "Quite sure, Bill."

And the dying man sank into semi-unconsciousness.

"I ought to be at home, getting ready for to-morrow's work," thought Rev. Caleb Hollert; "and (surveying the garret) a curious kind of study, surely! But God is here in his saving power. My Father! give me the word that shall bring salvation to the people to-morrow!" He thought of some, who, during the week had mourned over the "little" sins which so often overcame them; of one who seemed to long after holiness, but would not shake hands with his old enemy as they walked out of church within a few paces of each other; of another, whose desire was toward God, but—that branch of his business! He could not consecrate it and would not surrender it.

"He is easier," he said, as the entrance of Bill's wife interrupted his thoughts. "Is there anyone who would help you to watch to-night?"

"Yes, sir, Jim's comin' when he gets his supper. God bless ye, sir."

And he went quietly down the narrow stairs, through the dirty court into the street, and walked home with thankfulness in his heart that he had been again permitted to lead a soul to the feet of Jesus.

"Don't go to the study, Caleb, it is cold," said Mrs. Hollert, after they had risen from prayers; "I'm going to the nursery, you can be quiet here."

"Very well," he replied, and as she gathered up her work; "Ellen, pray, and earnestly too, that the power of the Holy Spirit may be felt to-morrow. We are 'agreed'? That's right, dear!"

"'Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God.' That is for myself as much as for the people. The indwelling Spirit, the Sanctifier, must be obeyed. But is this the message? I could preach a grander sermon on the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost: more room for display of imaginative and descriptive powers—and I have consecrated these to God, but, am I willing that He should set them aside as well as use them?"

It was a fresh test of consecration, and the minister's head was bowed for some moments, while Satan made his attack with vigour. But the "still small voice" of the Spirit was heard above the din of devils. "Thank God for victory," he said. "I have been following the Lord fully up to the light He has given me; I dare not do anything less to-morrow—I will not. He shall speak, even though the congregation think me a fool."

And the Recording Angel, who had been hovering over the study, wrote, "Caleb Hollert has this testimony, that he pleases God."

In quiet simplicity did Rev. Caleb Hollert tell to the souls of whom he "must give account," of the power of the indwelling Spirit to counteract the tendency to sin, and give the strength to resist temptation; of the necessity of obedience to the voice of the Spirit, on the part of God's children, lest He be grieved and withdraw Himself. Earnestly he pleaded with the unsaved, to whom the Spirit was then speaking, to give up sin and yield to God, unconditionally and at once; closing with an invitation to those who were deciding for the service of God to meet him in the vestry for conversation and prayer.

In the beginning of the sermon, Mr. Westby had listened attentively, wondering at the quiet manner yet evident power of the minister. "I am a Christian," he thought; "but I don't know much, really, about being 'led by the Spirit,' as he puts it. I try to do what is right. There must be something beyond what I realise at present! I'll ask him about it. It's quite true that I ought to be worth more to God!"

"There must be something in all this," thought Gerald Thorneling, as he looked at more than one bowed head in the congregation. "The Holy Spirit seems to be a living person to the minister. I wonder if He could turn me! Wouldn't it be curious? The minister seems to think He could, Why! he's looking straight at me!" and he winced visibly.

"Perhaps—but no. I'm too wicked, and —bless me! what would Lowther say?—and Mrs. Flutham? That's quite true! Will they answer for me at the judgment? God help me! How could I go to the vestry? I'll see if anyone else goes!"

There was not much chatting about weather or politics, or even about Dorcas, Zenana, Mission, or committee meetings, as the congregation dispersed; all being more or less occupied with their thoughts, while five or six went to the vestry for counsel and help from the minister.

"What are you thinking about, George?" said Mrs. Harrowby to her husband, when they had got half-way home.

"Thinking! Well!—if I am thinking about anything it is that I won't enter that church again! That sermon was all preached at me. If—I—were to make that change in my business it would be a loss of £1000 a year. Think of it! We'll go to Nocross Church, the minister there doesn't try to annoy one."

"I have got my 'commands' this morning," said Ellice to her sister, as they walked up the avenne to their home.

"About Captain Hander?"

"Yes! It would be grieving the Spirit to—to promise to marry him as he is—not a Christian."

And Josephine saw a tear fall on her glove, roll down to the fur on her jacket, and glisten there.

"I wish that Dan had a' bin there," thought Madge Foss, as she hurried home. "I'll fetch him to-night; it'll be raisin' to his soul if it be like this mornin's."

And the Recording Angel, who had been hovering over the church, wrote, "Caleb Hollert shall shine as the stars for ever and ever."

EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The quarterly paper of this Society gives some very interesting letters from various parts of the vast mission field. One from Nazareth tells of hindrance in consequence of the Government having refused permission to erect a hospital, in spite of which, however, much is done in comforting and healing the sick. There are also letters full of encouragement from India, Congo, and Japan, while in more than one we are reminded that those who thus go forth to spread the Gospel in dark places of the earth must be willing not only to endure hardship but to lay down their lives for his sake. The Society has now entered on the forty-sixth year of its existence, and has twenty-three students preparing for medical missionary service, one of these being a grandson of the late Dr. Robert Moffat.

BIBLE STUDIES.—39.

DUTIES OF THE PRIESTS.

"He hath made us priests unto God."—REV. i. 6.

I. To bear the ark of the covenant (Deut. x. 8). The Ark, made of gold and shittim wood, was a type of the God-man, Christ Jesus. Our duty, as priests of the Lord, is to uplift Him; so to live as to be able to say truly, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me" (Col. ii. 20); so to work, that when success is given, the heart can restfully, humbly say, "Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me" (1 Cor. xv. 10). Paul thus uplifted his Master; "we preach Christ crucified" (1 Cor. i. 23). "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Gal. vi. 14). "For me to live is Christ" (Phil. i. 21).

II. To burn incense before the Lord (1 Chron. xxiii. 13). (a) The incense of prayer. "Let my prayer be set forth before Thee as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice" (Ps. cxli. 2). "Pray without ceasing" (1 Thess. v. 17). "The prayer of the upright is his delight" (Prov. xv. 8). "Pray one for another" (James v. 16). "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints" (Eph. vi. 18). (b) The incense of praise. "By Him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to his name" (Heb. xiii. 15). "In everything give thanks" (1 Thess. v. 18). "Giving thanks always for all things unto God" (Eph. v. 20).

III. To minister unto Him (Deut. xxi. 5). (1) To Himself. "Thou shalt be like a watered garden. Let my Beloved come into his garden and eat his pleasant fruits" (Isa. lviii. 11; Cant. iv. 16). "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace," &c. (Gal. v. 22, 23). "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord . . . for ye serve the Lord Christ" (Col. iii. 23, 24). (2) To Him in his people. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me" (Matt. xxv. 34—40). "For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister" (Heb. vi. 10).

IV. To bless in his name (Deut. x. 8). Being blessed ourselves, we are to become channels of blessing to others. "I will bless thee . . . and thou shalt be a blessing" (Gen. xii. 2). In the description of the garden of the believers' soul (Cant. iv. 12—16), there is not only "a spring shut up, a fountain sealed," kept for the King alone (communion), but "a fountain of gardens, a well of living waters" (service). "He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water" (John vii. 38).

Streatham. JANET CLARK.

THE YOUNG LADIES' SEWING SOCIETY of the Upper Clapton Congregational Church (Rev. J. Gamble) have presented 390 garments of warm and new clothing to the poor parents and children connected with the Smeed-road Branch of the North Bow Mission of the Primitive Methodist Connexion.

NOON PRAYER-MEETING FOR SOUTHWARK.—DEAR SIR,—In connection with the Y.M.C.A. in this district, I am desirous of starting a noon prayer-meeting, and shall be glad if any of your readers who are residing in this neighbourhood, and who would be willing to co-operate, would kindly communicate with me.—Yours truly,

GEO. F. ASSITER, Secretary.

WINCHESTER SOLDIERS' HOME.—This Home, the outcome of Gospel services conducted in the interests of militiamen in the lodging-houses of Winchester, was established in its present quarters in 1877, and has since been doing a blessed work in the district, especially amongst the soldiers. The hall accommodates 600 persons, and, besides a smaller room in which Bible-reading and prayer-meetings are held, there are coffee and reading rooms, &c. From this centre also several branches, at Allbrook, Compton, Shroner Hill, and four other places, have originated, in all of which there are frequent week day and Sunday services. The testimonies, of which several are printed in the report before us, from soldiers and others as to the good influence this Home has exerted on their future lives are most touching, and show how far-reaching is its sphere of usefulness. Miss Louisa Perks superintends the work.

A. T. STEWART'S SECRET.

REV. JOHN MILLER writes in the New York Independent the reminiscence of an interview with the late A. T. Stewart, the millionaire store-keeper of New York. In reply to his visitor's question, "What is the secret of this enormous business?" Mr. Stewart replied:—

"The only secret I know, and that is the only one I can bring forward, is that I started with the idea of becoming professionally and actually other people's merchant. I saw lawyers and doctors tower up by making themselves precious to those they worked for. It was my favourite idea that this was the secret for the merchant. Meaning to embark upon what should last a lifetime, I dismissed the idea of gaining upon certain stocks; and turning over, for the moment, speculative merchandise, I kept steadily in eye comfort and freedom from disappointment for substantial purchase.

"Hence certain rules. I swore by the 'one price.' Ladies who come in their cushioned carriages don't want to be fevered by the idea of beating down. Again, perfect goods! I bought nothing of any damage. I cheapened nothing because it was not altogether right. I did not trust to telling people a thing had any deficiency. My telling them they would forget. I kept no such things. And so you understand how in a third of a century people got to buying of me with the luxury of an easy mind.

"I allowed no deceit. A youth who would misrepresent I would turn away. I forbade ladies to be allowed to deceive each other in talking of my goods, and salesmen were ordered to correct buyers who were standing by the goods, who said they would wash, for example, if they would not.

"You have no idea what comfort this would give in shopping through a long course of years, and the business would grow, under this entire freedom from complaint, in a way that neither the storekeeper nor the buyer at the time might quite remark or understand.

"This is my secret," said he, "as far as I can conceive. I have demanded full profits; but then I have bought with uniform care, and sold correctly and with absolute truth all my time."

"Poor humanity may have only one good side," adds Mr. Miller, "but, certainly, that is worthy of a record. Stewart's secret of success can do no harm if known in Wall-street, and set side by side with the secret of other fortunes that have grown in our time."

"FISHING IN RUNNING WATERS."

THIS is the title of the report of a year's mission work by the Billingsgate District Association (London City Mission). The labours of the missionary (Mr. Vicary) have been greatly blessed, while the free breakfasts and soup suppers have been the means of rescuing many from a state of the greatest destitution, and in some cases of leading them out of their abject misery to better things. Seven hundred and thirty guests were entertained at supper during the season, and of these eleven runaway boys were sent back to their homes. The province of the Mission is amongst the squalid and outcast, and 1100 have been provided with breakfast.

In consequence of expiration of the lease of the premises, we are sorry to find that the Mission will be much disturbed; but it is hoped that, through the help of friends, a larger and more suitable place may be found in which to carry on these varied and useful operations.

EVANGELISATION IN GERMANY.

BY DR. H. P. ZIEMANN.

I HAVE recently returned from the Continent, where I have been privileged to hold, during the last six months, 386 Gospel meetings. God's kindness and mercy have followed me in a very marked manner, but better still, He went before me. I learn more and more this one thing as the secret of power in our work: it is not our zeal, or talent, or experience, nor even our preaching of Christ crucified, that gives success; it is, above all, the living Christ with us. The secret of power is to let Him work—to learn to be a willing and obedient instrument in his hand. What wonders He can do with the weakest of us, if we are in his hands!

I brought with me from Düsseldorf the likeness of a dwarf, who, the greater part of his life—eighteen years, I believe—spent a miserable existence, never expecting to live, and poor in every sense of the word; but God cared for him, loved him, saved him, and made him happy in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. What a happy, bold, mighty child of God this little weak, deformed fellow is. He himself told me how he once asked the Lord, in childlike faith, to give him strength to go about, if only for a few years, and he would then only mind the Lord's business. The Lord did raise him, and made him a really wonderful instrument. He finds entrance to the houses and hearts of people of high station, where some of us never venture. His courage in the name of the Lord is apostolic, and nothing is more touching than to hear him, in a large meeting, tell "Jesus loves me, even me!" What an argument, what an encouragement for anyone to come! Lately he had daily two meetings in Hagen.

All over Germany there has come a marked change for the better, but those most used are not, as a rule, the great and mighty in intellect and learning. Of course, there are exceptions. In Berlin, for instance, amongst the foremost workers are men in high station, ladies of rank, whose lives are consecrated to God's service! Their labours are felt in that great city, though the opposing forces are great. I rejoiced to see the work amongst young men, started three years ago by Pastor von Schluembach, flourishing and in spiritual vigour.

Pastor Stöcker's untiring efforts have changed public opinion amongst the masses with regard to Christianity. I must also mention the quiet but telling work of Pastor Rohrbach, who occupies a very isolated position, but whose efforts God evidently blesses.

All through the Continent is a stir; even pastors who are not yet in sympathy with "lay work," try to do something to rouse people out of their religious indifference, and work against the tide of Socialism and infidelity. The Church authorities have just sent twenty young pastors to Berlin to become acquainted with practical mission work. I had the happy experience to find how many more pastors look more favourably upon Gospel work than formerly. The secular newspapers also have dropped their bitter attacks, and some commence even to think the Gospel may do some good.

But what stirred me most was the eager willingness of the people to come to listen to the Gospel. I went mostly to the centres of the working men. I do love to speak to those stout-looking fellows, and watch their interest. In Essen, for instance, I found on the first evening over a thousand men, and most of them with a glass of beer before them. I gave a slight hint that, apart from teetotal questions, the beer seems out of place in a Gospel meeting, and how I rejoiced to see the next evening that the attendance was even greater, and no beer to be seen. In Cassel, after some unfounded prejudices had been removed, the people came night after night in great crowds, and listened most attentively. Ultimately the authorities gave me permission to speak in a church, holding, as I have been told, about four thousand people.

Much remains to be done on the Continent. There is much that is very, very sad. To look at the crowded streets, with men and women so careless, so Godless, so unholy, so unhappy—how it moves one to cry, "Rescue the perishing!" It is more sad still, when the doors seem open to speak to the people of God and a better life, and they are anxious to hear, that the enemy should come in and prevent. There is a devoted child of God, well-known in England, Miss von Weling, who, with sacrifices which few in England can understand, laboured in Branderoda (Thüringen), and found there a wonderful field of usefulness. The pastor of the place—whose regular ministry consists of one service weekly on Sunday, attended, as I have seen myself, by seventeen people—agitated until her school was closed, and she driven away, all for the crime of being a suspected Methodist, which, by the way, she is not.

For the same reason, a pastor in Bamberg (Bavaria) took it upon himself to forbid me to hold meetings there, and warned the people against me in the papers. Still the people came, and, strange to say, the greater part of my hearers were Catholics, who seemed greatly interested. The landlord of whom I had taken the hall—a Catholic—refused to take any payment, and said whenever I came back I could have his hall free of charge. The work is the Lord's. He will take care of it.

Thank God for every cheering sign, because the spiritual needs of Germany are very great! Except in Berlin and in a few other large cities there is little done for the masses who do not attend church, and who would not find room if they did. In most churches the absence of men is very marked; still, I noticed where the simple Gospel is preached in power, there men are drawn in. In Berlin I found mostly men under the preaching of Court-chaplain Stöcker, and that holy man General-Superintendent Braun. In Essen I was several times present when, at an early Sunday service (7.30 a.m.), a church holding 2000 seats was so crowded that the doors could not be shut. The preacher gave nothing but the old Gospel, but from the heart to the heart. In many churches the congregations are addressed as if they were all living Christians. Conversion is ignored, and the learned sermons do not reach the heart nor the conscience.

The greatest want is lay-workers, who have time to go amongst the masses, speak to them wherever they can find them, or gather and address them in plain, simple language. I read only to-day, in Dr. J. A. Wylie's pamphlet, "The Papacy," that Germany has nearly half a million of Atheists and Socialists. The writer wonders how an educated country like Germany can accept a programme so terrible as that of the Socialists', and he explains it by remarking that "half of its people, speaking generally, never open a Bible, never go to church, never come under the influence of religious ordinances. Here is a vast void at the heart of the German nation, and what can rush in to fill that void but just some such atheistic system as we see filling it?" Dr. Wylie adds in a note a fact, the truth of which I had opportunity of ascertaining in Berlin, that the vigorous working of the Berlin City Mission has considerably reduced the numbers of Socialists; a proof that the Gospel is still the best remedy for social evils.

LODGING FOR YOUNG MEN.—In a recent issue attention was called to the immense importance of Metropolitan Y.M.C.A.'s providing lodging accommodation for commercial young men. We are glad to know that this is being done by several Y.M.C.A. committees throughout London. The Brompton branch (112, Brompton-road) has lately added this feature to its work, and now provides bed and use of sitting-room and reading-room at a very moderate charge.

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY OF VICTORIA.—The third report of this Society gives brief narratives of the work at many of the fifty-eight mission stations where it is being carried on. These sufficiently prove that the labour and money expended have been "most fruitful, even unto eternity." Interesting reference is also made to Mr. and Mrs. Müller's reception at Melbourne. During six weeks Mr. Müller held five services weekly in the largest churches in the city and suburbs, these, with few exceptions, being filled to overflowing.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

V.—THE NOBLE RESOLVE.

Genesis XXVIII.

We are studying the education of a human spirit in the story of Jacob, who became Israel, the Prince. But before you can benefit by it you must be quite sure that there is something in you capable of being educated. Education means drawing out, as culture will draw fragrance, colour, and graceful beauty, out of the bulb which looks uninteresting and dead. No amount of education could draw such products from a stone. Education only avails when there is some latent germ containing the promise and potency of life. So the discipline of God will be a failure, so far as you are concerned, unless you have got within you, as Jacob certainly had, the principle of a nobler life than that which comes by nature. In a word, Have you been born again? Has there been placed within you, by the Spirit of God, the principle of a new and better life? Is there within you a something, which is not of self, nor of man, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God? If so, you are welcome to acquire any help that may be afforded by a study of God's dealings with Jacob, in whose original constitution there was little to admire. There were three steps in God's dealings with this mean and crafty spirit, and in one form or another they have a universal application.

To begin with, God revealed Jacob to himself. He might have gone on for years in dreamy self-content, ignorant of the evils that lurked within his breast. So a strong temptation was permitted to cross his pathway. There was no necessity for him to yield, but he did yield. And in yielding, he stood face to face with the unutterable baseness of his own heart. A rock, jutting up in the midst of a stream, often reveals the set of the languid current. Fling a strong light into a cave, and the wretched tenants will hurry out screaming, as they behold the loathsome creatures that had crept around them. This is the first step towards soul-health. A Nathan must be sent to unveil the evils that fester within, and to accost us with the terrible apostrophe, "Thou art the man!" If, of late, you have begun to see the hidden evils of your heart; and to discover the workings of things of which you could not have supposed yourself capable; and to loathe yourself, as Job did, then take heart; God is dealing with you, and is commencing a work which He will never abandon, till you are presented faultless in his presence, with exceeding joy. The first and indispensable work of the Holy Ghost, in the human spirit, is to convict of sin.

In the next place, God permitted Jacob to suffer the loss of all earthly friends and goods. The prodigal, in the far country, was reduced to heartrending straits. "When he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land, and he began to be in want, and was sent into the fields to feed swine, and no man gave unto him." And yet he was not much worse off than Jacob was at this moment. We saw in our last that he was lonely, destitute, and in fear. He had little or no property, but a cruse of oil (v. 18) and his staff (xxxii. 10). He dreaded his brother's wrath. He was compelled to content himself with a stone for his pillow on the moorland waste. But he was not the last man who has had reason to bless God to all eternity for having swept his life clear of much which he had accounted absolutely needful to his existence. The still small voice can only be heard when all other voices are hushed. The silver stars can only be seen in the dark. It is when the weary fishers have toiled all the night, without taking a solitary fish, that they are prepared to see, in the morning haze, the form of One who loves them standing on the shore. Do not be surprised if to soul-trial there have been added other bitter trials beside.

Finally, God thrusts into Jacob's life a revelation of His Love. "Behold, a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven." That ladder symbolised the love of God. All through his life that love had surrounded Jacob with its balmy atmosphere, but he had never realised, or returned, or yielded to it. But now it was gathered up and crystallised into one definite appeal, and thrust upon him, so that he could do no other than behold it. And in that hour of conviction and need it was as welcome as a ladder put down into a dark and noisome pit, where a man is sinking fast into despair; he quickly hails its seasonable aid, and begins to climb back to daylight. Can you not remember the moment when the love of God in Jesus Christ first broke on you? You were deeply convinced of sin; you dreaded lest at any moment the sword of the Avenger should smite you down; you would have gladly exchanged places with the dumb animals around you; you were broken by trouble, anxiety, and care. And just then you were arrested by the cross of Jesus. At first you only looked on it with the casual gaze of curiosity, but as you looked your attention became so fixed that you were spell-bound. You saw it transfigured beneath the light of heaven; you felt that Divine love shone in those dying eyes, and streamed in tides of blessing from every open wound, and spoke in every accent of that faltering voice. And as you lingered still, there stole into your heart the conviction that it was all for you—a conviction which forced tears to your eyes, and these words from your lips, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me. My sins nailed Him there, my curse poured its vials upon that drooping head, my stripes broke that royal heart."

"So I saw in my dream, that just as Christian came up with the cross, his burden loosed from off his shoulders, and fell from off his back, and began to tumble, and so continued to do, till it came to the mouth of the sepulchre, where it fell in, and I saw it no more. Then was Christian glad and lightsome, and said, with a merry heart, 'He hath given me rest by his sorrow, and life by his death.' Then he stood still awhile to look and wonder, even till the springs that were in his head sent the waters down his cheeks."

Has this been your experience? If not, seek it; ask that your eyes may be opened, to see the love of God to you, revealed in the Cross of Jesus, and let down into your life. Then will you also give three leaps of joy, and go on your way singing.

The revelation of God's love will have five results on the receptive spirit.

(1) It will make us quick to discover God. Jacob had been inclined to localise God in his father's tents, as many localise Him now in chapel, church, or minster, supposing that prayer and worship are more acceptable there than anywhere beside. Now he learned that God was equally in every place, on the moorland waste as well as by Isaac's altar, though his eye had been too blind to perceive Him. In point of fact, the difference lay not in God, but in himself; the human spirit carries with it everywhere its own atmosphere, through which it may see or not see the presence of the Omnipresent. If your spirit is reverent, it will discern God on a moorland waste. If your spirit is thoughtless and careless, it will fail to find Him even in the face of Jesus Christ. There are many men, who might have kept as close to the Apostle Paul as his shadow, who would not have seen one angel vision or heard one heavenly word. On the other hand, if the Apostle were to spend a day with us, he would see traces of the glorious presence of God in our busy streets and wrangling marts. The difference is not in the place, or in the degrees of God's presence, but in the keenness of the spiritual eye, since all places are equally hallowed, and God is everywhere.

When we have been touched and solemnised by some stately service or stirring discourse, we are disposed to say, "This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." But we are not disposed to say as much of the shop or counting-house in which we spend the greater part of our time. The reason for this is to be found in the materialism of our spirit. If only we were full of God, we should find that every spot was sacred, every moment hallowed, every act a sacrament; from every incident we should see a ladder stretching up to heaven; and our happy spirits would be constantly availing themselves of the opportunity to run up the shining way and embrace their dearest Lord.

Similarly, when we have met with a great deliverance, as Abraham on Mount Moriah, we are led to exclaim, "This is the finger of God." But we are not apt to say as much of every trivial incident in daily life. The reason, again, is in ourselves. We need the quick insight, which only love can give. It was the disciple to whom Jesus had revealed his special love, that discerned Him on the lake-shore, and cried, "It is the Lord." And if we were as willing as he was to drink in the love of Jesus, we should be as quick as he was in discerning the presence of the Lord.

Up to this moment the Lord has been in many of the moorland wastes of your lives, but you have not known it. He has been beside you in that lonely chamber of pain, in that irksome situation, on that rugged pathway, by that bitter cross, amid those Godless companions, during those hours which you have counted secular and profane; but your eyes have been holden. What wonder that your path has been so drear! But if you will only take home to yourself the message of the Cross of Jesus, "God loves me;" and if you will let it shed its perfume through your secret heart, then you will never feel lonely or outcast again. You will be able to see Him where no other eye can discern Him. You will feel the ruddy glow of his love when others carry chilled and torpid hearts. You will discover that a desolate moor is one of the mansions of your Father's house. You will detect your Father's handwriting in every letter, your Father's seal on every parcel, your Father's will in every event. You will be able to commune with Him equally on the hill-side as amid the congregation. And you will be often compelled to exclaim, as you meet with fresh revelations of Himself, in the most unlikely places: 'this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven."

(2) It will inspire us with Godly fear. "He was afraid, and said, 'How dreadful is this place.'" "Perfect love casteth out fear"—the fear that hath torment—but it begets in us another fear, which is the beginning of wisdom and the foundation of all noble lives—the fear that reveres God, and shudders to grieve Him, and dreads to lose the tiniest chance of doing his holy will. True love is always fearless and fearful. It is fearless with the freedom of undoubting trust. But it is fearful lest it should miss a single grain of tender affection, or should bring a moment's shadow over the face of the beloved. Those who look from without sometimes rebuke us for dwelling so constantly on the infinite love of God, surrounding us, as the warm Southern seas lap around shores, enamelled with shells. Some say you will lead people to live loosely if you tell them that there is no sin which may not be instantly forgiven. Ah! they do not know that there are none who fear sin so much as those who know that they are greatly loved. For them every spot is full of the presence of the Beloved. Heaven itself does not more evidently glow with it than each spot of earth. And then, though all other fear has fled before all-mastering love, there has come into the spirit another fear, that distrusts self and clings to Christ, and works out its salvation with fear and trembling.

(3) It will constrain us to give ourselves to God. The ordinary reading might lead us to suppose that, true to his worse self, Jacob tried to make a bargain with God, and promised to take Him as his, on certain conditions. "If God will be with me, and keep me in my way, and give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, then——." But a better reading relieves him of this sad imputation, and tones the words down to mean, that, if the Lord would be his God, then the stone should be God's house. But, however the words may run, this was evidently the moment of his consecration. "He was constrained by love of God, no longer to live to himself, but to Him."

Have you done thus, dear reader? It is the sole condition of soul-health, and peace, and power. You are Christ's by right, but you have been living as if you were your own, and had never been bought by his precious blood. Is it, then to be wondered at that your life has been such a miserable failure? You are robbing Jesus of his own purchased possession, and you cannot expect to enjoy the fulness of his salvation. Give yourself to Him now. And, as soon as you will to do so, He takes that which you give. Or, if you cannot give yourself, then lie low at his feet, and ask Him to take all you are and have. And so soon as the words have passed your lips He will answer your prayer, and make you his for ever.

(4) It will prompt us to devote our property to Him. "Of all that Thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee." There is no reason to doubt that this became the principle of Jacob's life; and if so, he shames the majority of Christian people, most of whom do not give on principle, and give a very uncertain and meagre percentage of their income. The Church would have no lack if every one of its members acted upon this principle. Let the proportion be diminished, if you will; though that were surely unworthy of us, who sing that "the whole world of nature would be a present far too small for love so amazing, so divine," as Christ's. But whether the proportion be diminished or not, let each Christian person resolve to give systematically to the Lord's cause, and to put aside, as first-fruits from all profits and receipts, a certain part, which shall be considered as distinctly and exclusively the Lord's, to be applied as He may direct.

There is something better than this—viz., to consider oneself, one's earnings, one's strength, one's all, as belonging to the dear Master; as the rags and earnings and jewels of slaves belonged absolutely to the owners, who had bought them off the block. But many, admitting this theoretically, do nothing practically; and, therefore, it is better to give a regular proportion certainly, and as much more as you choose, as a perpetual reminder that all you have and are is not your own, but Jesus Christ's.

It is failure in this which so often brings barrenness and joylessness into Christian lives. This is the reason that so many of the ascending angels never come down again, or return with empty hands. This is why we sow much, and bring in little; eat, and have not enough; drink, and are not satisfied; and put our wages into a bag with holes. We have robbed God in tithes and offerings. But if we would resolve to give Him tithes of all, and to bring them into his storehouse, we should find that He would open the windows of heaven, and pour us out such a blessing that there would not be room to receive it.

(5) It will fill us with joy. "Then Jacob lifted up his feet" (xxix. 1, marg.). Does not that denote the light-hearted alacrity with which he sped upon his way? His feet were winged with joy, and seemed scarcely to tread the earth. All sorrow had gone from his heart, for he had handed his burdens over to those ascending angels. And this will be our happy lot, if only we will believe the love that God hath to us. We, too, shall lose our burdens at the foot of the cross; and we shall learn the blessed secret of handing over, as soon as they arise, all worries and fears to our pitiful High Priest. "Then shall our mouth be filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing." "Our heart shall bubble over with good matter." "Our soul shall make her boast in the Lord; the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad."

OLD CUMNOCK, AYRSHIRE.—Evangelistic work has been carried on in this district for the past two years among the mining population, and six stations are regularly visited. It was lately decided to build a hall at Old Cumnock, for the purpose of holding services hitherto conducted in the Town-hall. A substantial building has been erected at a cost of £660, of which £200 is still needed. The people, though poor, have done what they could to help forward the work. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. Campbell, Boswell Cottage, Ayr-road, Old Cumnock, Ayrshire.

ALGERIA AS A RESIDENCE.

ONE cannot have spent six years in a country, observing its lamentable moral condition, praying and labouring in various ways on its behalf, without acquiring a deep interest in its welfare; and now I write with the view of combining two objects—to suggest a very desirable southern residence, and to enlist Christian workers for Algeria.

I have always thought that its nearness to our own shores, and the comparative excellence of its climate, above so many spots, makes it remarkably suited as a residence for those who seek to escape the cold and fogs of our own country. Families with moderate incomes could live economically here, and by judicious management, at least at one-third less than in London or Paris. I imagine there must be many such families who would be glad to avail themselves of these advantages when put distinctly before them. Those who have been habituated to the climate of India would be at home here, with less oppression from the heat of the summer months. It is even preferable to the Riviera and its severe change at nightfall. Two single ladies with small means could manage well here, lodging on flats; and living is cheap. Persons in delicate health would, with the blessing of God, get recruited, and in the heat of summer, 70 to 80 degrees, there are many places at a high elevation where, if necessary, one could retreat for two or three months; but there is always a pleasant breeze from the sea if staying near it.

It is a bright, lovely spot; the atmosphere brilliant, and rather bracing than relaxing. If it rains, it is in showers, and never a drizzle, as with us; and, the soil being absorbent, the moment the rain ceases, the sun reappears, the roads dry, and even the invalid can go out into the open air, though he has to be careful of the change at sunset. It is true the Sirocco may sweep over the country for a day or two, and there are mosquitos at night near the sea; but one has only to avoid having lights in the bedchambers to escape them. So far for the outward advantages of the country and its climate.

There is an extraordinary sphere for everyone desiring to labour for Christ. Opportunities abound amongst very various classes—French, Spanish, Jews, Arabs, Italians, Kabyles, and others. They are devoid of the knowledge of the full salvation provided for them in Christ, and those who possess this knowledge are needed to make it known to them. There are many at home without a special sphere of service (for labourers abound), who in this day of spiritual quickening are not contented to vegetate in their comfortable homes, but feel THEY MUST work for Christ; and here such would find a virgin soil to work upon. Come, then, dear friends, to the rescue; you will find many to whom Christ has never been named, and no fear of building on another man's foundation. The knowledge of French will carry one everywhere, and natives knowing it well could at once serve as interpreters. What a grateful change, from over-ridden England to neglected Algeria!

It may be said, "You invite us to take up our abode in Algeria, then why did you leave it?" That is easily explained. We went there to commence a mission to the Kabyles. The operations of God's providence shut us out from going at once into Kabylia to reside, and we were guided to Algiers, where my wife found a large sphere of service amongst very various classes, suited to her peculiar gifts. From thence we made visits, longer or shorter, to the Kabyles, made arrangements for translating the New Testament into their language, and had most happy intercourse with them. We also took long journeys into all the three Provinces, pioneering in missionary operations for those who might come out. This part of our work we consider we have completed, as well as translations, of which we have the greater part of the New Testament in manuscript.

But my own heart always tended to find some residence in the midst of our dear Kabyles, as we could not otherwise properly engage personally in missionary work amongst them. With this object in view, in May last we went to a French village on the eastern extremity of the Province, surrounded by Kabyle villages, intending, if it were God's will, to remove our residence, build a small house, and end our days there; but I was attacked with the fever of the country, and completely disabled. The Kabyle villages are all built on the mountain tops, and it requires no small exertion to reach them. I found myself disqualified, from weakness and advancing years, for this exertion, and we were compelled to submit to the fact, that it was an indication that this personal work of evangelisation was not my sphere, but that I must leave it to younger hands, and aim rather to awaken an interest for missionary work in Algeria, both in France and in England, as it could better be done there than in Algiers. This, in fact, has been my work throughout my life. My wife did not leave without a pang, but she finds abundance of similar work in Paris, where she has spent many years of her life.

Information would be given cheerfully to Christian friends about Algiers on their arrival, by the kind Manager of the Bible Society's Depôt, No. 4, Rue Tangier, Algiers. Under the same roof there is a Sunday-afternoon service by a Presbyterian minister, and a McAll meeting also on several evenings in the week. I need not say how glad I shall be to correspond with any Christian friends desiring fuller information about work and residence.—Yours affectionately in Christ, GEO. PEARSE.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

DURING the past season we sent off three swarms of little bees from our hives, and we long to fill up our beds at the Boys' and Girls' Homes once again. We opened our doors after the annual meeting on October 21, and admitted a great many children the first day, and many more since, in faith that as God had sent mouths, He would send the bread to fill them. They were all very urgent cases, who had been waiting for weeks till we could take them in.

May I appeal for help in our rescue work, to those of your readers who have pattering little feet running to meet them at the hall door in the evenings, and bright eyes gleaming with mirth and pleasure, ready to give papa his welcome home from business and bother at the close of the day. If friends cannot give large sums, we shall not "despise the day of small things," for "every little helps."—Yours truly,

"THE PRIEST IN THE FAMILY."

IN a trenchant article on this subject, The Echo says:—

Men who have a truth to proclaim to the world, and who are conscious of its suitability to the wants of man, do not resort to backstairs influence to lodge it in the hearts of trusting, and it may be timorous, wives and daughters. No, they prefer to walk in sunlight with heads erect, to challenge investigation, and even court opposition. The Roman Catholic priest, apparently conscious of his weakness, walks stealthily, and if he can, unseen; whispers lowly, and so gradually gets "the weaker vessel" under his control, if not within his power. He does not concern himself about the domestic consequences of his insidious activities. He may be destroying confidence between mother and daughter, or husband and wife; he may be blasting happy homes, as he has done in millions of instances, and is doing in England at the present moment. But what, in the long run, has he got for his Church? Is his Church stronger for all this creeping activity? We think it is weaker. We think that Father Moore, by his insidious and secret propagandism, and by the successes he has achieved, under the high sanction of Cardinal Manning, over a few wives' consciences, will be the means of creating indignation in the minds of millions of men; and men, in the long run, do the most to decide the fate of churches and to mould the destinies of nations.

For the Young.

BLACK CHILDREN IN AUSTRALIA.

OUR young friends who read THE CHRISTIAN have, we think, heard more than once of the Maloga Mission in Australia, on the banks of the River Murray. As we are here on a visit, we thought you might like to hear a little fresh news about them.

We would also like to tell you of some little black children whom we went to see just before we came up to Maloga. We were staying with some friends in Sydney, and heard that there were some black men, women, and children at La Perouse, three miles from Botany, near the city. We had gone one Saturday with some friends to see Botany Bay, where Captain Cook landed when he first discovered Sydney. We sat on the beach eating our luncheon, and looking across the bay, where the monument Captain Cook erected stands. Two black people from La Perouse passed us. We stopped them, had a talk with them, and found that the woman was an old friend from Maloga. Mr. Matthews had persuaded her to come with him to Maloga, but she did not like being so many hundreds of miles from her own friends, so after a time she went back to Sydney. We found that no one came on Sundays to have meetings with them, or to talk to them about the Lord Jesus and his love to them; so we promised to go out one Sunday. One of our party was well known to some of them, for he commenced the Warangesda Mission, and had tried to get some of the La Perouse people to go with him there.

The Sunday was a cool, pleasant day. We walked through the bush and round the rocks, and at last we reached the black settlement. The Government had given them materials for some roughly-put-up iron huts. Some of the people were half camped out-doors, cooking their dinners in sheds made of sticks and bark. We visited them in their houses, and talked with them. They all seemed glad to see us. The black children went to a white school near on week-days; so they could read a little, and were pleased to get the little Gospel books we brought with us.

We gathered the men, women, and children together for an open-air meeting, choosing a spot near the open door and window of a hut where a paralysed woman sat on the ground, in order that she might hear. They all listened attentively as we sang to them some Gospel hymns from Mr. Sankey's collection, prayed, read to them from the Bible, and told them of God's great love to them in giving his only Son to save them. We did long to see them all at Maloga, but they will not go so far. We hope a mission will be opened before long not far from their neighbourhood.

When we reached Maloga, a few weeks ago, our little black friends gave us a warm welcome. Some of them have grown so much. At the day-school many of them have made progress with their lessons, reading and writing well, and doing mental arithmetic quickly. At the Scripture-class, which we have once a week in the day-school, some of their answers are very good; also at the Sunday-school on Sundays. They have a text meeting once a week; everyone, both grown people and children, bring texts which they have found out before the meeting; they repeat them and tell the book, chapter, and verse; they take great pleasure in this, and some of their texts are nicely chosen.

The Jubilee Singers paid Maloga a visit the week before we came up. They stayed for several hours, sung some of their sweet songs and hymns, and went to see the people in their cottages. One of them went into the hut of a sick aboriginal woman, and made up her fire for her; another wept as she looked at the sick woman, and said she reminded her of her mother who had died a few years ago. As they were leaving, one of them told Mr. Matthews that she would make some clothes and send them to some of the little black children at Maloga. The black children are learning to sing their hymns with great pleasure.

Lucy was ill when we came up, and now she has been taken away, leaving a husband and four little girls. She had often given much trouble; but we have great hope that during her illness she truly repented and came to the Lord Jesus. The day before she died she said she was trusting in the Saviour, and that she was not afraid to die. Her little baby was taken not long after; so now there are three little girls to be cared for; they live with different black families, and go to the day-school every day. All are kind to the little motherless girls, and we hope they will early come to the Lord Jesus. There are three other motherless girls, who were very young when their mothers died at Maloga, but have now grown up into such nice young women—Annie, Maggie, and Bertha. Annie, the eldest, is married, and has a little baby girl; Maggie and Bertha do the house-work in Mr. Matthews' house.

The little girls are learning sewing at the day-school; two afternoons a week Mrs. James (the teacher's wife, who is a half-caste young woman) teaches them, and we hope to give them prizes for their sewing before we leave, to encourage them. You would like, we are sure, to see the little black babies. Clarence, Gideon, Abraham, and Isaac are the names of some of them. We want those of you who belong to the Lord Jesus to pray that all the little black children in Australia may be led to love Him. There are some gathered at Warangesda, on the River Murrumbidgee, in New South Wales, as well as at Maloga. Mr. and Mrs. Gribble are getting some in Western Australia; we hope some other dear Christian friends are soon going to begin a mission near Barlee, in New South Wales, five hundred miles farther than Sydney, and some others in Queensland. But there are still many who have not yet heard the Gospel, and we want to get them all brought in. E. S. H. R.

REACHING THE WORKING MEN.

WE are told sometimes that it is very difficult to reach the working men. The wives can be spoken to in their homes, and the children at the schools, but the husbands and elder brothers remain invisible. The Lord spoke about this to one of the Y.W.C.A. members of the "Princess House" branch, and showed her that they might be found in the streets between five and six a.m. in summer, and between six and seven a.m. in winter, on their way to work.

She and a fellow member have put this thought into action for the last seven months, once a week; sometimes three hundred tracts or books are distributed in that single hour, and it is wonderful to see the draymen, &c, pull up their horses short, in the middle of the street, and stretch down their hands to receive them. In the public-houses they are also well received. Opposition there is, as a matter of course. An infidel deliberately cursed the workers; one was spit upon, and another had her hand violently pushed away. But it would be a poor work that excited no opposition. Men going to work have not much time to stop and talk, but by turning round and walking their way, there has been some very close dealing with souls, and it has been very well received.

Suitable illustrated leaflets or booklets will be very welcome if addressed to A. B, Princess House, 108, Brompton-road, S.W.

"FRIEDENHEIM" is the name of a Home established some months ago by Miss Davidson, at 133, Mildmay-road, N. It is intended for a few amongst the poor in the last stages of illness, whose hopeless condition does not justify their being admitted into ordinary hospitals. In eight months, ending June last, twenty-six patients had been received, of whom six left, having recovered as far as was possible; three were passed on to other hospitals, and nine died in peace. Whether the experiment shall be continued depends upon the supply of sufficient funds. "In all respects," says a lady who has visited it, "it is a real Home for those who seem most specially to need it, and I cannot say enough in praise of the comfort and loving care bestowed upon its inmates." Several medical men have also expressed their opinion of the value of such a Home.

PASS IT ON.

PASS on the invitation,
  Let him that hears say, Come;
Pass on the loving message
  To every thirsting one.

Pass on the cup of comfort
  That God has given to you;
Let other troubled spirits
  Taste of its sweetness too.

Pass on each boon and blessing,
  That comes to you through life;
And help the weary-hearted
  Who faint amid the strife.

Pass on the watchword "Courage!"
  The night will soon be o'er;
Already dawn is breaking
  On the celestial shore. M. F.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN in BELFAST.

THE name of "Elim," given to the Home for Destitute Children in Belfast, has been amply justified during the past ten years, for it has truly been a place of refreshing to numbers of destitute, starving children, already weary and footsore, though, as it were, but just sailing out on life's journey. That journey, alas, presented to their imagination no promised land as a goal to cheer them; but in God's mercy they have been here, and the whole current of their career has been changed. Instead of being homeless wanderers, with never a meal to satisfy their bodily cravings, with scarce a friend in the world, and no prospect but that of drifting downwards to a wretched end, they no sooner enter within these doors than they are in a home, with loving friends to care for them, with plenty of food for the body, and training and instruction for the mind. Truly, such institutions for the saving of the children are deserving of hearty support.

From the report just issued, we learn that about fifty boys and girls have been sheltered in the Home during the past year, and, besides these, a large number have been aided in various ways. First, the little ones are kept regularly at school, and soon they are initiated into household duties of various kinds; whilst satisfactory progress has been made in this direction, it is added, "We rejoice most of all in the work of grace which has been going on in the hearts of many of them." Then, in course of time comes the day when they must go forth and make their way in the world. Letters from several of the old boys show us something of the advantage they enjoy through the Home. All give striking evidence of the higher standpoint which now they occupy; of their content and happiness; of their grateful recollection of those at the old Home who so well befriended them, and that they have learnt to love the Bible. A party of twenty boys left in March last for Canada. The Home, it is stated, is entirely free from debt.

In February last a munificent gift was made to the Elim Home by Mr. A. O. Reid, since deceased, who, having erected at Ballygowan (twelve miles from Belfast) a handsome building, at a cost of £8000, presented it to the trustees for the furtherance of their work. To this beautiful new Home, capable of accommodating from 200 to 300 children, the younger ones will now be sent, while Elim is to be transformed into a Training Home for working lads from fourteen to twenty years of age, for whom as yet it has been impossible to do much, though about 160 boys and girls are in regular attendance at the Bible-class held on Sunday afternoons in the large schoolroom since April last.

About £1000 is still needed to completely furnish the new building, bring in the water supply, and put it in full working order. The responsible head of the Home is Mr. David Henderson, "Elim," Cramlin-road, Belfast.

PROGRESS IN TRAVANCORE.

Dear Sir,—Some kind friend sends me The Christian so regularly that I have come to look upon it as a friend's face, and look forward eagerly to the mail which brings it. As I do not know to whom I am indebted for this kindness, I shall be glad if you will convey to him the hearty thanks of myself and some of our native Christians who profit by it.

In reference to a paragraph in The Christian of September 23 about the people in the Quilon district of Travancore waiting for Christian teachers who cannot be sent from lack of means, it is only fair to state that the Directors have recognised our need, and helped us over and over again. The allowances have been more than doubled. Besides this, friends have come forward and given most generously. The fact is, the whole land now lies before us, and the Kuravars, Pulayars, Pariahs, and Vedars are earnestly begging for teachers. When a teacher is supplied to one place, other places hear the Gospel from him, and wish to leave their demons, and learn of Jesus the Saviour from sin.

In his book on Native Life in Travancore, Rev. S. Mateer, of the London Missionary Society, says:—"The Kuravar tribe once formed a state of considerable power in Madras and Mysore, where their descendants are now musicians, snake charmers, basket makers, cultivators, or robbers. Small bodies of them were driven into the jungles of Travancore, where they have sunk in civilisation, and fallen into the position of predial slaves. They are, however, higher in the caste system than Pulayars, Pariahs, and Vedars. Others are, in fact, slaves, though legally emancipated. They are not allowed to approach the higher classes in markets, or to enter their houses, and were formerly sold from one owner to another. Those now under Christian instruction are called Mahayalam Kuravars. Their religion is the aboriginal worship of demons, as Mádan, Bhadrakáli and others, in groves, or small temples, without images or with rude stones to represent the spirit."

I have just come back from Kottarakara, where we have a large open chapel without doors or windows, capable of holding about 700. It was filled, and it was encouraging to see how eagerly they listened for about three hours to the various addresses, and hear the answers of the children to the Catechism. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is just as well suited to the necessities and needs of these poor, weary and heavy-laden labourers as to the most cultured and refined, and we are cheered to see how gladly they hear it; but the people are too poor to do more than give a little for teachers, and help must come to them from outside.—Yours very sincerely, J. Knowles.

DISTRESSED IRISH LADIES.

Mrs. Lalor, writing from Long Orchard, Templemore, co. Tipperary, says:—We are now employing over 250 lady workers in connection with the Distressed Irish Ladies' Fund, and are able to keep a constant supply of materials and work, which is disposed of at sales and at our Depôt, 106, Patrick-street, Cork. We also allow a small monthly stipend to over fifty ladies of good family above seventy years of age, suffering cruel privations in the evening of their lives. The clothes sent enabled us to place thirteen ladies in good situations. I want now a little help for coals and light for my poor ladies. It is hard to stitch by bad light without a fire, harder still to hear an old lady, once used to every comfort, say, "My dear, I go to bed every night at six o'clock, for I have neither candles nor fire, and the evenings are very cold." I should like also to give all my old ladies a warm new blanket.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE.—The Beaumont Trustees have resolved that they will not apply for a license for the sale of intoxicating liquors. They have also decided that the library, reading-rooms, swimming-baths, and grounds shall be opened during a part of the Lord's day.

DR. PENTECOST ON MINISTERIAL TRAINING.*

Some of us at work in the Churches in the practical department of theology feel that there is a necessity for a more practical training on the part of our young men. A great many of our young men in the seminary were, so to speak, "fore-ordained" to a theological course. They were prayed into it from their infancy; when they were little boys they had it continually before them; they went into the home school, and then into the academy, and then into college, and then into the seminary; and they get out at twenty-five or twenty-six years of age, and they know absolutely nothing about men, churches, and the world.

I want to introduce into our seminaries something that shall bring these excellent young men, who have never had anything but this idea of the ministry before them, into actual contact with the world, and into the practical departments of applied Christianity. When a man wants to be a brick-mason he doesn't learn the trade theoretically; he is put on a wall and taught how to lay a brick. When a man becomes a carpenter, he goes into a carpenter's shop; he doesn't learn the general theory of his rules and his planes. He has his working plans before him, and he is taught to saw them out, and make his joints, and do the actual work.

When a young doctor is taught, he is taken into the hospital; he has his clinics; and he comes into his profession not simply with a knowledge of books, but with a practical knowledge which he has acquired in the dissecting-room and elsewhere. You would not employ an architect who only had the science of architecture, but a man who has been trained in actual construction as well as in the theory of construction. And so I think it would be a splendid idea if some of our young men who are studying in the seminary should spend part of their vacations in the homes of some of the working ministers. There are pastors all around, I believe, who would gladly welcome some of these young men for a few weeks in their parishes, and introduce them into the practical work of the ministry. And I would like to suggest, along the line of some things that have already begun in our seminaries, that it would be a good idea to take some of the practical, every-day, soul-winning pastors—who have made a demonstration of the power of theology in connection with men who know how to manage prayer-meetings, who know how to deal with the question of city missions—and bring them before the classes, and not give them the theory, but tell them exactly how they do the work at home.

THE SCRIPTURES IN IRELAND.

Speaking at a meeting of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, at Weston-super-Mare, Rev. Prebendary Stephenson said that Ireland had a large claim upon our sympathy and help, seeing that England was greatly responsible for the terrible disease—Popery—affecting that country. He had known the Society since 1830, and could testify as to the value of its work.

During a recent visit in Dublin, our good friend, Captain Kearney White, the Secretary of the Society, gave us an opportunity of meeting about a dozen of his faithful self-denying workers, who related some of their experiences whilst scattering the Word of God. The people are by their troubles rendered all the more susceptible to the consolations of the Gospel, and will receive it through the written Word, when their prejudice would prevent them from doing so through any other channel.

There are some unwise spirits who look so long at the failings of other that they see double and speak double.—Rev. W. J. Mathams.

GOOD SAMARITANS IN LONDON.

London poverty and pain are bad enough and plenty enough, when all is done; what they would be without the relief afforded by the many good Samaritans of the Metropolis we do not dare to guess. Now is the time when these kind friends are devising liberal things; for the actual need is great, not to speak of that which is yet prospective, but will soon become painfully existent. To plan is one thing, to perform is another; the latter cannot be done without the generous help of those who are possessed of "warl's gear." If such have a mind to give of their abundance, the following friends, among others, will gladly be "at the receipt of custom":—

Mr. George Hatton, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission (4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.), wants to feed the many men and women in his neighbourhood out of work, and to give a Christmas party to 1500 children from the courts and alleys. He will also distribute all the boots, shoes, and warm clothing that friends may send to him.

Rev. W. E. Hurndall (16, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.) is an experienced worker among East-end poor, but he wants to gain more experience, as the harvest of hunger and nakedness and cold is truly great in those parts. Sharpen his sickles, kind Christian friends; then givers and dispensers and receivers will together share in the harvest joy.

Miss Kate Robson (4, Winchester-road, Highgate, N.), who works among very poor East-end mothers, would fain furnish forth to them a feast of tea and Gospel talk, if so be that a little sunshine may be thrown into sombre lives. Who craves the honour of being host?

Messrs. T. and J. Young (Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New Cut) are desirous of introducing batches of hungry men to "substantial meat teas." Being poor themselves, they can only act as masters of the ceremonies. One friend has fed a batch of 250; hundreds more are waiting as patiently as they may.

Mrs. Adamson (The Vicarage, Old Ford, E.) is once more putting her soup kitchen in order. Last winter she frequently fed some four hundred children a day, besides many adults. With the kind co-operation of fellow Christians she is hoping to cope with the present distress as far as strength will allow.

Rev. A. F. Cotton (2, Derby-road, Ponder's End) modestly asks for "money, meat, bread, or vegetables." But then they are not for himself; they are "for the children of those who are unable to find employment." What must become of such children, where no good Samaritan like Mr. Cotton goes down their way?

THE GOSPEL SHIPS.

The Mystery, after a prosperous mission tour at Havre, sailed for Brittany, and there did good service in various ports, which were well worked by godly pasteurs and evangelists. Many Christian ladies helped cheerfully in the work, which finished up very recently on the West Coast. The ship, after recaulking and repairs at Bursledon, has reached the port of Boulogne in safety. Gospel meetings are being held by Pasteur Degremont, his good wife and daughter, whose labours are indefatigable. We have also secured a French evangelist, whose services we hope to retain through the winter at Boulogne.

The Annie, after a seven weeks' mission at Folkestone, re-visited Calais, Dunkerque, and Boulogne. As in years past, a hearty welcome was given us; hundreds came to hear the Word of God, and many, we may believe, have been won for Christ. After this we sailed for Folkestone, with a view of leaving the Annie there for permanent work; but the leading helpers there have decided to open a mission-hall, and to engage an evangelist for work among fishermen and seamen. The Annie is valued for her copper and oak at £300, and is a first-rate vessel for permanent use. I shall be delighted to send her, if an arrangement can be made, to any needy sea port in France or elsewhere, for mission or Gospel work.—Yours very sincerely,

Seamen's Friend, Gosport. Henry Cook.

"OTHER PEOPLE'S CHILDREN."

Of these, as we learn from a statement just issued, Dr. Barnardo has now no fewer than 1700 under his care. Children of all ages, from infants of a month old to great lads of eighteen years and upwards—if only destitute, all are eligible for admission. A few typical cases may be mentioned. A dying baby, three weeks old; a poor girl with the sentence of death plainly written upon her face; a lad of eighteen with a cleft palate; a boy of eleven, both of whose arms had been amputated at the shoulder, as the result of a fearful accident; twin sisters, suffering from a skin affection; and yet another baby, half starved, and only a month old. None, if only in dire need, are sent empty away, but are here received, tended and trained with loving care.

The histories of many of these little ones, though deeply painful, would form a library of much more pathetic and genuine interest than could be awakened by cartloads of the library three volume novels that are so eagerly consumed. In such there would, indeed, be tales of bitterest suffering, of shameful wrong-doing; but, running through these, there would, in most cases, be found some golden cord of tenderest love and of the most heroic devotion. To any who would wish for an illustration in point, we commend a little book just sent out by Dr. Barnardo, "The Seed of the Righteous among the Children of the Poorest" (6d. per doz. J. F. Shaw & Co.). It is a story of wifely, motherly love, which rises to a height of sublimity; and it is also a story showing how wonderfully the Lord protects and guides his little ones.

A mother with her three children leaves her country home to seek out her husband in London, whither he has told her he was going in search of work. Before she starts, a lady gives her a letter to Dr. Barnardo, in case she and her children should need help. Arrived in London, she struggled on for more than twelve months, working and haunting the docks and other places in search of her husband. Then her baby died, and when she herself was laid on a sickbed, from which she never again rose, she sent her two children, with the letter to Dr. Barnardo pinned inside the boy's jacket, to find their way to Stepney. The mother lived at Hoxton, and for twelve hours before the little ones started they had had no food: but after such weary wanderings as can easily be imagined, they were found in almost a fainting condition, and by some humane man carried to the Home, where they were kindly received everything: that was possible was also done for the mother, who, however, died a week after. One of these children, the girl, is now twenty-two years of age, and has for seven years filled a situation with the utmost satisfaction to her employer—a situation as sewing-maid to a lady; while the boy has for some years been honourably serving his country as a sailor.

Like other workers in the East, Dr. Barnardo is doing much to relieve the distress which will this winter, it is feared, exceed the sad experiences of last. Orders are distributed which enable the poor to obtain hot, nourishing food at the Edinburgh Castle, in some cases at half-price, in others gratuitously. The free breakfast and dinner table for school children who, but for this, would have little or nothing to eat, has already been opened, and the extent of this relief may be judged from the figures of last year, when 13,600 hot meat dinners and 29,200 hot breakfasts were given to poor children. There is also at work a very extensive system of relief to the sick poor, besides numerous agencies, such as clothing-clubs, &c.

A step of the utmost significance to the future of this work is the acquisition in Canada by Dr. Barnardo of about seven square miles of excellent land, well wooded, with abundance of water, which it is intended to use as an Industrial Farm, upon which, it is estimated, 200 of the bigger fellows from Stepney-causeway may be placed every year. So that this great work, so fruitful in rescuing little ones from present misery, is, at the same time, doing much for their future welfare.

AT WORK IN NEW ZEALAND.

Dear Sir,—It pleased the Lord to direct the steps of his servants, Mr. and Mrs. E. Trotter and Hon. G. Waldegrave, to Auckland; full of quiet love and zeal, they were about their Father's business. Doors opened one after the other for testimony in the Gospel. The Lord was waited upon for blessing upon the word. It was vouchsafed! The work commenced in the room of the "Sailors' Rest," and thence extended to the Theatre Royal, St. George's Hall, Anglican Church School-rooms, the Baptist Tabernacle, the Y.M.C. Association rooms, and, at Devonport, to the Odd Fellows' Hall, and the school-room of the Holy Trinity Church, besides multiplied drawing-room Bible-reading meetings, both mixed and exclusively for ladies. Believers generally have been stirred up, and scores of the unsaved have been led to the Lord Jesus, and are now rejoicing in his full salvation. The young and the old, the rich and the poor, have shared in the blessing.

People marvelled how it came about. There was no stir, no trumpeting, no popular accessories to draw the people, no entrancing eloquence, nothing to attract and win souls for Christ but the calm, quiet, persuasive unfolding of the love of God in the gift of his only-begotten Son—"the Lord made flesh." People wondered wherein lay the attraction, and anticipated its dying out. But the secret of its power and permanence "cometh not with observation;" it lay in the unbroken communion of spirit with the Father and the Son in the ever-witnessing indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

The work grew, until the labourers had, from very weakness of the flesh, "to come apart and rest awhile." Mrs. Trotter was invalided, and in inactivity served the Lord. Before Mr. and Mrs. Trotter left for Wellington, a thanksgiving meeting was held for blessing vouchsafed, and testimonies were borne to the reality of personal conversion. Mr. Waldegrave remained in Auckland for several weeks after his fellow-labourers had left, and then took voyage to the South Pacific Islands to see and help on the Lord's work there.

One healthful result from the visit of our friends has been the establishment of numerous Bible-reading meetings, especially among ladies. They meet at each other's houses, and study the Word together with conversation and prayer. Many of them are evidently growing in grace and in knowledge, and bearing testimony in their daily life. The lack in the present day is Spirit-taught exposition of the Word, comparing Scripture with Scripture.

Some twelve months ago, two High Church Ritualistic missioners worked for some time in Auckland. They held the Seven Sacraments, they exalted man, they taught the one Holy Catholic Church, in its visible tripartite divisions of Roman, Greek, Anglican, outside the pale of which salvation could not be found. Sacraments, vestments, confessions, absolutions, penances, and obedience to the ecclesiastical authorities, formed the basis of their discourses. They gave mid-day addresses to business men, and had a large following. This well planned and efficiently carried out Romanising effort awakened the orthodox Churches, and stirred up the spirit of Evangelical Protestantism. Evangelists, true and good, taught in the Word, have come and laboured, sustained by Wesleyans, Presbyterians, Baptists. Then came Mr. and Mrs. Trotter and Mr. Waldegrave. All these by their united testimony exposed the unscriptural teachings of the Ritualistic missioners, and so soon made short work of it, to the grief of the "blind leaders of the blind," who repeatedly lamented that men outside the Holy Catholic Church, never having been episcopally ordained, and therefore lacking warrant or authority to preach and to teach the Gospel, should, by their ministration of the Gospel, produce results so manifest and undeniable.—Yours faithfully, W. K. Vines.

AN "EXETER HALL" for the WEST.

Some months ago we recorded the interesting fact that large buildings had been secured in Regent-street for the extension of the Y.W.C.A. work. Having been adapted to the purposes required, they were opened on Monday, last week, as the central office of this useful organisation. Situated in such a position, facing the Polytechnic, so that, as Mr. W. T. Paton suggested, the young men and young women could join hands for their mutual good; and being in every way so conveniently arranged, the Y.W.C.A. is now well-established. The buildings comprise a handsome lecture hall, capable of accommodating three hundred persons, one or two smaller halls, excellent class-rooms, and a library, for which one lady has already collected three hundred volumes, and to which further contributions are invited. There is connected with it the Welbeck Restaurant, which was opened some two years ago, and which has been so much frequented by working girls in the district that greater accommodation has long been felt to be a necessity. There are also a business agency and a Servants' Home, with twenty-five beds. The total cost of the building and furniture, as now opened, has been £6500, but a further sum of £1500 is required to complete the furnishing.

The Bishop of Bedford said he was thankful for what had been done to give to this class opportunities for self-improvement, change, and rest, and the blessings of religious influence. As an illustration of how much they stood in need of such help, he mentioned that some time ago he heard from an old woman in the country who was in great anxiety, because for a very long time she had heard nothing of her two daughters in London. Happily, he was able to seek them out, and thus to comfort their mother's heart. London is a difficult place to live in, and for none more so than those to whom the Y.W.C.A. is stretching out a hand.

Mr. Dashwood (honorary secretary) having given a brief statement of the steps which had led up to this crowning event, Rev. Donald Fraser spoke on the social aspect of the question, urging that of all other subjects pressing on public attention at the present time, there was none which affected the welfare of the nation more than this. He had been asked to give emphasis to the fact that it is intended to provide here a Home for a considerable number of servants when out of place, a time when but for such help they would be not only in much discomfort, but in serious moral peril. There is no intention to provide free quarters for them, and, therefore, it is in no sense a charity; but before the institution could be available for their use it must be thoroughly furnished, and for this he asked their help.

Mr. W. T. Paton pointed out that by such agencies young women became missionaries to their companions, and no influence that could be brought to bear upon them was so good as this. Referring to the proximity of the Polytechnic, he suggested also that much good might be done by occasionally bringing the young men and young women together. He had been present at some charming meetings of this kind, and could bear witness that nothing was done which might not have been done in their own drawing-rooms.

After a few words from the Hon. A. Kinnaird, H.R.H. Princess Christian declared the buildings open, and said they would be known as "The Morley Halls and Welbeck Institute." It is indeed a happy thought thus to perpetuate the memory of one who did so much in his lifetime for the welfare of the young women of London.

We are requested to state that the employment and other agencies hitherto located at 17, Old Cavendish-street, will still be carried on from that centre.

FOREIGN GOVERNESSES.—Will you kindly state that we are ready to receive applications from families desiring foreign governesses for the holidays.—Yours truly,

C. F. Ryffel, Directress.

Letters to the Editor.

WHAT IS THE ROOT OF SIN?

Dear Sir,—Can you, or can any of your correspondents, tell me, What is the "root" of sin?

If unfallen Adam had a body like ours; if Enoch, before his translation, had the testimony that he "pleased God;" if our blessed Saviour took part of the same nature with ourselves, it follows that our humanity, per se, cannot be the root of sin.

We know that every sin is a lie against the life of God; and Jesus said of the devil, "he is the father of lies"—does this word cover the answer to the question?

Allow me for a moment to suppose that the devil and all his angels, great and small, are cast out of our world to-day, what will be the result to-morrow? Will there be one statesman recommending war? Will there be one gin-palace open? Will there be one man preparing snares for others, or craving to indulge his own vicious propensities? There may be multitudes of dead, multitudes with very little life, but will there be one living bad man?

There are some who know nothing of the Agapemone, and who have never seen Mr. Wood's writings, to whom the question irresistibly suggests itself (when reading some occasional remarks in The Christian)—viz., What is the root of sin?—Yours, S. J. B.

[The root of sin is self-love, self-worship, and consequent rejection of God. If Satan and his angels were cast out of the world to-day, the results of his lie to Eve would not be undone. He will be shut up in the bottomless pit, that he shall deceive the nations no more for a thousand years. But even during that period there will be sin (Isa. lxv. 20); and when the devil is loosed from his prison for a little season, and again goes out to deceive the nations, the latent enmity in men's hearts to God will again burst forth, and in numbers like the sand of the sea they will compass the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city. Our correspondent's letter implies that Satan is the root of sin in man. Not so. He sowed the seed of sin in man; but, having sown it, he cannot eradicate it. There is no remedy but the incarnation of the Son of God in the likeness of sinful flesh, his vicarious and expiatory death, his mighty and glorious resurrection, and our union with Him by faith, whereby we are made partakers of his resurrection life and of the Divine nature.—Ed.]

"PRAYER MORE THAN CONFERENCE."

Dear Sir,—I read with great pleasure Mr. Williamson's letter in yours of November 11, and have now read with equal, or greater, pleasure his article entitled, "Prayer more than Conference our Present Duty." His words awaken a hearty response in me, and this is, no doubt, the case with many others. I am heart and soul with the writer when he remarks that conferences have well-nigh fulfilled their mission. The ingenuity of Christians has been taxed to the utmost in devising new methods, and I will not say that this has been in vain; but I am convinced it is not more skill or method that is required, but power. This is the deep need of the present time, and the only way to obtain it is to copy the example of the believers in Apostolic times, and be of "one accord in prayer."

A few weeks ago, at a meeting of Christians, I remarked that one of the most hopeful signs would be the development of a spirit of prayer in the Church of Christ generally, and that the appearance of such a sign would be the precursor of a revival. I, therefore, hail with joy Mr. Williamson's letter. It shows that the same spirit is working in many hearts, and forming the desire to pray.

Let us encourage it. Recently, an all-day meeting for prayer took place at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, and was characterised by a very decided spirit of prayer. An interesting fact came to light in connection with this meeting—viz., that on the same day two similar meetings had been convened, one in North London, the other in Paris.

What is to be done? I earnestly hope you will take up Mr. Williamson's suggestion, and use your influence in an appeal to Christians on this subject. I hope also that other Christian editors will follow in the same track. And let us begin at once. There need be no organisation, for though I value it highly, in regard to this subject, I rather dread it; at least, in the commencement. Let an earnest appeal go forth to Christians all over the country and the world to "cry mightily unto God in secret," for a larger outpouring of his Spirit; this will prepare the way for united meetings.

The topic tempts me to say more, but I must remember your space, and conclude with the expression of a hope that this matter will not be allowed to drop, but be taken up heartily. "When they had prayed, the place was shaken." May it be so again, and soon.—Yours sincerely,

London, Nov. 25. J. L. S.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

Dear Sir,—Conventions are almost of weekly occurrence, and the missionary spirit is bursting into a glorious flame. Many I am sure will see the necessity of closing these conventions with a day set apart for the above subject, especially when the meetings are held for the deepening of the spiritual life. It almost appears, when this is left out, as if the Christians had been brought to a point and then left, instead of a practical outcome resulting from meetings where the claims of the heathen and our own countrymen are presented.

We are now seeing the result of such meetings both at Cardiff and Manchester, and these tokens of the Lord's special blessing should encourage all conveners to add a day for this grand branch of God's work.

If the subjects are carefully selected for the preceding days the result will be most encouraging. For instance, at Cardiff, for the first two days we had addresses on "the restful, holy, victorious, and active life;" and when, on the third, we had morning and afternoon practical consecration meetings, we closed with a blessed three hours and a half on the evangelisation of the world. The result exceeds any description, and many who offered themselves then are being looked after, and in due time will be in the foreign mission field.

At the close of most of my missions I have a meeting on this subject, coupled with a praise meeting; and already some are being prepared for foreign work. I find, however, a conference at the close is more helpful, and carries a wonderful blessing with it.

It will give me much pleasure to communicate with any on this subject, and I do pray it may lead to this being adopted at every convention, and that every evangelist will seek to press the claims of the heathen at the close of their missions.

Your servant, for Christ's sake,
W. Spencer Walton.

CHILD-SAVING INSTITUTIONS.

Sir,—I am compiling an exhaustive and descriptive list of all the child-saving institutions in England and Wales, reformatories, industrial schools, orphanages, boarding-out committees, training ships, industrial homes, children's hospitals, crèches, &c., and shall be much obliged if any of your readers will send me the last report, prospectus, or paper of such, or, at least, the name and address of any in the neighbourhood.

Such a compilation will be of great use to the increasing number of workers for children, the result of whose labours is, perhaps, the chief cause why there are but 15,000 in our local prisons, instead of 20,000 as in 1876.—Yours faithfully,

BOOKS FOR VILLAGE LIBRARIES.

Sir,—A few weeks ago you printed a paragraph referring to the great dearth in villages of books to read during the winter nights. I know many village libraries used chiefly by working men, and most of these libraries are sorely in need of additions. I shall be glad if any of your readers will send me books for village libraries, and can assure those who do so that they will be forwarded to places where they are sure to be used, if the books are of a suitable character.

We who live in London have little conception how dull life in the winter is in villages where books and newspapers are not easily accessible.—Yours truly,

Thomas Greenwood.

AMERICAN Y.M.C.A. STUDENTS.

Writing in acknowledgment of a gift of copies of "A Missionary Band," kindly sent by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Mr. L. D. Wishard, Secretary of the College Department of the American Y.M.C.A., says:—

"I am placing the books in twenty of our leading colleges, where they will do the most good. The missionary outlook in our colleges is very encouraging. Messrs. Wilder and Forman, of Princeton College, are making a tour of our colleges, spending four days in each, appealing for missionaries, and speaking to the unconverted. During the month of October over one hundred students expressed a desire to enter the missionary work, and this is only one of the eight months of their tour, which will continue until next June.

"I am devoting more attention than ever to medical students, and have just spent a week among the medical students of Canada, in McGill, Queen's, and Toronto Universities, among all of whom Y.M.C.A.'s are at work. We shall have Medical Students' Missionary Conferences in New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago very soon. Indeed, these meetings have become an annual thing in these cities. If we should repeat the summer-school at Mount Hermon, I earnestly wish we could have some English and Scotch and Irish undergraduates visit us.

You will be interested in the circular of greeting sent to foreign missionary colleges. At the Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance meetings, just closed at Oberlin, Ohio, which were attended by fully 1200 students, 150 pledged themselves to engage in foreign work."

From the letter of greeting by the students of America to the students in foreign missionary colleges, to which Mr. Wishard refers, we extract the jollowing:—

It has long been the desire of many of us to send you a personal assurance of the Christian love we bear you. and the joy we have in hearing of your growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour. Two hundred and fifty students from ninety American colleges have been spending a month at Mr. Moody's school, on Mount Hermon, to study the Bible and methods of Christian work under the leadership of Mr. Moody and other eminent teachers of the Word. As we have studied, and talked, and prayed together, our hearts have gone out to you, our fellow students in foreign lands, and many of our number have decided, since coming here, to spend their lives in the glorious work of telling your people the good news of Christ's salvation. We are very anxious to establish permanent lines of communication between you and ourselves, by which you can keep us constantly informed as to the needs of your work, and its claims upon all of our students.

We have in America an Intercollegiate Young Men's Christian Association which unites our colleges in Christian work. Already, Associations have been formed in 227 institutions, and over 10,000 undergraduates are enrolled as members. If you can adapt our Association to your special needs, and organise it in your institution, and so unite with us in making this movement worldwide, we will have established the long-hoped-for lines of communication along which you can send us information and inspiration, and we in return can send you helpful suggestions, sympathy, and men. Such associations as ours have already been formed by students in five institutions in Ceylon, Japan, and Turkey, and we are assured by their members and teachers in the schools that they are very practical. Will you take this matter into prayerful consideration, and correspond with the College Secretary of our International Committee, in answer to our proposition? [Signed on behalf of the ten thousand students by Mr. L. D. Wishard, College Secretary of the International Committee, 23rd Street and 4th Avenue, New York City.]

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Dec. 5, Judges iv. 14—24; Dec. 6, Judges v. 1—16; Dec. 7, Judges v. 17—31; Dec. 8, Judges vi. 1—10; Dec. 9, Judges vi. 11—24; Dec. 10, Judges vi. 25—40; Dec. 11, Judges vii. 1—12.

THE WAYSIDE BIBLE CARRIAGE.—A circular letter just issued by Mr. John M'Auliffe gives an interesting account of labours in the hop fields of Hampshire, and of journeyings from Bristol for 150 miles through English villages and wayside hamlets, to Salisbury and many other places. Evangelistic services were held every night, the people in most cases gladly listening. During the last fortnight of the journey over 7000 persons thus gathered to hear the Gospel, while 1600 Testaments and thousands of Gospel books, &c., were sold and given away.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and biographical sketch of Rev. Canon A. M. W. Christopher, of Oxford.

We would direct the special attention of our northern readers to the fact that an important Convention, commencing on the evening of Tuesday, December 14, and closing on the evening of Thursday, December 16, will be held in Glasgow in connection with the Scottish Protestant Alliance. The conveners have arranged for these gatherings in view of the recent developments of popish aggression in this country, and with the object of making the nation acquainted with the true spirit and aim of the Modern Papacy. Many able advocates of the Protestant faith will speak, and papers will be read on the various phases of the question.

We trust there will be a large muster of the friends of religious freedom, so that the influence of the Convention may be as widely spread as possible. Visitors from a distance will be entertained, if due notice be given to the Hon. Secretary, Rev. James Kerr, Religious Institution Rooms, Glasgow. In our next issue we will give a programme of the proceedings.

An address on Christian Union, given by the Auditor at the opening meeting of "The Theological Society" of Trinity College, Dublin, has created some excitement in Ireland, not merely because of its great and undoubted merit. The speaker dealt in a masterly way with the silly attempts to bring about union with the Greek Church and the Romish Apostasy, but he appears to have roused opposition by his manly recognition of the vitality of the Nonconformist Communions, and the Bishop of Cork made the opportunity an occasion for a bitter attack upon the Dublin Christian Convention.

The Auditor wisely remarked, "there is much that is displeasing in the suggestion of dwelling upon differences," and "a better way is to determine what is to be regarded as fundamental and essential truth, and strive to restore a feeling of brotherly love with all Christians who agree in that as alone essential." Most people would think that such utterances would find an echo in every Christian heart. In suggesting conventions as one of these "ways," and in saying that, although there had been differences of opinion with regard to them, "sincere approval has most widely prevailed," other feelings appear to have been evoked than those likely to lead to Christian union. The Bishop of Cork gave utterance to them, moreover, in terms which showed unmistakably that he knew but little of the proceedings at, and results of, the Conventions which the Archbishop of Dublin delights to attend.

This will readily be understood when we say that the Bishop stated that "serious discussion" seemed to be avoided at Conventions, and that they had no object of "practical philanthropy or benevolence." These charges have, however, been satisfactorily disposed of in a letter to the Press from Rev. J. S. Fletcher, in which the immense results spiritually, and in the direction of philanthropy, flowing from the Dublin Conventions, are summarised.

As "an Irish Churchman," Mr. Fletcher points out that at least one-fifth of the Irish clergy attend that Convention each year, and that the meetings are attended by about 20,000 laymen. He gives as an instance of practical philanthropy, that upon one occasion when he was permitted to plead the claims of the "Dublin by Lamplight Institution" from the Convention platform, shortly afterwards sums amounting to £1400 were sent to him.

We are rejoiced by the following passage in a note received a few days ago. May the Lord's remembrancers be greatly multiplied and encouraged by more and more "amazing answers to prayer":—

> I have had some amazing answers to prayer lately. I feel deeply solemnised while writing you, with one of the requests in my hand which has been answered. Oh, the throne of grace where we meet with God. If Christians only knew what a prayer-hearing God they had, they would love Him and serve Him better.

We gladly insert elsewhere the letter of our correspondent J. L. S., for there is no one subject at the present moment which equals in importance that of the privilege and duty and necessity of prayer.

The first volume of a new commentary on the New Testament has appeared in Germany under the editorship of Professors Strack and Zoeckler, of Berlin. It is spoken of as being in many respects an excellent and valuable contribution to Biblical criticism. Professor Luthardt, one of the most competent of German scholars, has dealt with the Gospel by John; it is stated that no abler man could have been found, as he has spent almost a life-time in the study of the fourth Gospel.

It is a noteworthy fact that the living writers who have been foremost in denying the Johannean authorship of this Gospel have gradually shifted their landmarks; in leaving further and further afield the date fixed by the Tübingen School as that of the Gospel, they are by degrees coming nearer and nearer to the view of the authenticity of the Fourth Gospel generally held by orthodox critics.

Although there is much in the condition of Paris and other portions of France to give ground for grave anxiety, we must not close our eyes to the many hopeful signs which abound on every hand. During the last seventy years there has been a great and striking development and growth of Protestantism. The number of pastors has increased from about a hundred and forty to nearly a thousand; and whereas at the commencement of the century Protestantism had no charitable or evangelistic institutions, to-day it has nearly forty orphanages, the same number of asylums for aged poor, two large reformatories for adults, and a number of homes for all kinds of afflicted ones.

One of the newspapers of the city of Cork has called attention to the unpleasant fact that in one week the drink bill of only one hundred and fifty patients in the workhouse was made up of the charges for 186 glasses of brandy, 775 of wine, 285 of whiskey, and 128 pints of porter. No wonder that the rates press heavily upon the temperate and hardworking section of the community.

The "League of the Cross," a Roman Catholic association against intemperance, is doing much to lessen a terrible evil in the southern provinces of Ireland, and it is surprising to find that during the meeting of the Synod of the Church of Ireland some of the Protestant clergy did not scruple to denounce temperance work. The well known minister, Dr. Webster, went so far, it is reported, as to characterise the temperance movement as "a flank movement on Christianity led by the devil."

The Archbishop of Canterbury has received letters, brought by Mr. Riley, from the Patriarch and the Metropolitan of the East at Kurdistan, announcing the arrival of Revs. Canon Maclean and W. H. Browne, who have gone to organise schools and training colleges among the Assyrians or Chaldeans of Persia. Colleges for candidates for ordination have been opened, and, strange to say, amongst those who are in attendance are several boys, who are being trained as successors to the present occupiers of the Sees, the bishoprics being confined to certain families, an ancient abuse unlikely to have long continuance.

The Capuchin Romanist missionaries have made arrangements to retire from the Punjaub, and the Propaganda have called upon the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford to take charge of the military chaplaincies in that province. Speaking at a meeting of the "St. Joseph's Missionary Society," recently, the Bishop said it was foreign to the objects of their Society to undertake military stations. They would do so in this case, however, as "they might look upon the stations as centres from which to evangelise the natives, and as furnishing some resources with which to plant missions in the very heart of Hindoo and other native populations." At the same gathering, a very discouraging account was given of the Roman Catholic Mission to Borneo, in which country it would appear that that which was the means of disseminating early Christianity—the dispersion of believers—is fatal to Romanism.

A letter in The Times from Naples, dated November 13, bears a remarkable witness to a strong anti-clerical sentiment which is spreading in the South of Italy. The movement does not originate with the Radical party, but with the thoughtful intelligent class now so much on the increase in Italian cities. The sentiment has gathered strength from the recent concessions to the Jesuits, and from the secret encouragement given by the Papal Church to the maintenance of monastic institutions. It is now assuming a very decided and hostile form throughout the South. In such a crisis there should be much prayer that our Evangelical brethren may be equal to the new circumstances.

What is the strength of the clerical party, and the feeling towards many who compose it, may be judged by two facts which once fell under our own experience. In a ride of fifteen minutes from St. Peter's to the Capitol, on an ordinary day, we counted no less than ninety-five priests or monks, mostly the former. In Leghorn, a friend who had been visiting on the neighbouring hills was told by an intelligent peasant that the universal feeling was, "We respect the priest at the altar; we dread and fear him in domestic relations." It may be added that the agitation going on for the establishment of diplomatic relations between England and the Vatican should be closely watched.

The Christian.

Spiritual Truth for Believers.

BY THOMAS MOOR,

Author of "Counsels and Thoughts for Believers."

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS ON THE ABOVE WORK.

"As the author remarks in his Preface, 'The work of the Lord Jesus for the sinner, and the work of the Holy Spirit in the sinner, are parts of the one great salvation which can never be separated.' This twofold truth is admirably and, so far as we can judge, Scripturally expounded in these pages. We warmly commend the book to those groping after light on the plan of salvation, and to those who, while saved, have as yet failed to grasp the fulness of glorious privilege of those who know they have passed from death unto life."
Word and Work (Dr. Sinclair Paterson).

"When doubt and indecision are so prevalent, it is bracing to meet with a plain and powerful statement and enforcement of the old, time-worn, yet ever fresh truths of salvation. This we find in Mr. Thomas Moor's 'Spiritual Truth.' The grace and love of God . . . are set forth simply, in a manner well fitted to awaken thought, and comfort and edify believers."
British and Foreign Evangelical Review.

"This is a rich treasury of spiritual jewels. Here is clear light for the groping sinner, Gospel milk for the young believer, strong meat for warriors, pilgrims, and fathers in Christ. Specially valuable is Mr. Moor's distinction between God's judicial dealing with the sin of the world and His paternal dealing with the sins of His people. He writes also with Scriptural clearness on the two covenants—the covenant of works and the covenant of grace. The matter is excellent, the style is vigorous, the arrangement very simple, and the print clear."
The Christian.

"This is a book which does not profess to set forth any startling novelties. Its author walks gravely, but with thorough intelligence, in the old paths; and he has much that is instructive and comforting to say to those who have no hope but in Christ and in Divine grace."
The Free Church of Scotland Monthly.

"Mr. Moor is a theologian of the very old school, and his writing is solid to the last degree. He needs theologians for readers, and the sounder they are, the more they will appreciate him. We should not run quite in the same groove, but the general tenor of our teaching would be much the same. We are glad to see that a second and cheaper edition of his 'Counsels' has been called for. It is a sign that truth is yet alive in the land when an edition of such a weighty and orthodox volume can be disposed of in a short time. 'Spiritual Truth' is not every man's book, but experienced Christians will value it."—Sword and Trowel (Rev. C. H. Spurgeon).

Notice.—The second and cheaper edition of the Author's previous work, "Counsels and Thoughts for Believers," is published in Crown 8vo., Cloth, 400 pages, Price 2s. 6d.

SEA AIR and change of scene often restore debilitated persons for the time being, but in a large number of cases the return to business cares or home worries makes one painfully conscious that no real impartation of strength has taken place. There is thus a palpable need for something to maintain our ability to work while in work, and an agent complying with this requirement undoubtedly exists. The Veil Lifted:

Or, The Romance and Reality of Convent Life.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,
Author of "Personal Experiences of Roman Catholicism."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The style in which the narrative is written is at once simple and elegant, bearing in its natural form of expression, almost on every page, the impress of truth. There is no raving, no exaggeration, nothing that savours of dark and mysterious insinuations; nothing but the expression of deep regret that, under the sanction of the religion of Christ, such a system should be tolerated."—Berwick Warder.

New Edition. Just Ready. Tenth Thousand.

Personal Experience of Roman Catholicism.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,
Author of "The Veil Lifted."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"This is a very interesting book. It would be so if it were a romance, it is so life-like, and of such important practical bearing; but it is much more so because it is not a romance, but a piece of actual life. It is a plain and veritable account of a most important crisis in a young person's religious experience—a temporary perversion to Roman Catholicism and (happily) a genuine recovery from it. Its exposure of the secrets of priestly domination over the conscience, and of the practical working of the Confessional is . . . effective and invaluable."—The Freeman.

"Now, more than ever, ought books like this to be diligently circulated, for not only is Rome as busy with her wiles as heretofore, but in what was once a Protestant Church we have converts and the Confessional too. As for the book of Miss Richardson, we can answer for the accuracy of many of its details."
Evangelical Christendom.

"Any of our readers who may have friends or neighbours journeying Rome-ward, will do them a great kindness, and perhaps save them from much suffering, by giving them a copy of this pleasantly-written book."
The Christian World.

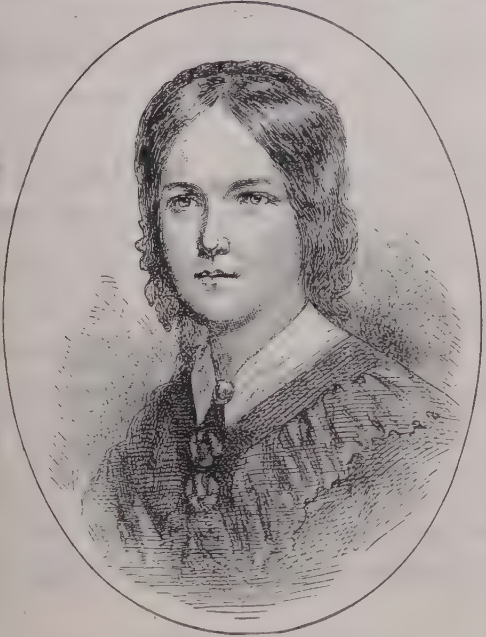
A CHOICE GIFT-BOOK FOR A YOUNG LADY.

Nineteen Beautiful Years:

The Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.

BY
FRANCES E. WILLARD,
President of the "Women's National Christian Temperance Union of America."



MARY E. WILLARD.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

PORTRAIT OF MARY WILLARD.
VIEW OF MARY'S BIRTHPLACE.

Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 2/6.

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER, and a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER.

From the Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is the sisterly tribute which Frances, in tears and loneliness, brings to lay on Mary's grave—a tribute as full of fragrance and touching beauty as the life whose memory it seeks to perpetuate was full of sweetness and innocence.

"It is more than a tribute: it is the fulfilment of a solemn commission breathed from the lips of the dying—a commission that might have adorned the lips of Jesus in the hour of His agony: 'Tell everybody to be good!'

"In this way the one whom she most loved—if a sister's can exceed a mother's love—the one to whom she was most dear, seeks to discharge the dying trust. How faithfully, how transcendently she has performed this duty, you have only to read to ascertain."

From the Preface by JOHN G. WHITTIER.

"The impression made upon me by the first perusal of this little book has not been weakened by the lapse of time. It seems to me now, as it did then, a very sweet and tender record of the exceptionally beautiful life of a young woman whose rare natural gifts and graces were sanctified by a deep—but cheerful and healthful—religious experience; free from cant, affectation, or bigotry.

"The story is told by her sister, FRANCES E. WILLARD, so widely known and honoured for her work of Christian philanthropy. It is a charming piece of biography."

"FALLEN ASLEEP!"

From the PREFACE.

This little volume may, I hope, awaken in some minds thoughts of a devotional character. Some of the ideas contained in it came to me in a chamber of sickness, which was at one time expected to be my chamber of death. The thoughts were pleasant and soothing to myself. May they, by God's blessing, be so also to some of my fellow-pilgrims.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,—Since the last Supper to the Criminal Classes, presided over by Lord Coleridge, the number of applications on behalf of falling and fallen men and boys has largely increased, no doubt partially owing to the urgent appeal made by the Lord Chief Justice commending more lenient sentences and mercy in first offences.

Within the last three months no less than fifty-six lads of tender age have been handed over to our care by various judges and magistrates. Consequent upon this pressure is our present low financial condition. We deeply regret that at this moment we are quite £1000 behindhand, which we are most anxious to obtain at once to clear off pressing liabilities. We have just received from a friend of the Mission a generous offer of £100 towards clearing off this debt provided that nine others will do the same by the 31st December.

Donations towards the accomplishment of this desirable object should be sent to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street; or to

Yours sincerely,
GEO. HATTON,
Supt., St. Giles' Christian Mission.

4, Ampton-street, Regent-square.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.

The COMMITTEE earnestly APPEAL for the sum of £500. Shall the year close with the Mission in debt? Reader! do help for the Lord's own sake!

The Object of the Mission is the Glory of God and the Salvation of Immortal Souls.

The Means used are—
(1) The Preaching of the Word.
(2) Personal Conversation.
(3) Circulation of the Holy Scriptures.
(4) Distribution of Gospel Tracts.

"Our People" (who are always afloat, and therefore cannot share with those ashore the means of grace) are—
(1) Sailors of all Nationalities.
(2) Emigrants and Passengers.
(3) Soldiers going on Foreign Service.
(4) The Boys of the Training Ships.
(5) Bargemen, Watermen, and others employed on the River.

Temperance Work is not forgotten—Sixteen hundred Pledges have been taken during 1885-6.

DONATIONS are URGENTLY WANTED, and will be received by the Society's bankers, Messrs. Lloyds, Barnetts, and Bosanquets (Limited), 62, Lombard-street, E.C.; or may be sent direct to the Secretary, who will also be glad to receive parcels of books, magazines, tracts, cards, cuffs, and mufflers; these latter for distribution during the winter months. All parcels should be addressed, carriage paid, to

Rev. HENRY BLOOMER, Secretary.

CLOTHING FOR THE POOR.

MISS STEER has a large quantity of useful Winter Clothing and Fancy Articles for Sale at the Bridge of Hope, 26, Princes Square, Ratcliff Highway, London, E., chiefly the work of the inmates of the Homes. There being no accommodation for Laundry work, difficulty is experienced in finding remunerative employment for the women and girls, and it will confer a great benefit if ladies, purposing to give Christmas Presents to the poor, will purchase from the Mission. Good value will be given on receipt of Postal Orders, for garments, &c., required; or visitors are invited to come and see the articles for sale on any Friday during the winter months.

Remnants of any material, travellers' patterns, pieces for patchwork, odd wools or silks for fancy work, as well as cast-off garments of any kind, are always very acceptable.

Princes Square is five minutes' walk from Shadwell Station. There are trains every nine minutes from Liverpool Street, or the Metropolitan Line from the City and West End.

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN

DONATIONS for the HOMES and OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE for TWO HUNDRED Young Women and Girls, are solicited before, or CHRISTMAS DAY.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, will receive Donations.

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Secretary.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row.

Three letters appear in last week's Nonconformist, which are singularly refreshing reading. They relate to the late Conference of Congregational Ministers at Hastings, and bear witness to the remarkable blessing vouchsafed. The problems of the day were brought to God in prayer. Rarely, we are informed, could so many ministers have been seen in tears. The one desire filled all hearts to obtain greater spiritual life for the churches and themselves. The recommendation is urged that three or four such conferences should be summoned in different parts of the country.

"So numerous were the suicides that a policeman had to be on duty at a certain bridge, night and day, to prevent the unfortunate women from throwing themselves into the water. Now we have this excellent Home, where women and young girls are received at any time, night and day." This is the "Bridge of Hope," referred to in the following generous proposal:—

> DEAR SIR,—I am sure none of your readers can have read the appeal made by Miss Steer in your issue of Nov. 4, without being moved deeply. The few closing sentences, in which she speaks of wealthy Christians sending five or ten shillings, stirred me so much, that I am prepared to give £100 towards the building fund, if nine others will give £100 each by December 3. As my means at present are very moderate, I am obliged to trench on my capital for this amount, and trust it may encourage others to make some sacrifice for such a noble, Christlike work. A FRIEND.

> I have been much interested by Bishop Taylor's letter in THE CHRISTIAN of last week. I propose that the £4000 he needs for the mission steamer be contributed by readers of your paper, and that the steamer be named The Christian.

Another correspondent, in sending a donation towards the same object, writes:—

> I think that for so pressing a requirement as this steamer it is especially true that Bis dat qui cito dat; and for a man like Bishop Taylor an appeal for help should be deemed a privilege to respond to.

A Convention "for the deepening of the spiritual life" is arranged to be held in Belfast in April next. The list of expected speakers embraces many names familiar to those who attend the Keswick Convention, including Pastor Theodore Monod, of Paris.

The Presidential proclamation for the usual "Thanksgiving Day" in the United States of America, says:—

> It has long been the custom of the people of the United States, on a day in each year especially set apart for that purpose by their Chief Executive, to acknowledge the goodness and mercy of God, and to invoke his continued care and protection. On that day (November 25) let all our people forego their accustomed employments, and assemble in their usual places of worship, to give thanks to the Ruler of the Universe for our continued enjoyment of the blessings of a free Government, for a renewal of business prosperity throughout our land, for the return which has rewarded the labour of those who till the soil, and for our progress as a people in all that makes a nation great. Let us also in the midst of our thanksgiving remember the poor and needy with cheerful gifts and alms, so that our service may by deeds of charity be made acceptable in the sight of the Lord.

There are some American customs that we can well enough afford to ignore, but this is one that, as a nation, we ought surely to imitate.

Casual donation rather than annual subscription to Christian and philanthropic work has been the habit of late years, and there is little sign of return to the older and better way. Yet there is no doubt that the advantage lies largely on the side of regular annual subscriptions. It saves to the society trouble and expense in advertising and collection, uncertainty as to its operations, and anxiety as to its liabilities; and the giver, having made up his mind as to what he has to give, and how he means to give it, is not worried with indecision. As God prospers him he can increase the amount of his contributions or the number of his benefactions.

The story of the old man and his long-suffering beast of burden was surely written concerning Editors. A lady writes to a bookseller to stop her CHRISTIAN, as she cannot manage to read the small type. But it is not all in small type. We would suggest to our friend to continue her subscription, read all she can, and pass her copy on to someone who can read the smaller print. We can give her the name of a brother or sister, at home or abroad, who will be glad of it.

A correspondent is equally unhappy because his communication is abbreviated; and of course we are so unfortunate, or so stupid, as always to omit the most interesting part. As it is much the custom at present to give prizes for all sorts of puzzles, we shall be happy to offer a substantial one for the solution of the question: How to insert an unlimited amount of matter in large type in a limited number of pages. We quite feel the need of condensed reports, in type as large as possible, and we beg our kind contributors to study the Gospel of Mark as a model of condensed and forceful descriptive narrative.

Mr. William Tallack, in a letter to The Times of Friday, strongly advocates the emigration to Canada of pauper children and of young people in British reformatory and industrial schools. On the question of cost, he says:—

> A large proportion of these costly wards of the State might be most successfully emigrated at less than the present cost of one year's maintenance.

Yes, but the cost is only one, and that perhaps the least important, element in the problem. Mr. Tallack refers to the emigration of children from Liverpool, in which Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., is practically interested. These children, it must be borne in mind, and the other children sent to Canada under similar conditions, first of all undergo a course of careful moral, and religious training, and are also regularly visited, after being placed out, by the agents of those who send them. Unless this can be accomplished in the case of pauper and industrial school children, the results cannot be expected to be satisfactory; indeed, it is doubtful whether the children would be welcomed in any large numbers.

Mr. Tallack quotes a remark from a Canadian bishop about "the conditions of colonial reception and oversight hitherto exercised with regard to the many hundreds sent out from Liverpool." So far as we know, the Canadian authorities do not maintain any official "oversight" of the children sent out by the various charitable agencies. That is left, as we have already said, to the institutions themselves; and we believe such oversight is more real and more effective than could be secured by any government department.

The death of Dr. A. Hodge, Professor of Historical and Polemical Theology in Princeton University, after four days' illness, has caused widespread regret, and removed from the earthly stage one of the ablest and most renowned of America's religious teachers. Writing of him in The New York Evangelist, Dr. Breed, of Philadelphia, says:—

> If ever the ideal of the theological teacher was completely realised, it was in the person and character of Dr. Hodge. He passed to the Professor's chair, not from the cloister, but along a very wide circuit of service, study, and experience. As a teacher he had few equals, and no superior. His masterly ability, his learning, the vigour and force of his style when handling controverted questions, compelled the respect of the coldest rationalistic opposition.

Among the best known works of the deceased Professor are "The Atonement" and "Outlines of Theology." He was sixty-three years of age.

In the brief note printed on another page, from Mr. L. D. Wishard, the indefatigable College Secretary of the American Y.M.C.A., he expresses the earnest hope that if a "Summer School for Bible Study" is held at Mount Hermon next season, it may be attended by students from England, Scotland, and Ireland. We warmly re-echo the hope, feeling certain that any young students who go will be more than amply rewarded for the expenditure of time and travel.

A recent writer upon our national accumulation of capital has stated, upon sufficient evidence, that even during the late years of trade depression, we have been adding largely and continuously to our national capital, and he asserts that during the ten years from 1875 to 1885 additions have been made to investments of capital amounting to £938,000,000; these investments being only in five descriptions of property, such as railways, house property, &c. What the total invested in all directions amounts to it is difficult to imagine.

What a huge responsibility does this cast upon England! To whom much is given, of them much shall be required, and when we read that only £1,500,000 is subscribed to missions, or about a hundred times less than we spend upon drink, it is not without deep shame that we can look upon our national wealth.

A deeply interesting article lately appeared in The Spectator on "Material Progress in Syria." It speaks of a general re-awakening; of growing prosperity; of towns increasing in size; of imports and exports rising; of the two seaports of Beyrout and Jaffa being now hardly recognised by travellers who witnessed their former desolation. Cæsarea is again becoming a centre of trade; Bethlehem has been improved out of all knowledge; manufacture is going on in Nablous, the ancient Shechem; Nazareth is becoming famous for its olive trade; the people are investing their money in cattle-rearing in many places; while in Jerusalem whole quarters are being rebuilt, sanitation cared for, streets lighted, and a new city slowly rising. Surely this indicates a day of preparation.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

This place of resort for sailors, to numbers of whom it has truly been as a beacon and a harbour of refuge on a rocky shore, celebrated its ninth anniversary on Tuesday evening last week. A large number of friends interested in such work were present. Ratcliff-highway is a very different place now to what it once was; the Strangers' Rest is but one of several such refuges, and the fifty workers here banded together are happily but a portion of those who in this notorious neighbourhood are constantly at work against the full tide of iniquity that breaks in upon the shore.

Hon. A. Kinnaird presided. After prayer, Mr. J. E. Mathieson said, as showing the far-reaching character of the work, that a letter had been received from an Austrian Rabbi, thanking them for kindness shown to one of his countrymen some time since. This Jew, having been brought into the Rest, there got a blessing. The Rabbi did not, indeed, refer to the conversion of his countryman, but was most grateful for the kindness with which he was received.

Mr. J. T. Isaac, the hon. secretary, in a review of the past year's labours, said the English services had been remarkably well attended, and the message delivered night after night in that room had been greatly blessed. Another large room had been frequently filled with Scandinavian sailors, and the work amongst German sailors had been also most encouraging. One interesting fact was that a large number of German Jews had attended the meetings, and it was very noticeable that during the Day of Atonement, more than usual found their way to this house of rest, and gathered around the Word of God. Friends who take these classes would not on any account miss the joy and blessing which they themselves got, and he urged this as an inducement to others to come forward and take a share in the work. All could not go to the heathen, but in this way they reached out to distant lands. It was delightful to see how these men, when converted, became missionaries to their brethren — to see Scandinavians, Italians, Spaniards, and Frenchmen button-holing their companions and giving them the Gospel just where they stood in the Highway. God had been with them very manifestly in their open-air meetings; here they reached not only the sailors, but their poor lost sisters, who will stand for an hour together and listen to the sweet story of the Gospel, tears often trickling down their cheeks the while.

Every Saturday a band of workers visit the docks, and invite the sailors leaving their ships to come to the Rest, while others give tracts and Gospel leaflets to the dock labourers as they pour out of the gates. How to extend the work amongst the children was now engaging their serious attention, and on this subject it was proposed to hold a conference in December. It was also in contemplation to take a large house, with a shop and twelve rooms, so as further to extend the work, and he invited both workers and funds for the carrying out of this and the other purposes of the Mission.

Mrs. M. Baxter gave an address on the words, "Have faith in God." What tremendous power God puts into our hands, but it is linked with the words, "If thou shalt not doubt in thine heart." After an energetic address from Dr. Barnardo on the principles which should guide our service for Christ, as illustrated by the feeding of the five thousand, several sailors testified to the blessing they had received at the Strangers' Rest. Mrs. Osborn spoke of the urgent need there was for some who in every foreign port would work amongst the sailors, who there, in most cases, were away from any such help. She pleaded that some effort should be made on behalf of apprentices, and said that she had known of great good resulting from the conversion of the officers of a ship. Dr. Sinclair Paterson remarked that he did not know anything more interesting or helpful than to be engaged in such a hand-to-hand fight with sin as were the workers there. They needed for such work, faith—faith in God, in Christ, in the Gospel as the power of God. Another motive for such work might well be duty. That captain who, during the recent storm, kept the bridge on a steamer in the Atlantic for 48 hours, and then took to his bed only to die, set a splendid example which not many Christians are ready to imitate. Love for souls is a grand motive, but a personal love of Christ is the only motive that will lead us to persevere under all difficulties and hardships.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe having offered prayer, Miss Annie Macpherson, in a telling address, told of a lady at Chefoo, who went on board a ship and begged the men to come to a house to tea. She went home, and, after making preparation, all engaged earnestly in prayer that the men might be brought through the temptations that beset them to that house. In the evening eleven of the fourteen came, and next day five of them gave themselves to the Lord.

The meeting was then closed, but a large number remained to the communion service which followed.

OUR SOLDIERS IN IRELAND.

Christian workers at the large camp on the Curragh desire thankfully to record recent blessing on the work carried on there among our soldiers. The numbers attending the meetings at the Soldiers' Home have greatly increased, and their attention and evident interest, as they listened to the Gospel addresses, have been most marked. We are also thankful to say that there have been a good many cases of conversion; besides others, twelve men in one regiment (on detachment at the Curragh) were brought to the Lord. On returning to their regimental headquarters, they began a meeting in barracks, with the assistance of the colonel and chaplains. The temperance band in this regiment musters strongly.

The attention and gratitude evinced by many of the soldiers, even the most worldly, when spoken to individually about their souls, was remarkable. In two of the regiments now quartered at the Curragh, there is quite a large band of Christian men, and a battalion of the Guards, now in Ireland, has its own weekly prayer-meeting and Bible class, conducted by the soldiers themselves.

The prayers of all readers of The Christian are requested that the "Lord of the harvest" will greatly multiply the seed sown, and that these young Christians may be strengthened in the Lord, and enabled to "fight the good fight of faith;" also, that many now wandering far from God may be brought under the gentle but omnipotent sway of the Gospel of Christ.

RECREATION FOR WORKING LADS.

Dear Sir,—Two years ago the Beaufoy Institute (then the Beaufoy Club and Night School) was started, in connection with the Lambeth Ragged School Society, with the object of providing healthy recreation for working lads, and to serve as a counter attraction to the streets. It has proved a complete success, and at the present time has a membership of two hundred, which number could easily be extended were further gentlemen forthcoming to assist. Will some of your readers help us in our efforts to influence these lads in a right direction, and spare an hour and a half on Monday or Thursday evenings from eight o'clock, and thus enable us to extend the advantages of the Institute to a still greater number? I will gladly supply further particulars.

E. Nicholls, Hon. Sec.

Lambeth Ragged School Society,
Lambeth-walk, S.E.

MISS L. M. VON FINKELSTEIN has engaged to deliver a series of her most interesting and instructive lectures on Life in the Holy Land, in connection with the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. These addresses continue to excite the attention and interest of large audiences wherever they are given. This series of lectures will commence on January 3, 1887, and will be continued through February and March.

A MISSION TO MOURNERS.

I want some of the Lord's people to have fellowship with me in sustaining a mission to the London cemeteries. It was brought about in this way: Mr. Charles Smith, of Plaistow, who has had large experience in mission work with the Evangelisation Society, Open-air mission, &c., while waiting for a new appointment, had the need of the mourners at the cemeteries laid upon his heart, and commenced to visit them. In a recent letter he says:—

"There are six cemeteries within a walking distance of where I live. I spent last Sunday in Manor Park Cemetery, where there was work enough for three of us. There are hundreds of people so glad to be spoken to. I spent Monday in Bow Cemetery, which opens at one o'clock, and closes at half-past five. Here I spoke to as many as twelve undertakers at a time. Everyone listened to what I had to say, and then received a little book and thanked me. I had a blessed time till dark. To-day I am at the East London Cemetery, where they bury the parish people as early as ten in the morning. I hope to be at Ilford to-morrow. It is no new thing to me, as it is more than twenty years ago since I used to visit Brompton and other Cemeteries in my spare time. It is, indeed, a glorious opportunity for speaking a word for the Master among the sorrowing ones."

I want a little help to remunerate our brother, and also grants of tracts for his use. Both may be sent to me at the Open-air Mission office, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C. Two years ago I appealed through The Christian for literature, &c., to give to the navvies at Tilbury Docks, and this led to Smith's labouring among them with much blessing till the works were completed a few months ago.

AMERICAN WOMEN AND TEMPERANCE.

The ladies of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union have recently spent five days at Minneapolis, in earnest discussion of the questions which this Union has at heart. The convention consisted of about 300 delegates from nearly every State and Territory, representing some 200,000 women, banded together for "God, and home, and native land." With this body the British Women's Temperance Association, the President of which is Mrs. Lucas, sister of John Bright, is now in alliance, and Mrs. Lucas, with four other English ladies, was present at this convention, these being Mrs. Blakey, Mrs. Pearson, Mrs. Bradley, and Miss Impley; Mrs. Youmans represented the Canadian Dominion.

The President of the Union, Miss Frances Willard, made a brilliant opening address. At the close, taking Mrs. Lucas by the hand, she said: "For the first time in history the Imperial mother and the dauntless daughter of the Anglo-Saxon race clasp hands in a union never to be broken." Mrs. Hobert, State president, welcomed the union on behalf of the 3,000 white ribbon women of Minnesota, banded together in 156 unions, and Miss Narcissa White spoke of the time that is coming when no liquor would be sold in any country on God's earth. On Sunday many of the city pulpits were filled by the leading lady speakers, and the churches were unusually crowded, while a mass meeting was held in the afternoon at the Casino.

Miss Willard, who is greatly loved and honoured, was re-elected as president by an enthusiastic and nearly unanimous vote. A resolution was also passed requesting her to accept a salary, that she might be more at home with her mother in her declining years, instead of having to be away lecturing a great part of the time.

In one of the section meetings Mrs. Nash reported that she had corresponded with fifty presidents of railroads in reference to the question of intoxicating drinks on dining-cars, and had met with a certain amount of encouragement. Mrs. Annie Palmer, superintendent of the evangelistic work, recommended Gospel visitation from house to house, Gospel choirs to sing familiar hymns, and the holding of out-door meetings.

Speaking of the results of woman suffrage in Washington Territory, Mrs. Lucy Switzer said that since women were given the ballot in the fall of 1883, they had "raised the age of consent" to sixteen years, defeated an attempt to repeal the Sunday laws, and enacted a law against impure literature. A delightful prayer and testimony meeting, by ladies gathered in a railway car on the eastward return journey, was one of the striking features of this remarkable convention.

FRIENDS IN RATCLIFF.

IN these days of religious freedom and toleration we have little idea of what some of our forefathers had to endure in following the dictates of conscience. An interesting peep into the past was afforded at the recent opening of a new Mission Institute in Commercial-road, by the statement made on the occasion by Mr. John Hilton. The Society of Friends, said he, have a considerable history in this neighbourhood. They were first gathered, in a quiet way, at the house of a captain in Stepney-green. At that time it was unlawful so to meet, and week after week they were taken off to prison. As many as fifty were taken in one week; on one occasion two of them were young lads of thirteen and sixteen years old. A shoemaker, who lived on Stepney-green was tried for refusing to go to Stepney Church, and sentenced to be sent into slavery in Virginia for seven years.

The first meeting-house on the site of the present one in Brook-street, Ratcliff, was opened in the year of the Great Fire—in 1666. Shortly after that Sir John Robinson, Governor of the Tower, who had authority over the locality, ordered the Friends to cease holding their meeting there. They were not made of that kind of stuff, and they would not obey. The governor sent his men, and made a great fire of the forms of the meeting-house, but the Friends persisted in attending meeting. Then the authorities tried more stringent methods. Nearly all the Friends were marched off to Whitechapel prison. The soldiers pulled down the building, rased it to its foundations, carried off the doors, and windows, and left the place a heap of ruins. The Friends built it up again, and it became so full that another one was opened in Old Gravel-lane. Near the latter end of last century a great fire occurred in Ratcliff, and the present meeting-house was built. At that time it used to be crowded; friends had to go early to get a seat. Many of the wealthier friends moved away from the neighbourhood or left the Society, and the congregation ran down to a very low ebb. About twenty years ago some of us came to live here and we found considerable poverty and destitution. We began to invite the people to come to the meetings, and they were visited in their homes. At that time Mrs. Hilton devoted nearly the whole of her time to supplying the wants of the poor people and ministering to their necessities. Since then general mission work has been carried on in connection with the meeting-house; not only direct evangelistic work, but classes, clubs and benefit societies.

Mr. Hilton went on to tell how, the work having grown, a house in Stepney Causeway was added; and how, as that had been scheduled for railway extension, these premises were secured. They are situated in the teeming thoroughfare of the Commercial-road, and were formerly used as a chapel. They have been altered internally, and adapted so as to give accommodation for the varied branches of work that will be sustained. These will embrace Gospel meetings, temperance meetings, Sunday-school, evening classes, reading-room, &c. A special feature of the work will be adult classes on Sunday mornings, such as are conducted by Friends in different parts of the kingdom, and which have proved a channel of great blessing to many.

At this opening meeting, Mr. George Gillett presided over a full gathering, and excellent addresses were given (in addition to the statement of Mr. Hilton) by the chairman and several other friends. A number of children from the Orphanage in Stepney-causeway were present and sang sweetly, while a strong Gospel choir also did good service. The Ratcliff Friends have evidently surmounted the prejudice felt by many of their co-religionists to sacred song as a part of public service. Much regret was felt at Mrs. Hilton's inability to be present, owing to sudden indisposition, from which we are glad to know she is now recovering.

The operations of the Mission are now in full swing, and as "something will be going on all the time," to quote Mr. Hilton's words, we cannot doubt that this enlarged effort will prove a rich blessing to the neighbourhood.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

CEYLON.

ONE of the band of thirty-seven missionaries who recently sailed with Mr. Tucker to recruit the staff of Army workers in India, writes to us from Ceylon, where the party are stationed for a time in order to gain acquaintance with the language. A very hearty welcome, says the writer, was accorded to them by the natives in connection with the Army; the power of God, he adds, has so manifestly attended the meetings held there during their month of residence in Ceylon, that, at the time of writing, over eighty persons had professed faith in Christ. Visits had been made by several of the officers to different places in the island, with fruitful results, and the awakening of much interest.

VALEDICTORY MEETING.

On Monday week Exeter Hall was about as full as it could be with friends of the Army, who came to take farewell of forty-six "officers," about to depart for active service in India, the United States, Canada, and Sweden. It appeared that several of those proceeding to India had come from Canada, the special claims of the heathen having been pressed upon them. The Indian detachment were attired presumably in the flowing, picturesque garb they will wear in the tropical clime.

During the evening addresses were given by Mr. Bramwell Booth, and Mrs. Booth, and testimonies were given by several of the departing brethren and sisters. Mr. Bramwell Booth reported good news from the General, now in America, and told of the continued growth of the Army. He pleaded for a warmer and more personal interest in missions to the heathen world, and appealed for help towards the cost of sending out this band. Mrs. Booth (who was said to be far from well, and who certainly looked pale and worn) spoke nevertheless with her accustomed fire. She charged the outgoing missionaries to be faithful to their trust, and formally set them apart in prayer for the service on which they are entering. Some of the testimonies were of deep and touching interest, indicating a due sense of the responsibility of their task, and a simple faith in the energising, upholding power of God.

SCOTLAND.

The account of the fifth year's advance of this organisation in Scotland shows that a real foothold has been obtained in the hearts of the people, amongst whom it is now generally recognised as a powerful missionary agency. This is largely admitted by the Press. The John o' Groat Journal, for instance, in the course of an article, describes the work as having been singularly fruitful in good, and states that the Army has increased, that the Communion rolls of the Thurso churches has lessened the number of burgh criminal cases, has reduced the consumption of spirituous liquors, and brought many young men to think of their souls' salvation. At Inverness, Nairn, and Forres, it is said, the work, though not unsatisfactory, has not been so successful as at Thurso and elsewhere. The work at Elgin, as well as at Banff and Macduff, is stated to be on a fair footing, with good congregations.

Of the twenty-seven stations in the Glasgow district, each showed an average of over twenty-four professed converts in the month of May, and in three weeks of the same month the Paisley corps reported 150 professing conversion, the majority of whom have drafted themselves into the churches. One significant fact is, that many of the local ministers of Glasgow and the neighbourhood have expressed strong sympathy with the work and gratitude for the good effected, while no less than seven addressed a series of special meetings held in the barracks by one of the corps. The visit of the Singing Brigade and the opening of the Rescue Home in the spring were occasions of great blessing.

CAMBRIDGE THEATRE SERVICES.

THE Barnwell district of Cambridge has long been a centre of earnest and successful Gospel effort. Various classes are reached by active church and chapel agencies, besides the Salvation and Church Armies, whilst the Theatre Mission attracts many who are untouched by the others.

The annual meeting of the latter was held on Thursday last. Over four hundred persons were present for tea, and more than double that number attended the subsequent public meeting. At this, the Vicar, Rev. A. H. Delme-Radcliffe, M.A., presided, and spoke some welcome words upon Christian union, giving as a motto for the New Year's work, "God is my salvation: I will trust and not be afraid."

Rev. F. Griffin, Baptist, deprecated a continual longing for heaven, which often interferes with work here. We should "walk in the light, as He is in the light, and have fellowship one with another," and then we should realise the joy that "the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." We often say we "get near heaven" at some meeting: we ought to get near heaven when we are alone with God, and if we thus commence heaven here, we shall enjoy it all the more hereafter.

Rev. W. A. Guttridge, Congregationalist, said that it seemed as if the special message he had for them was to give them the love of God. Our value of earthly love depends upon who sends it, and since God has shown his love in such an intense manner, we should gladly respond to it.

Rev. G. Kemp, Methodist, testified to the blessing attending the Theatre work. He knew of results which, perhaps, never reached the ears of those engaged in it, for in the course of his visiting from house to house, he very often met with persons who had been led to Christ by its means.

Mr. G. E. Morgan, of London, followed with some illustrations of the way in which God often lets us work without seeing much result, in order to strengthen our faith, at the same time granting sufficient visible fruit to keep us from being cast down. Impatience and ambition are two great hindrances in such work. We must be content for it to be God's work, manifested in God's time.

Mr. Wm. Brown, of Norwich, then gave an earnest and telling address, advocating adherence to the simple truths of the Gospel which had wrought such happy results in thousands of homes. While so much effort is being made to dishonour the cross and pull down the Gospel, it behoves every Christian and body of Christians to stand firmly for the truth. The results achieved by Christianity are too practical to be set aside; it builds up, while atheism only pulls down without raising a single pile which will stand the test of eternity.

Much regret was expressed at the absence through other engagements of Rev. W. R. Mowll, who has not missed one of these anniversaries before since he left the University six years ago. The presence of so many representative ministers was much appreciated, and their sympathy doubtless has much to do with the success of the Mission, which has been superintended by Mr. W. K. Vawser ever since the Theatre was purchased nine years ago.

MR. H. L, HASTINGS, OF BOSTON (U.S.A.), the well-known Editor of The (American) Christian, is now in London. He will spend some months in Great Britain, fulfilling engagements to lecture on Christian Evidences and Infidelity. His address is 10, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

CHARENTON, NEAR PARIS.—Some time since we gave particulars of an effort that is being made to erect a new Reformed church at this place. We are desired to state that Rev. Marcel Pellissier, one of the pastors of that Church, is now in Scotland seeking to interest Christian friends in the effort. He may be communicated with at the Reformatory and Refuge Union, 32, Charing-cross, London.

SHAFTESBURY HOUSE, MARGATE. — This Seaside Home for Young Men has been quite full during the summer months, and while those staying there have benefited much bodily, there has been also great spiritual blessing. The Bible-readings and Gospel mettings held every Sunday have been well attended, and there were open-air services on the sands every evening during the summer season. In the winter months, it may be added, ladies are received and boarded on very reasonable terms.

The Book World.

We strongly recommend for general distribution among the class specially designated, Rev. F. B. Meyer's Warning Words: A Friendly Letter to Working Girls. 6d. per dozen. Dyer Bros. It is so simple, specific, and sympathetic that it cannot but carry conviction to the reader, and strengthen resolves to do the right and avoid the wrong.

The Golden Key to the Mysteries of Life. A Poem by William Adkins. 6d. Horner & Son. The writer is not a poet, but he is a smooth versifier of correct thoughts on the intent and glory of the Gospel of Christ. There are some quaint handlings of popular beliefs and unbeliefs, and Mr. Adkins is severe on professors of religion who are content with a Christless creed, as the following lines will show:—

> The well-fed madam, ruffled to the chin,
> Demure and worldly, keen as any pin,
> (Whose godless heart enwraps deceit too well,
> Corrupting as the egg within its shell),
> Delights to coyly range the fashion o'er,
> What time her pastor thumbs the sacred lore,
> And tries some topic which may please the ears
> That listen, destitute of hopes and fears.

Sabbath Lessons from Westminster· Meditations on the Shorter Catechism for Sabbath use. By Rev. John Sinclair. 2s. 6d. Edinburgh: James Thin. A successful attempt is made in this meritorious work to unfold the meaning of the Shorter Catechism in such a way as to stimulate meditation and devotion. The writer has drunk deep at the well of Puritan truth. His expositions are marked by keenness of insight, and clearness of statement. Parents could not do better than get them, and use them at the fireside.

The Pilgrim's Progress. Paper 6d., boards 1s., cloth 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. The time is opportune for the appearance of so handy an edition of a work which has been so largely used as a means of spreading the truths of the Gospel. This edition by its size, clearness of type, and the vigour of its illustrations will be prized by all, both those who as givers are doubly blessed in the giving, and those who are the recipients. Much help may be found from its frequent perusal. It will find a place we trust in many a Christmas parcel.

The Women of England, the Wives of England, the Mothers of England, the Daughters of England. Charles & Co. (1, Salisbury-court, Fleet-street). These well-known books have already done good service in spreading practical religious common sense amongst the portion of the community for whom they are intended. Words cannot estimate the influence for good which such books may accomplish, especially amongst young women, and we trust our readers will help to extend the usefulness of these excellent volumes, of which new and popular editions are now issued (2s. each).

Hester's Home. By Janet Eden. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. We have here a story of thrilling interest, which will be welcomed by many besides the friends of temperance. It begins with the new life of a young married couple who have the brightest prospects, but they both lack the "one thing needful." After the first joys of the new home have worn off, the husband begins to spend his evenings at a "club," and clouds gather; for a moment, by the death of their child, there is a rift, but soon they gather again, and become blacker, until a storm bursts that seems as if it might utterly wreck the little family. But by God's chastening hand they are led to see his love, and are brought together into the sunshine of his presence. There is "clear shining after rain." It is a book that well meets a want of the times.

My First Curacy. By Tregelles Polkinghorne. 3s. 6d. Christian Commonwealth Publishing Company. This tasty and taking volume purports to be the story of a "quiet" Cornish parish. Notwithstanding, however, its attractive get-up and literary merits, the excellent character and aims of the hero, and the catholicity of his teaching, we think many of the incidents too sensational to be useful or wholesome for Christian readers. These include a shipwreck, murder, clandestine marriages, elopements, and discovery of human remains, not to mention the dénouement in which the curate discovers that he is the son of the squire of the parish to whose daughter (his own sister) he had made proposals of marriage! There is a further blemish in holding up to ridicule a lady distributing tracts in a railway carriage. Surely Christian workers are sufficiently misrepresented and misunderstood by the world, without professed Christian writers giving the devil a new lie to roll along for their defamation, with profane jokes attached.

Pictures for our Pets: First and Second Series. Messrs. W. B. Horner & Son. Two delightful little books which will amuse the children, at the same time teach them to see, observe, and delight in the wonders and beauties of the world they live in, and even to reach after some knowledge of the heavenly bodies and worlds around us.

The Story of Jesus. By Alexander Mackeith. 6d. Maclure, Macdonald & Co. The publication of these lessons, originally prepared for the poor children of Glasgow who gather every Lord's day in a large hall, will be heartily welcomed by those who wish either by the eye, or vivâ voce to lead the little ones, whether of their own family or of an outer circle, to a true yet simple understanding of the life of the Saviour. Simply to put it into the hands of a child would be doing much in this direction. The pictorial illustration of each lesson is graphic to a degree.

Hooks and Eyes. By Emily P. Leakey. 3s. 6d. John Shaw & Co. This is a delightful collection of short stories, based on what has come under the writer's own observation in passing through the streets. From each we learn how to connect the earthly and the spiritual—that the one, indeed, to the eye of truly enlightened minds, leads naturally and simply to the other. The stories will be helpful in teaching those who read to cultivate, as the authoress has so well done, the habit of observation, and will surely teach some also to see a spiritual lesson in the most common-place events.

Dinah Mite. By Brenda. 2s. 6d. Isbister. A changed home, "all along o' baby's arm," is shown to us in the last chapter of this volume, the interest of which is well sustained throughout. In the first we are introduced to the home, as the husband has made it "through drink," with the two little girls "Sooty" and "Smuts," so nicknamed because of their deplorable condition. What happened between, and what influence "baby's arm" exerted in bringing about such a delightful change, told with much vigour and freshness of style, is admirably set forth in this capital temperance story.

The Time is at Hand; or, Things which must shortly come to pass. By E. Wardell-Potts. 2s. W. B. Horner & Son. Students of prophecy cannot keep too nearly to the inspired Word, or test their opinions too strictly by direct and independent study of Bible language. The special feature of this volume is that its chapters are composed of Scripture passages carefully collated and arranged under headings, setting forth the most salient points of unfulfilled prophecy. The compiler prefaces each chapter with a brief and comprehensive summary of the subject treated, not argumentatively put, but simply by way of statement, so that the reader has the opportunity of examining for himself the agreement or otherwise of Scripture with the views propounded. The author is in full accord with futurist lines of interpretation, but keeps closely to his aim throughout, which is to exhibit what God has revealed in regard to the future in his own words. The index of Bible quotations occupies six closely-printed pages, while the entire absence of repetition shows how fully inspired utterances are employed and relied on for the elucidation of the truth. We commend the book as a stimulus to the adoption of the all-important maxim, "To the law and to the testimony."

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN.

Poets in the Garden. By May Crommelin. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. From the Acacia to the Yew we are led, in this ample and varied selection of flower pictures by the poets from Chaucer to the present day, through gardens of delight and haunts of rarest beauty among the flowers. The compiler is to be cordially congratulated for the manner in which she has linked together these gems of poesy, and for bringing to light many forgotten or little-known thoughts on flowers. We look forward with pleasure to the promised "Poets in the Field."

A Comtist Lover and Other Studies. By Elizabeth Rachel Chapman. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. Those who are fascinated by the attractions of Positivism should read the brilliant dialogue between the Comtist lover and the girl he loves. Her arguments are the more convincing, and show the hollowness of the beliefs taught by Comte. "The Essay on the Rights of Animals" is a trenchant attack on vivisection, and a powerful appeal on behalf of creatures which often suffer from thoughtless cruelty. The analysis of "In Memoriam" is remarkably good. Miss Chapman wields a practised pen, and gives us her best in thought and language. A special tribute of praise should be rendered to the printers for the manner in which they have done their work.

How to be Happy though Married. 6s. and 3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. The "Graduate in the University of Matrimony" has proved a very successful teacher on that subject, judging from the widespread favour with which his book has been received. The fifth edition, just issued, will prove a welcome present for the coming season. Manners Makyth Man (6s. T. Fisher Unwin) is another volume by the same author, who is bent upon making the relation between husband and wife more like the ideal it should be than is too often exemplified in present-day matrimony. By humorous illustration and plain homely argument he ably holds his position that true refinement and courtesy should not end with the merging of courtship into marriage, but should be maintained under all circumstances. The subject is very cleverly dealt with from many different stand points, and is so thoroughly threshed out that the title hardly does justice to the book, as it is scarcely comprehensive enough to embrace all its contents. It is a capital volume and all who have its predecessor should obtain this as its companion.

MESSRS. HODDER AND STOUGHTON.

Anna; or, The Little Runaway. From the German, by E. J. S. A touching story, well translated. Another interesting tale, illustrating the power of conscience, is bound with it in the same volume.—Mary's Work, and Other Tales for her young friends, by Hetty Bowman. Four stories, each illustrating some good practical lesson.—Bessie Brown and Her First Service. By Jane M. Koppen. Some very good warnings to young servants are given in the book, especially on the dangers of taking the first step in the crooked path, and giving way to sins of pride and lying.—May Lawton; or, Sunshine Clouded. By N. O. R. A. A very sad sketch of a wasted young life. The cruel and false conduct of a daughter towards her parents, and the artful deceptions practised by an unprincipled girl, are told with such minuteness that we should regret to put the book into the hands of a child. There is some danger always to young minds in too vivid descriptions of evil.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

Coral and Beryl; or, Children of the Kingdom. 3s. 6d. By Eglanton Thorne. An idyllic story; graceful, healthy, and not improbable. Just the book to delight little maidens of twelve, or thereabouts, who will revel in the doings of such interesting children. Moreover, it shows the good done by agencies like the Children's Special Service Mission. Maggie Dawson; or, Watch and Pray. 2s. A thoroughly entertaining story for girls, without a hint of love-making from beginning to end. It relates some romantic incidents in the work-a-day life of a farmer's daughter, whereby she finds an uncle and inherits his fortune; and, above all, learns some valuable spiritual lessons, through the wise counsel of her friend, the rector's daughter.—Cords of Love. By Alice Lang. 2s. 6d. A capital temperance tale for the young of all ages; not altogether tragic and sad, but woven of various hues, as is life itself. The characters seem of a familiar cast, so that one has a sort of feeling of having met them somewhere, and before the book is done we feel sure we have, and love them heartily.—The Head of the House. The story of a victory over passion and pride. By Evelyn Everett Green. 5s. Or rather a series of victories, for the battle had to be fought over and over again, before the heir of the Challoners could gain his rightful place in the hearts of those to whom he had been an entire stranger. This is a fascinating tale, and is intended to show that he who is in possession of Christ wins.—Nearly in Port; or, Phœbe Mostyn's Life Story. By Mrs. Cooper. 2s. This interesting history of the motherless childhood and chequered afterlife of a little Anglo-Indian is beautifully written, and teaches some useful lessons.

The Young Man is the title of a new monthly magazine for young men, the first number of which will be issued on December 20 by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.

Messrs. Fradelle & Young, photographers, 246, Regent-street, send to us excellent carte de visite portraits of the late Bishop Macdougall, and Canon Spence of St. Pancras, recently appointed Dean of Gloucester.

The Religious Book Society (28, Paternoster-row) send us specimens of floral "Motto Cards," with a blank space for printing any text, motto, or other matter; they are especially suitable for Church or Sunday-school use.

Addresses for Mothers' Meetings and Cottage Gatherings. By Ann Hankey. S. W. Partridge & Co. These short Gospel addresses are simple and clear, and will be a help to any whose time or ability is scanty; but we hope that most of those who work among the poor prefer to study their subjects themselves, and not offer to God and their hearers that upon which they have not bestowed time and labour.

"Ah! I see it now." By John T. Beighton. 1d. Partridge & Co. This dialogue, founded on actual facts and experiences, shows what "Believing in Christ" really is.

Spiritualism Unveiled. By Lieut.-Gen. Sir Robert Phayre. 3d. R. J. Masters, 327, Vauxhall Bridge-road. This résumé of the history of a system which is deceiving multitudes in the present day should be welcomed by all who would unmask its pretensions as well as its pretenders.

"Hear the Other Side." By Rev. Thomas Turner. 1d. Wm. Hunt & Co. This little brochure, giving an account of a conversation between a clergyman and three of his parishioners on the subject of tithes, will be helpful at the present time, showing as it does that there are two sides to the question

"The Priest in the Family." 2d. John Kensit. The publication of the original correspondence, with other letters on this subject, in pamphlet form, will be useful in fixing the public attention on a very grave matter. In a preface, Lord Robert Montagu puts the true points of the case very forcibly.

"The Outlook." By Dr. Ryle, Bishop of Liverpool. 6d. Wm. Hunt & Co. This is a reprint of the opening address at the Liverpool Diocesan Conference, and well worthy attentive perusal. After a protest against wasting money on bricks and mortar, the Bishop calls attention to some serious dangers—amongst others, the tendency to religious externalism, and to the ignoring of all distinctive doctrine.

"English Converts—What are they?" 3d. John Kensit. In England and Scotland alone there are 233 convents, containing about 6000 nuns. This pamphlet contains an exposture of the manner in which these ladies are often treated. We wish it might so stir up public opinion that the subject should be thoroughly ventilated in Parliament.—Popery (1d, same publisher) is an exposition, by Lord Montagu, of what Popery is as a political system.

Leaves from a Worker's Note Book. By David M'Conaughy, Jun. 1s. Vanarsdall, 6, Arcade-court, Chicago. This little manual will be found a most efficient aid by leaders of Bible-classes. Fifty-two lessons are given, with the leading features of each delineated in a few suggestive remarks, which will on consideration prove only helps to a fit preparation for the work, and not by any means serve in place of this. The lesson, we may add, is very practically divided into two parts, the first dealing with the Word itself, and the second with the work.

In the Christmas number of The Christian Million (6d., 4, Ludgate-circus Buildings, E.C.) prizes are offered to the amount of £30 for Scrap Albums, containing the best selections of pictures and cuttings from newspapers, magazines, &c., of a bright and cheery nature, which are to be distributed through the hospitals in London. Here is a good opportunity for children (there are special prizes for children) and those who have a little leisure to brighten the long weary days of suffering. Full particulars are given in the number, which also contains a variety of interesting reading matter, besides two excellent coloured pictures and numerous engravings.

Miss Ellice Hopkins, in a recent issue of the "White Cross Series" of tracts, urges that true purity is to be attained, not by regarding it from the negative point of view, but rather from the positive side, emulating the purity of Christ, the shining vesture of love that "seeketh not her own." The Practical Working of the White Cross Movement contains valuable suggestions for the formation of branches.—The Greeley Expedition, a brief record of one of the most wonderful narratives of human endurance and human heroism ever perhaps made known, should be read by every young man.—Conquering and to Conquer will also do yeoman service in the cause of purity so ably advocated by Miss Hopkins. The little books are published by Messrs. Hatchards.

Almanacks, &c.—The distinguishing feature, as usual, of Cassell's Illustrated Almanack (6d.) is its profusion of graphic illustrations and the variety of the information given.—We have somehow overlooked what we consider the best of all these annual visitors, John Ploughman's Almanack (1d. Passmore & Alabaster). For pithy proverbs and sententious sayings it continues to "hold the field."

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Naval Brigade News (Sailors' Rest and Institute, Devonport) will be a favourite amongst sailors and soldiers. The illustrations and matter are alike pointed and good. — Faithful Words for Old and Young. Alfred Holness. Those who have read these faithful words month by month will welcome their reappearance as a bound volume and those who have not seen them already will find in them things new and old, and all good.—Little Folks (3s.6d., Cassell & Co.) holds its ground as one of the most attractive serials for the young. This volume, with its really splendid pictures (plain and coloured), bright stories, prize puzzles, poems, music, and what not, will be a rare companion for the winter evenings. — Quarterly Record (Ragged School Union) is a bulky volume, which completes the thirty-eighth annual record of the Society's operations, gives a view of the working of the system introduced with so much benefit to the community by the Ragged School Union. It is really a valuable addition to our knowledge on this most important branch of Christian effort; and, while it shows how much is being done for the neglected classes, should also stimulate effort on their behalf, because it is only too painfully plain that very much yet remains to be done.—Bible Light. 1s. 6d. J. T. Shaw & Co. This annual volume contains much that will be prized by truth seekers and Christian workers. The Bible readings and other searchings of the Scripture, as well as the answers to inquirers, and the various articles, give it a position almost unique.

NEW YEAR ADDRESSES.

Jubilee! (6d. per doz. Partridge) very aptly turns to spiritual account the jubilee year of the Queen's accession, showing that the entire Christian era is, rightly, one long festival of praise and liberty, of restful, loving service.—Pleasing God. 1d. By Rev. E. W. Moore. Partridge. This New Year message will help many to a closer walk with God. Citing the case of Enoch, the author draws many valuable lessons for the believer of to-day, and shows that it is by continual walking and going forward with Him that we can attain to the true Christian life.—Things which cannot be Shaken. By Charles Ford. 1d. Partridge & Co. The things of this world are, in this little book, put into contrast with the unchangeable things of God, and the believer will here find true words of comfort.—Trust. 3s. per 100. Religious Book Society. The value of this New Year's motto is simply and clearly shown in this leaflet.

TEMPERANCE.

A law has been passed, and put into practice at Copenhagen, by which every man leaving a wine-shop drunk is conducted back to the tavern in a vehicle at the expense of the wine merchant who allowed him to get drunk on his premises.

In the United States no Freemason can be a saloon-keeper.——Under prohibition in Atlanta, Ga., every trade except the traffic in whisky is prospering.——The U.S. Government have prohibited the introduction of alcoholic liquor into Alaska, even for medical, mechanical, or scientific purposes.

The Band of Hope Union invites Christmas and New Year's collections in aid of the Temperance Hospital and Band of Hope movement.——Canon Barker, Queen's chaplain, delivered the first of this winter's series of lectures under the auspices of the Glasgow Abstainer's Union.——In The Liverpool Mercury it is stated, if the licence laws were enforced, half the licences in that city would be forfeited.——The Glasgow police have made a successful raid on a number of shebeens.

The twenty-fifth anniversary meeting of the Central Hall, Shoreditch, was held lately, and largely attended. The aggregate attendance during the past year was nearly half a million, and 17,000 signed the pledge.——A commercial traveller writes to Tit Bits that business can now be done without the dram-drinking once thought indispensable. He is "happier, brighter, and more cheerful all round since he gave up the drink."——Of the 73,000 inhabitants of Iceland, about 1000 are Good Templars.——A missionary from India, in The Union Signal, says it would be easy to procure fifty million native signatures to petition against the drink traffic. ——The American National Temperance League reports cheering instances of success amongst the coloured people in the South.

EVANGELISTIC.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have closed a fourteen-days' mission in Staithes, Yorkshire; they are now labouring at Grimesthorpe, Sheffield, where drunkards and lost ones are finding Jesus.

Through the labours of Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, in co-operation with local pastors, a remarkable religious awakening has taken place at Dimshalt and Auchtermuchty, N.B. The whole district is moved, and many have professed conversion.

At a six-days' mission at Victoria Chapel, Wandsworth-road, the preachers were Revs. J. G. Rogers, C. B. Sawday, and W. Scafe; each evening there were a number of inquirers.——Mr. Richard Weaver addressed a great audience in the People's Concert Hall, Manchester, on Sunday week.

Mr. John Currie is conducting evangelistic services at Montreal in connection with the Y.M.C.A.——The special Sunday evening services in the Cooper Union, New York, are resumed for the winter.——A work of genuine revival is in progress in London, Ontario, in connection with the labours of Messrs. Brown and Avis; instances of striking conversion are related.

MISCELLANEOUS.

An association of shop assistants for mutual aid and action is about to be formed.——On the first Sunday in November seventy persons were received into fellowship at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

The increase in the number of monks and nuns in Belgium has been very great of late years. It is calculated that there must now be 30,000. Of these in 1880 10,700 were occupied exclusively in teaching.

Principal Rainy is to be the Moderator of the next Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland. The Moderator of the next Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England will be Rev. W. Swanson.

Attendance of students at prayers at Harvard University has been made optional with the best results.——At a recent meeting of the American Bible Society, a letter was read from Mr. Andrew Milne, reporting remarkable success in the sale of Scriptures in Peru; Mr. Milne's work in Colombia is being followed up by colporteurs.

The Y.M.C.A. of St. Paul, Minnesota, has inaugurated a Home for "street arabs."——In the same city, Mrs. Bradley has recently addressed a meeting of men on the subject of Purity of Life.——The Brooklyn Deaconesses House has done good service during the past summer season by sending many poor city children to the country for several weeks.

Mr. Shirley, M.P., is to introduce a bill next session for a redistribution of Church revenue and cutting down the emoluments and privileges of the bishops.——At the Colonial Exhibition upwards of 31,000 copies or portions of the Scriptures were sold.——It is said there is now only one prison in England which has not in connection with it some effort for aiding discharged prisoners.

It is proposed to permanently endow the Hampton (Virginia) Normal School for training coloured and Indian children.——At the recent annual gatherings of the Social Science Association, at Saratoga, U.S., the sessions were opened with prayer.——The work of the American branch of the Evangelical Alliance is being extended by the formation of branches throughout the country.

The Ben Jonson Mission is rapidly outgrowing its accommodation. The Committee are anxious to purchase the lease now advantageously offered, and help towards this will be gratefully received by the superintendent, Mr. Wm. Taylor, 28, Cressy-place, Stepney-green. The Sunday-school is very encouraging, and whilst it is very desirable to develop the work as much as possible, the Committee will not incur debt.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

SUNDERLAND.

A gracious work of revival has been going on in connection with the Pemberton-street Congregational Mission Church. During the summer months out-door services were held on Sunday evening, and listening crowds congregated. When the weather became unfavourable for outside service, a prayer meeting was held in the church. At these meetings it has been ascertained that between fifty and sixty have professed conversion.

MR. ARROWSMITH AT YORK.

A most encouraging mission for children and young people not attending Sunday-school has been held in York by Mr. E. Arrowsmith. The numbers increased and the interest deepened day by day; it was evident that God's Spirit was working in the hearts of many of the children. One feature of the mission was several meetings for adults, parents, Sunday-school teachers, young men, young women, nurses and domestic servants. Mr. Arrowsmith hopes to visit York again at the close of the year.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

Writing with respect to the three weeks' mission in Cheltenham, conducted by these evangelists, Rev. J. More, Presbyterian minister, says:—"There is a delightful spirit of union and co-operation knitting the Nonconformist ministry together. Would that all the ministers of churches in the town could be included; but while the evangelists confine their labours within the walls of our ordinary places of worship, that cannot be effected in present circumstances." The meetings have been large, and the spiritual blessing manifest.

MR. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN IN AUSTRALIA.

Rev. J. Mountain writes from Adelaide on Oct. 16:—It is now close upon two years since we arrived in these colonies from South Africa. We have reason to bless God for his goodness to us. We have visited Tasmania, New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria and South Australia. In each of these colonies, except Tasmania, our work has been specially owned of God in many conversions, and in a deepening of spiritual life amongst believers. All our meetings have been purely Gospel meetings, except for about ten days, when, under special circumstances, we discoursed on Gospel temperance. Along with much worldliness and scepticism there is a great amount of deep, earnest and active spiritual life in Australia. We leave here for New Zealand in about ten days. After labouring there for a few months, we hope to visit Western Australia, Ceylon, India, Port Said, and Palestine. We should be glad to hear from any Christian friends who are labouring in those places. Our address for some time will be: Dunedin, New Zealand.

PHILADELPHIA, U.S.A.

Representatives of all the evangelical denominations in Philadelphia are earnestly engaged in perfecting plans for a united effort in city evangelisation, to continue through the winter. The special services will begin with the second week in January, during which every evangelical church in the city will be open nightly. Union prayer meetings for that week will be arranged for. Beyond this point the plans are not yet definite; but they contemplate the continuance of the work, as long as the Divine blessing seems to warrant it, in union services in different sections, both day and evening, in churches and public halls. Meanwhile preparatory work will be done as faithfully as possible. The city has been divided into six sections, and the visitation will begin simultaneously all over the city on December 1st, and no house will be intentionally passed by. The churches so far represented in the movement are the Baptist, Christian (or Disciples), Congregational, Lutheran, Mennonite, Methodist, Episcopal, Moravian, Presbyterian, Protestant Episcopal, Reformed Church in America, Reformed Church of the United States, Reformed Episcopal, Reformed Presbyterian, and United Presbyterian.

SHAFTESBURY HALL, BOURNEMOUTH.

The late mission, from November 13 to 24, was undertaken, in the first instance, in the interests of the Young Men's Christian Association, but the services have had a much larger scope; great numbers have been collected nightly, from among all classes of the inhabitants, those of the working men and servants being largely and increasingly represented. The whole of the addreses during the mission, besides the daily Bible-readings and the children's services, were supplied by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of All Souls' Church, London, and it is difficult whether to admire most the wondrous vigour and untiring energy of the man, or his powerful, heart-searching appeals to the souls of his hearers. In the daily increasing crowds that came to listen to the preacher, who brought so plainly before them the eternal punishment of unrepented sin, and the cleansing power of the precious blood of Christ, there was plain evidence that the word was having free course and being glorified. Numbers remained daily for the after-meetings.

It is a matter of regret to Captain Dawson, who organised the whole of the arrangements, that it was not possible to prolong the services, as numbers were necessarily shut out from the hall; and, although in the Cairns' Memorial House, General Hutchinson preached to them the same Gospel as Mr. Mowll, it was evident that many were anxious to hear the special missioner. An efficient choir of ladies and gentlemen sang from Songs and Solos and The Christian Choir. Mr. Mansel Ramsay, who conducted, wrote the words and music of a hymn specially for the Mission, and it was sung with ever-increasing acceptance and effect. The first three days of December, special meetings are to be held for the deepening of spiritual life. Rev. Mr. Webb-Peploe and other well-known friends are to speak.

REINFORCEMENTS for the CONGO.

Dr. Edwin E. Small, of the American Baptist Missionary Union, with his wife, sailed on Thursday last for Banana, to join the Livingstone Inland Mission, and help to pastor the thousand young converts at Banza Mateka Station. Dr. Small is a medical missionary, and has also had six years' experience in pastoral work. He leaves a happy home and a prosperous Church, who are much attached to him, to brave the hardships and dangers of Congo life. He is young, bright, earnest, talented, and enthusiastically devoted to his work, so he will be a great help and comfort to the missionaries already in the field. He and his wife had the pain of parting from their infant child, who is left in England.

Dr. Sims, of this Mission, who has been for the last few months in Vienna, studying and getting practice in eye diseases, and other special branches of surgery and medicine, returns in January to England, and hopes to sail shortly afterwards for the Congo. Messrs. Petterson, Walfredson, Frederickson, and Banks will also be returning in the spring, and Messrs. Hoste and Eddie are expected home shortly. No death has occurred in the Mission this year, nor any very severe sickness, while the blessing of God has rested very richly on its work. "Peep of Day" has been translated into the language of the Upper River by Mr. Eddie, and is just printed, as also Dr. Sims' Yansi vocabulary—and one also of the Téké language. Two of the Gospels have also been translated by Messrs. Richards & Harvey.

PEOPLE'S BETHEL, BRISTOL.—The fifth annual report of this work, the result of the Tabernacle Men's Bible-class, states that many of those who, five years ago, were "everything that was bad," are now amongst their best workers. During the year 164 services have been held, with an average attendance on Sundays of 205, and on week evenings of 55, while of 94 inquirers 25 have professed to find Christ. About 190 pledges have been taken by the Gospel Temperance Society, and 40 new names placed on the Band of Hope register. This work is carried on in one of the densest and worst parts of the city.

"BIT BY BIT."

"Read me all; I want to hear it all," said a poor old woman, who had listened more attentively than all the rest, though many were interested, to the Scripture reading at our dispensary. I explained that she could not hear all on one occasion, and told her to come again next Monday. "Then you will read it bit by bit, will you not?" she said, with deep earnestness. "A little every day, till I have heard all; I want to hear those good words, and all about it." As I warmly agreed, she repeated, "bit by bit." Three days ago this woman had never heard of a Saviour, and but for the Medical Mission would most likely have gone to her grave doubly blind; for she is under our doctor's care for very bad eyes.

We greatly want help for the Medical Mission, and if our friends could have heard these words, and have seen the worn face lit up with a new hope, and heard her murmuring, "bit by bit," as she gathered her ragged mantle over her head, and groped her way to the door, they could not help feeling it a privilege to help so blessed a work.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing on a week of evangelistic services and Bible-readings at Plymouth from December 5 to 12, by Mr. J. A. Vicary.

PRAYER.—For a blessing on special Gospel effort at Edgware.——For blessing on a mission in Edinburgh from December 5 to 17, to be conducted by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.——For blessing on a mission in Wellwynd, U.P. Church, N.B., to December 4.——For blessing on a mission being held at Westleigh, Somerset, by Mr. J. Brown, of the Evangelisation Society.

THE BLIND.—Last week a free tea was given by the Committee of the North London Home for Aged Christian Blind Women, Mansion House, Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, to about two hundred blind men and women and their guides, numbering in all about four hundred, in the schoolroom of the Archway Wesleyan Chapel, Upper Holloway.

"RESCUE THE PERISHING."—At the Mission-hall, 6A, Trinity-street, Borough, meetings have recently been held in the interest of the poor abandoned women of the neighbourhood. At an afternoon meeting, when a number of these unfortunates were entertained to tea, addresses were given by Mr. Oliver, of the Rescue Society, and others, as a result of which one poor girl was restored to her parents. Subsequently there was a midnight meeting, when four more came forward for help to lead a new life. These meetings are conducted by Mr. R. T. Bodker, who will be glad of help.

POST-OFFICE LABOUR ON SUNDAYS.—An effort is being made to influence public opinion in favour of celebrating the Queen's Jubilee by abolishing Sunday labour in all provincial post-offices. In a circular on the subject it is well pointed out that if London, with its more than four millions of inhabitants, can dispense with a Sunday delivery of letters, surely it cannot be unreasonable to apply the same rule throughout the country generally, and thus extend the benefits of the day of rest to a large number of hard-working and deserving letter-carriers, as well as to the male and female employés now kept at work in the various post-offices.

DEATH OF REV. FRANCIS TUCKER.—We regret to announce the death of this well-known Baptist minister, which occurred on Saturday night of paralysis, after an illness of ten days, and in the 74th year of his age. For more than twenty-seven years he had been the pastor of the Camden-road Chapel, and for fifteen years previously that of Union Chapel, Manchester. He resigned his pastorate of Camden-road about two years ago, owing to advancing years. Perhaps few ministers have attracted to themselves so much of strong personal affection as Mr. Tucker; the sick and the sorrowing, whether of his own or other churches, ever finding in him the liveliest sympathy. Feeling reference was made from the pulpit of Camden-road on Sunday, where Rev. George Hawker said the announcement would bring tears to many an eye. The funeral is fixed for Friday at 1.30, at Highgate Cemetery, preceded by a service in Camden-road Chapel, at noon.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,600 poor Boys and Girls.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE,

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale, remember that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, warm dresses, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curious musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, etc., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received are made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque (made payable to J. T. Page) to any part of the country.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of during the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Hall of the "Edinboro' Castle."

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensivedrawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, etc., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo now desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

18 TO 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, DEC. 5.—NEHEMIAH III.

The Builders.—Variety of work and workers. God uses human instruments. Method and order in the work.

Ver. 12.—Women in the work as well as men. Surely the children would help by bringing stones; so the babes in Christ may help by bringing others to the places where God's servants are working.

Unlikely workers: Goldsmiths, apothecaries, merchants (1 Chron. iv. 23).

Where did they work? "Each one over against his house" (10, 23, 28—30). There is work for us to do close by. It begins at home.

20.—Baruch "earnestly repaired another piece." Contrast 5: The nobles of Tekoa did nothing. See iv. 17, both hands used. Also 1 Chron. xii. 2, David's helpers. Micah vii. 2, both hands used earnestly to do evil.

27.—The people of Tekoah, stirred by the apathy of others, did more work.

MONDAY, DEC. 6.—NEHEMIAH IV.

Eight hindrances to the work: Five external, three internal. These are most suggestive for workers. There are the same to-day, therefore let us profit. Forewarned is forearmed.

1—3.—First hindrance, external. Mocking and ridicule, sarcasm and sneers. How met? 4—6. Nehemiah prays and builds. Progress made, "for the people had a mind to work."

7—9.—Second hindrance, external. The adversaries conspire. Active opposition. Mocking, &c. became real anger. They came to hinder. How met? By prayer and watching, day and night (Luke xxi. 36; Eph. vi. 18).

10—12.—Third hindrance, internal. Three discouragements: (1) The workers grew weary: "We have lost strength, and there is so much rubbish we are not able to build" (Numb. xiii. 30, 31.) Unbelief says, "We be not able." Faith says, "We are well able to overcome." (2) The adversaries so active and strong (11). (3) Provincial Jews afraid because enemies surrounded them (12).

The way he met these three discouragements. Calls all the families to work (13), that they may not have time to think of the dangers; he prepares to fight; he encourages the workers, and stirs their hearts by the grand watchword and rallying cry, "Remember the Lord" (14).

Result: God brought their counsel to nought, and the work was resumed. "Everyone . . . his work" (15). No idlers, no drones (Mark xiii. 34).

16—23.—Preparations and Precautions. 19, 20, stirring general order, ending with these words: "Our God shall fight for us." The great Napoleon by his stirring general orders, created intense enthusiasm among his soldiers. 18.—Everyone had his sword girded by his side. Ready! The soldiers of Christ should be armed and ready. "They all hold swords, being expert in war; every man hath his sword upon his thigh, because of fear in the night" (Song of Solomon iii. 8). Note the words in this chapter: pray, watch, fight, work, build, labour. Suggestive for the life and work of the Christian soldier and servant.

TUESDAY, DEC. 7.—NEHEMIAH V.

Fourth hindrance, internal.—Troubles among themselves. "We have pledged our sons and daughters that we might get corn" (2). Wrong dealings with their brethren. How met? 6—13: Honest indignation. Prompt measures. Wonderful tact, wisdom, courtesy, patience, yet intense earnestness. He stirs some to take the lead in righting these abuses, and the others follow. Result (13). The people agreed. All said, "Amen, and praised the Lord." They "did according to the promise." Note his attitude toward God (18). His prayer (19).

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 8.—NEHEMIAH VI.

Fifth hindrance, external.—1—4.—The adversaries pretend to be friends, and work underhand. Military strategy had failed, they now try diplomacy. They tried to get Nehemiah away from his work down into the plain of Ono, "the valley of craftsmen" (xi. 35). This would have been many miles from his post of duty. Good answer: "I am doing a good work," &c. (3). Don't let the devil tempt us away from God's work, and get us down into the world.

4.—The enemies tried four times, but he answered them in the same manner. The devil will attack again and again; we must keep watching.

Sixth hindrance, external. 5, False witnessing. Charged him with working for self-glory, to make himself king. How met? He had a true conscience, and he quietly met it with a denial to man, prayer to God, and went on with his work.

Seventh hindrance, external. 10, Pretended to be much concerned about his life. "Better give up work; there is danger, you might lose your life." They wanted to make him afraid. How met? 11, Should such a man as I flee . . . I will not. 12, Spiritual insight to know from whence this came. His grand courage and faith remind us of the late General Gordon. This is the way he lived, acted, and died at his post.

Eighth hindrance, internal. 17—20.—Treachery and meanness. Busybodies and backbiters. Some confederates of Tobiah had married daughters of Israel; evil and trouble were the result. They tried to get Nehemiah to make a friend of Tobiah, and made out that Tobiah was a very good man. They "reported his good deeds." They carried the words of Nehemiah to Tobiah, and no doubt perverted them. Unconsecrated tongues do great mischief. Talkers are great hinderers (1 Th. iv. 11).

15.—So the wall was finished.—Testimony (16): "Our enemies perceived that this work was wrought of our God." How beautiful! "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory."

THURSDAY, DEC. 9.—NEHEMIAH VII.

The wall was built, but it must be guarded. They must watch and be ready to fight. Through the book of Ezra it seems to be work and worship, but in Nehemiah work and fight.

Lapse of time, ten years. Various appointments made. Measures taken to protect the work done. 2, Hananiah had been proved and was promoted: "He was a faithful man, and feared God above many." 3, Precautions against the wiles of the enemy—day and night guards: "Everyone his watch," everyone over against his house. iv. 15, "Everyone his work." WORK and WATCH. The work done must be watched over. Each one responsible for his own home and household. Let us remember this.

5.—Thy God put into mine heart.—Under God's guidance, and giving God the praise and glory. "Not I, but God." Every good gift and every good work are from above. God gives knowledge; man must give all the glory to God.

6—60.—"The children of the province that went up out of the captivity."

61.—Some that could not show their father's house, nor their pedigree, whether they were of Israel.—They mingled with the Gentile world, and lost their nationality. Like those who get mixed up with the world, they lose their testimony, forget they belong to Christ, and have no joy, peace, or assurance (Deut. xxviii. 65, 66).

FRIDAY, DEC. 10.—NEHEMIAH VIII.

A most interesting study. Supposed that Ezra was absent some ten years. Nehemiah's zeal set Ezra to work. Result of the work of restoration was to bring the people to the law of the Lord.

Key words: "All," fourteen times: "Understand," six times. The account of a wonderful Bible reading.

Praising, praying, teaching.—They feasted on the Word, they fasted because of it, then entered into a covenant with God concerning it.

(1) The public solemn reading and expounding of the Law, 1—8; (2) Conviction, sorrow, 9; (3) Joy, 10—12; (4) Obedience, 13—18.

1.—Eagerness to hear, "hungering and thirsting after righteousness." Unanimity. No compulsion. 2, "Could hear with understanding." Understood in hearing (Heb.). 3, A long service, six hours! 4, First mention of a pulpit "for the preaching of the Word." Ezra had several helpers. 6, Note the great reverence and attention. "All the people answered, Amen, Amen." A prayer is not yours till it has your "Amen" at the end.

Notice the attitude before God: hands lifted up, heads bowed down. They "worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground." This is a full verse, let us ponder over it. It would be a good thing if we carried out the spirit of this verse in our services. What power and blessing there would be! It is a verse for hearers, for all those attending the means of grace.

7, 8.—Verses for preachers, teachers, speakers, &c. "Caused the people to understand the law." "Read . . . distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading." A good thing if this were done to-day. See Acts x. 33. The right attitude for hearers, "Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. For speakers, &c., 42, 43, "He commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify," &c.

This chapter in Nehemiah shows us that the reading of the Word of God should be intelligent, distinct, diligent, in obedience, constant, 18.

9.—Immediate result, the people were grieved and convicted before God. "All wept." There must be conviction of sin by the power of the Holy Ghost. We must see ourselves as we are in God's sight, our sins of omission and commission.

10, 11.—Healed and comforted, then joy. Those that tremble at the convictions of the Word, may rejoice in the consolations of it (Num. xiii. 30): "The joy of the Lord is your strength;" "Rejoice in the Lord." They carry portions to others. It is our privilege to hear for ourselves; our responsibility, to give to others.

12.—The reason of their joy: "because they had understood the words that were declared unto them." This is very striking.

13.—They wanted more for themselves, and then to be able to tell others. Had another Bible reading.

14.—They searched. It was there all the time, but was only found when they looked. "Keep and seek for all the commandments of the Lord your God" (1 Chron. xxviii. 8). "Searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so, therefore many of them believed" (Acts xvii. 11, 12).

16.—They found the commands and obeyed them. Result: "There was very great gladness." Not since the days of Joshua such joy.

18.—Daily Bible readings, "day by day." There are useful hints in this chapter for "the Lord's messenger in the Lord's message." The book to use, the way to use it. The hearers, and what they should do. The results to be aimed at.

Note that the priests and laymen were one in the work.

SATURDAY, DEC. 11.—NEHEMIAH IX.

A day of humiliation (James iv. 9, 10) by authority of the governor and approbation of the people. Real repentance toward God. They thank God for his mercies, confess their sins, humbly submit themselves to God, and then (chap. x.) enter into a solemn covenant of faithfulness and obedience. It was hearing the law read and expounded that showed the people their individual sins and national transgressions.

2.—Began by separation from evil and confession. 3, Reading, confession, worship. Our approach to God must be with humility and reverence, but it may be with boldness and confidence. In confession of sin we must be definite and honest. Worship must be with sincerity, in spirit and in truth. For prayer we need the right spirit more than the gift of prayer, "praying in the Holy Ghost." We need the Advocate in us to help our infirmities, as well as the Advocate for us through whom we pray. In praise we must draw near with gratitude, and "forget not all His benefits."

5 to end.—The prayer of the Levites. A wonderful summary of Bible history. Begins with the Creation, and mentions each historical period down to the "Return." Probably this is only the outline, or heads, to guide those who took part, and the points enlarged upon. Much of it is from Ezek xx.

6.—Begins with adoration and thankful praise. Glory to God in Creation, Providence and Government. All worship to Him.

7, 8.—Israel's position as a nation before Jehovah for ever. The eternal election of God and foundation of the covenant of grace. Faithfulness of Abram. Faithfulness of God to his words.

9—12.—The Exodus. Deliverance from Egypt. The steps in God's grace. 9, The eye and ear of God for his people. 10, His power and presence. 11, Deliverer and Destroyer. 12, Leader and Light. 13—15, God's plans and provision for all needs. The Law, the Sabbath, bread, water, promise of possession. Note the words: camest, spakest gavest, madest known, commandest, broughtest forth, promisedst.

16—18.—"But." Man's failure and guilt. Pride, disobedience, forgetfulness, rebellion. "There were two things to which the Israelites did not duly give heed, else they had not done as they did. The Word of God they heard, but they gave no heed to God's commandments; and the works of God they saw, but were not mindful of his wonders."

17.—Latter part, God's favour and grace, "God of pardons"; a beautiful title. 18, Man's great provocations. 19, God's manifold mercies. 20, "Thy good Spirit to instruct them." 21, "They lacked nothing." 22—25, Blessings showered upon them. 26, "Nevertheless . . . disobedient." 27, Judgments, yet saviours to deliver them. 28, Backsliding, yet, on their return and repentance, deliverance.

30.—At last captivity, yet not utterly consumed. 33, "Thou hast done right, but we have done wickedly. 34, to end, An appeal to God, closing with the words, "We are in great distress."

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED IN 1844.

THE Funds of this Society greatly need replenishing. If liberal aid be not speedily forthcoming, the present number of 125 grants to poor and populous metropolitan and suburban parishes must be still further reduced. The Readers visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, and the erring; and they help generally in the Spiritual work of their respective parishes.

The Committee earnestly appeal for Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Collections, which are greatly needed.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. EARL OF ABERDEEN.

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

THE operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by John Kirk, Secretary.

Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THE HOMERTON RAGGED SCHOOL AND GOSPEL MISSION.

President—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Urgently appeal for funds to meet the inevitable distress of the coming winter. A Committee of ladies, well acquainted with the district, will, with the assistance of a Bible-woman, satisfy themselves the genuineness of every case before giving relief. Every penny thus contributed will reach the poor without deduction either for management or other expense.

-Contributions should be sent either to Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., Bankers, Lombard-st.; or to the Hon. Sec., Mr. Henry E. Shaw, 15, Muston-road, Upper Clapton.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Dear Sir,

The Business Young Men of London, for the most part, reside in the inner circle of its suburbs.

While the City Branches of the Young Men's Christian Association provide for those who live on the premises where they are employed, there is a growing necessity for Suburban Branches.

One of the most important and in every way successful of these is that at Finsbury Park, close to the large Station of the Great Northern Line, and within a mile of Stations on the Midland and Great Eastern Lines.

The temptations to Young Men in London are so fearful that hundreds of them are ruined in body and soul every year. And fathers and mothers in countless homes are mourning over sons who, in youth or early manhood, came up to London, and were lost to themselves, to society, and to God.

It is a melancholy fact that comparatively few who go astray (and are not won to Christ before they are twenty-five) are rescued at all; or if so, their lives are marred and blighted by years spent in sin.

To prevent their downfall, by stretching out a helping hand as they first enter City life, is the work of the Y.M.C.A.

The Finsbury Park Branch is surrounded by 6000 Young Men; of these, 500 have joined us during the past year, as associates, 30 of whom have, during the past six months, given themselves to Christ, and are working for Him.

In addition to the usual Classes, Lectures, Social Gatherings, &c., the Hall, seating 800, enables us to have Children's Meetings, and a remarkably successful Sunday Evening Service, at which souls have, it is believed, been saved on every occasion. It is a meeting signally blessed and owned of God.

But no adequate support can be obtained in the neighbourhood, the inhabitants of which consist almost exclusively of local tradesmen, and of business men engaged in the City.

£1300 a year is needed for this beehive for God, besides £1000 due for Lease, Furnishing, &c. A donation for this latter purpose, and a subscription of a Guinea a year towards current expenses, I very earnestly ask of those who love Young Men, and who believe in the work of the Y.M.C.A. I hope I may, with confidence and success, address you as such, and remain,

Yours very faithfully,
R. C. MORGAN, President.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION—CASE of a YOUNG MAN AT HIGHAM FERRERS.

Reported by Rev. W. J. Tomkins, of The Manse, Rushden, Higham Ferrers.

The patient had caught a severe cold, which resulted in serious illness. A cold is often the forerunner of disease (as shown in my book), and is the early footstep of the destroyer. Then followed a bad cough, entire loss of appetite, decrease of flesh, great languor, night sweats, &c.

Mr. Tomkins writes:—"At this time the medical men were consulted in the usual way, but no benefit was derived from their treatment. They, with others, thought the young man was going into a rapid decline.

"It was then your medicine was tried and proved so successful. He rapidly got better, and after a time resumed work. His parents say they feel you ought to know the good he derived from your treatment. He is now well, and appears to be a strong, healthy young man.

"Personally I have no hesitation in saying that in early stages of consumption and severe cases of bronchitis there is no medicine more efficacious than yours. I have seen its good effects in many instances."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

Years.	Temperance Section.		General Section.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	-5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

REV. CANON CHRISTOPHER, OXFORD.

FEW names are more familiar or more respected in evangelical circles than that of Rev. ALFRED M. W. CHRISTOPHER, rector of St. Aldate's, Oxford, who has for many years been a clergyman of light and leading. Too high honour cannot be accorded to a life of eminent goodness and incessant usefulness; so we rejoice to see Mr. Christopher's merits recognised in his recent appointment by his Bishop to be an honorary Canon of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

Mr. Christopher did not go to school till he had reached the age of fourteen, but he enjoyed the benefits of private tuition in his aunt's house. When he entered a large school, his abilities and application earned for him in time the highest place among his compeers. His early training owed much to the wise counsels of Mr. Goodhart, then minister of St. Mary's Episcopal Chapel, Reading, and now the esteemed rector of Wetherden, Suffolk. He listened attentively to the sermons of this faithful preacher, and was deeply impressed by the truths they proclaimed, but he did not as yet yield himself to the service of Christ. He often felt unhappy in the knowledge that he was not converted. The beautiful piety and self-sacrificing zeal of an elder sister strengthened his longings after the Christian life which he saw in her.

In 1839 he passed from Mr. Goodhart's care to Cambridge. During his college days he had the privilege of sitting at the feet of Canon Carus, on those memorable Sunday evenings when he delivered weighty and stimulating addresses in Trinity College; but he still remained without real conversion of heart to God. He won an honourable position as a student, and finished his Cambridge course by graduating as nineteenth wrangler in 1843. In that year also he formed one of the crew of the Jesus College boat, and, as one of the Cambridge "Eleven," played against Oxford in the far-famed annual inter-university cricket match.

Early the next year his future was largely moulded by his appointment to the Principalship of La Martinière, Calcutta. The fact that the authorities of his college recommended him for this responsible post shows that they held him in high esteem. He justified their recommendation by the success with which he discharged his duties. The work was very hard, but he did not flinch from it on that account. He threw himself into it with ardour, and manfully grappled with its difficulties. His tact was as conspicuous as his energy. Five years after his appointment, Bishop Wilson, of Calcutta, wrote of him: "He has raised the Martinière to the highest pitch of reputation, and conciliated all the governors in a remarkable manner." Much occupied as he was, he found time for engagements as an Examiner outside his own school.

In 1846 he was Government Examiner of the ablest native students in the colleges of the Bengal Presidency in pure mathematics and natural philosophy; and in 1848 he undertook the charge of the Government examination in history, for senior scholarships. The way in which he fulfilled these duties brought him to the front in Indian scholastic circles. But his best work was done in the moral training of the boys under his care. These were not Natives, but Europeans and Eurasians. He was more anxious to teach them to be good than to make them clever and accomplished; nevertheless, one of them became Second Wrangler at Cambridge, and Senior Tutor of Caius College, the late devoted Rev. A. W. W. Steel. He wisely carried his difficulties to the Saviour, and proved the power of Divine strength. Prayer could tame unruly hearts, and bring about what no efforts of his could effect. The lesson thus taught has remained with him throughout his life. He has for many years held a daily prayer-meeting in his rectory, at 7.30 a.m., which has removed many perplexities from those who attend it, and is a little centre of blessing in Oxford. The answers to the petitions offered up at it have been numerous and gracious.

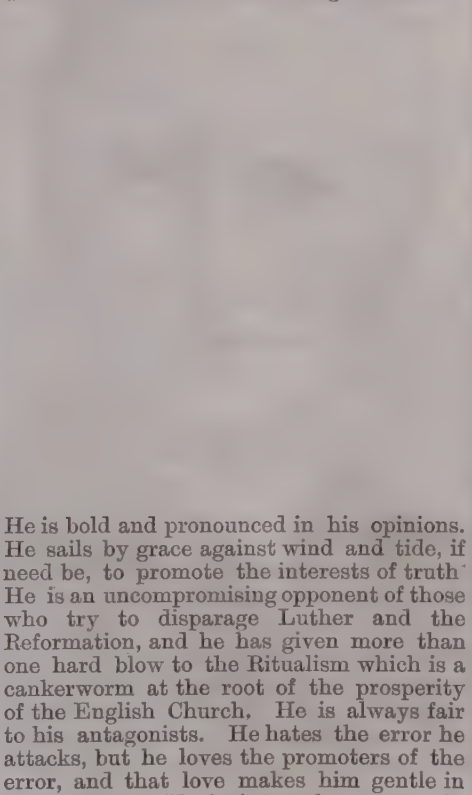
His career of usefulness in Calcutta was brought to an end by the failure of his wife's health; moreover, he felt an earnest desire to devote himself to the ministry of the Gospel. His wife had to return to England, and he regarded it his duty to follow her. Before doing so, he waited long enough to initiate his successor, and to make two short mission tours. He saw something of the various operations of the Church Missionary Society in Benares. He also examined there a class of young natives, who were being trained to be catechists by Mr. Leupolt, and was greatly struck by their thorough acquaintance with the Bible. He has since said that they knew it better than he did himself at the time. He spent the Christmas vacation in going round the stations in the Kishnagur district. The information thus acquired was to prove useful afterwards, and what he saw was helpful in deepening his own spiritual life.

On his return home he was ordained by the late Bishop Sumner, of Winchester, to the curacy of St. John's, Richmond, Surrey. He soon made his mark as an earnest worker and acceptable preacher. Rev. J. D. Hales, his Vicar, left the parish after a year, on account of his wife's health. Mr. Christopher took complete charge of all the agencies in the district. The energy and fidelity which won success for him as a teacher were now, through grace, consecrated to the work of a clergyman. He was diligent in the study and in family visitation. He experienced the truth of Chalmers' dictum—"a house-going minister makes a kirk-going people." His days glided on smoothly and pleasantly, till, in 1854, he was laid low by gastric fever. It told severely on a constitution weakened by constant labour. He got worse, and the doctor called in, in consultation, despaired of his recovery. His devoted wife was supported by the prayers of the anxious parishioners. They gathered in a prayer-meeting. Strong men sobbed. Earnest petitions ascended to the Throne of Grace on behalf of the beloved curate's recovery, and they were heard. The doctor visited his patient at eleven o'clock that night and found that a change for the better had set in. From that hour the invalid mended rapidly, and was soon able to resume work. In this way he was taught afresh the efficacy of fervent believing prayer.

The faithful service Mr. Christopher rendered in his curacy opened the path to a larger sphere of activity. In 1855 the late revered Henry Venn requested him to become an association secretary of the Church Missionary Society. In 1859 he was appointed rector of St. Aldate's, Oxford, which honourable and responsible position he still retains. For twenty-seven years he has toiled on with conspicuous zeal and growing influence. He had not been instituted more than three years when his church was enlarged by 300 free seats, and restored at a cost of £4,300. Two years later he erected three new schools; since then he has built a rectory. His sympathies went out strongly towards the undergraduates. He longed to help them in their perplexities, and to strengthen them against the temptations of University life. He built a large and comfortable rectory-room in his garden, and threw it open for parochial and undergraduate meetings. A special meeting is held here every Saturday evening during term time, at eight o'clock, for undergraduates, at which Mr. Christopher always presides. It is open to all, and is a power for good. Many have borne testimony to the blessing they have received from these hallowed hours of prayer and Bible exposition.

In addition to his parochial work, Mr. Christopher undertook duties which would be enough by themselves for a man of less energy. He has been for a quarter of a century honorary secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Oxford. He is one of the honorary secretaries of the Oxford Church Missionary Association, and president of the Oxford branch of the Church Association. The interest in missions excited by his Indian experiences has not died in him. He is a fervent advocate of any agency which carries light into the darkness of heathendom. Six of those who once tanght under him in St. Aldate's Sunday-school are now missionaries, and the Bishop of Sierra Leone, when an undergraduate, instructed a class of boys in his parish. Whatever cause has for its object the glory of God in the salvation of souls, is sure of his sympathy and cooperation.

Mr. Christopher's career has had only one cloud, and that soon passed away. A gross libel only deepened his dependence on God, and served to show the esteem in which he is held by good and honourable men. It evoked a remarkable Address of confidence, which was signed by the Archdeacon, the Vice-Chancellor, and by a large number of University dons and a host of undergraduates, some of whom had reaped lasting benefit from his ministrations. It is worthy of notice that those who differed widely from him on questions of vital importance hastened to reveal their respect for him. Ritualistic clergymen and even the Roman Catholic priest signed the Address of Confidence. No greater tribute could be paid to the real worth of the man.



Mr. Christopher is no week-kneed Evangelical, nor is he a time-serving Protestant. He is bold and pronounced in his opinions. He sails by grace against wind and tide, if need be, to promote the interests of truth He is an uncompromising opponent of those who try to disparage Luther and the Reformation, and he has given more than one hard blow to the Ritualism which is a cankerworm at the root of the prosperity of the English Church. He is always fair to his antagonists. He hates the error he attacks, but he loves the promoters of the error, and that love makes him gentle in controversy. He is intensely earnest in doing all he can to advance the welfare of the Church he serves so well.

The secret of Mr. Christopher's energy and success lies in his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and his consequent high-toned character and unswerving singleness of purpose. He has the simplicity of action and the straightforward perseverance of the man who adopts the Pauline motto, "This one thing I do;" and the one thing to which he devotes himself is the glory of God in the salvation of souls. His ability, culture, and pulpit talents, are all directed to the accomplishment of this great aim. His gentleness attracts, and his enthusiasm rouses a like feeling in others. There is a certain winning sweetness about his nature which makes many friends for him, and by his affectionate treatment of all with whom he is brought into contact, he manifests to a selfish age, the beauty of Christian brotherhood. Of him it may be said, in the language of Wordsworth, that he is wont—

> Along life's common way,
> With sympathetic heart, to stray,
> And with a soul of power.

BIBLE STUDIES.—40.

"The fruit of the Spirit is love."—Gal. v. 22.

I. Love to the Lord, shown by (a) Obedience. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me" (John xiv. 21, 23). "The love of Christ constraineth us. . . . He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again" (2 Cor. v. 14, 15). (b) Suffering. "They departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name" (Acts v. 41). "Unto you it is given (granted as a favour) in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for his sake" (Phil. i. 29). (c) Service. "I love my master . . . I will not go out free . . . and he shall serve him for ever" (Exod. xxi. 5, 6). "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me" (Matt. xxv. 40). "A woman . . . brought an alabaster box of ointment . . . and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment. . . . She loved much" (Luke vii. 36—50).

II. Love to his people, shown by Unselfishness—in (a) Thought. "In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves" (Phil. ii. 3). "Charity seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil" (1 Cor. xiii. 5). "Grudge not one against another, brethren . . . behold, the Judge standeth before the door" (James v. 9). (b) Word. "Speak every man truth with his neighbour; for we are members one of another" (Eph. iv. 25). "Speaking the truth in love . . . grow up into Him in all things" (Eph. iv. 15). "Speak not evil one of another, brethren" (James iv. 11; Tit. iii. 2). "Comfort yourselves together, and edify one another" (1 Thess. v. 11). (c) Deed. "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not Himself" (Rom. xv. 1—3). "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ" (Gal. vi. 2). "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you" (John xiii. 14, 15).

III. Love to all men, shown by (a) Prayer. "Love your enemies . . . pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you" Matt. v. 44). "Stephen kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge" (Acts vii. 60). "I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting" (1 Tim. ii. 8). "Pray . . . that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified" (2 Thess. iii. 1). (b) Forgiveness. "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven" (Matt. xviii. 21, 22). "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful" (Luke vi. 36). "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye" (Col. iii. 13). (c) Kindness. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men" (Gal. vi. 10). "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. . . . A certain Samaritan . . . had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds," &c. (Luke x. 27—37). "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink" (Rom. xii. 20). "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in" (Luke xiv. 23).

THREE BIOGRAPHIES.*

The biographical literature of the day is assuming vast proportions. With such perfected facilities for production and distribution, the recorded lives of those who have departed are given to the reading public much more rapidly now than in former years. This is a decided advantage in one sense, because a man's life-work can be better understood and appreciated while his memory is yet fresh and vivid in the mind of the reader; at the same time there is a danger of hurry leading to superficiality and incompleteness. Such a charge cannot be brought against any of the interesting works that are before us, though the subjects of them were all with us a little more than twelve months ago.

LORD SHAFTESBURY.

Taking them in the order of date, we have first of all the three volumes that tell the wonderful story of the career of "the good Earl." It is indeed a noble and worthy memorial of a grandly noble life. The biographer has been unusually fortunate. He was entrusted with his task by the late Earl himself, and had the inestimable advantage of much personal intercourse, as well as access to the voluminous correspondence and private journals of his Lordship. We hardly know which to admire more—the candour of Lord Shaftesbury's instructions to the historian of his life, or the admirable judgment shown by the latter in manipulating the mass of material at his disposal. The materials could not but be large; the Earl's long life was so full of splendid service rendered to his race and his generation that his achievments would still seem great if they represented the combined labours of half-a-dozen men instead of one. Of few in modern times will it be said with such truthfulness that he left the world better than he found it.

To those who only knew Lord Shaftesbury in the later years of his benignant and blessed life, it will be a revelation to be told, as we are here told, that his childhood was far from a happy one. The Christian grace and fidelity that so eminently characterised him were certainly not hereditary in his case. It is at once a lesson to parents, and an encouragement to those who fill humbler positions in the household, to find him saying, in after years, with respect to his nurse, Maria Millis, that she was "the best friend he ever had in the world." It was she who taught his childish lips to pray, and who sowed, in his youthful receptive heart, the seeds of that simple faith in God and Christ, and that unflinching devotedness to truth, as he believed it, which so eminently characterised his long and illustrious public career. It is deeply instructive to note, as Mr. Hodder well remarks, how the early years of his own sorrow "were the years in which he was graduating for his great life work; he had suffered oppression: henceforth his life would be devoted to fighting the battles of the oppressed."

Oppression in its varied forms is rife enough now; but when Lord Ashley, as he then was, entered on Parliamentary life, at the age of twenty-five, it was found in many shapes that are now, thanks to his unceasing endeavour, little more than ghastly and shameful memories. The bare enumeration of the different classes of the community at home and abroad, into whose sad lot he cast the sunshine of sympathy and amelioration, would make a lengthy list. The neglected and maltreated insane, the misgoverned natives of our Indian Empire, the scarred and peeled and persecuted Jews, the chimneysweep boys for whose well-being no one seemed to care, the women and children toiling under degrading conditions in factories and in mines, the coloured bondsmen in the United States, the destitute and the depraved of our city slums, the ragged children, the victims of the China opium traffic, the distressed needlewomen, friendless and unprotected girls—all these and many more were in turn the objects of his heartfelt solicitude and his unwearied care. Wherever the victims of human greed, cruelty, passion, or neglect, were to be found, he was ready to espouse their cause, and play knight errant in the attempt to relieve them from oppression and wrong. While busily occupied with these varied matters affecting the social condition of the people, he found time and inclination to bear his part in the discussion of questions national, political, and religious. As a man of good parts, and an heir to a peerage, he had, in his earlier public career, many chances of taking high office under the State. More than once he seemed to stand at the parting of the ways, when a decision would either have landed him in the trammels of official and political life, or left him free to pursue his advocacy of the cause of the poor and oppressed, unfettered by party ties. Happily, he had the grace to choose the better part, and though he was, to the end of his life, conservative in politics, he kept a position of benevolent neutrality that enabled him often to intervene with more weight than if he had been more pronounced.

Lord Shaftesbury was even more conservative in theology than in politics. From the first he proclaimed himself to be an evangelical of the evangelicals, and to that faith he adhered through good and ill report. Romanism, Ritualism, and Rationalism, therefore, found in him a most uncompromising foe, and all movements for the evangelisation of the people were heartily welcomed and supported. He took an active part in the Tractarian controversy, though Dr. Pusey and other leaders in that retrograde, and now discredited, religious movement, were old acquaintances. As for the great Christian agencies in which he took an active and personal interest, such as ragged-schools, the City Mission, the Y.M.C.A., &c., their name is legion, and all of them to-day are feeling the irreparable loss sustained by his removal from the earthly stage.

Lack of space forbids our going into more detail, and we must content ourselves with again expressing our appreciation of the skill with which Mr. Hodder has prepared this splendid biography. He has made very large drafts on the journals, addresses and letters of the noble lord, and for this the public will heartily thank him. We have revealed to us, through his private diaries, the inner and secret life of the man, and can thus understand how he was sustained amidst the weight and worry of so many burdens and so much incessant toil. Lord Shaftesbury was a man of strong views and deep-rooted convictions, and he naturally expressed himself in language that was the very reverse of smooth; yet he carefully regarded the feelings of others, and would not needlessly offend those who opposed him. Through all there ran the golden threads of simple trust in God, of fidelity to revealed truth, and of yearning compassion for the poor, the weak, and those who were out of the way. In this he was a bright example to all the world's workers, whether prince, peer, or peasant. Looking back at what he was permitted and enabled to accomplish, and looking around among those he has left behind, we are tempted to exclaim—"Take him all in all, we ne'er shall look upon his like again." Yet we have the strong consolation that, "though God takes away his workers, He carries on his work."

BISHOP HANNINGTON.

This is one of the most readable and fascinating biographies we have ever seen. It will intensify the deep and widespread sorrow that was felt when the news of the Bishop's tragic death reached the outside world. If Mr. Dawson has been fortunate in his subject, as he certainly has, we think (to use a common and permissible phrase) that the martyred servant of God has also been fortunate in his biographer. As a close college companion of Mr. Hannington; as the human instrumentality by which he was led to spiritual decision (this fact the writer modestly conceals), and as one having full sympathy with his life-work, not to speak of the possession of a lively and picturesque style of diction, Mr. Dawson is eminently fitted to present a correct and attractive picture of the bishop's life and character. The only instance we have noted in which he seems to have overstepped the limits of due discretion in the case of private papers, is the reproduction of a disparaging remark about Dr. Talmage, whom Mr. Hannington chanced to hear on one occasion. He would have been the first to regret, we feel sure, that a casual criticism, meant only for his own eye, should have been published to all the world. Mr. Dawson has done so admirably well on the whole that we are surprised at this slip.

Our recollection of the sedate and serious Bishop, as he spoke at Mildmay just after his elevation to the Episcopal office, did not at all prepare us for the account given in this volume of his lively and frolicsome youth. It is delightfully described by Mr. Dawson, who can, of course, speak of the Oxford undergraduate days from personal knowledge. Mr. Hannington was intended by his parents for a business life, but, while "man proposes, God disposes." He did not shine at Oxford, where he went to graduate preparatory to ordination; he was far fonder of sport than of study. Partial failure, however, spurred him to action, and in due time he passed the needful examinations, and took "holy orders." The story of "the great change" that came over Mr. Hannington shortly afterwards, is told in chapter vii. with rare delicacy and faithfulness. It is a story, we think, that would do much good among a certain class if scattered abroad in leaflet form. The absolute honesty and thoroughness of Mr. Hannington made his conversion a very real thing, and its effects were speedily visible in the after-life that is so excellently sketched in these interesting pages. How he was greatly blessed in his ministry at Hurstpierpoint; how the claims of the heathen were pressed home upon him, and how he nobly responded, at the sacrifice of home ties and comforts; his ever memorable African experiences as an undaunted Christian pioneer; his return to England, where "he was received as one alive from the dead;" his restoration to health, and consecration as Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa; his return to the foreign field, and how he met a martyr's fate, suffering for the misdeeds of others—all this is recited by Mr. Dawson with the fulness it deserves. The closing scenes of all, so touching and so tragic, as detailed by his own pen in the diary recently to hand, will for ever take a place among the choicest classies of Christian fortitude and calmness in the supreme hour of trial.

Besides having a keen sense of humour, the Bishop possessed a facile pencil, and the pages of the book are brightened here and there with sketches made for the benefit of his children, and other illustrations. A map of Eastern Central Africa shows the last route he took, and a splendid portrait forms a frontispiece.

REV. W. E. BOARDMAN.

In this volume the capable and sympathetic pen of his beloved partner in life sketches very vividly the character and career of the well-known author of "The Higher Christian Life," and other works bearing on holiness. That career was a chequered one in its earlier stages, and it is deeply interesting to the student of spiritual growth, to trace the progress of Mr. Boardman's soul experience from his boyish attack of sceptical doubts, on to the matured restfulness that marked the evening of his devoted and useful life. Even those who may not be able to agree with all he taught latterly on the subject of "Faith Healing," will gain much profit from this tribute to his memory. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, in a preface, expresses his indebtedness to the writings of Mr. Boardman, and there are doubtless many more who could bear a like testimony. A photographic portrait shows the calm and placid countenance that was the index of a close walk with God.

BEFORE THE PRAYER WEEK.

As it is before we come to our prayer-meetings that we need exhortation upon the subject, I venture to unburden my heart of a few reflections that have been forced upon me since reading Mr. Williamson's timely article in your issue of Nov. 25.

It has been well said that "there is no religious duty more acknowledged, no religious exercise more profaned, and none more easily counterfeited, than prayer." "This people draweth nigh unto Me with their mouth, and honoureth Me with their lips, when their heart is far from Me," said the Lord in his day. Is it not greatly to be feared He would say the same in our day if He were on earth? Yet there may be prayer that is no prayer (even though it be not the prayer of a downright hypocrite)—powerless, ineffectual, fruitless prayer. Oh, how much of such praying there must be from year to year in this highly favoured land, even at our annual "Week of Prayer."

What is so needed is "the prayer of faith," such prayer as Elias, "a man subject to like passions as ourselves," prayed: "the effectual fervent prayer, that availed much" (James v. 17). Let us remember that such prayers are of "a kind." There is the "prayer of faith," and there is the prayer which is not, cannot, be of faith—the prayer of presumption.

What is the prayer of presumption? (1) It is the prayer that is not RIGHTLY GROUNDED, not based on that one only ground that a holy and a righteous God can hear and answer. True prevailing prayer must be prayer in the name, and for the sake of Christ, "that the Father may be glorified in the Son"—prayer grounded on the Redeemer's one perfect obedience unto death—prayer offered, not only in full view of his once for all finished propitiatory work on the cross, but of what He is now doing in heaven itself. In praying, we need to eye Christ as set forth in the ordinance of the Golden Altar, to have respect to the preciousness of his one meritoriousness, ascending at this moment before the Father. No prayer that is not thus grounded can be aught else but presumptuous prayer (John xiv. 6).

(2) The prayer of presumption is prayer that is not RIGHTLY GIFTED. True prevailing prayer is the immediate fruit of the Holy Spirit's prompting, as the "Spirit of grace and of supplications." As we are filled with the Holy Spirit, we shall abound in prevailing prayer, "praying in the Holy Ghost." All real acceptable prayer is the outcome of his indwelling and inworking.

(3) The prayer of presumption, is prayer that is not RIGHTLY GUIDED. "We know not what we should pray for as we ought," therefore the Holy Spirit becomes the Helper of our infirmities, and maketh intercession "according to God" (i.e., in "unerring coincidence" with the will of God), for He, the Holy Spirit, knows the mind of God, even as God knoweth the mind of the Holy Spirit. Oh, do we not need more of such praying to the end that our askings at the Throne of Grace might be right, Scriptural askings, askings that are in the line of his promise and purpose concerning us? Else we do but beat the air, asking our own things; to consume the same on our lusts.

If our prayers are thus guided and guarded by the Holy Spirit of God, they may be not a little reduced in length, but they will be immeasurably increased in strength. Diminished in the quantity of their words, they will be immensely improved in quality. Instead of the multitude of vain repetitions which too often characterise our supplications at public gatherings for prayer, there will be the utterance of direct definite petitions, spoken, it may be, with broken voice, and stammering tongue, yet coming from God and so going to God, to return, laden with richest blessings.

(4) The prayer of presumption is the prayer that is not RIGHTLY GOVERNED. It is too often overlooked that prayer, successful prayer, prayer that is to reach the ear of God, and to bring down his gracious answer is prayer that is expressly conditioned. Shall we not lay these conditions to heart before the first week of January. I will mention some of them only, those which might be called "principal spices" thereof.

(a) It is an express condition of answered prayer, that we ask according to the will of God. "If we ask thus," says the Apostle, "He heareth us." But what if we do not ask thus? Then He heareth us not. How important to note this. Let us, before we kneel to pray, lay to heart the words of our great Exemplar in prayer, as in everything else: "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt" (Luke xxii. 42).

(b) It is an express condition of answered prayer, that we "abide" in Christ, and that his words "abide" in us (John xv. 7). But what if we do not abide in Christ, and his words do not abide in us? What then? Then we may ask what we will and it shall not be done unto us (at least we have no Scriptural ground for expecting that it will be). Shall we not, each one for himself and herself, before the week of prayer, ask, as under the searching eye of Him with with whom we have to do, "Am I abiding in Christ, and do his words habitually abide in me? Have I respect to them at all times?"

By no means let us forget the last clause of this condition, lest we be self-deceived. We may think that we can do the one, and not the other, i.e., abide in Christ and at the same time be careless about his words. This, however, is impossible. We may have very little knowledge, be but poorly taught in the words of our Lord, but if to the extent of our knowledge, with an honest and a true heart, we are found receiving those words, taking them to the full embrace of our faith and love, we shall not miss the blessing. For the comfort of such it is written: "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be from God," or whether the teacher is speaking from himself (John vii. 17). "Abiding in Christ," so termed, may be mere mysticism, or quietism, or worse, fanaticism, if his words are not remaining with us—"his words," those words that He spake when here below, both before and after his passion, when "He began to do and teach" (Acts i. 1); as also the words that He continued "to do and teach" through his inspired Apostles and servants after his ascension into heaven, so that their "acts" and sayings were not so much theirs as the "acts" and sayings of their Lord and ours (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20).

(c) It is an express condition of answered prayer that we keep the commandments of Christ. "And whatsoever we ask we receive of Him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight" (1 John iii. 22). To continue in true prayer we must continue in Christ's love; but to continue in Christ's love, we must continue in his obedience; we must keep his commandments in all their variety and entirety, even as He kept his Father's commandments, and so continued in his love" (John xv. 9, 10).

One thing I may be permitted to add. Let more room be given for prayer this year, even at the cost of less for the address. Charge those who come to bring their requests plainly and definitely stated, and not to do so until they have first laid them before God in the secret of their own closet. We have no right to lay as a burden on others what we have not first laid to heart ourselves.

The ground around us just now is hard and unyielding, but there is a sound, I think, of an abundance of rain; so let us gird up our loins and run in the blessed ways of the Lord, cleansing ourselves from all defilement, both in word and deed. Is there not a need for this, alike in our own hearts, our homes, and our churches? "Take these things hence; make not my Father's house a house of merchandise" may well be the indignant and not too severe remonstrance of our Lord and Master. Oh, "let us purge out the old leaven, that we may be a new lump," and "let us keep the feast" of this "New Year," not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" (1 Cor. v. 8).

"THE CHRISTIAN IRISHMAN."

Dear Sir,—Allow me to call the attention of your readers to The Christian Irishman, published by Messrs. Humphrey & Armour, 2, Crow-street, Dublin, a monthly periodical devoted to the cause of truth in Ireland. It avoids party politics, and approaches Roman Catholics in a kindly and conciliatory spirit. It has a large circulation in Ireland, and is read by many Roman Catholics.

Having lived in the south of Ireland for nearly forty years, I know pretty well what Irishmen need, and I have undertaken the practical details connected with the circulation of the magazine on this side of the Channel. It is a matter of most serious moment, to which British Christians are giving very little attention, that there is a nation of Irish immigrants and their descendents growing up in Great Britain. Ordinary methods of evangelisation pass these strangers by. It is as yet an almost untouched problem how they are to be reached? One way is to circulate their own version of the Scriptures and a healthy literature among them. A Douay Testament without notes can be had for threepence.

I shall be glad to communicate with any who are willing to engage in the work of thus reaching Roman Catholics. No one who measures all things by present success need engage in it. I am one of those who believe there is a time to sow as well as a time to reap, and that very often one sows and another reaps. I can show any willing hands a hitherto unbroken field in which to sow.—I am, &c.,

Alexander W. Wallace, M.D.

Cardross, Dumbarton.

MR. GEORGE KING AT BIRMINGHAM.—This evangelist lately conducted an eight days' mission at Palmer-street, Birmingham, in connection with the work carried on by Mr. Stead. God richly owned the testimony of the evangelist, and not a few professed conversion.

DERBY.—For a little more than twelve months an attractive evangelistic service has been held in a large room in this town, the object being to form a class and create a kindly mutual interest amongst those attending the services, and to give each other a helping hand towards higher and better things. There are now 512 members, including all sorts and conditions of men, and the attendance at the services is so large and regular that it is felt necessary there should be a larger hall. At the annual meeting held recently, several large employers of labour testified to the good results of this movement, which was originated by Mr. Reginald Hodder.

HOW BLIND CHINESE BEGGARS
MAY BE TRANSFORMED INTO EFFICIENT SCRIPTURE READERS.

By Miss C. F. GORDON-CUMMING.

Those who have attempted to master the difficulties of any of the numerous dialects of Chinese, or the terrible array of intricate written characters which the weary eye must transfer to memory ere it is possible to read the simplest book, can alone fully appreciate the boon which has been conferred on the legion of the blind in China by means of the patient ingenuity of a Scotch working-man.

Since in favoured England (where the ravages of small-pox and ophthalmia are effectually kept in check) there are nearly forty thousand blind persons, we can form some idea of their number in China, England being just about the size of the smallest of the eighteen provinces of that vast Empire. While in our own land even to see one blind beggar is exceptional, in China there is not a city where they do not abound, frequently going about in companies of a dozen or more, and assembling at certain spots in clamorous crowds, hungry and almost naked—truly of all men most miserable; the more so, as many are also afflicted with leprosy.

The benefactor who has, in such a wonderful sense, opened the eyes of the blind, is Mr. W. H. Murray, whose calling to mission work must be traced to an accident in a saw-mill, whereby he lost his arm, and so was disabled from following his original profession. This apparent calamity has resulted in a discovery, which, if properly developed, may prove an incalculable boon to millions yet unborn, in the Celestial Empire. As soon as he was able to resume work, Mr. Murray obtained employment as a rural letter-carrier in the neighbourhood of Glasgow, but was subsequently employed by the National Bible Society of Scotland as a colporteur. At this time his remarkable facility for languages attracted the notice of some of the directors, and it was arranged that he should attend classes at the College, though his studies were not allowed to interfere with his regular work. All day long he travelled with his Bible waggon, rising daily at 3 a.m., even on the chill winter mornings, in order to prepare for his classes at 8 and 9 a.m., and then began again at a new day's work of book-selling.

During this period, apparently so fully occupied, he found time for an additional study, his interest having been aroused by seeing so many blind persons come to purchase books printed on Moon's system. Having mastered this, he took lessons in Professor Bell's system of visible speech, and also in Braille's system of reading and writing for the blind, by means of embossed dots. Ere long, he was sent as the Society's agent to Peking, where his work as a colporteur was at first very discouraging, but has of late years proved remarkably successful, and has included several highly encouraging Bible expeditions into Mongolia. On arriving in China, Mr. Murray found that the system of visible speech (which he had acquired simply as an interesting curiosity) actually facilitated his own study of the very difficult language, so he noted down the value of every sound he mastered, and thus ascertained that these are really limited to about 420, a very goodly number as compared with our own 24, but a mere trifle as compared with the 4000 distinct and crabbed characters which every Chinaman must acquire before he can read such a book as the Bible, in ordinary print. Even a child must master 1200 characters before he can read the equivalent of "Jack the Giant Killer."

The continual sight of the innumerable Chinese beggars, whom Mr. Murray met at every turn, awakened an unspeakable longing to devise some means of alleviating their hard lot, and it was evident that in a country where literature is held in such high honour, the power of reading would be simply an incalculable boon. He, therefore, set himself to reduce the 420 sounds to a system of equivalent dots, and his patient ingenuity was at length rewarded by finding that he was thus able accurately to represent the perplexing sounds of the language, and to replace the bewildering multitude of Chinese characters.

Having thus overcome these apparently insuperable difficulties, his next care was to test the system, and prove whether even the most sensitive fingers could learn to discriminate four hundred separate arrangements of dots. Selecting a poor little orphan blind beggar, who was lying almost naked in the streets, and who, notwithstanding his loneliness and poverty, always seemed cheerful and content, Mr. Murray took him in hand, washed and clothed him, and undertook to feed and lodge him, provided he would apply himself in earnest to mastering this new learning. Naturally, the boy was delighted, and we can imagine his ecstasy, and the thankful gladness of his teacher, when, within six weeks, he was able not only to read fluently, but to write with remarkable accuracy! To complete the experiment, two blind beggar men were next induced to learn, the boy acting as teacher. One was able to read well within two months; the other more slowly, but also with great pleasure.

It was at this stage that I made their acquaintance, and it struck me as intensely pathetic, as we stood at the door of a dark room—for it was night—to hear what I knew to be words of Holy Scripture read by men who, less than four months previously, sat begging in the streets in misery and rags, and on the verge of starvation. No wonder that to their countrymen it should appear little short of miraculous that blind beggars should be thus cared for by foreigners, and endowed with apparently supernatural powers; consequently, when one was sent out to read in the street, in company with a native colporteur, crowds gathered round to see and hear and to buy the Book. From the singular reverence of the Chinese for all written characters, and for those who can read them, it is evident that a blind reader there occupies a very different position to that of the men whom we are accustomed to see in our own streets. Furthermore, in no other country have so many attributed the conviction which has induced them to face all the persecution which almost invariably follows the renunciation of idolatry solely to their solitary study of some copy of the Scriptures which has casually fallen into their hands. Hence it is obvious that, as assistant colporteurs, blind Scripture readers may prove most valuable agents in spreading the knowledge of Christian truth.

Of course, in a country where the dialects spoken between Canton and Pekin are so different as to necessitate the publication of at least eight different translations for the use of seeing persons, it is evident that these must be reduced to the dot system ere the blind beggars of the Central and Southern provinces can share the privilege already open to those of North China, so that eventually schools for the blind must be established in Southern cities. Meanwhile, however, it is highly desirable that the school, so successfully commenced in Peking should be placed on a permanent footing. It is, of course, necessary to provide board, lodging, and raiment for the students, who have hitherto maintained themselves only by begging. For this purpose Mr. Murray has from the first taxed his own slender salary to the very uttermost. Moreover, as this blind teaching is altogether out of his official work, he has only been able to accomplish it in extra hours stolen from sleep. I may add that he has applied the same system to musical symbols, and his blind pupils form a very creditable choir. Several of these have already started on their new gladdened life, and others are now in training.

A few months ago an appeal was made to all who are interested either in the blind or in Chinese missions, urging them to send a special thankoffering for their own gifts of light and sight, in order to assist in this good work. It was further stated that £10 would maintain a student during one year's training. In answer to this appeal, amounts have been received which will pay for the hire of the rooms, and maintain about a dozen blind students for one year. As yet, however, there are no annual subscribers. It had been suggested as very desirable that a fund should be raised to secure a moderate permanent endowment. In reply to this, a letter was received from "A Working Woman" to say that as the development of so valuable a mission agency was evidently worth a very special effort, she wished to devote to this purpose £100 saved from her earnings, which she would forward in the hope that nine other persons would each send a similar sum, or that eighteen would each send, or undertake to collect £50.

For the sake of so excellent a work, it is much to be hoped that not only will the nine thus challenged come forward, but that the £1000, thus aimed at, may at least be doubled, so that an income of £100 a year may secure provision for the hire of a small house, a modest salary for a permanent teacher, and a sum sufficient for the maintenance of at least half-a-dozen indigent blind students, who year by year may be sent forth to read the Sacred Message in the streets of Peking and other great heathen cities.

Surely such a project must appeal to the sympathies of many, who might well rejoice in the possibility of thus easily securing a proxy to do their share of mission work in China. Nevertheless, we all know how often a warm interest fails to attain to GIVING POINT, which is very much like bringing a kettle up to boiling point—a very different stage from mere heat! And we also know how very apt we are to limit our giving power to such a sum as we can spare without involving much self-denial. Would that some who read these lines would consider for a moment what life would be to themselves were they deprived of gifts so priceless as sight and light, and each resolve to present for this branch of God's work, such a sum as he shall really miss—not taken from the total of his accustomed offerings, but as a special thankoffering for these precious gifts—an annual portion of the money-talent which we know we only hold in trust, as we so often need to remind ourselves, as we say, "Both riches and honour come from Thee, and of THINE own do we give Thee."

The fact that we are all suffering from hard times, seems a special reason for practically testing God's promise in Malachi iii. 10: "Prove Me now." And, as concerns the happy few who are conscious that in the sight of the Master they are already doing their utmost with regard to money, they too can help by prayer on behalf of this work, and by endeavouring to awaken the interest of others.

After an absence of sixteen years, Mr. Murray has arrived in Scotland, hoping to receive this practical evidence of sympathy in his work. All tokens of this will be gladly welcomed by Mr. William J. Slowan, Secretary of the National Bible Society of Scotland, 224, West George-street, Glasgow.

CONVENTION AT CHESTER.

On Monday week an All-Day Convention was held in Queen-street Congregational Church, Chester. The morning meeting was devotional, Rev. John Williams presided, and Rev. F. Jewell delivered a powerful address on 1 Cor. ii. 2. In the afternoon, Rev. I. E. Page presided; Rev. J Mitchell spoke on "Christ the Source of Life; Rev. W. Jones, on "Christ in the Inner Life;" and Rev. A. Mills, on "Christ in Common Life." Open conference followed, and great spiritual power pervaded the meeting.

In the evening Rev. H. Ward Price presided, and spoke on "The Baptism of Power," Rev. F. Barnes spoke on "Our Mission as Churches," Rev. J. Travis on "Hindrances to the Work," and Rev. J. Pryce Davies on "Aids to the Work." A suggestion that fell from the Chairman seemed to meet with much favour. It was that the Convention should have a practical issue in the establishment in the city of an Annual United Meeting in behalf of Foreign Missions, and that a monthly prayer meeting should be carried on. The meetings were characterised by great devoutness, and by an earnest desire for full consecration to the Redeemer.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

VI.—THE EDUCATION OF HOME.

Genesis XXIX.

Next to the love of God comes the love of man or woman, as a factor in the education of a human spirit. Each one of us is capable of giving out a vast wealth of love; we must love and be loved; and almost everything depends on the twin-spirit whom we choose, as the object of our affection, and as the hearth at whose fires we may warm ourselves, when chilled and repelled by an unfriendly world. That love may make or mar us; may transfigure or degrade us; and which it shall be is settled by the objects whom we choose, and the way in which we treat them.

Jacob's encounter with Rachel at the first well he came to, reminds us that though there is nothing more important than the union of heart with heart, there is nothing into which people drift more heedlessly. A fancy, a look, a smile, a touch, a moment's talk in a crowded room, amid the excitement of an evening's gaiety—any of these is deemed sufficient to justify a choice, which may affect the destiny of the spirit for evermore.

Of course we do not deny that Jacob may find his other self in the beautiful girl at the well, under the Eastern noon, and that she may prove to be the one without whom his life would be incomplete. It may so happen, through the kind providence of God, which shields us from dangers we do not perceive, and loads us with benefits we do not deserve. Nevertheless, it is the highest folly to leave so momentous a matter to be decided by a transient passion, or by the charms of a fascinating manner and a pretty face. Do not carry your heart on your sleeve. Do not let your affections trail loosely on the ground to catch in every thorn-brake. Gird up the loins of your mind; test the spirits whether they be of God; do not take an irrevocable step without earnest prayer, that He would still the voices of self-choice, keep you from making a mistake, and reveal to you his will.

It is not enough to think and pray thus when a new affection has already flung its spell over you. At such a time the soul is thrilling beneath its new-found rapture, and it is much harder for the judgment to discover the voice of God, because the heart deflects it, as the mass of iron in a modern steamboat deflects the needle from the pole. And therefore, it is of the highest importance that these subjects be made a matter of prayer and thought in the earlier stages of life, when a supreme affection is, as yet, an ideal and a dream. Let mothers speak of them to their daughters, and fathers to their sons, as Isaac did to Jacob (ch. xxviii. 1, 2). Let young men, whenever they think of these matters, turn their thoughts into prayers, that God would guide them, as He did Abraham's servant, to the woman whom He has chosen to be their help-meet. And let Christian women lay aside all idea of attracting men to themselves. Let them quiet their hearts as weaned babes. Let them constitute themselves the wards of God, leaving Him to choose for them the one who shall give them strength for sweetness, defence for weakness, protection for helplessness, and love for love.

There is no training of such value to man or woman as the training of the home, to which the deep instincts of our nature, and the most solemn sanctions of the Bible, point us. Jacob found it so. Rachel and Leah had a very powerful influence upon his character and life, and we need to take warning by his mistakes, and reap his rewards.

I.—The Four Conditions of a True Home.—(1) There must be a supreme affection. This was clearly a love-match. "Jacob loved Rachel" (verse 18), is a sufficient explanation. And no marriage is heaven-made, heaven-sent, or heaven-sanctioned, which does not spring from a supreme love. Alas! how many marry from some less worthy motive. Some, for a home; others to escape from uncongenial surroundings; others for position; others for baser reasons still. All these sin against God's purpose. They sin against one another; and, not least, they sin against themselves. No two should marry unless each feels that life, without the other, would be incomplete. Less than this will never suffice. If one loves, and not the other, there cannot be true happiness, for there is no reciprocity, no mutual satisfaction; to give without receiving is to run to waste; to take without giving is to harden the heart, till it becomes ice. If neither loves, what is it less than the crime which wails the requiem of thousands on every night breeze? But if there be true love, then, though one have been taken and the other left before they stand together at the marriage altar, yet in the sight of God's high angels those twain are one for ever.

It is needless to show how the necessity of the presence of a supreme love is the ground and justification of monogany, the union of two. This has been the pride and glory of the German peoples, as even Tacitus discerned: and this has been the cradle of all those higher ministries which distinguish our people, and assign us the leading position among the nations of the earth. "Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth."

You have no right to excite that love, or play with it, unless you are prepared to satisfy it, as far as you may. You have no right to give that love away till you discover that all other conditions are assured. You have no right to marry if this love be absent. You have no right to treat either man or woman as you would not like your brother or sister to be treated, or as you would not like to be treated yourself.

(2) It must be in God. Jacob's was so. He might have taken a wife of the daughters of Heth, as Esau did, steeped in the idolatries and impurities which cursed the land. But, guided by his parents' counsels, he crossed the desert to obtain a wife, who had been reared in a home in which there lingered still the memory of the worship of the God of Abraham, of Nahor, and of their father Terah (xxxi. 53).

The Bible rings from end to end with warnings against mixed marriages. "Thou shalt not give thy daughter unto his son, nor take his daughter unto thy son, for they will turn away thy son from following me, to serve other gods" (Deut. vii. 3). "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, light with darkness, Christ with Belial? (2 Cor. vi. 14). "She is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord" (1 Cor. vii. 39).

We need not be surprised at these strong and repeated prohibitions. A mixed marriage is a prolific source of misery. In the course of a considerable pastoral experience, I have never known one to result in perfect happiness. Believers, in such unions, do not level their unbelieving partners up to Christ, but are themselves dragged down to infinite misery and self-reproach. "Did not Solomon, king of Israel, sin by these things? Yet among many nations was there no king like unto him, who was beloved by his God, and God made him king over all Israel. Nevertheless, even him did outlandish women cause to sin." How can there be sympathy in the deepest matters? Each feels that there is one subject on which they are not agreed, and this is a fatal barrier to perfect union. The ungodly partner despises the Christian for marrying in the teeth of principle. The Christian is disappointed because the apparent influence gained before marriage is dissipated soon after the knot is irrevocably tied. Well might Rebekah be weary of her life through those daughters of Heth! Many a Christian girl has married an unbeliever, in the hope of saving him, and has bitterly rued her choice; she has seen her influence wane, and has learnt, though too late, that the Holy Spirit will not co-operate with our efforts, if they are based on distinct disobedience to one of the clearest commands of the Bible. If a man threatens that, if you deny yourself to him, he will take violent or fatal steps, let him! He has no right to put you in that position; he simply wants to get you into his power, and he will be much too great a coward to carry out his threats. Do right in the sight of God, and leave him to settle the matter with his Maker.

(3) It should have the goodwill of parents or guardians. This is not necessary where sanction is withheld from caprice. But where it can possibly be obtained, there is the halo of a brighter promise encircling the union of two young hearts, when it is ratified amid the congratulations of rejoicing friends. So it was with Jacob: "Isaac called Jacob, and blessed him, and sent him away" (ch. xxviii. 1, 2). It is wise and right, where practicable, for children to consult, in such matters, those whose love has made them the eager guardians of their opening life; and to do so by courtesy, even when mature years have given them the right to choose and act for themselves. But if parents would have such confidences when their children are old, they must make themselves their confidants whilst they are young, they must give as well as receive, they must exercise their authority by love and reasoning, rather than by constraint, and they have no right to let their decision be warped, through any personal whim, from the straight line of what would best serve the highest interest of a beloved child.

(4) There should be some prospect of suitable livelihood. In the broad wealthy land where Jacob found himself, there was not much difficulty about that. It is a much more complicated matter amid the conditions of our crowded modern life. Yet there ought to be some security of a competence. Young people have no need to begin where their parents are leaving off; to do so would avoid much wholesome difficulty and the opportunities for mutual help; but it is equally absurd to run the risk of a late repentance for a rash marriage. Young man, select as your partner, one who, with refinement and culture, is not above turning her hands to the practical details of household management, and who knows what to do and how to do it. Young women, give your hearts to men who love you well enough to earn you through years of faithful and steadfast courtship, if so it must be. Anyone could do one deed of gallantry, it took a true man to serve for seven long years.

If these four conditions are fulfilled, there will be the strongest reasons for anticipating a union which shall be a miniature picture of that event, for which the whole creation groans; when the midnight air shall be startled by the tidings of the Bridegroom's advent, and the Church shall pass into the wedding feast,

II. The Expulsive Power of Supreme Affection.—"Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her" (ver. 20). That sentence always charms us, for its beauty and its truth. Love has the power of making a rough road easy, and a weary waiting time short. It makes us oblivious to many things, which, for lack of it, would be insupportable. The mighties brake through the armed host of the Philistines to get one draught of water from the well for their beloved prince, oblivious of personal risk, for the love they bare to him. The trembling women, on the resurrection morning, ventured out into the perils of the crowded city, whilst it was yet dark, that they might embalm the body of their Lord; nor do they appear to have considered the perils, amid which they threaded their way to his grave, for the love they bare to Him. The martyrs died amid bitter torture, with a smile on their faces, and a song on their lips, not counting their lives dear, but reckoning it an honour to spill their heart's blood, for the love they bare to Him. Many a woman has nursed her children through loathsome disorders, doing for them what no money would hire a servant to do, but she has not considered the cost, for the love she bare to them. Yea, Jesus Christ Himself endured the cross, and despised the shame, stooped to a felon's death, bore the base treatment of coarse and brutal soldiery, and rejoiced to lay down his life, for the love He bare to us

Do you find it hard to deny yourself, to make the required sacrifices for doing his will, and to confess Him? There is one cure, a short and easy one. Go to the Holy Ghost, and ask Him to shed the love of Christ abroad in your heart, and so teach you to love Him who first loved you. Then, as the tides of that love rise within your heart, they will constrain you to live, not for yourself, but for Him; then burdens will be light that once crushed; roads will be pleasant that once strained and tired; hours will fly that were once leaden-footed; years will seem as a day. Love's labour is always light.

III.—SOME CLOSING WORDS.—Are you unmarried? Do not bewail yourself, as if your life must be incomplete. Yours is not a higher state, as the priest has falsely taught; but it is neither a failure nor a shame. It will attain to finished beauty, if only you walk in the path which your Heavenly Father has prepared for you. Cease to measure yourself by human standards. Find rest in being just what your Heavenly Father wills you to be. Break the alabaster box of your affection on Him, and His, for His sake. It may be that you have been kept free from the limited circle of a home, in order to pour your love on those who have no one else to love them. But remember, it is possible for all such to live in perfect self-restraint and purity, through the power of the Holy Ghost, "which is in us."

Are you disappointed? Jacob was disappointed poor Leah; and she spent many a bitter hour of anguish. Her father had forced her on a man who did not love her, and who wanted to be rid of her. She had a woman's heart, and pined for love that never came. There are few stories more touching than the secret history of Leah, as revealed in the names she gave her boys, and her reasons in giving them. Yet remember, she had her compensations in the love of those strong, healthy lads, who greeted her with the title, Mother, so dear to a woman's heart. And there are, doubtless, compensations in your lot, if you are not too bitter to see them. And this is the best of all, "The Lord will look upon your affliction" (ver. 32). Meanwhile, do not flinch from doing your duty as in his sight.

Are you happily married? Then beware lest you make an idol of your happiness, or suppose that there is no further need to watch. Is it not remarkable that Jacob's dearest wife was the source of his defeat and disgrace, in after years, because she hid in her baggage the household idols of her father? That was a remarkable command that Moses gave to Israel: "If the wife of thy bosom entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, thou shalt not consent unto her, neither shalt thou spare, but thine hand shall be first upon her to put her to death." Does it not teach us that we are not to receive, without question, the gifts of even our dearest? We must ever put God first. "If any come to Me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."

Have you become a Christian since you were married to an unbeliever? Then do not seek in any wise to alter your relations (1 Cor. vii. 13, 14); but expect, in all assurance, that you will be the happy means of winning that beloved one to Christ. And seek this, not so much by frequent speech,—there is a time to speak, but also a time to be silent,—but rather seek it by the admirable beauty and consistency of your life, "That if any obey not the word, they may without the word be gained by your manner of life, beholding your behaviour" (1 Peter iii. 1).

Above all, withhold not your love from the dear Master, Christ. Hold all human love in Him. You may love to the uttermost of your power, if only you make Him first, and take your love as His gift, and enjoy it in Him, and thank Him for it. So human love will teach you to understand Divine love, and from your thoughts you may understand his thoughts. "He that loveth, knoweth God." "That being rooted and grounded in love, we may be able to comprehend the love of Christ."

MR. STEAD, of the Evangelical Mission (Palmer-street, Bordesley, Birmingham), writes that funds are urgently needed for the carrying on of this work.

For the Young.

TO OUR YOUNG FRIENDS IN LONDON.

LETTER FROM REV. E. P. HAMMOND.

DEAR CHILDREN,

I OFTEN think of you, and the meetings many of you attended last year with me in London. I well remember, when in churches, chapels, halls, or drawing-rooms, you found your hearts melting in love to Jesus. The Holy Spirit helped you to see and feel how He had suffered on the Cross that your sins might be forgiven. I remember how your faces were lit up with joy as you sang the hymns we loved so much. I have often prayed that each of you might live earnest, Christian lives, and do all you can to lead your friends to come to Jesus and be saved.

I have heard how some of you at the seaside and in other places have been at work for the Lord. Mr. Spiers wrote about some of these meetings, and of your still singing the Gems of Praise hymns. Some of you promised to pray that the Lord would help me to work for Him in this country. I am glad to tell you He has done so. Here, at our home in Vernon, Connecticut, I have been holding meetings, and a good many of our friends and acquaintances think they have learned to trust in Jesus. It is delightful to see those whom we have known since they were little children weeping their way to the Cross, and giving themselves up to Him who bled and died for them. All the children in some families think they have become Christians. The young converts speak and pray together in their gatherings, and encourage each other to cling to Jesus and to work for Him.

Last week I held meetings at a Sunday-school Teachers' Convention in Lowell, Mass., and continued them after the Convention was closed. Many children and youths told us they gave themselves to Christ; but some, I am sorry to say, rejected Him. A lady told me that in the inquiry meeting she found a boy, only seven years of age, who did not seem at all anxious about his soul. His heart was very hard, and his actions showed he did not wish to hear anything about the love of Jesus. She spoke to the next little fellow, who said, with tears in his eyes, "I do want to be a Christian."

"Do you feel you are a sinner?" she asked. "I know I am a great sinner not to love the dear Saviour."

The lady then began to tell him about the great sufferings of Christ in giving Himself for us, and what do you think that first little fellow did? I will tell you. He slowly got down from his seat, and crept up behind his little mate; and, while the good lady was still speaking to him of the love of Jesus, he whispered in his ear, "Nonsense." The lady still kept speaking to the boy, who was weeping for his sins, and again his wicked playmate said, with more earnestness, "Nonsense, nonsense!"

Does not this show that even little boys have wicked hearts, and are, by nature, at enmity to God? I hope none who read THE CHRISTIAN are boys of this kind. How is it with you, my little friend? Have you really given yourself to Christ? Do you love Him? Do you seek to please Him? You are either helping those around you to come to Jesus, or you are hindering them from doing so. You may not be as bold, nor quite as bad, as this American boy, who said so bitterly, "Nonsense!" but the bad is in your heart if it is not a "new heart," and in some way it will come out. Think what a wicked boy that was! He was not only determined to reject Christ himself, but he did all in his power to lead his weeping little friend to do the same. Have you any such children in London? I hope not. But I remember seeing some there who were very wicked; but some of them I saw greatly changed when they came as lost sinners, and believed in the Lord Jesus Christ. I pray that they and all who read these words may show, by a Christian life, that God is able to keep all who trust in Him.—Your friend,

TEACH ME TO DO THY WILL.

GIVE me thoughts to think of Thee,
  Every thought more true and sweet,
That in glad reality
  I may know Thee when we meet.
Every thought where Thou art not
  Is a worthless thought at best;
  And I cannot be at rest
If Thou have not every thought.

Give me words to say to Thee,
  Words of penitence and praise,
Of undying trust: and be
  Near me when thy servant prays.
Make me brave to speak thy name:
  Who should speak it, if not I?
  Let me die ere I deny
Him who, dying, bore my shame.

Give me deeds to do for Thee,
  Deeds where self may find no place:
Lighten every task for me
  With the smile upon thy face.
Since the work that Thou hast done
  Has for all the world sufficed,
  Let all works of mine, O Christ,
Rest on that foundation-stone.

Take my passions, purified,
  Take my will—bound up with thine—
Make the bent of levelled pride,
  This, in love all to outshine.
Since there is no other rest
  From temptations and alarms,
  Take me, take me in thine arms,
Fold me—fold me to thy breast.

WATERCRESS AND FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION.

THE twentieth report of this Mission brings again before us the claims of a large and interesting class, whose condition is for the most part a deplorable one. The girls are mainly of the roughest class, and when winter interferes with their trade are often in a truly pitiable condition. The missionary says: "The cases met at night have been really appalling, though many are of the most heroic kind—widowed mothers battling for their children, wives for sick husbands, and girls for little sisters." The committee have helped numbers of these—the girls, by training them for domestic service; the widows and others by providing them with barrows, food, &c.

The Flower Girl Brigade, now numbering forty-nine (thirty having already passed through their period of training), has more than maintained its honoured position, having received £1,300 for the work of its members' hands during the year. The various works under the committee's care are in a prosperous state, the Sunday-school numbering 700 children, Bands of Hope 200, while the Sunday evening evangelistic services average an attendance of 1000. Altogether, 400 of these poor girls have been taken from the streets, and trained for useful service, and the committee have been able to supply nearly 30,000 meals to the poor women and children.

It will be an additional argument with all who are disposed to help in this work, that all the operations are carried on upon the principle of helping people to help themselves, and that the workers have themselves paid the whole of the rent and expenses of the Foresters' Hall services, as well as contributing over £100 to the Christmas dinners and free meals, and to the Sunday-school expenses. It is now intended to build dormitories, &c., in connection with this rescue, preventive, and training work, and £500 is needed to enable this undertaking to be carried out. Mr. J. A. Groom, Hon. Sec., 8, Seckforde-street, Clerkenwell, is the Superintendent.

CORRECTION.—In a recent issue Mr. E. H. Glenny was reported to have said that "three hundred thousand millions of Mohammedans have lived and died" since the system took its root; it should have been three thousand millions—that is, the average of 75,000,000, multiplied by forty generations.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Dec. 12, Judges vii. 13—25; Dec. 13, Judges xiii. 1—14; Dec. 14, Judges xiii. 15—25; Dec. 15, Judges xiv. 1—11; Dec. 16, Judges xiv. 12—20; Dec. 17, Judges xvi. 4—17; Dec. 18, Judges xvi. 18—31.

DR. WHYTE ON BUNYAN.

The attendance at the prayer-meeting in Free St. George's, Edinburgh, on Tuesday week, was very large, and the attention paid to the speaker was even closer than usual. Dr. Whyte began by saying that biography is the best kind of reading, when you get it well and honestly written. Autobiography is the best of biographies under the same conditions, and a spiritual autobiography is the best of all. Of the latter Bunyan's stands in the front rank.

Let us begin at the beginning, and trace the career of the marvellous dreamer. His own writings supply useful hints, which are supplemented by the valuable "Life" recently published by Mr. Brown, of Bedford. Bunyan was born in 1628. His father was a mender of pots and kettles. The members of the family were not paupers. We are apt, in a vague way, to think the John Bunyan was born in a ditch and brought up in a wood; but that is a misconception. He was born under a roof where generations of his ancestors had lived and died.

One day his father, while poaching in Elstow woods, climbed a tree, and nearly fell down in wonder when he saw what was in a nest. He looked for creatures as black as kettles, but found three rooks as white as snow. Forty years later perhaps the old man remembered, as he read his presentation copy of "Grace Abounding, by the light of his forge fire, what he saw in the wood, and thought it a parable of how God put a white rook into his own black nest. He was not a good man. The ruthless parish records tell that within a month after his wife and daughter died, he had placed another woman at his fireside. Such thoughtless cruelty speaks for itself as to the character of the man, and it had probably much to do with his son's turning his back on home, and going away to the wars.

John was, before this happened, sent to school, where he learned to read and write. The schoolmaster neglected his duties, loved the ale-house, and abused the children under his care. We can scarcely wonder that, with such a home and such a teacher, Bunyan should turn out a blackguard. Yet, in spite of all, he graduated with distinction in the best college. He took a high degree (as an old Puritan puts it) in union to Christ, reliance on the Holy Spirit, and in the temptations of Satan.

Certain lessons worth learning may be gathered from this snatch of biography. The first is: One thing is needful—seek that first. Canon Venables says that he has often wished Bunyan told us more about his soldier life. He is so oblivious to the war that he does not even tell what side he was on. What a priceless treasure to the historian would a diary of a siege or an account of a battle from the pen that wrote "The Holy War" have been! The war of the Commonwealth was of great importance, but Bunyan passes it by. He knew his business, and drove hard at it, when writing "Grace Abounding." There was no room for Charles or even Cromwell in the story of the battle of a soul. Civil and religious liberty were but means to an end, and that end the salvation of the souls of Englishmen. It is a mark of Bunyan's greatness as a man, depth as a divine, and skill as a writer, that he lets nothing interfere with his purpose. Other men may tell of wars; only one man can tell the battle of a soul.

"Grace Abounding" is a kind of forecast of the autobiographies written and sung in the oratorios of the New Jerusalem. Battles and invasions will then have passed away; only their outcome will remain. Out of them—out of great tribulation—the ransomed gather round the throne of God, and sing the praises of the Lamb in whose blood they have been washed whiter than snow. This victory and that battle make up the one thing needful.

A sentence upon Bunyan's father and mother is to be seen in his silence regarding them. He walked softly past his parents, and said nothing of them, because he had nothing good to say. He was not silent about his wife, and found room to speak enough about his minister. That silence should make parents shiver. Father! mother! will your children have to pass upon you the condemning sentence of silence? In Lord Shaftesbury's "Life" we read that his mother neither prayed herself nor taught her son to pray. His "best friend" was the maid who taught him to pray. It would be better for parents that their children were never born than that these children should, in after life, call any but them their best friends. Jesus Christ should be first in the love and reverence of boys and girls, and then father and mother.

The third lesson was very practical, and illustrated admirably Dr. Whyte's fearless way of treating a delicate topic. It was, that if ever the loss which came to Thomas Bunyan's fireside came to any of his hearers, and their wives be removed, they should ask for grace to put the welfare and comfort of the dead woman's children before their own likings. MISSION AT BRADFORD.

An exceptionally successful twelve days' mission has just been concluded at St. John the Evangelist, Bradford, Yorkshire, by Hon. and Rev. Canon F. G. Pelham. Weeks before the mission the vicar, Rev. A. J. Glendinning Nash, held devotional and conversational meetings for counsel in the vicarage room, for the large staff of lay helpers who had been enrolled, consisting of over 140. They visited each family in the respective sub-districts, numbering eighty-six, once a week during the four weeks preceding, and daily during the mission. The large number of 27,400 leaflets and appeals were distributed by the visitors. Canon Pelham held a series of services in the church, and also in the mills and factories in the parish. At some of the services over 1000 of the working classes attended, many of whom had not entered a place of worship for fifteen to twenty years. Canon Pelham preached with power Jesus Christ and Him crucified, and his addresses were full of interest, and were intensely persuasive.

There were many conversions at the after-meetings, which sometimes did not close till 10.30. Many believers were built up in their most holy faith, and many who had gone back in years past were restored. Hon. Mrs. Pelham held services for women only in the mission-house, the school, and the vicarage hall, and hundreds were unable to obtain admission. Rev. C. J. Hamer, vicar of St. John, Bowling, was the missioner for children, and held overflowing services for them in the church and the school, and aroused and sustained their attention throughout. Altogether the mission has been one which enables the missioner and the vicar and the parish, looking back, to raise their Ebenezer, and say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." Every effort will be made to encourage the converts, and all who have been impressed spiritually, by frequent visitation, counsel, prayer, and special services.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.—This Institution, the oldest but one of the various Societies that are working to rescue fallen women, has just issued its seventy-ninth report, from which it appears that during the past year seventy-seven applicants have been received into the Institution, the majority of these being from fifteen to twenty years of age. Six of these, having been reconciled to their friends, have returned home, while thirty-three have been placed out in eligible service. It is most encouraging to state that at least 76 per cent. of those who remain the full term of residence (eighteen months) prove themselves to be fully reclaimed, by not returning to their former life. This Institution annually educates, feeds, clothes, and trains in industrial work about seventy women, who are thus afforded an opportunity for a fresh start in life. Altogether 6100 young women have been benefited since its foundation, whilst more than 3000 have been reclaimed.

STOCKTON CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The following report is not in the style of our usual correspondents, but as no doubt it faithfully portrays the anniversary celebration which it records, we insert it as written, except that we have considerably abbreviated the eulogism on Mrs. Goddard and the children's choir. It is written by one who is not in connection with the Mission:—

On several occasions it has been our good fortune to be present at important meetings held in connection with this typical and successful Mission, and we have always been powerfully impressed with the vigour, earnestness, and enthusiasm displayed by Mrs. Goddard and her devoted adherents in their great soul-winning labours. Blessed are they who spend their lives in saving others!

Here can be seen at any time that sublime patience, that watchful care, that matured wisdom, that tender kindliness of heart, without which continual soul-saving effort is but a disheartening dream. Time has made this lady wise in winning souls.

For six years Mrs. Goddard has been an acknowledged moral and spiritual force in Stockton. One of the most remarkable features of this many-featured Mission is its highly-trained choir of saved children. Under the able leadership of Mr. Hardy it has attained a point of excellency seldom reached by juvenile choirs. Nothing that I have heard or seen is comparable with it. The recent anniversary meetings of the Mission were conducted by Mr. Corbridge, of Sheffield, in his usual happy and practical style. It is impossible to describe the rousing, heart-stirring marches through the crowds that impeded the way. As soon as an opening was made in advance, the surging crowd closed in behind. We have not seen the like of it for many a day. The glory of God was manifested in a marvellous manner in the prayer-meetings. We wish we could picture it. We will try:—

The members were kneeling where they could kneel, and where they could not kneel they stood. Several prayed. Still it was hard. No signs of breaking hearts; no sobs. By and by a shiver ran through the meeting. Now it's coming. Glory! "Ah! here comes a woman!" shouted the Major; "make room for her. Keep believing. Hallelujah! here come three more!" "Glo-o-o-o-o-ory!" gasped an old veteran, down whose aged face the tears thickly rolled.

"Now, this is just what I like," said another, as several more rushed to the penitent-form, amid "Glorys!" "Glory, hallelujahs!" and loud "Amens!" The power of God laid the meeting low; tears fell, songs rose; sinners fell, saints rose; till eighteen rejoiced in the freedom of Christ.

On Monday night, after the tea, at which nearly four hundred sat down, Mr. A. Holmes, a member of the Society of Friends, took the chair, and was supported, on the right hand, by Mr. Grabham (Methodist); and, on the left hand, by Rev. Mr. Windsor (Baptist), and many others We are sorry that want of space prevents our giving the admirable addresses delivered.

CLARE MARKET.

God is greatly owning his work among the suffering poor, carried on at the Stanhope-street Mission Room, in the conversion of souls. We are crowded out in our Sunday-school, with an average attendance of over two hundred children, and our largely attended mission services, preceded by an open-air meeting, and carried on throughout the year.

In connection with the Mission there are mothers' meetings, work among lodging-house men and women, and house-to-house visitation in one of the darkest districts in the Metropolis. We are now obliged to seek larger and more suitable premises where the Mission may be extended. The work is carried on by workers from Exeter Hall, and is under the direction of Mr. Arthur Burson, Evangelistic Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, Strand. W. A. P.

MR. HENRY VARLEY at the CAPE.

My Dear Brother,—I have just returned from a visit to Port Elizabeth, Grahamstown, and Uitenhage, where I have been preaching Christ. One object of my return was to meet the brethren assembled at the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church, now in session in this city, and of which our beloved brother Rev. Andrew Murray is the Moderator. Before referring to the meetings I would tell you something of the results of the weeks of service begun on my arrival from England. For nearly a month, meetings were held in Cape Town, and the whole community became interested in the work.

The large Dutch Church in Adderley-street, which holds nearly 3000 persons, was thronged night after night. Day after day the tides of life poured into the Bible-readings, which were held in the Metropolitan Wesleyan Church at 3.30. I have seldom seen deeper interest excited, the large inquiry-room being literally crowded at almost every service.

Without question, hundreds (so far as we can judge) have "passed from death into life." It has been an intense joy to exalt the Son of God, and we have known a marked fulfilment of that hallowed Scripture, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me."

Sin abounds so terribly, the strongholds of the devil are so manifold, and the deadening influences of a Christless religionism so wide spread, that there was nothing for it but vigorous and well-directed assaults upon the world, the flesh, and the devil, and I regret to add, the so-called Church also.

We have proved that the weapons of our warfare have been mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strongholds, and many are the slain of the Lord who are now alive unto God in Christ Jesus our Lord. The carnal, sensual, and earthly, in hundreds of experiences, has given place to the life of faith upon the Son of God. There is great joy in the city, and no small measure of opposition.

To find the spring races a failure, the theatre audiences greatly diminished, the billiard rooms and wine shops denuded of numbers of their customers, the heart taken out of the frequenters of balls, card parties, &c., and a general restraint induced throughout the community by the meetings—these conditions I need hardly say stirred some of Satan's choice spirits to oppose "this fanatical disturber of the peace." Without question, this ungodly and atheistic opposition has done excellent service, and aroused deep sympathy and far-extending interest.

I have not been slow to point out that results such as we have witnessed are not possible to man; that the power of God alone could bring about the issues which we have seen. For a whole month my beloved fellow-worker, Mr. Hannington, has spent four hours each day (11 to 3) in dealing with anxious souls. Night after night from twenty to sixty persons have confessed Christ, and these amongst all classes of the community.

The fact is I have simply been sent of God in answer to years of supplication. That the Lord of glory has deigned to use me as his servant is only another reason for being eminently careful to walk before Him in the spirit of prayer, humility, and thanksgiving. Surely we have all felt "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy name be glory," and one of my principal reasons for writing is to stimulate prayer and praise amongst many at home.

My absence for four weeks reveals how real the work has been. On every hand I hear how the presentation of the Gospel of Christ—his substitutionary work, his life, death, resurrection, and glory—has proved like unto "springs in the desert." Not in nature only, but in grace we can say of many in this city: "Lo the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, and the time of the singing of birds is come." Though sin abounds, the grace of our God has also abounded. The regal life of the Son of God is now in many redeemed human temples, which have been purchased and cleansed by the blood of God's Holy Son. In this great and blessed result we find lasting cause for praise. Nor this only. It is delightful to hear how many hundreds of believers have been "strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man." The excellency of the life of faith upon the Son of God is now known in increased measure, and the Word of God is found to be both spirit and life.

The great truth of the Lord's Second Coming has aroused deep interest, and the timely arrival of a goodly number of copies of my new book, "Christ's Coming Kingdom," will emphasise my personal testimony. I have had the great pleasure of speaking with a goodly number of the ministers assembled at the Synod, and the joy of placing about forty copies of the volume in their hands. Thus the good work goes on, hastening his coming whose right it is to reign, and whose advent shall bring to an end the long and dark chapter of human iniquity throughout the world. Government in this colony yields but another illustration of man's incompetency and unfitness for rule. Indeed, the disordered earth cries out: O Lord, how long to the end of creation's groaning?

Nov. 8.—This letter which I commenced at Cape Town, I close on board the ss. Melrose, en route for Natal, where at Maritzburg and Durban I go to hold special services. We call at Port Elizabeth, and from that point on our course, I can post in time for the English mail. It is my intention to return to England by Christmas if possible. The great heat of summer in this part of the world unfits for special services.

This morning the scene is lovely in the extreme. We are approaching the land. The heavens above are divinely blue, the sunshine glorious; the air so clear and bright, the sea calm with just a gentle breeze keeping us cool and refreshed, this bright spring day. Oh, how I wish I could import this brightness into London in November. Verily I might make a fortune were this practicable.—Yours sincerely,

Henry Varley.

STUDENTS' MISSIONARY LEAGUE.

The annual meeting of the Students' Missionary League, which is composed of young men belonging to all evangelical denominations, was held in the Pastors' College, Newington, on the evening of Friday week. There were over two hundred students present.

Rev. James A. Spurgeon, as President, having delivered a brief address, Rev. George Brown told a wonderful story of work for the Master in the South Sea Islands. Cannibalism, witchcraft, and heathenism had been, to a great extent, stamped out, and the great bulk of the natives are confirmed and enthusiastic Christians. Rev. R. Wright Hay gave a highly gratifying account of the conquests achieved by the Gospel on the West Coast of Africa. During the brief period of two years that he had laboured in the "dark Continent" fetish methods of worship were becoming entirely disregarded, and hundreds of natives had been gathered within the Christian fold.

Professor Barfield (of Harley House College) gave a short address on "Christian Manliness: its Importance in Missionary Life and Work." Dr. Maxwell, late of Formosa, told how the Temple of Christ was already built on a firm and sound foundation in that country. Dr. Graham, of the Presbyterian College, in a thrilling and vigorous address, specified some of the elements which were necessary to make a young man a successful preacher and a noble standard-bearer of the Cross in heathen lands. Rev. James Douglas also spoke.

RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.—On Monday week a free supper was given here to destitute, unemployed seamen. It was touching to see such a number of respectable-looking men out of work, and so hungry, and grateful for the food. One of the Christian sailors present asked to give five shillings towards the next supper. The suppers will be held through the winter every Monday night, and as often during the week as possible. If any who can help in the Gospel meeting will kindly attend on Mondays, at 7 o'clock, they will be gladly welcomed.

SAILORS' REST, MARSEILLES.

Dear Sir,—The new Home for sailors was opened on November 17. The address is 40, Quai du Port, and any passing through to the South this winter are cordially invited to look in and see for themselves. On the opening day two gatherings were held: the first, of friends and sympathisers, who came together for prayer; the second, of sailors, who, at my invitation, partook of the usual evening repast. It was very cheering to see these, and hear their expressions of gratitude to those who think of them, and seek to provide such a way of escape from the innumerable snares laid for them in that port.

The Home has five stories; the basement is devoted to the dining and reading-rooms and kitchen; the first flat is occupied by the manager and family, and a lady worker, and the remainder is divided off into cheerful rooms, one for each man. Of these there are thirty. The first two lodgers were believers, a good beginning, to be followed, I trust, by many more, and also by many who will be led to the Saviour. A deficiency still exists; will friends kindly remember this need, and enable me to close the year free of all liability? The usual report will, I trust, be issued shortly, giving further details of the progress of the work during the past year.—Yours on behalf of seamen,

Chas. E. Faithfull.

MISS LEIGH'S WORK IN PARIS.

The thirteenth annual report of the work superintended by Miss Leigh in Paris gives strong evidence of its usefulness to large numbers of the English section of that city. During last year there were 388 admissions to the Mission Home. The number of those who obtained situations through the Free Registry was 242; eighty-four were obliged to return to England. The increasing difficulty of English governesses and servants obtaining employment in Paris is emphasised by the fact that whereas there were 3086 seeking situations, only 826 applications were made by employers; this being a diminution of nearly 300 as compared with the previous year. Parents and others will do well to accept the warning which Miss Leigh gives as to the risks run by young women who go to Paris in search of employment.

There have been numerous attendances at the Bible-classes held at the Home, situate at 26, Faubourg St. Honoré, where thirty young women are lodged and boarded, and which is greatly valued as a resting-place on Sundays by many a lonely English girl. The number of admissions to the Orphanage has been twenty-five, making a total of 192, and, while the blessings of the little ones descend on the Baroness Alphonse de Rothschild, for her munificence in presenting the south wing of the Orphanage, the increased love of the children for their Bibles, and the further fact that "several have declared their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour," are matters of great encouragement to the teachers. There is also an Infants' Kindergarten and day-school.

In the Mission hall, which is the centre of a variety of efforts for the temporal and spiritual well-being of the English working classes, many meetings have been held; mothers' meetings, soup kitchen, and other aids are at work for the relief of distress. Temperance work is actively carried on, with good results. The Mission greatly needs pecuniary help.

REGENT'S PARK COLLEGE PREACHING-STATION SOCIETY.—This Society has for fourteen years been doing its quota to provide a sustained ministry in our villages; many churches unable to support a pastor have gladly availed themselves of the services of a student as quasi-pastor. At present there are fifteen such stations connected with the Society, while there is great encouragement from the visits to these village churches, such work is invaluable to those preparing for the ministry.

Letters to the Editor.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me, through your paper, to express my thanks to the kind friends who supply us weekly with the "Notes on Daily Readings," which I, and many others whom I know, find so helpful: often clearing away difficulties, and supplying the key to obscure passages, as well as suggesting noticeable points which might otherwise be overlooked.—Yours faithfully, A Grateful Daily Reader.

THE RAPTURE OF THE CHURCH.

Dear Sir,—I should feel greatly obliged if, through your columns, you would give help as to this question which is just now exercising the minds of many. "When the Lord Jesus comes for his Church—that is, at his second coming, are all that are alive (who are believers) caught up to meet Him, or is it only those who are walking worthy of Him?" There is a distinction being made between the firstfruits and the harvest. See Rev. xiv. And it is said that the consecrated believers are the firstfruits who will be taken away when Christ comes before the tribulation, whereas the unfaithful believers will be left on the earth to be purged by the fires of tribulation, and will be ingathered as the harvest at the end of the seven years.

Does this idea agree with the Scripture in 1 Cor. xv., "Christ, the firstfruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." Seeking light on the subject.—I am, yours faithfully,

Bath. G. E. Thomas.

THE MASSES AND INFIDELITY.

Sir,—My lot has been recently cast in the second city of this empire, there to work as missionary in a large mission district. The population is wholly working class, containing many intelligent and fairly well-to-do artizans and small shopkeepers, together with a good sprinkling of a lower and poorer—often very poor—type. In order to make myself acquainted with my surroundings, I have lately visited nearly six hundred families. What has struck me very particularly about this visiting is that in all my rounds I have never yet met with one avowed sceptic or infidel. In view of the common talk about the ever-spreading infidelity of the working classes, I venture to think that this fact has considerable significance. I have met with people of every denomination, including a large number of Roman Catholics; and I have met with an only too large number who belong to no denomination at all. Of these a few, because of some case or cases of clerical hypocrisy or incapacity, which they believe they have met, or some like reason, profess contempt for the whole genus clergyman.

But the most are just practical atheists, men who give no thought to a higher life at all, and often live a life far lower than the beast. But even the despisers of the clergy, I know, are often diligent readers of their Bibles; and, as for the other class, they seldom have brains enough to be sceptics. At any rate, I have never found a single man who has had the honesty or courage to confess he was such; although, as a student fresh from college, I have been really anxious to find them. I met one man who told me he had two fellow-workmen who were blatant infidels; and another, with whom I had a long chat, was a thorough-going Pelagian, with a penchant for metaphysical arguments, which he scarcely understood himself; but that is all.

I ought to add that I did not see the men in all these said families, and so may have missed some instances who would have supplied the sought-for type. But I can also add that amongst many of the women I have found a simple, trustful piety, amid much discouragement and trial (drunken husbands and starving bairns and dying friends), such as the richer of this world might well envy. Plenty of cant, too, of course.

Trusting that these remarks may interest, and perhaps cheer, some of your readers, I am, yours faithfully, James B. Johnston.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—Much has been said and written on the need of more prayer on behalf of the Lord's work among the heathen. But when shall we see prayer-meetings such as that held at the house of Mary, the mother of John Mark? Heaven will be opened when our homes are placed at the Lord's service, as hers was. Alas! that the latent reason for withholding a drawing-room should be, not infrequently, objection on the part of the servants, or the chance of injury to the carpet! Rhodas would not be wanting if we had more mistresses like Mary.

It was not in the Temple that the Holy Ghost came down and clothed men and women with power, but whilst they waited for Him in the room where the eleven lodged—waiting on the Lord, giving ourselves to prayer, are unknown in the usual prayer-meeting. When shall we receive invitations to spend an evening or an afternoon in prayer at the homes of Christians?

Are there any ladies in different quarters of London who would open their houses for one afternoon or one evening in the week for prayer for foreign missions, to gather together such, if but two or three, who will wait upon God, forget to eat their bread, and "so go in unto the King?"—Yours truly, (Mrs.) M. S. Osborn.

INQUIRY ROOM WORK.

Sir,—In your issue of November 18, "W. G." is, I am afraid, wide of the mark in his suggestions of a remedy for indifferent ministers, and, let me add, other Christians as well, in dealing with anxious souls. I will give my own experience; I fear it will represent that of many others, and explain the secret.

Some years ago I attended revival services, and was living near to Christ at the time. I was asked into a room full of anxious men, women, and young people, and found no difficulty in dealing with them, although comparatively a novice. Some years after I attended other revival services, but, to my shame, not with the same feelings in my own heart. My worldliness and coldness in the cause of Christ made me quite as helpless as a schoolboy. Why? I had the previous experience of success—call it training if you choose—but it did not help me. It only showed more than ever my utter incompetence. I knelt, I prayed, I tried to do them good, but felt I got no nearer any of them. In fact, I felt quite relieved to get away from the anxious ones. I could speak and take part in the platform exercise very well.

If anyone wants to gauge his personal spiritual state, get into the inquiry room, and he or she can soon do it. Not training in college, but close communion with Christ is the remedy for ministers and laymen. Reader.

ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

This most important work of carrying the Gospel to our own countrymen in various parts of India who have to a great extent been hitherto neglected, is making headway, and good tidings concerning it are published in the November report. In Madras, Rev. Isaac F. Row has been wonderfully owned of the Lord in his special work among Europeans and Eurasians, while there have again been showers of blessing on the native church at Trichoar, and the European residents have been moved as they never were before.

The success of Rev. C. W. Christian, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in his work along the South India Railway, has led the directors to prolong the engagement. He tells of nine services on Sundays, and twenty on other days, in addition to travelling and visiting from house to house, and at Calicut, on the west coast, there appear to have been real awakening and hopeful conversions.

In Bengal Rev. H. Rylands Brown has done good service amongst the tea planters of the Darjeeling district, and the drinking habits of the people have been greatly changed. From Bombay, Scinde, and the North-West provinces, good reports have also been received. We cannot but feel the utmost thankfulness that such a work as this amongst our own countrymen scattered throughout our Indian Empire has at last been undertaken and is progressing so satisfactorily.

GOSPEL EFFORT IN ALGERIA.

For some time whilst working among the Arabs, I have visited the prisons, hospitals, and barracks to speak of Christ to the soldiers and to give them (thanks to the kindness of Mrs. Robertson and of the Bible Society) a copy of the New Testament or a Gospel. I have recently been allowed to visit the "Foreign Legion" to give to the soldiers copies of the Scriptures. The "Foreign Legion" are two regiments composed of men of all nations, whose actual headquarters are at Bel Abbés and at Saïda, in the Province of Oran. In this "Legion" there are many deserters or refugees who in barracks are not easy to manage, but who make splendid soldiers when on the march. The military authorities have made it a rule to absolutely shut their eyes to the past life of the recruit, but the past, for all that, is sometimes very dark—criminals, vagabonds, and heroes of mysterious tragedies pass under a false name into the ranks of the Legion. I have met several Englishmen amongst them. As the enlisting of these persons is a sort of moral suicide, I should like to be able to speak to them about the Gospel. One of their number has proposed my holding meetings amongst them and if possible I would willingly do so. Preaching amongst them would not be in vain, for the sympathy which they show me in my visits, and the eagerness with which they listen when I speak of eternal things, show clearly that they are well disposed toward the Gospel. Although the majority of them have had a very dark past, their evil nature bends to the iron hand of discipline in the Legion, and there are times when, if the sweet and gentle sound of the Gospel made itself heard, it would find an echo in their hearts.

In a few days I hope to go into the south to visit the Arab tribes and try to sell the Bible, and to speak of the Gospel with them. I commend my little expedition to your prayers.

I should be very glad to get some tracts in French, Spanish, Arabic, and German. There are over 15,000 soldiers in my district in garrison or on duty. Opportunities for distributing tracts are plentiful, and if it were possible to have some in those languages I could place large numbers of them in good hands. In Algeria tracts are usually received with pleasure; the people read them eagerly, and in places I often visit I am asked for different ones to those I left previously. The Arabs are a very interesting people; when they receive a Bible or a New Testament, they often open the book, and, seeing that it speaks of God, they kiss it with respect, and cry out, "It is like the Koran." There are some generals who oppose the distribution of religious literature amongst the soldiers; but, being French, I can explain my work to them, and, so far, I have been able to obtain what I wanted from them both in the hospitals and the military prison.

I should like to ask if it is possible for some friends to help me towards the journey which I contemplate in the south. Hitherto there has not been a missionary in the desert, and I should like to go from tribe to tribe and spread the Bible by selling it, and also in the custom houses where the natives can read French. These journeys would cost about nine francs a day. Any persons who would interest themselves in this work may send their contributions to Mr. Edward H. Glenny, 21, Linton-road, Barking, London, E. I have lately been about 300 miles into the interior, and have formed an approximate idea of the expenses which are necessary for such an expedition.

Some of the Arabs still remember your visit to Oran. Our natives always remember those who show them sympathy, and are particularly ready in recognising those who are their friends.

There is a good deal of work to be done amongst Europeans also, and we are much in need of a Mission Hall in which to hold services, most of them here being French and Spaniards. We shall be helped if God thinks well, and we pray every day that his glory may shine through Algeria.

Oran, Algeria. G. Mercadier.

A ROBBER'S CONVERSION.

[The following striking incident was sent by Colonel Paschkoff, a Russian exile, to the Secretary of the Open-air Mission, by whom it has been forwarded to us for publication.]

Some years ago a servant of the Lord, who had laboured at St. Petersburg as a Baptist preacher, married a young girl who had lately been converted, and who, immediately after she knew Jesus as her Saviour, had begun to go about telling people of his love. Both were greatly blessed of the Lord, and they decided to go to Bulgaria, which was just then newly emancipated from Turkish yoke. He settled with her at Rustchuk, on the Danube, and from there took missionary journeys throughout Bulgaria, meeting often with great opposition and danger, but also finding at other times a willing audience.

Once, upon coming into the town of Bazardyik, he was preaching in the open air, and a group of people had gathered round him. A robber who for years, with a band of vagabonds and ruffians, had made himself the terror of the province by his daring acts of robbery, plunder, and murder, happened to pass the spot where the preacher was telling the people about Jesus' love to sinners. He was arrested by the sound of words so new to him, and went on listening to the story of the Cross, unable to tear himself away. The impression made upon his mind was so deep that he immediately procured a Bible and set himself to study it.

Having heard that the meeting was to take place again the following day, he once more came, and stayed on to the end of the meeting, touched to the heart on hearing the wonderful story of the Son of God dying and giving Himself up for the sins of his enemies. The preacher spoke of the new birth, without which no man can see the kingdom of God. The Spirit breatheth where it listeth. So it was in his case, for he felt, as he told it afterwards, like a fire passing through his being, and felt himself become a new creature. He disbanded his followers and took to selling milk about the streets of the town, getting something like fivepence or sixpence a day for his pains; speaking all the time of his newly-found Saviour with such a power that the whole town was stirred up.

His gratitude to the man who, by the Lord's grace, had become the instrument of his conversion, was so great that he came to Rustchuk and entreated him to be allowed to serve both him and his young wife. As the missionary journeys of the former took him away from his home for weeks at a time, his wife remained quite alone in the house. This man, formerly the terror of all who approached him, served her all the time in her loneliness with the tenderness of the most devoted woman.

VICTORIA HIGH SCHOOL, POONA.—This school, for natives as well as Europeans, was founded ten years ago by Mrs. Sorabji and her daughters, and is conducted on a Christian basis. It is now much desired that suitable buildings should be erected for carrying on the work, and the project is endorsed by the Committee of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, W.C. One Parsee gentleman offered Mrs. Sorabji 10,000 rupees, and another 5,000, on condition that she would not teach Christianity in her schools; the offers, of course, were declined.

CENTRAL HALL, SWINDON.—An occasional visitor to this branch of the Evangelistic Mission writes:—"A thoroughly good work appears to be still going on. It did one's heart good, on going into the vestry before the service, to find it packed with working men, on their knees, thanking God for blessing vouchsafed on previous occasions, and supplicating for 'more to follow.' A goodly number also remained for prayer after the service. A smaller hall in another part of the town is utilised for Bible-readings on Sunday afternoon, and Gospel preaching in the evening. An earnest band of workers also carry the glad tidings to companies of poor people gathered in cottages in several neighbouring villages."

MISSION IN SHROPSHIRE.

A most successful five weeks' mission, extending from October 17 to November 22, has been held in connection with the co-pastorates of the Congregational churches at Church Stretton and Dorrington, Salop, conducted by Mr. J. Denman, of the Evangelisation Society, London. The first two weeks' services were held at Church Stretton, in the newly-restored Congregational Church there. As Mr. Denman presented the truth in loving, earnest, but practical addresses, he was heard with marked attention by large congregations. His work has had most beneficial results, not only in securing new converts, but in strengthening former ones.

At Dorrington the results were even more encouraging, crowds coming nightly, and from great distances, to the meetings, which were very signally successful. On the closing night of the mission the chapel was packed, and Mr. Denman's parting address was most solemn. Meetings have continued to be held since in the chapel and adjoining villages, conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. K. Lewis, assisted by the ministers from Shrewsbury, and others.

Mr. Denman was heartily welcomed back to Church Stretton, and continued to have good congregations till the end of the mission, which was closed with very great regret, and a generally expressed hope that Mr. Denman will again visit the neighbourhood.

THE McCHEYNE JUBILEE.

Sabbath week will be long remembered in Dundee as a day of blessing and spiritual stimulus. Special services were held in Free St. Peter's to commemorate the opening of the church fifty years ago, and the ordination of Rev. Robert Murray McCheyne as the first minister of the congregation. The service in the forenoon was conducted by Dr. Andrew Bonar, Glasgow, and that in the afternoon by Dr. Robert Macdonald, North Leith. Both of the preachers were intimately associated with the work of the lamented divine, so their words had peculiar force and significance. Dr. Bonar, at the close of a singularly impressive sermon, spoke of Mr. McCheyne's brief ministry of seven years. He felt it hard to realise that forty-three years had passed since his friend had entered within the veil. A beautiful picture was drawn of the departed minister, looking down from the battlements of heaven on his old companions, and wondering at the unbelieving coolness of their zeal. His voice seemed to cry to them to waken from sleep, and work hard. The work he did, and the memory he left behind, were an eloquent reminder to them of their duty to preach in season and out of season, for multitudes are perishing at our side, and he that winneth souls is wise.

In the afternoon, Dr Macdonald delivered a sermon which will not be soon forgotten. Full of spiritual insight and holy unction, it touched the hearers deeply, now moving them almost to tears, and again raising them to heights of Christian exultation.

A public meeting was held in the evening in the church. Every pew was crowded. Rev. John Jenkins, pastor of the congregation, spoke first. The light kindled by McCheyne, he said, continues to burn. The Church of Christ was never more active or successful than in our day, and she never had such a band of willing, earnest, and devoted workers. Addresses by Rev. Drs. Bonar and Macdonald, and Rev. A. H. Reid, of the McCheyne Memorial Church, closed the services of a red-letter day in the evangelical history of Dundee.

If our religion does not ring with joy and gladness, we may be sure it is not the current coin of the kingdom of heaven, but a miserable counterfeit minted in the mint of error.—Rev. W. J. Mathams.

SUPPING WITH THIEVES.

This annual event, always one of peculiar interest, took place on Thursday evening last, in the chapel of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane. An electric light at either end of the street dispelled all darkness, and suggested the reflection that if more money were spent in the better lighting of back streets, this of itself might be of some use in lessening crime.

Over two hundred men were entertained at supper, this being a substantial meal of meat, bread, cake, and coffee. For the most part, though, of course, there were exceptions, they had not the prison stamp on their faces, or in their bearing. About half the number were thoroughly reformed characters, holding good situations, in many cases of trust and responsibility, while the others had but recently been discharged from prison. A little book, "Tested," that was largely circulated, gives good evidence of the severity of the test which these men are exposed to, and it is also an evidence of the value of the work which now, for many years past, the St. Giles's Christian Mission has done amongst discharged prisoners.

There was a large attendance of those interested in this particular phase of Mission work. The report, read by Mr. George Hatton, drew special attention to the striking decrease of crime throughout the country. It says much for the energy and tact of this Society, that during the year ending March last seven hundred and thirteen convicts, with gratuities amounting to over £3000, committed themselves to its care. Out of a total of over 20,000 prisoners discharged during the same period, more than 14,000 accepted the Society's invitation to breakfast, and nearly 5000 signed the temperance pledge; nearly 6000 were helped by the Mission in various ways. It was also noted that during the past three months fifty-six lads have been handed over by judges and magistrates to the care of the Mission, and thus in most cases a conviction has been prevented. The report closed with a suggestion that, as in the United States, so here, there should be what is known as a "Prisoners' Sunday," on which day from the various pulpits the duty of Christian people towards the criminal classes, both in and out of prison, is enforced. Mr. Hatton stated that the Society was in need of £1000 to meet pressing liabilities, and that £100 had been promised by one friend; a further sum of £150, we understand, was handed in during the evening.

The Lord Mayor, who presided, in addressing the meeting, reminded the men, by the illustration of John Newton, who, from being, as stated in the epitaph written by himself, "the vilest of sinners, a slave among slaves," yet became one of the greatest of God's servants, that they also might shine in their several spheres if true to themselves and to God.

Mr. Wheatley read extracts from letters he had received from the men or their friends describing the benefits experienced through the Mission, and the gratitude they felt. Referring to one case he remarked that, as a rule, the police did everything in their power to help the work. He strongly advised the men earnestly to seek employment, and to stick to it.

Sir William Charley (Common Serjeant) bore testimony to the assistance that the St. Giles's Mission is to magistrates and others. Though it might seem a difficult thing to assist the criminal, and yet not encourage crime, this end had been attained through its operations; and, from what had come under his notice, he believed that those who were deserving of sympathy would always receive it. Mr. Monro (Assistant Commissioner of Police) spoke of the anxiety of the police authorities to assist the Society; and Colonel Howard Vincent, M.P., said their work was part of that which Howard initiated. Mr. F. A. Bevan urged the men to seek the approbation of their own conscience, to abstain from intoxicating drink, and, above all, to put themselves in God's keeping; for then, by his grace, they would be able to stand firm against all temptation.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next portrait and sketch will be those of Miss Agnes E. Weston, of Devonport.

Many friends may be glad to know that Dr. H. Grattan Guinness is expected to reach London this week. His closing missions at the Antipodes were seasons of much blessing.

We have more than once mentioned the pamphlet "A Century of Missions, and the Increase of Heathenism during the Hundred Years," by Rev. James Johnston, F.S.S. We are glad to find that it is now to be obtained of the publishers, Messrs. Nisbet & Co., at 1s. per dozen (1s. 6d. post free) 10s. per 100 free, for distribution, and we hope this will lead to its wide circulation.

Our readers will learn with profound and sympathetic regret of the partial destruction by fire of Mr. Moody's church in Chicago. We do not know at present how far the damage is covered by insurance, but we doubt not the friends of the evangelist in the city will hasten to make good whatever loss he may ultimately sustain.

The members of the London Congregational Union came last week to a resolution to hold a series of devotional meetings in London after the model of the successful Conference of Ministers at Hastings. They are to be held for two days of next week, and to be followed by a meeting to consider the best means for ameliorating the condition of the poor.

Rev. J. T. Wrenford, St. Paul's, Newport, Mon., author of "All for Jesus," &c.; Rev. E. Young, Annan; Mr. J. M. Scroggie, Mr. Robert Nelson, Malvern, and others, write to us intensely sympathising with all that Rev. H. W. Williamson, of Belfast, has said in his letter and article on "Prayer more than Conference our Present Need." There is no question that this is, beyond all else, the Church's need. The prayers of Jehoshaphat, Daniel, Ezra, and Nehemiah, and the results which followed, proved that the beginning of every blessing consists in prayer. The Church of God, in Old or New Testament days, was never blessed with a revival but in answer to humiliation, confession, praise, and prayer. Very small gatherings for real prayer would bring down far greater blessing than great assemblies to hear addresses. We trust the first week of 1887 will be in reality a Week of Prayer.

A prayer meeting, attended by nearly sixty undergraduates at 6.45 a.m. on a Sunday morning, is a new feature of Cambridge University life, and one which augurs well for the coming generation of England's manhood. A special season of prayer for foreign missionary work was also observed during the past week.

We are glad to see that some of the undergraduates of Cambridge have undertaken the support of a Home for female penitents. The entire management is in the hands of a ladies' committee, the undergraduates only providing the funds. We greatly hope that the undergraduates will take the matter up warmly, and not allow the burden of this excellent scheme to rest upon the shoulders of a well-intentioned few.

We feel constrained to give the greatest possible prominence to the following note received last week :—

> Many of the better class of fallen girls have come to me lately, desiring to leave their life of sin and get employment. We had to send two away to-day for want of means.
>
> MARCUS RAINSFORD, JUN.
> 9, Fairmead-road, Holloway, N.

Dr. F. C. Coley, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, sends a communication strongly advocating the closing of all places licensed for the sale of liquor, at 9 p.m. in cities and large towns, and at 8.30 in the country districts. He draws attention to the fact that most of the damage done, in so many ways, through these places, is brought about in the late hours of the evening. On the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread, we would gladly welcome such a restriction of the hours of the sale of intoxicants, and wish every success to Mr. Coley's proposal.

It surely marks a distinct advance in the public appreciation of the temperance reform, when a magazine like The Nineteenth Century admits a strenuous plea for the suppression of the liquor traffic, by the arch agitator, Sir Wilfrid Lawson. The worthy baronet is witty, as everybody knows, but we think he is wise as well. The logic of this brief paper will be hard to refute. We may quote his closing sentences, as containing the gist of the whole :—

> Given the same kind of human beings, the same kind of drink, and the same amount of temptation, I can see nothing for it but that the same results will follow. Suppose we try the New Testament plan, and, as we pray that we may not ourselves be led into temptation, let us cease to lead others into temptation. If anybody has a scheme to suggest, which has not been tried and failed, in regard to licensing the sale of strong drink, now is the time to produce it. If it cannot be produced, then let the people be permitted to try a plan which, when fairly tried, has never failed, and so make at least one more effort towards the soberising of England.

It is an advantage to have, in the same periodical, a statesman's view of our Indian Empire. Sir William Gregory, in a singularly able article, says that during the last ten years the progress of thought in India has been enormous, and that the people are rising to nobler ideas, and to the levelof Europe an civilisation. There are profound quiet and absolute security, from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin, instead of the old treachery, spoliation, and miseries. "Surely," says the article, "this is essentially God's work." The writer affirms also that while Brahminism tries to hold its spiritual domination, and Hindu papers are often abusive, the Mohammedans abstain from such a tone, and are loyal to the English rule. This is valuable information, when it is remembered that the backbone of the last mutiny was Mohammedan.

Another valuable paper in the same monthly states that in Wiltshire there are, detached from cottages, 22,071 allotments of land for the poor. Of these, 800 are on the estate of the Marquis of Lansdowne. Those in possession of the latter allotments have flourished in a remarkable manner. During the late severe agricultural depression they have paid rents which the farm tenants have found themselves unable to meet.

The Speaker of the House of Commons spoke recently at Leamington in very warm terms of Bishop Hannington, who was "as great a hero as ever fell on a battle-field." While we cannot endorse all the Speaker's eulogies of the S.P.G., we nevertheless rejoice at the increasing interest in missionary enterprise evinced in upper circles.

A great mistake is frequently made by estimating the intensity of poverty merely from statistics of pauperism. Nothing can be more deceptive than such a calculation. Those who are old enough to remember the terrible period of the Lancashire cotton famine, and who had any practical experience of the condition of matters in that county, will easily call to mind the invincible repugnance which almost all the respectable workpeople had against parish relief, and that many died of starvation rather than consent to be recorded as paupers. It is this noble independence in penury which is so difficult to deal with upon the ordinary lines of legal or professional charity. The mechanical administration of relief only too frequently chokes and suppresses the voluntary; and, because we have a Poor Law, many people feel justified in abstaining from anything like active participation in the application of charity.

Good may be done without either costly machinery or splendid munificence, and the Divine blessing is, not so much for him who giveth to, as for him who considereth the poor. It should never be forgotten that frequently the most deserving are those who to beg are ashamed, and who, therefore, require to be sought out in their penury and silent solitude.

An article in the current issue of The Herald of Peace suggests that "laymen" who are earnest friends of the principles of peace should embrace every opportunity of speaking on the subject from pulpits that are open to them, as well as on platforms. The suggestion rather implies that the customary occupants of pulpits are remiss in their duty in this matter; we hope that is not so to any large extent. If the principles of peace are not taught by the professed ambassadors of the Prince of Peace, where are we likely to find them?

It is stated that the spiritual needs of the British troops now serving in Burmah have, in an unaccountable manner, been almost entirely overlooked, there being but one chaplain with the forces, which consist of nearly seven thousand men, exposed not only to the dangers of war, but to the additional risk of exposure to an unhealthy climate.

An Indian paper, The Rangoon Church News, remarks that with General Prendergast's forces, two chaplains, one Wesleyan minister, and two Roman Catholic priests were sent, but that the Wesleyan withdrew, and one chaplain was withdrawn, so that for nearly a year, and during a period of exceptional sickness, with many of the hospitals filled, the sick and dying have been confided to the spiritual care of one man. The same journal adds that many Indian stations are without chaplains, "the tendency of late being to reduce the establishment," and that "the Bishop of Lahore is unable to provide for the large numbers of Christian soldiers and others now employed on the western borders of his diocese."

Nineteen Beautiful Years:

The Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.

BY

FRANCES E. WILLARD,

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER, and a Prefatory Note by the Poet,
JOHN G. WHITTIER.

From the Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER.

"'Nineteen Beautiful Years' is the sisterly tribute which Frances. in tears and loneliness, brings to lay on Mary's grave—a tribute as full of fragrance and touching beauty as the life whose memory it seeks to perpetuate was full of sweetness and innocence.

"It is more than a tribute: it is the fulfilment of a solemn commission breathed from the lips of the dying —a commission that might have adorned the lips of Jesus in the hour of His agony: 'Tell everybody to be good!'

"In this way the one whom she most loved—if a sister's can exceed a mother's love—the one to whom she was most dear, seeks to discharge the dying trust. How faithfully. how transcendently she has performed this duty, you have only to read to ascertain."

From the Preface by JOHN G. WHITTIER.

"The impression made upon me by the first perusal of this little book has not been weakened by the lapse of time. It seems to me now, as it did then, a very sweet and tender record of the exceptionally beautiful life of a young woman whose rare natural gifts and graces were sanctified by a deep—but cheerful and healthful—religious experience; free from cant, affectation, or bigotry.

"The story is told by her sister, Frances E. Willard, so widely known and honoured for her work of Christian philanthropy. It is a charming piece of biography."

The LEGEND of the ROMAN SOLDIER.
"FALLEN ASLEEP!"

From the PREFACE.

This little volume may, I hope, awaken in some minds thoughts of a devotional character. Some of the ideas contained in it came to me in a chamber of sickness, which was at one time expected to be my chamber of death. The thoughts were pleasant and soothing to myself. May they, by God's blessing, be so also to some of my fellow-pilgrims.

THE PAPACY:

Its Position, Policy, and Prospects.

BY

REV. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.,

Author of "History of Protestantism;" "The Papacy; Its History, Dogmas, Genius, and Prospects;" "Egypt and its Future, &c."

Reprinted from "The Christian" of September 30. Revised and extended. Printed in LARGE TYPE.

"The most ominous part of this business is the changes which have been effected in our Statute Book. The whole legislation of the past five hundred years has been diligently searched; and not an Act or Statute which could offer the smallest hindrance to the advance of Popery to place and power in the State, but has been weeded out and swept away, or greatly modified. Upwards of forty Statutes of this character have been repealed. All the securities embodied in the Emancipation Act of 1829, with two exceptions (the Irish Viceroyalty, and the English Woolsack), have been abolished. All the securities in the Revolution Settlement, with one exception, have been swept away. All offices under the Crown, with the two exceptions just mentioned, are now open to Romanists. The oath of the Royal Supremacy has been swept away. The Act of Settlement alone is left, the one barrier between us and a Popish reign. If that solitary Act were to share the fate of the others, we should speedily see a vassal of the Pope on the throne of Britain."—Extract.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY

(Formerly of 85, Queen Street, Cheapside),

79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, E.C.

The cry of the weak and helpless is at all times distressing; but this is specially so when, in the absence of the needed PROMPT help, the fall is IRRETRIEVABLE and often ETERNAL.

OUR NEED IS GREAT AND PRESSING.

The winter is now upon us, when many who are out in the streets, COLD, SAD, SORROWFUL, DESPAIRING, yet sinning, will seek our aid—each one SOMEBODY'S CHILD—one of the lost whom the Saviour seeks.

508 young women and girls have this year been in our Homes for a few months' training, and have been lovingly and earnestly pointed to the Friend of Sinners, and a life of happiness and virtue; while several HUNDREDS of other applicants have been reluctantly REFUSED admission.

PRAY HELP US TO HELP THE WEAK.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott will kindly receive contributions as usual; or they will be gratefully acknowledged, the day of receipt, if sent to Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, 79, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

IMPORTANT CONDITIONAL GIFT.

To the Readers of "The Christian."

Dear Friends,—During the past twelve months the number of applications from men and boys has very much increased, largely owing, no doubt, to the world-wide publicity of the operations of the Mission.

Within the last three months no less than fifty-six lads of tender age have been handed over to our care by various judges and magistrates. Consequent upon this pressure is our present low financial condition. We deeply regret that at this moment we are quite £1000 behindhand, which we are most anxious to obtain at once to clear off pressing liabilities. We have just received from a friend of the Mission a generous offer of £100 towards clearing off this debt provided that nine others will do the same by the 31st December.

Donations towards the accomplishment of this desirable object should be sent to the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street; or to

Yours sincerely,

GEO. HATTON,

Supt., St. Giles' Christian Mission.

Mission and other Appeals.

MR. CHARLES GULL, of the Shacklewell Gospel Mission (Winchester-place, High-street, Kingsland), asks for subscriptions in liquidation of a debt, and for prayer for the winter's work.

REV. HENRY CONSTABLE, Chaplain to the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park, asks for periodicals or other literature of a wholesome and cheerful nature for the patients in his hospital. Parcels should be prepaid.

DARTMOOR MISSION.—Sir Massey Lopes has generously given a piece of ground for a mission room, and the building is being erected. Funds are still very insufficient to complete. Contributions may be sent to Lieut.-Col. Plummer, Princetown, Devon.

MRS. MEREDITH (145, Clapham-road, S.W.) appeals for aid in carrying on the work of the Medical Mission and Village Homes at Addlestone. These Homes are full of little ones, and altogether there are 400 women and children to be provided for in the various households in town and country.

NEATH.—£40 is urgently required to enable a very important mission work to be continued at a mission house, conducted by the Neath Y.M.C.A., in the centre of an Irish population in an exceedingly poor and much neglected part of Neath called "The Green." The Treasurer is Mr. T. Williams, solicitor, Neath, South Wales.

SHETLAND.—DEAR SIR,—Would any of your numerous readers, interested in aggressive evangelistic work, especially in this isolated and distant part of the Master's vineyard, send me, for young people chiefly, interesting, cheerful, and profitable books, for lending and for distribution during the winter? Tracts and periodicals are hardly what is required for this special object.

Faithfully yours, WILLIAM FALCONER.

U. P. Manse, Scalloway.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, December 4, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan & Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, at G.P.O.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row.

By a somewhat remarkable coincidence we have received the two following letters, written within two days of each other. The first is from a clergyman, the second from a gentleman of whose denominational position we are not aware; the significant circumstance is that the opinion which he quotes is that of a Romish dignitary:—

I.

> The state of the Church of England at this time is simply appalling. It is saturated with Popery, and leavened with worldliness. Of course I know there are exceptions, but as I tell you, the general condition of the Church of England is appalling. For the most part it is being used as a mighty instrument for the perversion of the nation to Popery. "O Lord! undertake for us."

II.

> I ask you duly to weigh words of deep importance which I heard the other day from a highly-educated man, who has for many years been a high dignitary of the Romish Church, and spending much of his time at the Vatican. They were these:—"It is to the Nonconformists of England that the Church of Rome owes her position and the spread of her power in the country at the present time. They are a vast body, and they wield a mighty influence, which, if directed against the onward march of the Papacy, would have formed a barrier not to be overcome; instead of which the 'Liberal' spirit which pervades the whole mass has not only caused them to withhold opposition, but has blindly led them to give us the right hand of fellowship!"
>
> I had, by personal experience, known this for years, but yet I must own that hearing such a statement from the lips of such a man took my breath away! I tell you this, not for you to publish, or even quote from, this letter, but to use your influence in stirring up our Nonconformist brethren to searchings of heart and repentance towards God. There is solemn warning, not inapplicable now, in Judges v. 23.

Our correspondent does not forbid the publication of his letter. The former one would lose more than half its significance if the latter one were withheld. And we know no better way of fulfilling the wish of the writer than by giving our readers the benefit of the Romanist dignitary's view.

We give below a list of the leading subjects and speakers at the important Conference to be held in Glasgow next week. As will be seen, the topics are all of practical and living interest. We believe the best, and indeed the only effectual method of coping with the insidious encroachments of Popery is to let the masses of the people thoroughly understand the course of its past history, and the real nature and bearing of its authoritative tenets. This desirable end will be greatly helped, we feel sure, by the utterances at the Conference:—

CONVENTION IN GLASGOW, DECEMBER 14—16.

Tuesday, Dec. 14.—Receptional Conversazione, Christian Institute, 7 p.m., Mr. William C. Maughan, J.P., in the chair. Brief addresses by various gentlemen.

Wednesday, Dec. 15.—Christian Institute. Noon.

"Romish Ascendency v. British Ascendency," by Rev. C. A. Salmond.

"Popery in the South Seas," by Rev. John Inglis, D.D., New Hebrides.

"The Jesuits and Social Morality," Mr. A. H. Guinness.

"The Educational Policy of the Papacy," by Rev. James Kerr.

"Romish Organisation in Scotland," by Rev. D. M. Connor.

"British Legislative Concessions to the Papacy,' by Rev. James Paton.

Wednesday Evening.—Christian Institute. 7 p.m.

"Modern Romanism: Anti-Christian and Idolatrous," by Rev. J. A. Wylie, LL.D.

"Papal Infallibility—Œcumenical Council of 1870," by Rev. Verner M. White, LL.D.

"The Romanising Movement in the Church of England," by Rev. Canon Taylor.

Thursday, Dec. 16.—Christian Institute. 11.30 a.m.

"Mission Work among Roman Catholics," by Rev. Hamilton Magee, Dublin.

"The Sensuous Worship of the Church of Rome," by Mr. W. C. Maughan, J.P.

"Duties of the Present Time," by Rev. W. Barras.

Open Conference on "What Practical Measures should be adopted to Arrest the Aggressions of the Papacy in Britain?" 1.50 p.m.

Public meeting, City Hall, 7.30 p.m., Mr. James A. Campbell, M.P., in the chair. Among the expected speakers are Lord Robert Montagu, Rev. Peter Leys, and others.

The conveners have established a special fund to meet the large expenses that must necessarily be incurred in connection with the proceedings. One lady has spontaneously offered £100 towards this object. As we stated last week, the honorary secretary of the Conference is Rev. James Kerr, 53, Dixon-avenue, Crosshill, Glasgow. We purpose, in our issue of December 23, to furnish our readers with a Double Number, containing a full and special report of the Conference.

For nearly a quarter of a century now Parliament has been trifling with the question of the condition of the homes of our agricultural labourers, and matters in many districts still remain about as unsatisfactory as they well can be. Putting aside altogether the question of the wages of the farm labourer, though that of course has a very powerful bearing upon the subject of his housing, it is impossible to look at the condition of the urban population without a feeling of deep shame and grave anxiety. That there should be much intemperance in the rural districts and a frightful amount of immorality is not to be wondered at, when so many of the cottages are mere hovels, "deficient," as the late Bishop of Manchester once said, "in almost every requisite that should constitute a home for a Christian family in a civilised community."

Rev. Charles W. Stubbs, whose long experience of country parishes qualifies him to deal ably with the subject, has somewhat recently stated that in one of the villages under his spiritual charge, out of fifty cottages only four could, "in any sense," be deemed satisfactory. Some of the "homes" consisted of two rooms eight feet square by from six to nine feet high, and seventeen of them had only one bedroom each. Other details are almost too painful to be quoted. Is it to be wondered at, that Mr. Stubbs asks a very pertinent question?

> How, in face of such purely material obstacles as these could the distinctively home virtues find any room for growth—parental love, filial obedience, household thrift, cleanliness, modesty, chastity, self-respect, purity, and simplicity of heart?

When, therefore, we refer to the unsatisfactory condition of a great portion of our rural population, it will, perhaps, be well to ask ourselves, can we do anything in the direction of giving the unfortunate people who dwell amid such surroundings a better starting-point. We have had many societies with noble objects; an association for the abolition of the "one room" family dwelling would not be in any sense less worthy than the best of those which have had for their motive the amelioration of suffering and the conquest of sin.

A correspondent sends this very practical suggestion:—

> The daily papers are now crowded with applications from governesses seeking holiday engagements. Would it not, at this season of the year, be a Christlike thing for our Christian households to offer a temporary home to these hard workers, many of whom are sorely straitened?

Dr. Alexander has told how "George Eliot" was persuaded to undertake the translation of Strauss. Soon becoming Strauss-sick, as she termed it, with dissecting the story of the Cross, she fell back for a while upon "the Christ image," the picture or carving of the crucifixion, and then came "the reconciliation of feeling and reason" as the sad eyes gazed upon her; and she then went on to argue that the soul of Christianity was not in the facts of an individual life, but in the ideas of which that life was the starting-point and meeting-point. "There is," she said, "and can be, no satisfactory basis for the history of the man, but that negation does not affect the idea," and thus, says the Bishop of Derry, "the principle was laid down that an æsthetic or ideal representation need have no basis in fact, and is spiritually as effective as if it had." With what solemnity after this comes the inspired utterance: "Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father."

"I WAS AN HUNGERED, AND YE GAVE ME MEAT."

As we stated last week, many friends throughout London are making provision for meeting, to some extent, the prevailing and growing distress.

Mr. W. J. Orsman (Costers' Hall, 242, Hoxton-street, N.) has framed a large programme of relief in that needy neighbourhood. We hope he may be enabled to carry it out to the letter.

Mr. Benjamin Clarke (Hampden House, Crouch-end, N.) is strong in penny dinners, but there are many cases where even that popular coin is not forthcoming. Let the pennies flow into Mr. Clarke's treasury (more valuable coins are not rejected), and he will see to it that the dinners go out where such creature comforts are most needed.

The following workers among the poor also call loudly for help:—

Mr. G. Fuller, 1, Follett-street, Poplar, E.
Mrs. Noble, 134, Hoxton-street, London, N.
Rev. Brewin Grant, St. Paul's, Bethnal Green, E.
Mr. Joseph Overton, 12, Colfin-road, Victoria Docks, E.

YOUNG WOMEN IN WEST BRIGHTON.—There are now upwards of two hundred and sixty members of the Y.W.C. Institute here. At this Institute will be found, in addition to the classes and Bible readings, &c., all the comforts of a seaside home for young women engaged in business, and Christian workers desiring rest and change. Apply to Mrs. Congreve, Hon. Sec., 1, Third-avenue, Brighton.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE.—Mr. Hutchinson, of Melbourne, writes, on October 29:—"You will be glad to know that William Noble and his son are busy at work with us; but, in consequence of a cablegram, Mr. Noble is to leave for England, viâ America, early in December. The meetings have been large and enthusiastic, but attended by too many total abstainers. We want those who are not, to hear our visitors."

POLYGAMY AMONG CONVERTED HEATHEN.—This subject has been much considered recently. On the day of intercession for foreign missions a women's meeting was held at the Clapham Conference Hall. The ladies present united in fervent petition that the Lord would utterly banish polygamy from the Christian Churches in India, Africa, and all places where Christian converts are still living in consonance with this custom. Prayer was specially made on behalf of any missionaries who do not feel it their duty to instruct the converts clearly on this point.

REV. W. HASLAM AT LEEDS.

Rev. William Haslam conducted a mission from November 20 to 30, in St. Stephen's parish, Beermantofts, Leeds, a very poor and populous parish, the vicar of which is Rev. Edward Osborne Williams. Much prayerful preparation was made for weeks before the mission commenced. Besides meetings for prayer and work, held at the vicarage twice every week, smaller meetings were held each week in the different houses. God was honoured all through the preparation, and He manifested his power in a wonderful manner. A band of forty to fifty Christian district visitors visited the whole parish, of some 6000 souls, once every week, and during the mission week every day, leaving special tracts bearing on the mission.

About 15,000 tracts were specially printed; and, in addition to these, some 12,000 tracts and books were distributed. On Saturday evening a praise-meeting was held in St. Agnes' schoolroom, kindly lent by Rev. W. H. Stansfield, at which meeting many testified to great blessing received.

Mr. Haslam announced at the opening service that his chief object was to wake up Christians who were living far below their privileges. Too many believers are satisfied with knowing their sins are forgiven, and never realise that God has made them, and redeemed them, for his glory; and they are content to live on in that selfish state while souls around them are perishing. Thank God, there is reason to believe that many of his children have been aroused to see what a selfish life they have been living, and have yielded themselves to the Lord as never before. Mr. Haslam, in the morning addresses, began at the very foundation; and from passages in Romans iv., v., vi., vii., viii., and xii. led his hearers on, step by step, from pardon and the robe of righteousness, to a full consecration and surrender of all to a living Christ. Much precious light was thrown upon the words "Abide in me," i.e. perfect safety and keeping from sin; and "I in you," i.e., power for service.

The last three mornings of the mission, the preacher took the subject of the Second Advent. The morning addresses were, to many believers, the richest feast they had ever had. The evening services were well attended, and a very large number of men were attracted from all parts of the town; the after-meetings were large. A second praise-meeting was held, after the mission preacher had left, on Wednesday evening, December 1, in St. Stephen's School-room, at which about forty testified to having received definite blessing. Of these most had been believers for years, and had been led to take a definite step forwards, trusting the Risen Christ to lead and keep them.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS AT SOUTH SHIELDS.

A most successful mission has been conducted in this place by Mr. Charles Inglis. Many hundreds have been drawn together to hear his thrilling appeals. The evangelist related striking incidents gathered in his extensive evangelistic experience. The results of the meetings in the inquiry-room have been such as greatly to encourage the evangelist and the workers. A good number have gone away rejoicing in a new-found Saviour.

Christians of nearly all denominations in the town have been working in these meetings. The afternoon Bible-readings have been well attended, and have proved times of great instruction and refreshing from the Lord's presence. Altogether we have much to praise God for in connection with the interest manifested in the meetings, and pray Godspeed to our brother. E. M.

Well may we laugh at the claims of long descent if God be our Father and Christ our Brother. We belong to a royal race, all-powerful and eternal. Every man of us is an uncrowned king, but our coronation day is coming fast. God speed the time!—Rev. W. J. Mathams.

GOOD NEWS FROM NORTH AFRICA.

Our dear friend, Rev. E. F. Baldwin, with his family and fellow-workers, who represent the Kabyle Mission in Morocco, writes that the first Mohammedan convert of the Mission is a Moorish woman, who has received the Gospel in saving power from Miss Herdman and Miss Caley, who went to Arzila some months ago, and have resided there until now. Her daughter, and also two lads, appear likewise to have yielded themselves to the Lord.

About the same time, at Tangier, an aged man, called El Hajj (the pilgrim), because he had made the pilgrimage to Mecca, evidently received the truth of salvation through the blood of Jesus, and came daily, saying, "Do read me a little more about my Lord Jesus."

In addition to these, and still more remarkable, is the conversion of a bright and zealous young convert, El Hasan, who was first seen by Mr. Baldwin on a journey between Tangier and Tetuan. He is of one of the "best families" in Morocco. He is sure there are many devout ones, as he was (like Cornelius, as he himself said), who will quickly receive Christ, if instructed. El Hasan has confessed Christ to the danger of his life. We commend him, and the enterprising young Mission of which he is one of the first fruits, to the sympathy and prayer of all Christians. El Hasan has now gone to Fez with Mr. Baldwin for the winter, to preach the Gospel in that town of 150,000 inhabitants.

Tuesday week, at the Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting, Dr. Churcher, of this Mission, gave some interesting particulars of the work. The Medical Mission work at Tangier, he said, is carried on in a stable, where, on most days, there are thirty, forty, or fifty patients gathered.

Dr. Churcher said it was very desirable to form some kind of hospital, where in-patients could be received, and it was proposed as soon as means were in hand to build a loft over the place now used. In proof of the necessity for such accommodation, he said that some time since a woman came to be treated who was suffering from cancer, but of course, without any place in which she could remain for a time, it was impossible to operate, and he was obliged to send her away to certain death in a short time, whereas her life might have been spared, by proper surgical treatment, for many years.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

The Book of Esther possesses this peculiarity, that the name of God does not occur in it; but this absence of mention of his name is made up for by the remarkable revelation it contains of God's providential working for the deliverance of his people in a time of critical emergency. The books of Ezra and Nehemiah had shown God's care and keeping as exercised towards the remnant of his people whom He brought back from captivity to rebuild the Temple, and to form the nucleus of the restored nation in their ancient dwelling-place. This book shows the same watchful care exercised towards those who did not return, but remained amongst the Gentiles—a class afterwards spoken of in the New Testament as the "Diaspora" (the Greek for dispersion). It is in character with a book relating God's secret providential interposition on behalf of those of his people, who were not (so to speak) in communion with Him, by refusing to return to rebuild the Temple and worship in its courts, that all mention of his name should be suppressed. But the book is both a wondrous story of his secret providential working for them, and also contains much mystical foreshadowing of Gospel truth.—See "Notes on Daily Readings."

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—Mr. William Forbes held one of his meetings for theatrical employés last week at Waterloo-road Chapel schoolroom. After tea, solos and hymns were sung, and addresses were given by Rev. W. H. Tickell and Mr. Maynard.

A RIVERSIDE WORK.

On Wednesday last week, in the room of the F Trade Association, there was a large gathering men connected with Billingsgate Market, amon whom an important evangelistic work is carried by the Billingsgate District Association (Lond City Mission) with most encouraging results.

Mr. D. H. Williamson, who presided, referred the difficulties which those must face who, amid the wickedness that went on in the market, decid to live for Christ. Of these, the difficulties wi their masters were often not the least, but by the own stedfastness and conscientiousness they mig even influence those masters to decide for Chri Rev. A. G. Brown, of the East London Tabernac then gave an earnest and pointed address on t words, "Ye must be born again," remarking th the necessity for the new birth was too much ove looked in the preaching of the present day. T temporary address of the Association is 83, Low Thames-street.

MR. BENNETT ANDERSON IN BELFAST.

This Liverpool evangelist has paid another vis to the Westbourne Presbyterian Church her Much prayer was made for a blessing on t meetings; and the pastor, Rev. Wm. Witherou had written to many Prayer Unions and to m of God in England, Ireland, and Scotland, askin them to unite in this prayer. Every evening durin the fortnight the spacious edifice, which seats abo 1300 people, was crowded; an overflow meetin had to be held the second Sabbath of the missi in the large schoolroom adjoining.

From the commencement the Spirit of God wa manifestly at work. The revival of 1859 wa brought forcibly back to the minds of those wh remembered that memorable year. Many wer convicted of sin, and, at the after-meetings, desire to be guided into the way of salvation. The hand of the evangelist were greatly strengthened by th co-operation of a large staff of workers. Many o them were students from the Presbyterian Colleg who, Bible in hand, pointed anxious inquirers t the Saviour.

As the result of the mission the attendance a the prayer-meetings and Bible-classes has largel increased, and the people of God have been stirre up to a greater sense of their responsibility and stronger faith in Jehovah as the hearer an answerer of prayer.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessin on a further ten days' mission in Banff, by Mr. J. M Scroggie, from December 12.——For blessing o a mission by Herbert R. Francis at Eccleston-hal December 5 to 19.——For blessing on service at Tunbridge by Mr. John Elliott.——For blessin on services held by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Shankli I.W.

SUNDAY CLOSING ACT IN WALES.—Questions relating to the working of the Sunda Closing Act in Wales in respect of order, thrif temperance, and the general well-being, and als as regards the people's acceptance of the Ac have been sent out to all parts of Wales by th Merionethshire Temperance Association. The were addressed to lord-lieutenants, bishops, ministers of religion, magistrates, county court judge employers of labour, police authorities, &c., &c Out of nearly two hundred replies received, fiftee were undecided, only four or five opposed, and th remainder (about one hundred and eighty, that is nine out of every ten) testified that the Act ha been generally successful throughout the Principality.

CAMBRIDGE.—The evangelistic meetings hel for undergraduates by undergraduates in the Alexandra-hall, on Sunday nights, at 8.30, have bee attended very largely, and have had, to all appearances, many real and blessed results. Mr. Barto has been always, or nearly always, in the room and has been always asked to give help; and hi presence has had an excellent effect in the wa both of encouragement and of caution and guidance. The strong expressions of unguarded claim to "entire sanctification," heard in the first meetings of the Term, have not been repeated, and tone not less earnest, but more chastened, has prevailed. Every Sunday morning, at 6.45, is held prayer-meeting in College rooms in Pembroke usually attended by about forty men, to ask blessing on the services and efforts of the day.—Record

MR. SCROGGIE IN DUFFTOWN, N.B.

We had a twelve days' mission recently, conducted by Mr. J. M. Scroggie. For the last eighteen months we have seen the saving power of God, more or less, in the town and neighbourhood, and we can now praise God that many prayers have been answered, and many expectations realised in the good work we have ust witnessed.

The power of God was manifest from the irst, and by the end of the mission many of all ages had professedly passed from death unto ife. There was a very blessed unifying influence felt, the result of which was that Christians of every name were drawn together in this common service. This was taken advantage of, and the night after Mr. Scroggie left us we had a union meeting, which was jointly conducted and addressed by the Free and Established Church pastors. This meeting produced a very marked mpression for good on the people. Will those who read this report pray for the consolidation and extension of this manifest work of God?

MR. R. WEAVER IN GLASGOW.

The evangelistic meetings held during the last week by Richard Weaver, in the hall connected with the Orphan Homes, James Morrison-street, have been attended with much blessing. About twenty of the girls in the Home have professed faith in Christ, and many others have been added to the Lord. One woman, having found peace through the blood of the Cross, brought her husband and brother-in-law to the meeting the evening following, and they, too, were led to see that their sins had been laid on Jesus. A father and mother who were converted sent up requests for prayer that their three boys might early seek the Lord.

One night a man, to whom Mr. Weaver spoke about his salvation, said, "I know the Bible as well as you, and it says that a man must grow in grace." By coming to the meetings he was led to see that a man must be born again before he can see the kingdom of God, and at the close of one of the meetings he said, "God bless you, Mr. Weaver; you have taught me something I never knew before, and now I want to be saved." His wife said, "Why not decide to-night?" He said, "I will, if you will." They both went into the inquiry-room, and left rejoicing in the Lord.

CANADA.—The General Conference of the M.E. Church of Canada, at its recent session in Toronto, resolved to present a petition to the Dominion Parliament praying for legislation making criminal certain offences against the seventh commandment not now on the statute books; also asking that the age of consent be raised, and that parents and guardians, parties to wrongs against minor girls, be punished.

WEST NORWOOD.—At a small meeting lately held at Miss Romanës' Training Home for Girls at West Norwood, Miss Forsaith, of Limehouse, spoke warmly of the necessity of such Homes to save our girls ere it is too late. Miss Ellice Hopkins speaks of the Home as one of the very best in all her wide experience. Help is much needed to enable the work to be continued, and may be sent to Miss Romanës, Auckland House, Auckland-hill, West Norwood.

RESCUE WORK AT ALDERSHOT.—A work, carried on by Miss Tummon, 3, Elizabeth-cottages, Central Avenue, has during the last three years aided 59 women and girls, only five of whom have gone back to a life of sin; 13 are in service and doing well, five are married and living happily, and 31 have been sent back to friends. In a little report of the work just issued, it is stated that since the repeal of the C. D. Acts the number of women living by sin has been greatly reduced, some think by as much as one-half. Another gratifying fact is that seven houses, formerly used for immoral purposes, are now empty. From a number of painful cases here recorded, it is evident that the Mission is accomplishing much in the way of purification, not only among the women, but also amongst men, for whom prayer-meetings are frequently held with good results.

CAGE LANE MISSION, PLUMSTEAD.

A mile below Woolwich Arsenal, at Cage-lane, Plumstead, an unpretentious Mission is carried on by a lady (Miss Russell), aided by Christian officers, and others, which is a boon to the neighbourhood, and a place where souls are definitely sought and won.

The anniversary meeting was held on Tuesday of last week, and the report showed that the whole expenditure for the year was £151 12s. 9d., with receipts, however, of only £110 8s. 6d. The balance, as well as much spent on food and relief for the sick and destitute, comes largely, if not wholly, from the private purse of the lady whose happiness it is to serve and follow Christ in seeking souls and relieving the needy. How many Christian ladies, wasting their lives on knitting, netting, and crochet, and in making calls, or even in attending meetings, might find a new object and an unthought of joy in doing likewise.

A sum of £69 is paid annually in discharge of the debt, with interest, of £500 for the building; if this could be cleared, the workers would be greatly relieved and the work extended.

Mr. Henry Hutcheson presided. Major Russell read the report, which was mainly occupied with records of souls who had been saved. Addresses were given by Mr. Morgan and Rev. J. B. Figgis, and then several testified to the good they had received there.

A ten days' mission has recently been held by Mr. Penfold, of the Evangelisation Society, whose earnest and faithful preaching has been much blessed.

This is the kind of work which, far more than formal and expensive operations, is winning jewels for the crown of Christ. All honour and practical support should be given to such disinterested and voluntary work, by those who are seeking the Redeemer's kingdom.

TEMPERANCE IN THE EAST-END.

Under the auspices of the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union a crowded public meeting was held at the East London Tabernacle on Tuesday evening of last week. The chair was occupied by Dr. Barnardo, who feelingly referred to the late Lady Hobart, by whose death the Union had lost a valued friend. Her life had been a blessed one, and she did a great work in the East of London for the Lord Jesus Christ. Referring to the agitation about the People's Palace, Dr. Barnardo said they must insist on such guarantees as will prevent any successors of the body of trustees from reversing the decision that had been come to. Rev. Thomas Richardson said they had not only objected to the sale of strong drink in the Palace, but the Union were to petition against the opening of the Palace on the Lord's Day as a place of entertainment.

Mrs. Pyper and Miss Macpherson followed with earnest, stimulating addresses, showing how disastrous and terrible are the results of intemperance. A number of pledges were taken.

EXETER HALL.—A largely-attended meeting of the members and friends of the Young Men's Christian Association was held last week, when a lecture was delivered by Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson on his recent travels in Palestine and the East. Prior to the meeting, which was well attended, the hall being crowded in every part, about 700 members and their friends partook of tea.

LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE IN RUSSIA.—It is gratifying to learn that the Russian police have received a rebuff in their attempts to suppress purely religious meetings in private houses. The followers of a sect called "Stundites," which is widely spread in South Russia, having been persecuted by the police of Elizabethgrad for refusing, when summoned, to break up a prayer-meeting at the residence of one of the secretaries, were successively acquitted by the local magistrate and the Court of Assize of the district, on the ground that public order had not been disturbed by the assemblage in question. Upon appeal to the Senate the decision of the lower Courts has just been confirmed.—Nonconformist.

YOUNG WOMEN IN GLASGOW.

The annual meeting of the Young Women's Christian Association was held, on Friday last, in the Grove-street Institute. About seven hundred were present. Mrs. J. Wallace Robertson presided, and gave an address. Mrs. W. M. Oatts, hon. secretary, reported on the work of the past year. The members and associates now number 1,055, the largest yet reached. In addition to the Central Institute, there are seven branches scattered throughout the city, besides twelve affiliated meetings. The boarding house, registry office for servants, fellowship meetings, and Bible-classes have all been instruments of much good. Educational and cooking classes have been carried on, and ladies have visited the infirmaries and read in several work-rooms in the city.

Short reports were handed in by Mrs. Lamberton, Miss Jones, Miss B. Shaw, Miss M. E. MacGregor, and Miss B. Leggatt. Addresses were given by Madame Marzials, from France, and by Mrs. J. Campbell White.

MR. DUNN IN FIFESHIRE.

In our last issue we briefly noted the work of spiritual revival at Dunshalt and Auchtermuchty, in connection with the labours of this evangelist. Rev. W. Affleck, of the Free Church, Auchtermuchty, writes:—

> Young people of both sexes, parents and children, professed to receive Christ, and almost the whole village of Dunshalt became moved. At the final meeting upwards of eighty gave in their names as having received blessing. It is most interesting and profitable to pass from family to family full of rejoicing believers. Some who are of the very poorest are enriched with all grace. Much prayer had long been made for this village both by the godly in it and by Christian friends elsewhere.
>
> Mr. Dunn arranged to address some meetings in Auchtermuchty. Two ministers co-operated, the writer and Rev. James Bell. Owing to sudden bereavement Mr. Dunn was unable to be present on the first two nights, 15th and 16th November, but his place was well supplied by Rev. Charles Davidson, of Strathmiglo, and Rev. J. C. Shanks, of Arbroath. Mr. Dunn himself addressed the meetings from November 17 to 22, and the word was accompanied with great power, especially on the last of these dates, when large numbers remained as inquirers. Till that night the work had chiefly been among the young women, but now the young men and the children were also moved. A meeting for the latter was held by Mr. William Robertson, of Edinburgh, well known for his abundant and successful labours. He has since carried on both meetings, and the services were closed by Rev. J. D. Williamson, of Newburgh.
>
> A united fellowship meeting has been begun in Dunshalt, and another in Auchtermuchty. Special services may still be continued, as may seem advisable. Some of the cases of conversion have been very interesting, Christ being preached and received across the counter and on the farm cart.

KIRTLINGTON.—Special services extending over a fortnight, conducted by Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, have been held in the Kirtlington Chapel, and attended by very large numbers, whose marked attention indicated how eagerly they drank in the words of life. There is every reason to believe these services have been a means of quickening believers and convincing sinners.

THE METROPOLITAN RAILWAY.—The ladies working amongst the Metropolitan Railway men have been greatly encouraged during the past year by many tokens of the Lord's blessing. For seven years Gospel periodicals have been sent monthly to each employé. For eighteen months the Company allowed the use of a large room for mission purposes, and, when this was required, kindly erected an iron room capable of holding one hundred and fifty persons, on some ground at Baker-street, but owing to an objection by the Board of Works this cannot be occupied. The mission work comprises visitation of the men when ill, and as far as possible, sending them to some convalescent home. It is hoped some help will be given to relieve this mission of the further burden of renting a hall, which has become necessary. Any communication should be forwarded to Miss E. Jackson, 21, Stanley-gardens, W.

HOMES for WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.

Lincoln House, 12, York-place, Baker-street, W., was opened last July, and thus provides additional accommodation, in the centre of the Metropolis, for seventy young women. On the following day a gentleman, "Anonymous," called to ask my acceptance of two thousand guineas (£2100) towards founding another Home in 1887, but he declined to allow the amount to be used for placing Lincoln House out of debt (to clear off the present indebtedness of which £1800 will be required before the last day of the year). What could be done but accept the money on the donor's conditions? But how can we set about opening another Home with this heavy burden clinging to us?

It will, doubtless, interest many to learn that in the eight Homes, scattered throughout the Metropolis, 416 young women can be accommodated, and that any respectable young workwoman is eligible for admission. Over seven thousand young people have lived in these Homes since the first was opened in 1878, and the testimony borne to their usefulness is undeniable. I venture to affirm that no need is greater in London than the providing of suitable Homes for our young working women, many of whom are poor, hapless wayfarers on life's rough and thorny path. £100 has been offered for the Lincoln House, if the amount needed can be raised by the end of the year.

John Shrimpton, Hon. Director.

THE MISSES BARING YOUNG'S TEA PARTY.

We have attended a good many tea-parties, but none that seemed to have a better reason for their existence than that held last Thursday in Portman Rooms, Baker-street. Once a year Mr. Shrimpton manages to bring together all the young women residing in the various Homes for a pleasant, social, and instructive evening. This year the Misses Baring Young were the hostesses. If they could have been present to see how their guests enjoyed themselves, they would have been abundantly gratified.

First, of course, there was an hour of "tea and talk." We shall not be doing any injustice to the five hundred young women or so who "assisted" on this occasion, if we say that they entered heartily into the engagements of that hour. Then followed a good deal of delightful and inspiring music, and a stirring recitation, all of which were thoroughly appreciated. As to the more solid part of the evening's fare, nothing could well have been better and more suitable than the sympathetic and practical talks by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston and Professor Elmslie. Mr. Shrimpton was in the chair—his right place—and seemed as happy as anybody. Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, as Treasurer of the Homes, briefly joined in the chorus of thanksgiving at the close.

"THE INCREASE."—This is the title of an envelope booklet just issued, containing a year's record of facts and results in the work of the Stirling Tract Enterprise. From a list of places where these tracts are circulating, it would indeed seem that the field is as wide as the world itself. Whilst from the streets of London, as well as from many a country district, from those labouring amongst navvies and in house-to-house visitation, there comes the note of praise for souls brought to Jesus by these little messengers.

BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.—The Y.W.C.A. and the Broussa Orphanage held a united sale of work, opened on Monday last at 2 p.m., by Mr. Denham Smith, at 17, Old Cavendish-street; also Tuesday and Wednesday. A touching letter from Broussa tells of "no wood, no warm clothing, and a debt of £120 on the new building." Our readers have often helped this Home. The work of the Y.W.C.A. is already well known; they much need help to extend its benefits. Gifts for it will be welcomed by Miss Ely, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W., and for Broussa, by Miss Denham Smith, 38, York-terrace, Regent's-park.

BIGNOLD HALL, FOREST GATE.

This centre of evangelistic effort during the past month has been a scene of many remarkable conversions. Every night the Gospel has been preached, sinners have been convicted, and some grand trophies of grace have been the result. Mr. James B. Wookey has been the instrument in God's hands for this work. The hall has been crowded with eager listeners to the ever-blessed love story of the Bible.

At the closing meeting near eight hundred children were packed in the hall, and addressed with peculiar tenderness by Mr. Wookey; we cannot but believe many a young heart was surrendered to Christ. W.

GOSPEL SERVICES IN SOHO.—A seven days' mission was concluded on Saturday last at Wardour Hall, Little Chapel-street, W. The speakers were Revs. Fredk. Hastings, Henry Murch, R. L. Tipper, J. H. Buncey, &c. Though not largely attended, the Master's presence was graciously manifested, and several professed conversion.

GLASGOW.—The new premises of the Seaman's Friend Society, Broomielaw, will be opened on Wednesday next, 15th inst. They will mark a new departure in work amongst merchant seamen, as there is nothing, as far as we know, like them in existence devoted to such work. We have yet to realise the great influence sailors have for good or evil in all missionary enterprises.

SALVATION ARMY IN PARIS.—In the French paper En Avant, of Saturday last, Miss Booth and Mr. A. S. Clibborn announced, by a formal statement, that they will be united in marriage during January. In a postscript they say:—"Such as are willing to show their sympathy with us on this event may send in their gifts to the headquarters, 187, Quay Valmy, Paris, in order to help us press on the war harder than ever during the next year."

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—At the monthly all-day meeting on Friday last many requests for prayer were presented, as well as praise for answers received to united petitions on former occasions. At the afternoon gathering Mr. R. C. Morgan gave an address on "Christ the Witness and Christ's Witnesses." This was followed by an animated conversation on witnessing. In the evening much prayer was offered for the furtherance of missions to the heathen; remarks were made by Mrs. Hudson Taylor and others.

NOTTINGHAM.—A correspondent of The Nonconformist and Independent states that a conference was recently held in one of the churches of the town and county of Nottingham on the subject of Spiritual Revival. It was not specially ministerial, though largely attended by ministers, and naturally led by them. Meetings in the afternoon and in the evening were largely attended; the power and the presence of God the Holy Ghost were deeply felt. Many who were present have expressed a desire that such a conference should be annual.

RESCUE WORK IN EDINBURGH.—Mr. Christien, of the Midnight Mission, during the past fortnight has conducted a series of midnight meetings in Edinburgh and Leith. A large number of women attended the special services, and not a few who listened to his stirring appeals were received into the various Rescue Homes. A meeting for men also was arranged, and addresses given. The local workers in this special field of labour have been stimulated and encouraged to greater earnestness, and some girls were helped to abandon a life of sin and misery.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN INDIA.—A drawing-room meeting was held on the 24th ult. in Bournemouth in aid of the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India. Mr. Futvoye, at whose house the meeting was held, having read a letter by Miss Tucker (A.L.O.E.) in support of the claims of the Society, Mr. H. Morris (hon. sec.) made an interesting statement of its objects and mode of carrying them out. The Society, which was originated in 1858, was just as necessary now as then. The Society was striving to do something for the masses by means of training schools and vernacular literature. It was essential that there should be a thorough systematic training of native Christians, and excellent work was done in this direction by colporteurs, who distributed the Scriptures, school books, and general Christian literature. Missionaries connected with thirty societies labouring in India availed themselves of the Society's teachers and books. Mr. Elphinstone followed, insisting that it rested with the Christian Church to do the work which Government, for reasons of policy, could not undertake.

HELP! IN TIME OF NEED.

"The poor ye have always with you, and whensoeve ye will ye may do them good."—Mark xiv. 7.

Out in the gloom of night,
Out in the wind and wet,
You might hear the tread of tired feet,
Tramping wearily down the street:
Out in the wind and wet.

Out in the friendless world,
Out in the pitiless cold,
A hapless wanderer has to roam,
Far from shelter and far from home:
Out in the pitiless cold.

Out in the howling wind,
Out in the drifting snow,
With a rag of a shawl to keep her warm,
A woman is braving the winter storm:
Out in the drifting snow.

Dry and glassy her eye,
Faint and sinking her heart;
In a garret lone she lies at last,
Like a sodden flower 'neath Autumn's blast:
Faint and sinking her heart.

There through the rifted cloud,
Fitful the moonbeams fall,
Gilding a moment her upturned face,
Faded, yet fair, with a tender grace:
Fitful the moonbeams fall.

The work long sought lies by,
"No money till all is done."
So this starving creature was harshly told
By one who had wealth of yellow gold:
No money till all is done!

Long and toilsome the task,
But not one stitch did she;
For angels came to that lonesome room,
And bore her far from its chilly gloom:
So not a stitch did she!

Far from want and cold,
Far from wind and wet,
Sheltered and safe in the heavenly fold
She is watched and tended with love untold:
Far from wind and wet.

Beyond all human aid,
We cannot help her now,
The time for needing that is past,
She resteth satisfied at last:
We cannot help her now.

But stretch a saving hand
To other suffering souls,
And let all succour and aid be given
Now on this side of hope and heaven:
To other suffering souls.

The helping time is short,
The privilege is great;
And when the Master shall say to thee,
"I count it all as if done to Me,"
The recompense is great.

TEMPERANCE GLEANINGS.

The Lady's Pictorial says, at dinner in society to-day every other person may be seen taking either water, o a little claret, or some light wine.——It was officiall stated, recently, that of 400 inmates of Bethnal-gree Workhouse who were allowed their usual weekly outing more than half had returned drunk.——Mr. Thoma Cook, excursion agent, has written a pamphlet in whic he gives much interesting information about "Drin and Drinking" in connection with his tours, &c.

A Temperance Mission was held recently at Southampton, in St. Mary's and other churches. Canon Wilberforce, Dr. Richardson, Canon Barker, Dr. Carpenter, Mr. Reaney, and Miss Weston took part.——It is said, that in Brooklyn 3006 drink-sellers, regularly, and with impunity, sell on Sunday in violation of the laws.——The Evangelical Churchman (Toronto) strongly condemns the recently-enacted canon of the Provincia Synod, Toronto, forbidding the use of "unfermented wine" in the Holy Communion.——The returns for the late elections in Arkansas show 65,000 Prohibition vote against 75,000 for licence. In 1882, the Prohibition vote was only 20,000.

Dr. A. Whyte, of Edinburgh, has given up his glass o wine at dinner, and thrown in his lot with the temperance reformers, because "two dear friends have become victims to intemperance."——At a meeting in the Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, a resolution was passed demanding that the recent decision of the trustees as t a drink licence should be inserted in the trust deed.——It is stated that the health of Mr. R. T. Booth, who is i Australia, has again broken down.——Any employée o the Southern Pacific Railroad addicted to the use o intoxicants is first warned, and if he does not forego th habit he is dismissed.——At the recent W.C.T.U. Conference at Minneapolis, Pennsylvania was reported a the banner State, having 800 Unions and a membershi of 13,000. A department for work among the Mormon has been added to the Union.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,600 poor Boys and Girls.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE,

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale, remember that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, warm dresses, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curious musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, etc., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received are made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque (made payable to J. T. Page) to any part of the country.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of during the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Hall of the "Edinboro' Castle."

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensivedrawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (Prepaid), with full instructions as to conveyance, etc., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

THE TRADE MANAGER,
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo now desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

Pulpit Parables for Young Hearers. y Revs. P. T. Forsyth and J. A. Hamilton. mpkins & Co. These parables are simply charm- g, and, adopting the heading of one, are veritable hought-kings." They will waken the imagina- n, and, whilst winged with many new and bright eas, the seed of Divine truth, all unconsciously, ll be deposited in the heart.

Old Christopher's Bible-Class Notes on e First Five Chapters of the Gospel of St. Luke. 6d. Jarrold & Sons. The Bible-class first voured with these notes is to be envied. Its acher is a man of keen spiritual insight, and ows how to drive a truth home. His comments e helpful in a high degree. We hope he will find arger class in many attentive readers.

Evangelistic Agencies Outside the iurches. By Rev. A. Sutherland. Elliot, linburgh. Besides chronicling many agencies gaged in Christian work outside the Churches, e author has set himself the congenial task of inting out the lessons which these agencies teach, d the attitude which should be observed towards em. The thoughts and suggestions made are ll worth the consideration of all the Churches.

Himself: Words Concerning the Lord sus Christ. 1s. John F. Shaw & Co. This oice volume consists of extracts from addresses livered at various Mildmay Conferences. They e the product of the thought of many minds, and ilst full and careful expositions of the various ases of this sublimely great subject, collectively y form a valuable revelation of the Christ of d. The get-up of the book is admirable, the terpress and paper being very good.

Encouraging Experiences of Free braries, &c. By Lady John Manners. 1s. ckwood & Sons. That reading-rooms and raries have, where properly conducted, been st beneficial in educating the people, and aning them from vicious influences, there can no question. This is very clearly set out in this ok, which gives a large amount of useful infor- tion on the point. It should encourage many o are in a position to do so to establish some- ng of the kind in places where the people are hout such aid.

Daughters of Italy. By Caroline arey. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. This inter- ing work gives an account of three famous men of Italy—Olympia Morata, Marie Thérèse, Savoy, Julietta, Marchioness of Barolo. The omplished authoress justly remarks that she has ected her subjects out of an embarras des richesses: we think she has selected wisely. Each of se gracious figures is in some sort typical. The e of the work leaves nothing to be desired, and cordially commend it to those who are seeking uitable gift for an intelligent girl.

Hints to my Younger Friends. By Rev. rdon Calthrop, M.A. Chas. Higham, Far- gdon-street. We have here a group of sermons ected from those addressed by the gifted author the young people of his congregation. They erve high commendation, and will be found full terse, practical teaching, such as may be de- bed as "instruction in righteousness." Amid the ramentarian tendencies which so widely prevail. emphatic assertion that without spiritual life inances are "nothing, nay, worse than nothing," f immense importance as coming from a clergy- n of Mr. Calthrop's standing. The book is pted to render effective service in leading thful minds to realise the power and precious- s of spiritual truth.

Preacher's Library: Hints on Theo- cal Reading (8d.); A Preacher's General ading (6d.). Compiled by Rev. J. S. Banks. Woolmer. In this day of innumerable books, en spiritual teachers must not only be "taught God," but fairly conversant with ancient and lern literature, books like the above, which arate "the precious from the vile," are very uable. Mr. Banks gives the names and general t of two or three hundred books in all depart- ts of theology. He seems to be catholic, but omnivorous in his selection, and does not hesi- to point out the errors of gifted writers on such linal points as the Atonement and the Inspira- of the Bible. Books for general reading are er the heads, Philosophy, History, Poetry, ion, Biography, Travel, General, so that refer- e is easy. Compared with works of fiction, e on travels are a meagre list. But hundreds thank Mr. Banks for a difficult task well uted.

System of the Christian Certainty. By Rev. Dr. F. H. R. Frank. Second Edition. Translated by Rev. M. J. Evans, B.A. 10s. 6d. T. & T. Clark. This book is more for theologians than for general readers, yet no reader can take it up without being interested and instructed. It is the work of a scholar who has mastered the literature of his subject, and of a philosopher who can grapple with the problems of Divinity. Its thought is occasionally hazy, and its enunciation of truth is not always so distinct as we should like it to be; but, on the whole, we can commend it as an able and useful discussion of the weighty topic with which it deals. The translator has done his part faithfully and well.

Miss Mason's House of Rest Monthly will be enlarged to twelve pages with the January number, and will be called Rest and Reaping. 1d.

The "Bible Searching Almanack" has been published in French, and may be obtained of M. Grassart, 2, Rue de la Paix, Paris. Price, two sous.

Messrs. Longman & Co. have issued a sixpenny edition of Lady Brassey's Sunshine and Storm in the East; it is a marvel of cheap and entertaining reading.

The Mother's Friend. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. There is much in this volume that will give it a wider field than it claims. It affords pleasant and helpful reading, suited to many minds.

Our Bible Students' Almanac. 2½d. Willard Tract Depository, Toronto. This almanac, besides the usual matter, contains the International Sunday-school lessons, and many useful notes.

We welcome The Biblical Illustrator (Part i. 7d. Jas. Nisbet & Co.) as likely to prove useful to ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. It is true to its name; it throws light on the sacred pages.

The numbers of the American Magazine St. Nicholas (1s. F. Warne & Co.) for November and December begin a new volume of this most attractive serial for the young. It surpasses in artistic merit anything produced in this country.

The Daily Bread Almanac. 1d. A. Murray, Edinburgh. This little pocket-book companion well illustrates its title by giving texts in which choice spiritual food may be daily found. There is a special subject for each month, to which the texts apply.

The Christian Worker, hitherto edited and published by Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, of Manchester, and which is to be issued weekly with the New Year, will have the exclusive right to publish Rev. Dr. Maclaren's sermons. Mr. J. Wakefield MacGill will be co-editor.

The Ministers' Diary. 2s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a most complete pocket companion, calendar, Scripture lessons for Sunday-schools, and list of societies; space for daily notes, cash account, visitation, and other memoranda, Bible-class roll, &c. It is veritably a clerical vade mecum.

The Daily Fountain for the Young. By John Mitchell. Partridge & Co. The subject is allotted for every week, with text and brief meditation thereon for each day. The topics are well chosen, and the teaching clear and simple. Blank spaces may be used for birthday or other notes.

On Character. By M. Bramston. 9d. Hatchards. A collection of papers which draw attention to the positive side of the culture of goodness. In an age of negations we are but too glad to get anything positive; and in this little book we meet with emphatic declarations on fundamental truths.

"Come to Jesus," and "Words about Jesus." 6d. Drummond's Tract Depôt. These packets, the former containing thirty-two bright-looking and bright-speaking little books, and the latter fifty, are sure to do good work, and will be found very useful for giving to Sunday-school children, as they will take with the parents also.

Religious Certitude. By Charles Shireffs. 6d. A. & R. Milne, Aberdeen. The earnest and accomplished secretary of the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. has come to the help of thoughtful young men who are in danger from the intellectual and scientific forces of the day. No better advice could be given than that found in these pages.

Ancient Types: Modern Applications. Light on the Christian Life from the Teaching of the Tabernacle. By Rev. C. J. Atherton, M.A. 1s. Skeffington & Son. The true problem of life is, How can a man cleanse his past way, and keep pure his way to come? This problem is solved here in the admirable chapters which treat of the life cleansed, offered, separated, clothed, fed, and transformed.

That Mightier Hand. By Frank H. White. 1d. Partridge & Co. In this New Year's Address, the mighty hand of Moses in all that he did against Amalek, and in leading Israel through the wilderness, is contrasted with the mightier hand of Christ. The dangers to which the Christian is exposed are pointed out, and he is reminded that his security, and the source and secret of spiritual strength, are in "that mightier hand," which is a saving hand.

Grace and Truth. Horner & Son. A very pleasant volume, tastefully got up. "Grace and Truth" shine forth in all its pages, while the illustrations are good. —Band of Mercy. 1s.; The Animal World. 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co. These two publications of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have the same mission to perform, though the former has its field more especially amongst the little ones. Both are a mine of information on the instincts and habits, the mode of treatment, and the natural history of birds and animals, with many delightful anecdotes. The illustrations, notably of the larger book, are first-rate.

The Ideal Church. By Rev. Wm. Crosbie. 2d. The Church as a Means of Grace. By Rev. Prof. A. Cave. 2d. Hodder & Stoughton. These two addresses, delivered during the recent Conference at Hastings, will be to many welcome reminders of a season which has been recognised as a very blessed one.

Is there a Future Life? By W. Garrett Horder. 1s. Elliot Stock. The value of Mr. Horder's treatise on a subject of perennial interest lies more in the quotations he gives from other writers than in his own treatment of the question. The perplexed will find rays of light, and mourners comfort, in these pages.

Political Issues of the Nineteeth Century. By J. L. J. Swan, Sonnenschein & Co. This shilling pamphlet is a compendium of facts and figures calling for earnest consideration by all who value religious liberty and social well-being. The object of the writer is to show the pernicious effect which Romanism has exerted and from its very nature must, while it lasts, continue to exert, upon all nations coming under its power. The baneful influence in connection with "the Irish Difficulty" is proved by facts and figures of a very startling character, while in other States Government statistics are quoted to show how, under Papal influence, crime and vice flourish in alarming proportions as compared with countries comparatively free from its power.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR CARDS.

Mr. J. E. Hawkins, Paternoster-row, sends a very attractive packet, exhibiting all the customary delicacy of artistic finish and suitability to the season from the Christian standpoint.

The showroom of the Religious Tract Society presents a very attractive assortment of cards, which may be had separately or in packets, combining quality and cheapness in such a way as to deserve a good share of patronage.

Messrs. Wheeler Brothers, 88, Mildmay Park, N., send a varied assortment of cards and mottos, all of which will serve as seasonable reminders. The little book, "The Watered Lilies," is a very choice production, and ought to carry cheer to many a drooping spirit. We are glad to know that the "Ruby Almanac" meets with general favour.

Peniel is the title given to a series of twenty packets of cards by Messrs. Castell, containing from three to six cards, at 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., and 3s. a packet. Oriental and floral designs, and scenes in the life of Christ are mingled with texts, mottoes, and verses by Miss Lucy A. Bennett, Dr. Horatius Bonar, Rev. C. A. Fox, and other favourite writers. They are all worthy of attention in the selection of cards for the season.

HOME.

"What manner of love hath the Father bestowed,
That we should be called the children of God;"
Not yet do we know the real meaning of this,
But we know that it meaneth a fulness of bliss.

Of the water of life—for there it doth flow;
They also "have right" of the tree to partake, [sake.
(From which once they were driven), for Jesus Christ's

The "children" go home when their school-time is o'er,
Not hunger, or thirst, do they feel any more;
The Lamb is their Shepherd, and them He doth lead,
By the fountains of waters, and there they shall feed.

Now wait we in patience our Father's good will,
In hope for the future, we rest and be still;
Full assurance of faith in our Saviour will prove
That nothing shall separate us from his love.

JEWS IN SCOTLAND.—At the recent annual meeting of the Scottish Home Mission to Jews it was stated that there are 150 Jewish families in Edinburgh and 500 in Glasgow. Rev. E. Bassin is the missionary. Many friends of the chosen nation will be glad to know that the spiritual interests of those resident in the North are not neglected.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, DEC. 12.—NEHEMIAH X.

The results of the great prayer meeting.—A solemn dedication to God. The names of those that sealed. All classes included and represented. A sample page of God's records, with the names of those who have since given themselves wholly to the Lord.

28.—Separation from all evil; separation unto God. 29, The covenant of obedience. Three special things noted: Marriages; the Sabbath; the Temple worship. 30, No wrong marriages. 31, No breaking of Sabbath. 31 latter part, Duty toward God and man. 32, Regular giving for God's service. 34, Division of work. 35, First-fruits of ground to God. 36, Children dedicated to God. 37, Tithes and consecration of everything, closing with the solemn promise, "We will not forsake the house of our God." For 32—39, see Malachi iii.

This chapter reminds us that repentance, reformation, restitution, are the practical results which God looks for after failure. There must be evidence of the return unto God after backsliding.

MONDAY, DEC. 13.—NEHEMIAH XI.

Another list of names. Those who "willingly offered themselves to dwell at Jerusalem;" those who "praised and gave thanks" at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem (xii. 27—42).

2.—The volunteers.—The need is great to-day for volunteers in God's service. Posts of special danger or of special usefulness to be occupied. "Run ye to and fro . . . and see now, and know, and seek . . . if ye can find a man" (Jer. v. 1). Men and means wanted to-day for the foreign mission field, and for work at home. Men who will deny self, give themselves and all that they have for the service of the Lord, and for the sake of others. "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." Leaders wanted to fill the gaps, to take the place of Lords Shaftesbury and Cairns, General Gordon, Samuel Morley, and Bishop Hannington. Men and women wanted for the rank and file of the ever-victorious army. Shall Christ call in vain? The summons is pressing, the opportunity grand, but the time is short. "To the work! To the work!" 16, Oversight of the outward business. 17, To begin the thanksgiving in prayer, to be leader of the praises. Note the important place given to praise. 22, Over the business of the house of God.—Some had business inside, others outside. God has different places for his servants, but the work is all one. It may be in unlikely places. "There they dwelt with the king for his work" (1 Chron. iv. 23). Dwellers with the king, workers with the king. Out of sight under the hedges, rough work in the ditches, dirty work among the plants, but it was royal service, and they had royal company.

TUESDAY, DEC. 14.—NEHEMIAH XII.

27.—The dedication of the wall.—Two companies in procession. 31, Ezra's company. 32—36, Half the princes of Judah, priests and Levites. 36, Ezra went before them. 38, Nehemiah's company. Half of the people, and those that gave thanks, Nehemiah followed after them. 40, The two companies met in the house of God. A public service of thanksgiving held. 42, The singers sang aloud.—They could not sing in captivity; but now they made their voice to be heard in praise, "God had made them rejoice with great joy." The soul in bondage cannot sing, the heart must be free, then "My mouth shall praise Thee with joyful lips." It was a great day, "The wives also and the children rejoiced; so that the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off." Whole families praising together! What a sight, and what a joyful sound! The world listens; are our songs of praise heard afar off? (Ps. xl. 3).

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 15.—NEHEMIAH XIII.

Twenty years since Ezra's reformation, twelve since the covenant. Nehemiah away about one year. There was a general falling away.

1.—In the book of the law they found "that the Ammonite and Moabite should not come into the congregation," &c.

2, 3.—They separated from themselves "all the mixed multitude."

4, 5.—Evil done by Eliashib, the result of a worldly alliance. He probably set the example to the Jews, as so many fell back into their old intercourse with the Gentiles. Not only was his grandson married to Sanballat's daughter, but he was himself "allied" to Tobiah, the Ammonite slave, to whom he had handed over one of the chambers in the temple. Notice how this evil had even penetrated and desecrated the inner courts of the house of God.

8.—The stuff cast forth, the chambers cleansed and restored. 10, 13.—The tithes restored.

15—22.—Violation of the Sabbath. The day profaned. "All manner of burdens" brought in "all manner of ware."

19.—The gates shut and guarded "that there should no burden be brought in on the Sabbath day" (Jer. xvii. 21, 22). 23, Complete separation from all the "strange wives." 26, Reference to Solomon. A striking warning! 28, The way Nehemiah treated the grandson of Eliashib: "I chased him from me." No fellowship with the ungodly. 30, Thus cleansed I them from all strangers. Let us "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." "Everyone in his business." Cleansed first, then the King's business. "Meet for the Master's use and prepared unto every good work" (2 Tim. ii. 21).

Nehemiah is a good pattern for laymen in his noble work, consistent life, and consecrated service. How much may be done by the example and influence of one man wholly yielded to God. Note his piety and patriotism, his perseverance and prudence. How patient and persistent in work; how prayerful and painstaking in all details.

"For disinterestedness, philanthropy, patriotism, prudence, courage, zeal, humanity, and every virtue that constitutes a great mind, and proves a soul in deep communion with God, Nehemiah will ever stand conspicuous among the greatest men of the Jewish nation; and an exemplar worthy of being copied by the first patriots in every nation under heaven."

The book begins and ends with prayer. "That in all our works, begun, continued, and ended in Thee, we may glorify thy holy Name." "Establish Thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish Thou it" (Ps. xc. 17).

THURSDAY, DEC. 16.—ESTHER I.

1.—This is Ahasuerus, which reigned from India even unto Ethiopia.—No doubt exists now amongst critics as to the identity of this Ahasuerus with Xerxes. The Hebrew word is the exact correspondent of the Persian name which the Greeks and Romans rendered by Xerxes. All the circumstances, too, point to him.

3.—In the third year of his reign he made a feast.—"In this year, B.C. 483, Xerxes, according to Herodotus, assembled the governors of provinces at Susa, in connection with his contemplated expedition against Greece. Councils were held, speeches were made, and at last formal orders were issued to the Satraps to prepare their several contingents."—Sp. Com.

FRIDAY, DEC. 17.—ESTHER II.

1.—After these things . . . the king remembered Vashti.—"A desire for reunion with her evidently making itself felt, accompanied, perhaps, by the thought that she might have been too harshly treated. To prevent, then, a return of affection for his rejected wife ensuing—a circumstance which might greatly endanger all who had concurred in effecting her repudiation—the servants of the king give the advice which follows."—Keil.

7.—Hadassah, that is Esther.—Hadassah is her Hebrew name, and means "myrtle." Esther is supposed to be her Persian name, meaning "star."

9.—She obtained kindness of him.—The san phrase is translated in verse 17, "She obtain favour in his sight." It is impossible to ove look the mystical teaching of this whole stor Queen Vashti, "the beautiful," as her nam implies, is set aside for disobedience, and a orphan and an alien is brought in to fill h place, her very name pointing to her being a object of love and also to her heavenly callin Here we have again the allegory of the tw wives (Gen. xvi.) as explained (Gal. iv.). Th earthly and the heavenly Jerusalem.

16.—In the seventh year of his reign.—" seems strange that a period of four years shoul intervene between the repudiation of Vashti i the third year of Xerxes, and the elevation Esther in the seventh. This can only b satisfactorily explained by the history of th reign of Xerxes; in fact by the circumstan that his campaign against Greece took pla during this time.—Keil. Those who have studie the symbolism of numbers in Scripture, wi observe the significance of these years, "three and "seven," as bearing upon the mystic meaning just spoken of.

19.—When the virgins, &c.—Rather "whe virgins." These words should begin a new paragraph. They stand in contrast with those of ver 8, and serve in the mind of the writer to date t new event here narrated, viz., the discovery Mordecai of the plot against the life of the king. —Sp. Com. This will appear more clearly verse 20 be put in a parenthesis.

SATURDAY, DEC. 18.—ESTHER III.

1.—Haman . . . the Agagite.—"The Je generally understand by this expression 't descendant of Agag,' and take the Agag intended to be the Amalekite monarch of 1 Sa xv."—Sp. Com. Viewed mystically, Haman a type of Satan, the great enemy of the peop of God, and Mordecai refusing to do him homa finds its fulfilment in Matt. iv. 9, 10, whe Christ refuses to bow down to Satan for t sovereignty of the world.

6.—He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordec alone.—So it is that Satan's hatred is not again Christ alone, but against his people also, and seeks "to destroy them throughout the wh kingdom."

7.—They cast Pur, that is, the lot, befo Haman.—"The practice of casting lots to obta a lucky day obtains still in the East, and probably extremely ancient."—Sp. Com. "T providence of God overruling the event in t interest of the Jews, is unmistakably evident the falling of the lot upon so distant a da It was only because there was so long an inter between the publication of the decree and t day appointed by lot for its execution, that was possible for the Jews to take means averting the destruction with which they we threatened."—Keil.

8.—There is a certain people scattered abro and dispersed among the people in all the p vinces.—"Although a part of the Jewish nati had returned to Jerusalem . . . the grea portion was still dispersed among the provin in Babylonia, Mesopotamia, and elsewhere." Sp. Com.

9.—Ten thousand talents of silver.—Ca Rawlinson says that, according to Herodotus, regular revenue of the Persian King consisted 14,560 silver talents (iii. 95); so that, if the sa talent is intended, Haman's offer would h exceeded two-thirds of a year's revenue, or and a-half millions stirling.

15.—The king and Haman sat down to dri but the city Shushan was perplexed.—A stri illustration of the perplexity which is often felt the apparent connivance of God with Satan carrying out the evils with which humanity afflicted; but if, like David, who felt this p plexity (Ps. lxxiii.), we consider the end, find what is foreshadowed in Esther viii. when "the city of Shushan rejoiced and glad," and "the Jews had light, and gladn and joy and honour." For Haman, the wic one, had been hung on the gallows he had p pared for Mordecai—apt type of the cross— Mordecai is clothed in "royal apparel, wit great crown of gold."

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.

The COMMITTEE earnestly APPEAL for the sum of £500. Shall the year close with the Mission in debt? Reader! do help for the Lord's own sake!

The Object of the Mission is the Glory of God and the Salvation of Immortal Souls.

The Means used are—
- (1) The Preaching of the Word.
- (2) Personal Conversation.
- (3) Circulation of the Holy Scriptures.

CLOTHING FOR THE POOR.

MISS STEER

HAS A QUANTITY OF

USEFUL WINTER CLOTHING AND FANCY ARTICLES FOR SALE

AT THE

BRIDGE OF HOPE,

26, Princes-sq., Ratcliff Highway, London, E.

Chiefly the work of the Inmates of the Home.

There being no accommodation for Laundry work, difficulty is experienced in finding remunerative employment for the women and girls, and it will confer a great benefit if ladies, purposing to give Christmas Presents to the poor, will purchase from the Mission. Good value will be given on receipt of Postal Orders, for garments, &c., required; or visitors are invited to come and see the articles for sale on any Friday during the winter months.

Remnants of any material, travellers' patterns, pieces for patchwork, odd wools or silks for fancy work, as well as cast-off garments of any kind, are always very acceptable.

Princes Square is five minutes' walk from Shadwell Station. There are trains every nine minutes from Liverpool Street, or the Metropolitan Line from the City and West End.

THE HOMERTON RAGGED SCHOOL AND GOSPEL MISSION.

President—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.

Urgently appeal for funds to meet the inevitable distress of the coming winter. A Committee of ladies, well acquainted with the district, will, with the assistance of a Bible-woman, satisfy themselves of the genuineness of every case before giving relief. Every penny thus contributed will reach the poor without deduction either for management or other expense.

Contributions should be sent either to Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN & Co., Bankers, Lombard-st.; or to the Hon. Sec., Mr. HENRY E. SHAW, 15, Muston-road, Upper Clapton.

Full particulars, Reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary,
CAPTAIN JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

CONSUMPTION,

BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA.

I will demonstrate to the whole world. and to sufferers from these unfortunate maladies, how they can be permanently cured by an entirely New Method of treatment, without the chance of failure. All afflicted may write with full confidence to Mr. WILLIAMS, 10, Oxford Terrace, Hyde Park, London; who will send full particulars to any person free of all charge.

MRS. MEREDITH desires to lay before her friends the following statements:—

That Nine Elms House is no longer large enough for the Industrial Work of the Prison Mission.

That, by removing the plant to the new premises of the Association, there will be greater facilities for both the spiritual and temporal work of this great Rescue Mission.

That the money to be realised by the sale of the Nine Elms property is not nearly enough to erect the new building required for the accommodation, in separation, of the women and children brought from criminal life to the care of the Sisters of the Nine Elms Association.

When all their London Institutions are in one place, the expenses of the whole will be greatly lessened. Mrs. Meredith esteems it a duty to provide for the carrying on by others of work which has been blessed of God, and recognised as a successful agency for rescuing perishing criminals.

She therefore earnestly appeals for help and sympathy in this effort to put her house in order, and to leave a permanent establishment in which the servants of Christ may continue the work she has been privileged to begin.

Money for this Fund will be gratefully received by

MRS. SUSANNA MEREDITH,
143, Clapham Road, S.W.

ON THE DEEP SEA.

FIVE YEARS AGO a visit paid to the North Sea Trawling Fleets proved, by God's Providence the commencement of a new and happier epoch for the Deep-Sea Fishermen. Until the year 1881 thousands of our countrymen had toiled—not only in all weathers, at all seasons, and in daily perils of their lives, but —in complete isolation from all Christian or moral influences.

TO-DAY seven Mission Smacks cruise in the North Sea, serving as Church, Dispensary, Temperance Hall, and Club.

Two of these vessels were equipped at a cost of £4,550, and presented to the Institution by generous donors. The remaining five were originally private property, and merely lent for missionary purposes, and although a considerable portion of their purchase money has been defrayed during the current year, a sum of £6,000 still remains to be cleared off before they are free from mortgage and registered in the names of Trustees as the unencumbered property of the Mission.

Moreover, SEVEN VESSELS CANNOT MEET THE REQUIREMENTS OF TWELVE FLEETS, and all persons on shore who revere our beloved Queen (which every one DOES) and sympathise with the storm-tossed smacksmen (which every one OUGHT to do) are invited to contribute towards a special fund, to be styled the "Queen Victoria Purchase and Endowment Fund," in order that these Mission Smacks may be sent forth as at once a Memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee and as Heralds of Mercy from the King of kings, ministering healing and comfort to the bodies, and peace and gladness to the hearts, of the fishermen.

Sums received for this object will be paid to a special Deposit Account opened in the names of Trustees at Messrs. Gurney & Co.'s Bank, Great Yarmouth.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

Trustees: The Duke of GRAFTON, K.G.; and others.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.

YOUNG LADY at WYMONDHAM.

In May of last year (1885) I received a letter relative to this case from Rev. W. M. BATTERBEE, P.M., of TOWN GREEN, WYMONDHAM, NORFOLK.

At that time her left lung was pronounced to be diseased. Her illness had commenced with congestion of left lung, great weakness, cough, and pain. The breathing was short, the expectoration mixed with blood. For three months strength had gradually failed her, and she had lost flesh all over the body.

"At the time I first wrote you (Mr. BATTERBEE writes in a recent letter) there was a most trying cough, broken sleep, and she was almost a living shadow."

"She had been for a long time (Mr. B. continues) under medical treatment, from which she received no benefit, indeed the doctor who attended her affirmed all medicine useless and gave her up as hopeless, saying she must soon die."

"By my advice (Mr. B. writes) she consented to try your medicine. After a few weeks the cough had greatly decreased; the expectoration of blood, the hectic fever and night sweats had nearly disappeared; appetite and strength increased to the astonishment of all who knew her. Moreover, her late medical adviser pronounced her a walking miracle." "I shall be pleased (Mr. B. concludes) at any time to bear my testimony to the wonderful efficacy of your medicines in this, as also in several other cases.—W. M. B."

The correspondence relative to this patient lasted over ten months. The history of the progress of the case to recovery is, however, so condensed in the above letter that it is needless to refer thereto.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

YEARS.	TEMPERANCE SECTION.		GENERAL SECTION.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

MISS AGNES E. WESTON, DEVONPORT.

WE recently had the pleasure of calling our readers' attention to the life and work of the lady who has nobly earned for herself the title of "The Soldiers' Friend;" it is our privilege this week to give a portrait and sketch of the one who is very justly named "The Sailors' Friend." Miss Weston resembles Miss Robinson in more respects than one. Both have rare sympathies with the sorrows and temptations of men who have few comforts; both put into exercise the Christlike law of saving those who are lost, or in danger of being lost; and the activity of both finds a common centre and source of strength in trust in God.

AGNES ELIZABETH WESTON was brought up under influences which trained her admirably for the work which lay before her. While she was but a child, her father, a man of considerable scientific attainments, removed from London to Bath. Although she breathed a Christian atmosphere and was the object of many earnest prayers, she was for years a stranger to the grace of God. Her first serious impressions were produced by the preaching of Canon Fleming. His faithful and loving presentation of the Gospel touched her careless heart. She could not banish from her mind the truths she had heard. She used to wander for hours in the fields, Bible in hand, and many a night she lay awake in agony of soul. She sought peace, but for a while she could not find it. At length she reached the haven of rest through simple trust in Christ as her Saviour. The very agony which went before her conversion intensified the joy which followed it. She was at school during these years of mental unrest and twilight gropings. The lessons then learnt fitted her to enter more fully into the difficulties of anxious souls, and taught her how to point sin-tossed mariners to the Refuge she had herself attained.

The energy of her nature now bent itself to the yoke of Christ. She could not be idle. A fire burnt in her breast which impelled her to visit the sick, take a class in the Sabbath-school, and tell her friends the blessedness of salvation. The circle of her activity widened as the months rolled on. She began to give addresses once a week in the men's wards in the hospital. As soon as she had finished speaking, she would steal softly from bed to bed, saying a word in season at each. In this way many were brought to trust in God. Pages might be filled with incidents from this period in her history. Many of them have been woven into narrative tracts, which have done, and are doing, great service throughout the country.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Debenham & Co., Southsea.)

She saw clearly that intemperance was a stumbling-block to those she tried to help, but for some time she did not herself become a total abstainer. She contented herself, like many others, with denouncing the evils of drink, and advocating total abstinence, although not practising it herself. The manner in which she was induced to sign the pledge, and take up a truer position, is worthy of mention. At the close of one of her temperance meetings, a drunkard came up to her, wishing to sign the pledge. He was a chimney-sweeper, and well-known for his cruelty while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. She was anxious to get a hold of him, and welcomed him eagerly. As he lifted the pen, he suddenly looked up into her face, and asked, "If you please, Miss Weston, be you a teetotaller?" Somewhat disconcerted by this direct appeal, she replied that she only took a glass of wine occasionally. He resolutely laid down the pen, saying, "Well, I think that I will do just as you do, and take a glass sometimes in moderation." He steeled his heart against her entreaties, and went out as he had entered. That night light fell on the path of duty for Miss Weston. She saw the inconsistency between her words and her conduct. She enrolled her name in the pledge-book, heartily wishing that she had done so before the poor fellow came forward. She has never regretted the step. Her moral influence was increased by her new attitude towards our national curse. She spoke with power, because her life backed her words.

The varied service of these early years was but a preparation of the work she was now to be called to. She put herself wholly under God's guidance. The beginning of her labours on behalf of sailors was, like most beginnings, small and simple. In 1868 she wrote a letter to a Christian soldier, then on passage with his regiment from England to India in H.M. ship Crocodile. He read it over and over again. So great was the comfort it carried to his own soul, that he showed it to a seaman who stood in need of sympathy. The sailor's hungry eyes and heart devoured it. He handed it back, with the remark, "That is good, we poor fellows have no friend; do you think the lady would write to me? I would give anything to receive a letter like this." "I am sure she will," was the immediate reply; "I will write and ask her." He did write from Suez. Miss Weston rejoiced to see another field of activity open up before her; and, as she puts it, that letter, was the germ of all her present work in the service. The grateful and happy sailor sent her the names of many companions situated as he was, who would be glad to hear from her.

Week by week the correspondence grew, till it assumed formidable dimensions. The warm, loving heart, and the sympathetic interest in their welfare revealed in her letters, touched those written to. "We never light our pipes with your letters," said a sailor, "because you think about and care for us." His feeling was that of all who enjoyed the privilege he prized. The demand for written letters soon became so great that Miss Weston found it necessary to supplement them with a monthly printed letter, which enabled her to speak a friendly word to a very much larger number than she could have reached by her pen. These have long been known as "Blue Backs." They are messengers of life and healing to thousands of men far from the sound of church bells. The good they do can never be fully known till that day come when all secrets shall be revealed.

Her interest in sailors deepened Miss Weston's earnestness in temperance reform. She gladly undertook, in 1873, to superintend the operations of the National Temperance League in the Royal Navy. Her first act in this new capacity was to get permission to speak to the men on board their ships. The rules of the service, as well as strong prejudices, were against her, but, through the valued co-operation of the late Admiral Sir W. King-Hall, then Admiral Superintendent of the Dockyard at Devonport, she won the day. She would go to a ship, receive smiles of welcome, and take up a position on that part of the deck thought most suitable for a platform. The boatswain's mate would pipe the notice, "Miss Weston's come aboard to give a lecture in the upper deck battery." Then there was a rush of feet up every companion ladder, and crowds of eager faces would be seen. Some sailors sat cross-legged in front, others knelt, and the remainder stood behind. The address was not a set speech, but a simple exposition of the evils of drink, and a loving appeal to have nothing to do with it. The speaking over, the pledge-book was laid on one of the guns, and signatures asked. Each man who enrolled his name was counselled to look to God for strength to keep his resolution. The work thus begun, extended each year, till its devoted leader's desire had been fulfilled, and a Temperance Society is now established on board of every ship in the service.

It was well to help sailors on the sea, but they also needed help on land. This need came home very forcibly to Miss Weston, while she was visiting a friend in the neighbourhood of Devonport. Her attention was drawn on the Sabbath afternoons to the immense number of boys on leave from training ships, who were wandering aimlessly about the streets, getting often into bad company and habits. Anxious to influence them into a better way of spending their time, she resolved to gather them together to hear the Gospel. Her friends told her that she might as easily collect wild birds escaped out of a cage, but she persevered in her purpose. She distributed notices among the ships inviting the boys to meet her in a large public room in Devonport, for singing and reading, on Sabbath afternoons. On the first Sabbath two weary hours were spent in waiting, and only one boy came. As soon as he saw that none of his mates were to bear him company, he ran away. Next Sabbath was even worse; not one turned up, though hundreds were roaming about the streets. Four equally unsuccessful Sabbaths sent her to her knees to ask guidance from God.

Her prayer was answered. The lady in whose house she was staying offered the use of her kitchen for the meeting, with tea and cake as an attraction. Two earnest Christian men, one an employé in H.M. dockyard, the other a member of the Metropolitan Police, volunteered their assistance in going out to the streets and bringing the lads in. The tea, cake, and a warm fireside, drew the wandering boys. They came, and found the service interesting. The kitchen soon proved too small to accommodate those who gathered. A larger room in a desirable locality was secured. It, too, was speedily filled.

As the movement widened, the question was constantly asked by one and another, "Can't we have a place to which we can come during the week—a temperance house, a public-house without the drink, close to the dockyard?" Out of this question sprang the Sailors' Institute. It led to the opening of a building in which the men and lads could make their home while ashore, and in which Miss Weston would be able personally to carry on direct work for Christ among them. In the autumn of 1874 a house in the main thoroughfare of Devonport became vacant. It was scarcely a dozen steps from the dockyard gates, and suitable in every respect. But where was the money to purchase it? "The silver and gold are mine, saith the Lord." In reply to an appeal in these columns, Miss Weston received in a few days a sum sufficient to pay the whole of the first year's rent. Then she launched boldly into the enterprise.

The work at Devonport extended to Portsmouth, where a noble Sailors' Rest, in Commercial-road, is doing a great work for God. The hall there seats 1000, and the sight of the sea of upturned faces on Sunday nights, and the happy brightness of the crowded temperance meetings, is, as many have said, worth travelling miles to see. All over the world also Miss Weston has her friends and helpers, and as the bluejacket goes from port to port he is put in communication with these true friends. The Devonport Sailors' Rest is crowded out, and in need of immediate enlargement. As the inset in this paper will show, Miss Weston has bought two public-houses, and is anxious now to secure the last and corner house, "The Dock Gates Inn."

Failing space forbids us to linger on the advantages of the Institute. It has a bar where beer and strong drink are not, but their absence is not lamented. A side door from the bar leads to a room where Jack can spin a yarn with a shipmate. Upstairs is a reading-room, where there are well-filled bookshelves, and an abundance of religious and other papers. Care is wisely devoted to the kitchen arrangements. There is also a fine set of buildings in which are dormitories, each of the beds being divided off into little private cabins, much prized by all, notably by the Christian men, as they have no quiet place they can call their own on board ship. At right angles with the Institute, and to the rear, is the Gospel Hall. Meetings are held in it every day, and it has been the birthplace of many souls.

The key-note of the work is personal interest in and friendship for the brave men of the sea, who, as Miss Weston truly says, are those in a peculiar sense ready to appreciate sincere friendship, and most frequently led down to destruction by friendship of a wrong kind. With God's blessing, such an enterprise conducted in such a spirit could hardly fail of success. That it has not, the following figures will show:—During last year 264,398 "Blue Backs," and 209,000 copies of The Brigade News, besides tracts, Testaments, text-cards, and hymn-books, have been circulated; 70,000 sailors and marines have been housed; over 1000 beds have been given gratis; 2000 men have attended Gospel teas; and the good tidings of salvation have been carried to hundreds who otherwise would not have heard them. These remarkable figures tell their own tale, and clearly substantiate Miss Weston's right to the title, "The Sailors' Friend."

A NEW BOOK BY A. L. O. E.*

This attractive-looking book acquires a somewhat painful interest from the introductory words of the writer:—"Some of the ideas contained in it came to me in a chamber of sickness, which was at one time expected to be my chamber of death. The thoughts were pleasant and soothing to myself. May they, by God's blessing, be so also to some of my fellow-pilgrims."

Percival is a young artist, who, almost at the outset of life, suffers from an injury to the knee which renders him an invalid and helpless. Poverty and pain are endured by him with Christian fortitude and resignation. A pleasant home is, however, eventually found for him in the house of a lady of good position; and here he passes the remainder of his days. The chapters describe various illustrations of Scripture designed and sketched by the young artist; in these he departs entirely from the ordinary conventional treatment; and his designs are eminently original and suggestive. The verbal descriptions of the "Passage of the Red Sea;" of the "Vision of King David," in connection with the composition of Psalm xxii.; of the death-bed scene of Joseph, the carpenter of Nazareth, with Jesus present thereat; of the story of the shekel paid into the Temple treasury as the tribute-money of the Lord; of the home in Jerusalem the night after the crucifixion—are all striking and noteworthy. And the same can be said of the narrative of the Roman soldier who was present at the scene of the crucifixion.

The book is beautifully printed, and would form an appropriate Christmas present.

SCIENTISTS AND REVELATION.

By Dr. J. H. GLADSTONE, F.R.S.

I have been asked to respond to your request for information as to the actual attitude of scientific men towards revelation. I do so with sincere pleasure, feeling sure that many of your readers would be gladly relieved of a misapprehension that seems to be very common.

You remark that "the recent meetings of the British Association at Birmingham, and of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, have done much to roll away the reproach of any supposed antagonism." This remark possibly had its origin in the accounts that have been published of the Devotional Meeting at Birmingham during the Association week. That meeting did not differ, however, from several previous ones in any important particular, unless it be that this year the president of the Association, and the presidents of two of the sections, took an active part in the proceedings. These Devotional Meetings have been held annually for the last twenty-four years. They are arranged privately by members of the Association, and those only are invited who are attending the scientific meetings. The usual time—at least of late years — has been Sunday afternoon; and, notwithstanding the claims of our hospitable entertainers, and the natural desire for a day of complete rest, the attendance at these meetings now generally numbers from one to two hundred.

I have known the British Association under forty-one different presidents—all leading men of science, with the exception of two or three appointed on other grounds. On looking over these forty-one names, I count twenty who, judged by their public utterances or private communications, are men of Christian belief and character, while, judged by the same test, only four disbelieve in any Divine revelation. Of the remaining seventeen, some have possibly been religious men, and others may have been opponents; but it is fair to suppose that the greater part have given no very serious thought to the subject. I do not mean to say that all these twenty have been men of much spirituality, and certainly some of them would not be classed as "orthodox," but the figures at least indicate that religious faith rather than unbelief has characterised the leading men of the Association.

As to "the actual attitude of the scientific world as a whole towards revealed truth," of course the scientific world, as such, does not and cannot pronounce upon the subject; each man will form his individual opinion, and keep it to himself or express it as he pleases. We have, however, some statistics that bear upon the matter. Mr. Francis Galton in 1873 asked one hundred and eighty of the most eminent scientific men a number of questions relating to their ancestry, education, mental characteristics, &c., including their "religious bias." About half of them answered his inquiries, and he gives a careful and honest analysis of the replies, without mentioning names, in his book called "English Men of Science: their Nature and Nurture." This analysis extends over many pages, but the substance may be gathered from some extracts.

It appears that out of every ten scientific men, seven call themselves members of the Established Church of England or Scotland, or of the now Disestablished Church of Ireland, and three belong "to other religious bodies," or to "none whatever." Referring to his correspondents, and taking religion in a wide sense, he says, "There appear to be about eighteen instances of scientific men who have a decided religious bias; being, I should estimate, at the rate of two or more in every ten." Afterwards he mentions seven of his correspondents as having "religious sentiments weak, accompanied with more or less scepticism." Further on, he says: "In answer to my direct inquiry, 'Has the religious creed taught in your youth had a deterrent effect on the freedom of your researches?' I have met with an overpowering majority of negatives. Seven or eight say 'No,' justifying their assertion by various reasons, to one who says 'Yes.'"

It may be urged that these gratifying statistics are thirteen years old. The list of president, officers, and council of the Royal Society elected on November 30 last, may be cited to show that things have not altered for the worse. The proportion of those who make no secret of their religion is at least three out of ten in that list.

This comparatively high percentage of the servants of Christ among leading scientists is not peculiar to our own country. Among the fifteen presidents of the French Association since its foundation, there have been three, of whom I can speak, from my own personal knowledge, as sincere Christian men. Nor is this peculiar to our own times. Many of the best-known discoverers of the past have been followers of those wise men of the East, who brought their homage to the Infant Saviour; and even among those who suffered the anathemas of the Church, some might have exclaimed with Paul, "After the way that they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers."

It may be asked whether the above favourable estimate applies also to the rising men of science, and to the semi-scientific. It is hard to say. Materialistic views do not seem to be in so much favour as a few years ago. I believe, too, that the students of science are sharing in that increased religious earnestness which is so apparent among the students of other professions. Yet it is well to bear in mind that there are some peculiar difficulties in their way: (1) In the words of Bacon, "It is true that a little philosophy inclineth man's mind to Atheism, but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion;" (2) The methods of modern science are the reverse of those frequently employed in theology. When religious truths are inculcated merely on the authority of the teacher, the young mind is apt to rebel, and belief cannot be re-established unless maturer thought should happily show that the essential facts and principles of Christianity do rest upon reasonable evidence; (3) As long as infidel advocates alone assert that science and religion are diametrically opposed, it does not much matter; but it is disastrous if young men and women of our religious communities perceive that their teachers are afraid of the advance of science, or hear them argue, even from the pulpit, that the long periods of geological time, the antiquity of man, theories of development, &c., are incompatible with the Word of God. Such young people often find themselves placed on the horns of a fearful dilemma, and being convinced of the truth of the scientific conclusion, feel bound sorrowfully to give up the faith of their fathers.

I trust that these particulars may serve to reassure any who may have supposed there was a real antagonism between the serious study of the works of the Lord, and that of the higher revelation through his Word.

THE FRIENDS and HOME MISSIONS.

The annual meeting of the Friends' Metropolitan First-day Schools and Home Mission Association was recently held at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, J. Gurney Barclay presiding. There was a good attendance of the supporters of the movement; they were from various parts of the country, and manifested considerable interest in the work.

The annual report, read by the secretary, G. Armatage, presented an encouraging aspect of the work in the six branches in the Metropolis. The attendances throughout had been well maintained, while in two instances the available space had proved insufficient. The chief feature of the work at Bunhill Fields, where the average weekly attendances are not less than 3000, is the Adult School Movement. About 350 men are drawn together on Sunday mornings, among whom is developed an influence for good. Similar efforts are springing up in other parts of the Metropolis as offshoots from the parent stem. At the Bedford Institute, Spitalfields. Clerkenwell, and Deptford, very encouraging reports of progress are received; and at Hart's-lane, Bethnal Green-road, a large and handsome building has recently been opened. About the new departure at Ratcliff we recently gave details.

The speakers were F. Seebohm (Hitchin), J. Hilton (Ratcliff), W. Beck (Stoke Newington), J. B. Braithwaite, Jun. (Bunhill Fields), and G. Gillett. The address of F. Seebohm was exceedingly interesting and practical in character, dealing with distress among the working classes, and the mission of the churches in its alleviation. It was shown that the greatest amount of misery exists among the uneducated and unskilled workmen, who are strangers, as a rule, to any method of organisation for their solid improvement. The only safe influence likely to effect a desirable change is Christianity, because it is the most real, sympathetic, practical, and suited to their wants. Under it the churches should establish schools, with the object of teaching these men order, method, application, and to cultivate the power of thought on all matters relating to their true advancement. The churches would do well also to establish the means of passing on such men to other localities, where their talent could be appreciated and utilised, not only in the districts of our own country, but likewise by emigration abroad.

MR. THORNE IN LUDLOW.

A united Gospel mission has been conducted in this town by Mr. H. Thorne. Bible-readings and prayer-meetings were well attended, and greatly appreciated by Christians. Large numbers flocked to the Gospel meetings each evening to hear the stirring and most impressive addresses that were delivered. So greatly did the interest increase that on the second Sunday evening the hall, which is the largest in the town, was so packed that numbers had to go away.

We think the system of tabulating conversions is frequently misleading; we therefore prefer to say that the mission has resulted in many being professedly brought to the Saviour, and a great quickening of believers from the different sections of the Church of Christ. James Evans.

A PLEA FOR THE CHILDREN.

DEAR SIR,—Having most unexpectedly been called to spend the greater part of a month at Margate, I found myself on three successive Sundays "assembling with the people of God" (to make use of a phrase I learnt in my youth, but which in my maturer years I discarded as not unmixed with satire).

These occasions brought me in contact with services in both the Church of England and the Nonconformist churches. The congregations were for the most part large, and fairly mixed—the proportion being two women to one man, with as many children as adults: the latter fact accounted for in the presence of so many schools.

Coming from an influential London church, where the children have each Sunday some special notice taken of them, I was naturally quick to miss in these services the signs—so dear to the heart of a child—that the preacher was conscious of the presence of little people.

The sermons were good, emphatically so, for children of a larger growth. But far above the heads, covered or otherwise, of the children who filled (some in unbroken lines) the pews scattered over the church or chapel, I could not help noticing the natural attitude of the schoolboys and girls, who, it was evident, while strictly obedient to the law of good behaviour in a place of worship (I must myself plead a traitor to that law) not to look about them, yet so settled themselves in their pews that to look up towards the pulpit was furthest from their thought.

One most intelligent-looking curly-headed little fellow, sitting immediately opposite me under the side gallery, was aroused by a stray remark from the preacher in reference to the rate of speed with which light travelled. The throb of joy which came to his face as he looked up quickly to the pulpit proved the momentary relief to his baby mind — the little fellow would be between eight and nine—to think that there was at length something coming which would interest him.

But, alas! for the shattering of childish hopes, the preacher was only about to observe that "the scientific man, when in health, might take pleasure in studying the rate of speed with which light travelled, but on his death-bed he would need his Bible to satisfy him." Curly-head looked down, a disappointed boy—looked down and gaped—not once, but six consecutive times; the boy next him, his brother in kinship as well as in adversity, caught the infection, and I must own that my motherly nature was such, that in very sympathy with the two weary little fellows, I gaped also.

On another occasion I sat next to a large-souled-looking boy, who entered very earnestly into the early part of the service, but who, when the sermon commenced, settled himself down with his prayer-book, and gave himself up to the diligent study of "A Table of Kindred and Affinity, wherein whosoever are related, are forbidden, in Scripture and our laws, to marry together."

The sermon had much beautiful thought in it for the "children of God," but not one tender word for the children of men and women, who formed by far the larger proportion of the congregation. I could not help watching my engrossed little neighbour, who was thoroughly given up to the portion he had evidently selected beforehand, for study during the sermon. He was conscious that my eyes were resting upon him, and, looking up a little rougishly, he whispered softly in my bent ear, "Why does it say a man mustn't marry his grandmother? Do you think there could ever have been a man who wanted to do such a silly thing?" This was not the time nor the occasion to discuss a question so roomy for argument. We had come to church to join in the worship, and by the teaching from the pulpit to be made more worshipful.

At least this was true as far as the adult portion of the congregation was concerned, but it could not apply to the children. I felt, as I had dwelt upon the lack to them, how mean and selfish for me to attempt to enjoy the good fare offered me, while all these boys and girls were hungering for a morsel, and, although forced to sit round the table in momentary expectation of something coming, were denied that which their very natural appetite desired.

This is, I mused, the seed-plant of scepticism. This is the cause to which might be traced the thought of boyhood and girlhood which attributes to so-called religion everything that is dreary and disappointing. Perhaps the small percentage of men present at these services, has something to do with the past of a childhood which learnt to dread Sunday coming round with its enforced quiet and silence in church. Once grown to manhood, the boy of the past has avenged the wrongs of his childhood by absenting himself altogether from the place of worship where he first learnt to feel the weariness and emptiness of religion.

In the name, then, of the children, I plead that our clergy and ministers will take them into thought when preparing their sermons for their Sunday morning flock. I know it will be urged, "Are there not children's services intended to meet the want of which you speak?" I answer: "Yes; but how often held? Once a month as the rule, twice as the exception." But even this fact does not remove another. If children in our morning congregations form part — and a very large part — of those present, why should they not have some portion of the sermon specially adapted to their youthful capacities and needs? It is not unusual in some churches to have ten minutes devoted to the children immediately following the Second Lesson, or before preaching the sermon prepared for adults. Why should not this very tender consideration for the little ones be more general?

By kindly affording space for this letter, you will give utterance to a plea which I venture to make, not only in the name of the children, not only in the name of the children's mothers, but in the name of Him who gathered such wonderful pleading and argument and force within those tender words, "Suffer the children to come unto Me."—Yours faithfully,

A MOTHER.

A YOUNG MISSIONARY'S APPEAL.— Some twelve months' since a young man went out from the Church Missionary Society Preparatory Training Institution at Reading, accompanied by Rev. A. J. Hall, with whom he labours, as a missionary to the Indians at Alert Bay, Vanconver Island. He also visits Fort Rupert, and there found pressing need for a building to serve as school and church, which has been erected at a cost of £60, of which the Indians have contributed one-third. As the C.M.S. never gives or obtains help for building purposes, Miss A. M. Nevile, 15, Somerset-place, Bath, will answer communications.

BIBLE STUDIES.—41.

"The fruit of the Spirit is joy."

(1) The joy of assured acceptance.—"I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God: for He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness" (Isa. lxi. 10). "Rejoice, because your names are written in heaven" (Luke x. 20). "Being justified by faith, we . . . rejoice in hope of the glory of God" (Rom. v. 1, 2).

(2) The joy of obedience.—"If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full" (John xv. 10, 11). "Such as had separated themselves . . . from the filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the Lord God of Israel, did eat, and kept the feast . . . with joy" (Ezra vi. 21, 22). "They found written . . . that the children of Israel should dwell in booths . . . So the people . . . made themselves booths, and there was very great gladness" (Neh. viii. 14—17).

(3) The joy of communion.—(a) With the Lord. "Jesus Christ . . . in whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (1 Pet. i. 8). "I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste" (Cant. ii. 3). "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation" (Isa. xii. 3). "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full" (1 John i. 3, 4). "In thy presence is fulness of joy" (Ps. xvi. 11). (b) With his people.—"I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full" (2 John 12). "That I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed" (Rom. xv. 32). "Did not our hearts burn within us, while He talked with us by the way?" (Luke xxiv. 32).

(4) The joy of sympathy.—"Rejoice with them that do rejoice" (Rom. xii. 15). "If one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it" (1 Cor. xii. 26). "The more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you all" (2 Cor. vii. 13).

(5) The joy of service.—"My servants shall sing for joy of heart" (Isa. lxv. 14). "Ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither laboured in vain. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all" (Phil. ii. 15—17). "Rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name" (Acts v. 41). "As sorrowful, yet alway rejoicing" (2 Cor. vi. 10). "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth" (3 John 4). "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him" (Ps. cxxvi. 5, 6).

(6) The joy of answered prayer.—"Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full" (John xvi. 24). "The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad" (Ps. cxxvi. 3). "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together. I sought the Lord, and He heard me, and delivered me from all my fears" (Ps. xxxiv. 3, 4).

This joy is (a) independent of circumstances. "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom . . . yet I will rejoice in the Lord" (Hab. iii. 17, 18). (b) enduring. "Your joy no man taketh from you" (John xvi. 22). "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you" (John xv. 11).

"The joy of the Lord is your strength" (Neh. viii. 10).

THE CHURCHES and EVANGELISM.

THE Presbyterian Messenger reports that at the monthly sederunt of the London Presbytery held in November, Rev. Dr. Dykes moved the following resolution:—

> That, in the judgment of this Presbytery, the condition of our home population, both in town and country, calls not only for a vigorous prosecution of home mission work through existing agencies, but also for the employment by the Church, under suitable regulations, of ordained missionary ministers for evangelising among those classes which absent themselves from the ordinary services of the Church.

The question was, Would it not be well to put the work more largely under the charge of ordained men. Such men "ought to bear the imprimatur of the Church." But they "ought not to be put through the form and farce of a sham training in the learned languages." Two great and important principles are here asserted—that the Church is responsible to bring the Gospel home to every individual; and that God having provided men adapted for the work, it is worse than useless to impose upon them the pretence of a classical education. Everyone who knows the condition of the people, and the kind of men whom God raises up to evangelise them, has no doubt of the truth of these propositions.

Dr. Dykes then makes a momentous confession—"The Synod has never done real home-mission work." It must be remembered that the Presbyterian Church of England is comparatively a very recent organisation, and the above confession must in fairness be extended to other and older churches. None of them has ever done real home-mission work. They have played at it; but have never done it. All the existing agencies for saving the people are but samples of what the Church is in the world for the very purpose of doing; and the sample bears no more proportion to the demand, than the handful of wheat shown in the market bears to the sack.

Not only so: the best samples of work are supplied, to a great extent, not by the churches as churches, but by individual members of the one Church of Christ, often without any recognition by the churches, and sometimes in the teeth of their opposition. And the best work of the churches (quality being estimated by souls saved and edified) is done, not in their most formal services and their grandest buildings, but in the mission halls attached to them; and there, not as a rule, by their most highly educated ministers and most important members, but by the humbler and poorer of the flock.

It is unquestionably right that all ministers and missionaries, all evangelists, pastors, and teachers, should bear the imprimatur of the Church. That is, that the Church should recognise the gifts which God has given to her men—(and women)—of whatever kind they be. But if the Church herself is not endowed with the evangelistic and aggressive spirit which alone can save her from being a lukewarm Laodicea, she only hampers those whose love for souls burns hot within them. God gives the gifts: the Church is responsible to recognise and use them; if she hinders or neglects their exercise, she breaks the commandment—"Quench not the Spirit; despise not prophesyings; prove all things: hold fast that which is good."

It was God, not the Church, who sent Peter to Cornelius; and as the prophets and teachers in the Church at Antioch ministered unto the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." So they fasted and prayed, laid their hands on them and sent them away. And they, being sent by the Holy Ghost, went forth (Acts xiii.). It will prevent much mistake and mischief always to remember that the imprimatur of the Church is of value only as it is the expression of the mind of a Church discerning and acquiescing in the dictation, direction, and operation of the Holy Ghost.

It is a matter for great thankfulness that Dr. Dykes has thus brought before the Presbytery the necessity of evangelistic work. We trust the Presbytery will recognise and ordain its God-given evangelists. The Holy Ghost never stints the supply of spiritual gifts to a Church willing to exercise them in his fear.

BULGARIAN & ENGLISH CHRISTIANS.

PASTOR TONJOROFF, who is a well-known Protestant minister in Bulgaria, and who was a Member of the late Parliament of Eastern Roumelia, is at present in this country, desiring to make known to fellow-Christians here the condition and the need of Protestanism in Bulgaria. An appeal has been made in support of his mission, recommended amongst others by the following gentlemen:—Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Messrs. John Macgregor, J. Bevan Braithwaite, James E. Mathieson, H. Grattan Guinness, George Gillett.

Any friends of Bulgaria, and sympathisers with the present struggles of the Bulgarians, wishing to help Pastor Tonjaroff either by giving him the opportunity of addressing meetings, or in any other way, are asked kindly to communicate with him, to the care of Mr. James E. Mathieson, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N.

MR. S. WALTON AT BRIGHTON.

BRIGHTON has again been favoured with a visit from Mr. Spencer Walton, who held mission services each evening, from November 28 to December 5, at Windsor-street Mission Hall (now connected with the Countess of Huntingdon's Church). Very manifest tokens of the Lord's blessing have been given, several have confessed Christ, among them some of quite the lowest class.

Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., on the two Sunday afternoons, Mr. Walton conducted special meetings in the North-street Church; and, in the evenings (after Windsor Hall) at the Odd Fellows' Hall, Queen's-road, where large numbers gathered, and workers had the privilege of helping many who had been convinced by the Holy Spirit of their need of Jesus. In the afternoons of the week, at Steyne House, Christians were refreshed greatly by Mr. Walton's Bible-readings. It is believed that many are aroused to the sense of the need of separation unto God, and are seeing the blessedness of whole-hearted consecration to the Lord.

A large gathering at North-street for prayer, and an address on "Power from on High," closed the mission. J. B. FIGGIS.

ASHBY WIFFIN, Sec. Y.M.C.A.

GRAVESEND.—It is gratifying to find that continued efforts are being made for the religious welfare of soldiers and seamen. We learn with much satisfaction that Gravesend is now added to the list. It appears that this place is notorious for drunkenness and its manifold train of evils. A meeting was held in the Wesleyan Chapel, December 2, at which Miss Rundle, Rev. A. Hann, and several non-commissioned officers, private soldiers, and ex-soldiers gave stirring addresses, and pleaded eloquently for a "Soldiers' Home" to be started at once. The meeting warmly received the statements. A local committee was named, and an earnest request is made to friends of soldiers to help Gravesend in this philanthropic endeavour. Such help will gladly be received by Mr. H. Tyson, Children's Home, Parrock Hall, Gravesend.—Methodist Times.

WEST AND EAST.

AT the Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting on Tuesday last week, Mr. Hathaway spoke of work in the West Indies, whither he was led by a word of counsel from Mr. Hudson Taylor, who said to him, "Why not go abroad, anywhere that Christ shall lead you, and there preach the Gospel?" Thus he found himself amongst the descendants of those slaves who were emancipated in 1838—amongst an agricultural population, who spoke English as well as it is spoken in our own villages. After labouring there some time, he was surprised to find how quickly the people laid hold of the Christian truths of consecration and self-surrender to the Lord, and how readily they gave themselves to the work of evangelisation amongst their brethren.

In a part of Jamaica also, which had not previously been evangelised, he went to work some time since, and now he was thankful to say two thousand of the people had embraced the Christian religion; the great majority he believed to be truly converted men and women. A large proportion of these were gathered in by the loving efforts of the natives themselves, who go out and preach the Gospel in the open air and in the market places. It would be a grand thing if more English people with independent means would go forth into some of the earth's broad fields, making it the business of their lives there to make known Christ.

Mr. E. H. Glenny said he had heard from a missionary brother just arrived out that the Turkish Government had sent orders for the closing of all Christian schools in the Syrian mountains. Opposition to this work had been manifested for a long time, but now the order had gone forth that all schools were to be closed. He had heard also from General Haig, who was just leaving for Suakim, and who wrote that he was not allowed to take the Bibles he had with him through the Custom-house at Mecca, where there was great fanaticism. All the region about the Red Sea, he said, is very dense in its spiritual darkness. He invited the engineer and two or three young Englishmen on board the steamer into his cabin for prayer and reading of the Bible. They said that was the first time for three years they had joined in anything of the kind. It was lamentable to think that little groups of Englishmen thus neglected were scattered about all over the world.

As to the Kabyle Mission, Mr. Glenny said several of their members had been laid aside for a time through sickness, mentioning amongst others, Miss Tulloch and Mr. Liley. On the other hand, they had been encouraged by several cases of conversion. Miss Gillard and Miss Merrals, with another young English lady, had established themselves in a little house in a Kabyle village on a mountain, and six miles from the nearest village, where there were Europeans. They even are in a difficult and dangerous position, amongst a very rough people, and already three attempts have been made to break into the house. They have gathered together nineteen little children in a school, and are trusting in the Lord for protection, and blessing on their labours. The Wesleyan Missionary Society in France has now for the first time sent forth a missionary of its own, and at Tunis Mr. and Mrs. Bureau have secured a house in the Arab quarter, where the people much more readily go to them. Besides three additional missionaries going forth immediately in connection with this Mission, ten others have expressed their readiness to go, and will, if accepted, be sent forward as soon as possible.

GARFIELD HOUSE, RYDE.—This House, for the benefit of governesses, teachers, and young women in business, conducted under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A., is admirably suited to those requiring rest and change, combining the advantages of pure air and lovely scenery with the comforts of a refined home. Perhaps some may be glad to avail themselves of such a Home as is here offered on very reasonable terms during the coming Christmas and New Year holidays.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE MID-PASSAGE OF LIFE.

Genesis XXX.

In our last, we saw how Jacob built for himself a home. But, ah! what a home! The presence of the two sisters there was fatal to its peace. They who had been happy enough as sisters before he came, could not now live in such close quarters as wives of the same husband without incessant jealousy and heart-burning. Each had her own grievance. Poor Leah knew that Jacob had never loved her, and that she was not the wife of his choice; and though God compensated her by giving her that pride of Oriental women, a family of sons, yet even this was a new source of anguish to her, for Rachel envied her. Frightfully desolate was she in that home; and the names of her sons are like so many landmarks of her misery. But Rachel must have been equally miserable; true, she had her husband's love, but she could not be sure of keeping it, and she had the mortification of seeing her sister's children growing up as her husband's heirs. How eagerly she prayed, and fretted, and proudly chafed!

What wonder, then, that the children grew up wild and bad? Reuben, unstable as water, excitable and passionate; Simeon, quick to obey, but quick to desperate cruelty; and Levi, a willing accomplice in his crime. When children turn out badly, and the beautiful gate of childhood does not lead to the fair temple of mature life, it is generally the fault of the home training, and it is more often the result of what they see, than of what they are taught. Whatever Jacob may have been, and I fear that his example was none of the best, yet the impressions received, in the women's tents, of high words and evil passion, would be enough to ruin any child. Beware how you act at home. Remember what keen little eyes are watching you, and with what absolute mimicry they will repeat what they see.

But it is not so much Jacob's home life, as his business dealings, that we have now to consider.

He served fourteen years, as a dowry for his two wives, and at the time when Rachel gave birth to her first-born (Joseph) that period had elapsed. So soon as mother and child were able to undertake so long and fatiguing a journey, Jacob declared his intention of returning to Canaan, and this resolve was perhaps precipitated by a message from Rebekah, to say that there was now no further reason for his absence.

This proposal alarmed Laban, who had learnt to value his services, and was much too astute to let him go without making an effort to retain so valuable a servant. "Tarry," said he, "I pray thee, if I have found favour in thine eyes, for I have learned by experience that the Lord hath blessed me for thy sake." Jacob at once caught at the opportunity of making an independent provision for his large and increasing family, and the bargain was struck.

Eastern sheep are almost wholly white, the goats black, the parti-coloured rare. Jacob proposed, therefore, that all the brown and speckled should be at once removed, and that all of that colour, which the flock produced afterwards, should be his wage. There was no harm in this, unless he had already made up his mind to take the unfair advantage of Laban, which is a dark blot on his name. Supposing that this were the case, we have here a humiliating picture of two unprincipled men, each trying to outwit the other: Laban chuckling over his bargain, and taking care to remove, not only the young, but the old, and sending them off under the care of his sons; Jacob, laughing in his sleeve, because he knew, or thought he knew, a plan of winning to himself a great advantage. But whether this were premeditated in the first instance or not, it is certain that Jacob acted as a cheat and a rogue. Laban entrusted his flocks to his care without supposing for a moment that he would tamper with the usual course of nature. Jacob, on the other hand, did not scruple to use every art to secure his own advantage at Laban's cost; taking means to procure for himself the produce of the strongest of the flock, and to leave to Laban the enfeebled and the weak.

It is very surprising to find how eagerly some of the older commentators try to vindicate Jacob in this. They might almost as soon sprinkle rose-water on a sewer. And it certainly lowers the standard of morality to attempt to prove that there was not very much harm after all in what Jacob did. I feel no temptation to do this.

The Bible does not hesitate to tell us the very worst about its heroes, that we may better magnify the grace of God, which, out of such materials, could create trophies of mercy. Let Jacob be painted in colours borrowed from Rembrandt's brush, and there is all the more wonder that the grace of God could overcome his duplicity and cunning, and make of him a diamond of the very first water.

Let us draw near, and remonstrate with Jacob, as he sits beside his flocks, in the scorching Eastern sun; and let us carefully notice his excuses and pleas.

He might urge, first, the necessity of self-protection. My uncle is bent on defrauding me, and keeping me down, and if I didn't do this he would succeed. You must meet a man on his own ground, and, as he has chosen to play the rogue with me, I cannot see the harm of turning his own weapons on himself." This reasoning did not die with Jacob; it is still passed round the world in act and word, and good men are sometimes sorely tempted to make use of it. It is undoubtedly hard to find that another man is taking an unfair advantage of you by manœuvres which, from your soul, you loathe. But is that a justification for you to resort to them? This has come into your life as a test, to prove whether you believe that the world is ordered by God or the devil. If you believe it is the devil's world, it is quite likely that you will try to hold your ground, or coin an advantage by arts which he alone would approve. But if you really believe in the Almighty God, you will be sure that falsehood must ultimately fail, and righteousness finally win, and you will meet fraud by faith, cunning by conscience, and violence by a Divine virtue. Goliath may wear armour, but that is no reason why David should. Remember how the Lord hath said: "I will keep thee." Your competitors may do mean and dirty tricks, but you will live to see them trapped in their own pits and pierced by their own swords; whilst if you continue to do right, you will go steadily forward to success, as the sun at noon rids himself of the clouds that obscured his early rays. "Trust in the Lord, and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Fret not thyself in any wise to do evil, for evil-doers shall be cut off. The Lord shall be thy confidence, and shall keep thy foot from being taken."

He might urge, as a second plea, the familiar formula, Business is business. "It is quite right to speak of Bethel when that sacred anniversary comes round, but it is out of the question to suppose that I can act and speak in my daily business as I did when that angel ladder glistened before my view. Business must be regulated on its own distinct laws, and they are quite different to those which obtain at Bethel." It is strange to hear professing Christians speak thus. They have one standard of morality for the Lord's day, and another for the other six. They permit things in business which are contrary to the spirit and letter of the Word of God, and which they would not sanction for a moment in the ordinary dealings of daily life, and they quiet their conscience by the easy motto, Business is business. I never can understand what difference there is in the morality of an act, because it has to do with buying and selling, or why we should not apply to such an act the same principles by which we judge other actions. According to the practice of some, we should read the golden rule thus: "Do as you would be done by, except in business. 'Do not steal' applies everywhere, except in shops and factories. Lying lips are always an abomination to the Lord, except when a salesman wants to dispose of some soiled goods." If this were the case, the larger part of the life of most men would be outside the circumference of God's commands. But it cannot be. The moralities of the Gospel resemble the law of gravitation, to which nothing is secular, nothing common, but which determines the pathway of a grain of dust on the autumn breeze as well as the march of worlds.

But Jacob might urge, as his third plea, that this was the general practice. "Other shepherds practise it. Laban must know all about it, or he might know. When you are with Chaldeans, you must do as Chaldeans do. I am not worse than others." But a universal practice does not condone sin; this is the difference between God's laws and man's. Let all men break a human law: it stands abrogated on the statute book, it cannot be enforced. But though all men break a Divine law, it will exact its penalty from all. Multitudes may have sinned together, but they will not be able to screen each other, or to escape. And if you do a mean thing, it will come back to roost in your heart, and will find you out with its curse, though you may be one of a crowd.

But he might urge, as his fourth plea, that chicanery was necessary to obtain bread. "A man must live, you know." But the plea cannot stand. There is no must about it. Where should we have been to-day if all the martyrs had argued that it was more important to live than to do right? Every man has to choose between these two. Many men deem life more important than righteousness, and, like the nautilus, they drop out of sight when storms sweep the sea; they are fair-weather Christians, and are of too soft a stuff to make martyrs. Others reckon that it is not necessary for them to live, but it is necessary for them to do right. They say, what Pompey said, when his friends besought him not to risk his life upon a tempestuous sea, "It is necessary for me to go; it is not necessary for me to live." This surely is the logic of faith. A man may be well content to suffer the loss of all things, and to die, if he may keep inviolate the priceless jewels which God has entrusted to his care.

Jacob's double-dealing appeared to be a success. "The man increased exceedingly, and had much cattle, and maidservants, and menservants, and camels, and asses." But what men call success, which is sometimes a very superficial and temporary thing, proves nothing as to the rightness or wrongness of a life. It is not by the glitter of gold that God rewards his faithful servants. Many a noble life in the sight of God has been a sad failure, when judged by human standards. And many a failure in the judgment of man has been a royal success in the estimation of the angels. When a tide of gold has been setting in towards some men, it has been allowed to come as a judgment and a curse, that they might be blinded to destruction. And in many cases that tide has been restrained, that it might be more possible for the soul to attain to perfect health.

I demur to the common use of the phrase, "Honesty is the best policy;" no doubt, it is so in reality and at the end, though not always in appearance and at the beginning. But if we are simply going to be honest, because it pays, we are basing the fabric of our lives on too low a level, and our foundation may give way in days of storm. We must be honest, not because of good policy, but because of good principle, because it is right, and noble, and God-like; yea, because it pleases God. Let us do right, and we shall be happier with scanty means and a good conscience, than those who have all that heart could wish, but are haunted by memories of the means by which their fortunes were acquired; memories, that like the ghost of the murdered king, in the immortal drama, arise to mar the merriment of the splendid feast. "A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked."

Do not draw a line of separation between the house of God and the house of business. The counting-house and the shop may be as much the house of God as the holiest shrine, where generations have knelt in prayer. A devout soul will find God everywhere, and will abide with God in every calling in which it is called. If you cannot have the companionship of Jesus in the paths of daily business, by all means abandon them. But if they are at all legitimate, you will find Him at your side, though his presence is veiled from all other eyes beside.

Do what you have to do in the name of the Lord Jesus. In that name you are wont to pray. In that name learn to do your work. Speak that name over the most menial tasks, and they will glisten with heavenly beauty. Speak it over doubtful things, and their true character will be revealed, as the tempter sprang from the toad, when touched by the spear of Ithuriel. Speak it over difficulties, and the iron gates will own the spell, and open to you of their own accord.

Take the Lord Jesus into your partnership. Consult Him before branching out into new directions, or consigning goods to fresh customers, or making large purchases. Let every transaction and every ledger be freely open to his eye. Let every transaction be laid before Him, for Him to close or open as He will. And be sure to divide with Him the profits, which are his due. A business life, with such sanctions, could never strand on the shoals of bankruptcy.

Above all, realise that you are the slaves of Jesus Christ. In the olden days of slavery, a master would sometimes put a trusted slave into a position of great responsibility, where he was permitted even to trade for his owner. But his brains, his muscles, and his gains were all another's. Everything had to be used and accounted for on that one condition. And what are we but the purchased possession of the Son of God? What is our business, but a branch of our stewardship for Him, as it is also a training school for us? What is there we can call our own? It is He that giveth us power to get wealth, and his image and superscription are evident on every coin. "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price, wherefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's."

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOLS.

The fortieth annual report shows that this good work has been fully maintained. In the schools there are over six hundred scholars, with a staff of thirty-six teachers. About forty lads attend a class, which could be considerably enlarged if there were more room. The Band of Hope and Blue-ribbon Mission are prospering; sixty-seven scholars received prizes at the annual meeting of the Ragged-school Union, for having kept their places twelve months and upwards, and having attended the Sunday-school regularly.

There are other evidences of success in the improved taste of the young for pure literature, which, being widely circulated by the two city missionaries, is producing a silent influence not to be mistaken. The open-air and other services are well attended, and several instances have come to light in which the good teaching of previous years has proved effectual in reforming the lives of those who came under its influence, and making them good citizens. During last winter 10,549 good nourishing dinners were given to poor destitute children. The Superintendent is Mr. J. C. Sherrard, 10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.—Eight years ago Miss Phelps, the well-known American story writer, built a little cottage for a summer home on the rocks of East Point, at one side of Gloucester Harbour. She saw how intemperance on Eastern Point added to the hard lot of fishermen's families, and through her efforts a reform club of sixty-five members was sustained there. A club-room had been otherwise secured; it was brightened with pictures and music; addresses were delivered and sermons preached to the men, but her personal work was of a deeper and more wearing sort. She made herself the friend of each one. They came to her house with their hopes and despair, their temptations and troubles. The nervous strain of sympathy and anxiety, with literary overwork some years ago, caused her strength to give way, and she has not yet physically recovered.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"BE YE WARMED AND FILLED."

We have by no means exhausted the catalogue of those in our leviathan city who are seeking to prove their faith by their works, in "warming and filling" the destitute among whom they minister. There are scores of quiet plodding workers who do not, as a rule, cry out loudly for help; we trust they will be helped none the less. Meantime we condense some further appeals that have reached us:—

Mr. R. T. Smith, 13, Barrowgate-road, Chiswick, W., craves help towards relieving the wants of the poor in that district.

The vicar and churchwardens of St. Andrew's, Lambeth, appeal for aid in relieving distress in that parish. Gifts in money, clothing, or old linen will be gratefully received by the vicar, Rev. Trevor Fielder, 108, Stamford-street, S.E.

Mr. B. Wire (25, Church-row, Bethnal Green, E.) pathetically pleads for the wherewithal to enable him to supply poor children with free breakfasts, and garments that will resist the cutting wintry winds. Who can possibly resist the cry of the suffering children?

Rev. P. Gast (12, Noel-street, Islington, N.) is at his wits' end, he informs us, to know how he may relieve the wants of many widows with families dependent on them, and households where the breadwinner is sick, or out of employment. This fact needs no argument to back it up.

Mr. R. Bilke, of the Union-hall Mission, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, W., is devising large plans for distributing temporal relief among the many poor in the neighbourhood of his various Gospel halls. We believe such efforts by Christian workers are the best kind of substitute for the cold charity of the "relieving officer."

Mr. John Kirk, Secretary of the Ragged School Union (Exeter Hall, W.C.), is impatient in the intensity of his desire "to relieve the wants and brighten the lives of the 100,000 hungry children and adults cared for by the 3000 and odd workers at the Ragged School Missions." To this end he craves gifts of money, clothing (new or old), boots, &c.

Mr. C. Coleman, of the Dock Labourers' Mission, 32, Chamber-street, E., is giving free teas to the many unfortunate men in that locality who "can get no work to do." In The Daily News, Mr. G. R. Sims last week described the pitiful condition of these men. Any help sent to Mr. Coleman will do something to alleviate their distress.

Miss Bontein (22A, Devonshire-street, W.) earnestly asks for help for the Ashley Mission, Bethnal Green, E., at which there are a mothers' meeting of three hundred, factory classes, and working men's classes. Many of these men are in deep distress through want of work. Miss Bontein is anxious to provide bread and coals for the destitute.

Mr. T. R. Armitage (27, Red Lion-square, W.C.), Chairman of Committee of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, sends a strong plea for the blind poor, who are specially helpless at this season. He asks a kind public to show gratitude for the possession of sight by enabling him to give food, coals, and money to these afflicted fellow-citizens.

Mr. J. Snowden (26, Fairfield-road, Bow, E.), Superintendent of the Gospel Mission, Plimsoll-street, Poplar, is equally earnest and importunate, though the scope of the Mission is evidently not extensive, compared with some of the preceding institutions.

Mr. P. Platt, Secretary of the Field Lane Ragged School and Refuges (Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.), says there are already signs of great privation amongst the respectable poor in that part of the city; the visitors constantly report "no work," which means no pay and no breakfast. This is a doleful outlook, and it depends on a sympathetic public how far the dark cloud is to be gilded with a silver lining.

Miss F. Hastings (4, Fulham-place, Paddington-green, W.) is collecting clothing for poor mothers and children in the district of St. Luke's, and is also anxious to give them a little good cheer at Christmas time. She invites partners for this "paying concern."

Mr. George Fuller (54, Liverpool-road, Islington, N.), Superintendent of the Sermon-lane Mission, is a man of a very tender and sympathetic spirit, and he is greatly moved with compassion at the destitute condition of those around him. He pathetically pleads for help to enable him to give soup dinners and gifts of bread and coals, and also to minister to the wants of many suffering sick ones. He is at present deprived of the active help of his life partner, who has been laid aside for some months; all the more he needs outside co-operation and support.

A HALFWAY HOUSE.

Clifton-street Schoolroom (Wesleyan), Wandsworth-road, was recently thrown open as a free reading-room and library for working men. The room will be open every week evening, with but one exception, when the religious service of the chapel is held. As explained by the chairman, Mr. T. A. Ibbetson, at the inaugural gathering, the reading-room can be used as "a quiet resting-place—a halfway house between the workshop and the home," so that if a workman could not go home first, he might drop in direct from work, bearing with him the honourable stain of labour; or, if he found time, and preferred to run home, have a cup of tea, and kiss the children as they were put to bed, an hour or two occupied in reading would be much better spent than in drinking liquor at the public-house, for he would find a decided advantage in the stimulus to mental cultivation over the stimulant of the intoxicating cup. It was hoped to win back to home and peace those who had forfeited both through too frequent visits to the public-house. The free reading-room was to be a second home, and there was to be no conflict between the two.

The idea of what a working-men's reading-room should be was stated by the Treasurer (Mr. Charles Fowle)—viz.: "A room well lighted and accessible. You push open the door; at once sit down and read as long as you like without let or hindrance, and with the feeling as if you were in your own house." A hope was strongly expressed by the several speakers, who included Mr. George Garlick and Rev. William Waters, that the ratepayers of Lambeth might yet see their way to the adoption of the Free Libraries Act. There were at least fifty publications on the tables, mostly the gifts of friends and members of the committee.

MR. MOODY AT HARVARD.—During Mr. Moody's visit to this far-famed University, near Boston (Mass.), he preached each evening and held afternoon Bible services. The student element has been smaller than expected, ranging from about 500 the first night to 100 or 150. In the Bible services he has been especially strong and tender. He has evidently relied more than ever on prayer, and fervent, tender, searching presentations of the truth, and has not used the inquiry-room at all, though there has been more familiar talk in the church after the regular service.

SAILORS' REST, OPORTO.—A "Sailors' Rest" has recently been opened in this place, through the instrumentality of the Oporto Y.M.C. Association, aided by the contributions of many firms and private persons. It is provided with books, papers, writing materials, and other means of occupation and amusement; also coffee and other temperance refreshments at a low charge. Every Sunday two services are held at the "Rest," besides frequent singing and prayer at other times. The Oporto Y.M.C. Association was formed about a year ago by a few Christians who desire to extend the kingdom of Christ. Any further information regarding either the Y.M.C. Association or the "Sailors' Rest" will be given with pleasure to anyone interested, by TAKING THEM BY THE HAND.

SOMERS TOWN BLIND-AID SOCIETY.

"Those who would help the blind, must do as Jesus did—take them by the hand." These wise words, recently spoken, may well serve as an introduction to a brief account of "The Somers Town Blind Aid Society," for which we desire to secure the sympathy and help of our readers.

Begun in 1864, this Society has steadily and unobtrusively carried on, at a comparatively trifling outlay, a mission of most real and Christlike helpfulness among the poorer blind of London. Its objects are briefly summed up thus:—

To influence the blind Christward and heavenward.

To provide a weekly entertainment; summer excursions; winter tea meetings, &c.

To send a lady visitor weekly to the homes of the blind.

To grant small pensions.

To provide medical advice and medicine free of cost to the blind.

To send ailing blind for short periods to the country or seaside.

To strengthen and supplement all efforts at self-help; to provide nourishment in time of sickness; to aid in time of distress, and otherwise assist needy and deserving blind.

At the outset, the weekly entertainments were the sole, and for some years the principal, feature in the work. Some dozen years ago, what was then called a "class," grew into a Society, and the sad needs of the blind became better known. Other means of helpfulness were therefore started, direct evangelistic effort being kept in the forefront. Stringent regulations were as far as possible avoided, and the personal element was encouraged, so that blind and workers should thoroughly know each other, and thus the influence be from heart to heart, and the help given be with discrimination. The extreme need for this and kindred societies was more and more deeply impressed on the hearts of the workers as the hard necessities of the blind became known to them. In the great majority of cases blindness comes in adult life, when learning a fresh trade or earning a livelihood is almost an impossibility. Moveover, the disease which causes the eyesight to fail, too often weakens the constitution, and tells terribly on the nervous system. To sensitive natures under these circumstances the temptation is to lose faith, and simply to suffer and to sink.

Shall we visit one or two homes where our blind friends reside, and where we are well known guests? We find our way through dingy streets, and, passing up a narrow staircase, knock at a little door. Hearing a quiet "come in," we enter. The room is small, and poorly furnished; still it is clean, and bears the marks of efforts at ornamentation. One solitary figure is seated by the fire; it has sat there alone all day! The hands are crossed upon the lap, the face is a plaintive one, but sweet, and bearing a peaceful expression, and a look of having sorely suffered and conquered! No need to introduce ourselves—at the first word spoken our voice is recognised, and our welcome is the welcome of a friend. We hear nothing but words of thankfulness and trust; and watch the dear face brighten as the cheering talk goes on. "I never feel lonely now, for God is with me, and you have given me all I want," are her parting words. We found her years gone by—bereft of both her parents, blind, friendless, and almost literally starving; we supplied her wants, sent her for restoration to the seaside, procured her a kind, Christian visitor, and are still able to provide a small pension.

We enter another humble home. In one apartment we find a mangle, and turning the handle a blind man. His face, his manner, speak all too plainly of better days. A little daughter is folding the linen for him. Neatly-caned chairs, ready for the customer, are piled up on one side. In an adjoining room is the wife, refined, delicate, gentle, busily preparing a frugal meal. All looks simple comfort, peace, and industry. With what a loving welcome we are greeted! It is difficult here to realise our first visit, for all looks so changed; but we remember the fireless grate, the empty cupboard, the look of woebegone care on all the faces—the blind man pressing his hand to his head, as he vainly endeavoured to cane a chair, and his sorrowful "I cannot get it right, and the worry makes my poor head so bad!" We recall his story, how from a position of respectability sudden blindness reduced him to the extremest poverty. We took his case in hand, paid for lessons in chair-caning, gave a weekly allowance, sent a visitor, provided clothing, got his sick wife and child into a Convalescent Home. The gratitude shown has been overwhelming, and it has been proved by unflagging efforts on the part of man and wife to do as much as possible towards their own and their children's support.

We find our way to another small room. Here, all looks cheerful comfort! Flowers are on the mantelshelf, and a clean cloth is spread. A bright fire is burning, and a cosy cat reposing near. This is the abode of two young blind girls, and we find the one deftly knitting while the other reads aloud a book in raised type. They jump up eagerly to greet us, and tell with enthusiasm of what their visitor had last been reading; of how they enjoyed their last Thursday evening, and how well they had sold their last stock of work. Both faces look happy. Both are Christian girls. We well recollect our first introduction to the one—a young maid-of-all-work in a dismal-looking house. Her sight had been gradually fading, and when first we found her the last lingering light was just dying out. We remember the utterly hopeless look of the dreary little face, and how at the first words of kindness the poor, sightless eyes overflowed. We took her to our care, furnished a small room, allowed a weekly pension, and subscribed to a kindred institution where she learns the "dotting system," by which in time she may help to support herself.

One more visit. We knock at a little door and pause, for there is no responding voice. We open and enter. A widow lives in this tiny room; she is kneeling by the bed, her head bowed as if in agony. At last she hears us, and slowly rises. What is the new great trouble? we at once anxiously ask. "Oh! if my Father would only let me die," she exclaims, "for I have no hope here now." We cannot understand, for we have been supplying all her wants, and have sent her true and loving friends. A sobbing explanation follows—someone had told her her allowance was to be stopped. Stupefied with grief, she had crept to her home—how, she knew not—and for three days had been passing through such sorrow as may God spare you and me. It was all a mistake; and how the poor white face gradually gladdens as we say so! She cannot speak at first; but when she does, it is to murmur a fervent blessing, and to add: "God knows the weight you have lifted from my heart." Hers was a case of great trial. While a loving husband lived she hardly realised the great affliction of her blindness, but his long illness used up all the savings, and his death left her destitute. To lose him, and to be blind, was sorrow sore enough; and when the cruel necessity of breaking up her little home, and parting with her little treasures, pressed upon her, she was well-nigh crushed. We came to her just then, and in the months that have followed have cared for all her wants, thanking our Heavenly Father who sent us to the timely rescue of his well-nigh broken-hearted child.

These are but typical cases, taken almost at random, and neither more nor less touching than those we could tell of by the score. We could tell of others, alas! from which the demons drink and deception force us to withhold a helping hand!

And now, will you not accompany us again to one of our Thursday evening gatherings, and see for yourself our touching array of sightless faces? faces on which the expression of hard, patient endurance is wondrously blended with rare resignation and even hopefulness; faces which lighten marvellously, in spite of their sightlessness, at the sound of a kindly voice or the touch of a friendly hand. See the touching spectacle of sightless age, leaning for support and guidance on the arm of childhood: vigorous men struck blind in the prime of life, helpless now and utterly dependent; blind husbands with blind wives; blind mothers, fondling bright-eyed little children, and feeling tiny faces on which they never here can gaze! Young girls and youths doomed from early years to lives of perpetual darkness!

All are poor, some terribly so; some are cleanly and attractive, others the reverse; but on every face is stamped at least the one attractiveness—true attraction to those who, like the loving Master, come "to minister"—of utter need! The gathering is opened by prayer (generally by one of our blind) for the Father's presence and blessing. A hymn follows, in which all heartily join; words of kindness are then spoken by those in charge, and the announcements made as to the evening's entertainment. These entertainments vary much—lectures, readings, music, always interesting, often most excellent. Sometimes a whole oratorio, or high-class concert, may be given by a large band of performers, sometimes a reading by one friend alone. Subjects religious, political, social, instructive, amusing, are all brought forward in them.

Our blind love their Thursday evenings, and endless are the testimonies as to the beneficent work they do. Pass round the room and speak to one and another. They will tell you how this is the brightest spot of all the week; how they count upon it and look forward to it, and how it brings them food for pleasant happy afterthought in the long and lonely hours of the days that follow.

Aid is needed to carry on this work. Our great Master while on earth loved and helped the blind; let us count it our precious privilege to love and help them too. The President of the society is Dr. Oswald Dykes, of Regent-square Presbyterian Church, in connection with which the work was originally started. The hon. secretary is Mrs. Starey, 53, Hilldrop-road, Camden-road, N., who will gladly give information, forward reports, receive subscriptions, or hear from ladies willing to become visitors.

ROMISH DOGMAS.

The Church of Rome claims to be Apostolical, immutable, and infallible. The following table will show how far this is from being true:—

	A.D.
Prayer for the dead began	200
Worship of saints, martyrs, and angels	350
Worship of the Virgin Mary was developed about	431
Priests began to wear a different dress from the laity	500
Worship in an unknown tongue	600
Papal supremacy	606
Worship of images and relics imposed	788
Baptism of bells	965
Obligatory celibacy of the Priests	1000
Infallibility of the Church	1076
Sale of indulgences	1190
Dogma of transubstantiation officially decreed	1215
Auricular confession officially imposed	1215
The cup kept back from the laity officially sanctioned	1415
Purgatory officially recognised	1439
Romish tradition put on a level with the Scriptures	1540
The immaculate conception proclaimed	1854
The Pope's temporal power proclaimed	1864
Papal infallibility proclaimed	1870

The Reformers are accused of being innovators. What can be said to this continued accession of ecclesiastical superstition, to which much more might be added?—Témoin de la Vérité.

A MONTH OF PRAYER.—The noon hour at Fulton-street, New York, during December, is being devoted to "prayer for a fresh baptism from on high." The object of all this is that there may be special preparation for a profitable observance of the Week of Prayer, so soon to be on hand.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

BAND OF MERCY MOVEMENT.—A number of these bands of young people for the promotion of kindness to one another, and to animals, has been formed lately in and around Torquay. Lord and Lady Mount-Temple have taken a leading part in the movement. There are now thirty-two branches in the district, with 5400 members.

REV. DR. SOMERVILLE'S TOUR.

SOME further interesting details of Dr. Somerville's visit to the Highlands and Islands of Scotland are given in a recent number of The North British Daily Mail. The localities referred to are in the north and west of Sutherland, the west of Ross, Cromarty, and Inverness-shires. Everywhere the people evinced the utmost interest in the mission by the large numbers in which they attended the services, and the long distances travelled, whether it was Sunday or week day, noon or night, rain or fair.

The minister of one church has a district of 350 square miles to superintend, and his congregation consists almost exclusively of gamekeepers, foresters, and shepherds, whose lonely dwellings lie miles apart. Yet, so ruthless have been the conversions of sheep farms into deer forests, that after many applications this preacher of the Gospel has been unable to obtain enough grazing for a horse. In many cases the ministers had at first shown some sympathy with the crofters, but when unable to go to the extreme length some desired, the people turned against them, and in some cases separated themselves from the church. But, notwithstanding this, Dr. Somerville was warmly welcomed wherever he went.

At Lochinver, the church is about two miles from the village, but three times over it was crowded with eager listeners. From Ullapool on Lochbroom, a town of some importance, where the Free Church is large, and where the cheerful psalmody was refreshing after the doleful singing of many of the Gaelic congregations, the party reached Little Lochbroom. Here the people, being without a church, worship in a boat-house by the shore. At the next place the church is a large, but unattractive cavern, containing some wooden benches, and is reached by a steep path, which conducts to the base of the sea cliff, and here a congregation of from one hundred and fifty to three hundred, meets at regular intervals for Divine worship. At another station, twelve miles distant, the place of worship is a similar cave, while at Aultbea, where about four hundred assembled in the church, the building is in such a deplorable state that a severe gale may bring the whole structure to the ground.

Shieldaig, in the wilds of Applecross, has a remarkable history. At the Disruption, in 1843, the entire population adhered to the Free Church, but the proprietor, Sir John Stewart, then Vice Chancellor of England, sternly refused a site for a church, and for thirty-four years the congregation worshipped under the broad canopy of heaven during summer rain and winter snow. At length, the proprietor coming to reason, a site was granted whereon was erected a large church and commodious manse. As several arms of the sea divide the township whose people attend this church, a big boat, capable of carrying one hundred persons, has been provided for their use on Sundays.

The church at Arisaig is the rallying-point for the Protestants scattered over a very large area, into which the light of the Reformation has never properly penetrated. Kilmallie has also a memorable history, for in 1843 for a long time the poor people had to worship on the seashore between high and low water mark. A drive of thirty-two miles along the shores of the Caledonian Canal revealed the fact, noticeable elsewhere, alas! that to a great extent the land has been emptied of its people. During the forty days spent in this visit, service was conducted in thirty-seven localities, and forty-eight sermons were preached, of which twenty-four were translated into Gaelic. Throughout, the attendance of the people, the manner in which they flock to services, and especially to Communions, their hearty singing, and, generally speaking, their attachment to their ministers, who in many cases labour under most extraordinary difficulties, were very encouraging evidences of spiritual life.

CURING OPIUM SMOKERS.

BY REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

IT gives no small joy to the friends of Christian missions, and especially to the missionaries labouring in it, when a mission station, or out-station, established at the cost of some missionary society, and maintained, perhaps, at considerable expense, begins to bear fruit. When souls are turned from darkness to light; when there is hope that others have with true hearts received the Lord Jesus Christ, the encouragement and joy are very great. Still, there is always an element of uncertainty that throws concern over the joy, as long as the work is entirely dependent on the foreigner for its support; and the question often arises: supposing that support were withdrawn, and perhaps persecution (instead of countenance) overtook the converts, how far would there be found spiritual life sufficient to maintain the strain? There is, on the other hand, usually a vigorous vitality that gives the greatest hope for the future in work that is commenced from the spontaneous efforts of native Christians, which has been maintained wholly by their unpaid labours. Not a few instances of this kind of effort are now to be found in China. It will probably interest your readers to hear of one which it has been our joy and privilege recently to visit.

Leaving the capital of Shan-Si, Tái-yüen Fu, on Monday, July 19, we reached the station of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions at Tai-ku Hien on Tuesday night, and were hospitably entertained by the kind missionaries there, Messrs. Stimson and Clapp. The distance between the capital and that station is about thirty-six English miles. From Tai Fu we journeyed southward, with great difficulty, owing to heavy rains and all but impassable roads, until Thursday, the 29th, accomplishing about 125 English miles. The walls of Hoh-chau were then seen in the distance.

Soon afterwards, we passed through several fine archways, with appropriate inscriptions, such as "To the sonorous music of the rivers and the grandeur of the hills." We entered the North Gate by a fine archway, and pursued our course to the centre of the city, where there is a very fine drum-tower, ornamented with porcelain tiles and mouldings. There, turning down the street towards the West Gate, for a short distance, we came to a respectable, but modest-looking, building, bearing the title of "The Heaven's Call Office." What was the special call or command of Heaven in the mind of the proprietor when he opened this establishment for the cure of opium-smokers, and the spread of the Gospel, we do not know. It may have been "Awake to righteousness and sin not," or some similar exhortation in the Word. The clean, neat appearance of the very entrance told of the refining influence of Christianity.

We entered the room which serves as chapel and reception-room; and were struck with surprise to see what a neat and pretty little place had been made of a room perhaps as difficult to make nice as could well be. At the head of it a strip of blue cloth running across from side to side bore four large Chinese characters on diamond-shaped pieces of bright red paper, and the brightly patterned piece of carpet hung up against the wall formed the back of what took the place of reading-desk or pulpit. The forms were tastefully covered with a little coloured cloth, which greatly improved their appearance; Chinese tracts neatly mounted and arranged on the walls, and interspersed with Mrs. Grimké's picture-cards, and one or two Chinese scrolls, gave a lively and cheerful appearance to a somewhat low and otherwise dark room. We inspected the bedrooms in which patients being cured of the habit of opium-smoking are to be found in those seasons of the year when the fields do not demand every available person.

The whole establishment had been opened and sustained by a Chinese Christian gentleman, a Mr. Hsi. The work was arranged on such a basis that it was hoped that it would become self-supporting; and I found that seventy-eight persons had already been cured of the habit of opium-smoking, of whom five or six appear to be hopefully converted to Christ, while there are other interested inquirers. Before leaving the city we had the joy of joining in Christian worship with some of the converts; and of wishing them God-speed in the good work in which they were engaged.

The following day we visited a similar institution established by the same Christian gentleman in the city of Chan-chéng Hien, fifteen miles further south. This establishment has been longer carried on, and the native brother in charge told us of thirty or more persons who now give good evidence of conversion to God, who have been blessed through this work. Thus in two important cities, which might have been without any Christian witness, and to which no missionary has ever been sent, there are permanent institutions, established by native Christians, abundantly fruitful to the praise and glory of GOD.

At Hung-tung Hien, some ten miles further to the south, a similar refuge has been established by Mr. Stanley Smith and Mr. Hsi conjointly. Meeting Mr. Hsi, he explained his view of the advantage of establishing such institutions. The authorities, he said, are bound to give countenance to any institution that tends to lessen the habit of opium-smoking; and it does not give as much annoyance to the officials and gentry, while it is not less effective than a chapel or mission station for the spread of the Gospel. The patients who are relieved are cured of a dreadful habit; and, at the same time, are brought for ten, twenty, or thirty days, according to the case, under the daily teaching of the Gospel, and the daily influence of Christian life. Feeling grateful for the benefit they have received, they cannot feel unkindly toward the Christians, even if they do not accept the truth themselves. In not a few cases, however, they continue to attend church worship after leaving, and considerable numbers of them have professed their faith in Christ by baptism, and joined the Christian Church.

I would ask the prayers of Christian friends for these works, and that God will raise up many similar men of capacity and zeal, to inaugurate Christian efforts of the kind in other parts of China.

PRAYER FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

IN connection with this subject a ladies' united prayer-meeting was held at the London Mission House, Blomfield-street, E.C., on Friday week. Representatives from several Women's Missionary Societies were present. Mrs. Wardlaw, of the L.M.S. Ladies' Committee, presided.

Mrs. Alexander Raleigh led her Christian sisters in the opening prayer, confessing the unfaithfulness of the churches to their high trust and privilege in the past; then, passing to thanksgiving for success granted past all deserving, she besought a fuller blessing on all missionary schools and colleges, and also for the work of the secular colleges of India. Mrs. Ellis, of the Baptist Zenana Mission, followed, interceding especially on behalf of the wives and daughters of India, and those who laboured among them. Mrs. James Mathieson made mention of the teeming millions of China. Among the other ladies who took part were Mrs. Meredith, Miss Kinnaird, Mrs. Everett Green, Mrs. Hurry, Mrs. Kennedy, &c. Many subjects relating to missionary work were remembered.

The proceedings were varied by reading short passages of Scripture and by singing.

SWISS HOUSE.—This Home for foreign governesses and nursemaids, situated at 15, Mecklenburgh-square, W.C., has during the past year admitted 168 persons to its advantages. The receipts from boarders show, nevertheless, a falling-off of more than £50 as compared with 1884; but this is attributable to the fact that the Home is now so well known that the boarders find situations much more quickly than formerly. There are now several foreign governesses on the books who are open to engagements for the Christmas holidays.

Letters to the Editor.

PRAYER FOR PARIS.

Dear Sir,—The main cry of distress in Paris is, What can be done for its young women? Since joining Mr. McAll's Mission, nearly seven years ago, I have had ample opportunities to view the wreck, and there are many here who sigh and cry for all the abominations. We need the prayers of Christian nations to bring down the power of wisdom and strength at such a time. I am informed that there are at least 50,000 girls registered on the police books, and that by no means represents the state of matters, for it could hardly be printed all that is going on.

Mothers, wives, sisters, friends, pray for some Divine agency that will help to save the city, for its cry is going up to heaven.—Yours faithfully,

Paris. Alex. Donaldson.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

Dear Sir,—In view of the approaching Christmas holidays, the Committee of the Children's Special Service Mission are desirous of making arrangements for special meetings for the many boys and girls who will then be home from school. We shall be pleased to arrange, as far as possible, for drawing-room services, and Scripture Union meetings, and also repeat the offer made last year, to give a magic lantern lecture on "Pilgrim's Progress," by one of our workers who has taken up this special branch of the work. We desire that this lecture should be considered as in the nature of a direct evangelistic effort, and that special prayer should be asked for blessing to rest upon it. Many Christian parents will doubtless be wondering how to have a children's party, in such a way as to interest young people, and, at the same time, be of real spiritual benefit, and we hope and believe that we have found in what is proposed one solution of the difficulty. It will be necessary, however, that immediate application should be made, and, as a general rule, we cannot offer to give the lecture referred to at a greater distance than twenty-five miles from London. The only expense we ask to be defrayed is that of travelling of lecturer and assistants, and carriage of lantern and oxygen gas (when used).—Yours faithfully, T. B. Bishop, Hon. Sec.

BISHOP TAYLOR.

My Dear Sir,—I have just been reading Notes and Comments, and notice the excellent suggestion of your Edinburgh correspondent, that your readers should raise the needful sum for Bishop Taylor's Mission steamer.

Now, The Christian has been one of my travelling companions for more than twenty years, and I feel a close personal interest in all that concerns its welfare and usefulness. I rejoice in the good it has accomplished in manifold ways, but chiefly in the blessing it has been made to Christians generally, and especially to Christian workers, and feel sure at your call so many will rally to the undertaking that it shall in no way be a burden, but give you much pleasure.

The Christian has set going many a good work in its lifetime, but it has never yet, I think, advocated a better cause or tried to render help to one more worthy.

From Bishop Taylor I caught an inspiration when a young disciple at Derby many years ago, and received as an evangelist an inheritance that has been a life-long blessing, and to which my success is clearly traceable.

My limited means preclude my doing much outside my "Village Mission," but, with your correspondent, I count it a privilege and a duty, in the present instance, to do what I can, and enclose herewith my first contribution, and remain, my dear Sir, yours faithfully,

Geo. D. Shipley.

FREEDOM OF OPEN-AIR WORSHIP.

Sir,—The Torquay Board of Health has procured an Act for local purposes, called the Torquay Harbour Act. Clause 38 of this Act is as follows:—

> No processions shall take place on a Sunday in any street or public place in the district, accompanied by any instrumental music, fireworks, discharge of cannon or firearms, or any other disturbing noise. Provided that the foregoing prohibition shall not apply to any of Her Majesty's naval, military, or volunteer forces.

For a breach of this provision, members of the Salvation Army have been sentenced to a fine of £5 each, or to one month's imprisonment, and they elected to go to prison. By this clause the Salvation Army is prevented from using their ordinary and most effective means of drawing together a crowd of persons for the purpose of bringing them under religious influences. Many in Torquay are satisfied that the Salvation Army has been doing a very good work, and, not wishing that it should be in any way impeded, have formed a Permanent Committee for the repeal of this clause, and for kindred purposes.

The committee contends that freedom of worship is assailed. To this it is replied that to march with singing and playing is not a part of freedom of worship. But if singing and playing and marching inside a church or chapel were forbidden by law, it would soon be seen that freedom of worship is involved in such exercises. It is, indeed, admitted that freedom of worship should be restrained in cases where its exercise would constitute a bonâ fide nuisance or interfere with the just rights of others. In all such cases, however, the common law has been found quite sufficient for the protection of the subject, and no special act is required; and it cannot be pretended that the noise made by the Salvation Army is at all greater or more intolerable than many others which are endured without complaint; and least of all can it be urged that the object of clause 38 is to provide a quiet Sunday free from street bands, when it legalises the use of them by military bodies.

It is sometimes urged that some such provision is necessary in order to put a stop to Socialistic processions. But each procession must be deal with on its own merits. If the Socialists do wrong, let them be punished for the wrong they do. The Salvation Army is not only innocent, but highly useful in its ameliorating influence upon the masses. It has also been said that permission given to Salvation Army processions would necessitate the legalisation of Roman Catholic processions. But if Roman Catholic processions have been illegal since the Reformation, the repeal of a clause of recent introduction cannot render them legal. Besides, Roman Catholic processions have no musical instruments, or singing, or disturbing noise; and it might be argued that the clause which forbids processions with these accessories, tacitly legalises those that are without them. Clause 38 is a poor barrier against Roman Catholic processions. Better repeal it, and leave that question as it stands at present.

This question does not merely affect Torquay, for the Permanent Committee have it upon evidence, which admits of no doubt, that the Standing Committee of the House of Commons insists upon the introduction of a provision similar to Clause 38 into every local Act which it passes, and, moreover, that it is purposed to introduce an Imperial measure for the whole country, which shall embody within it a similar provision. So that if there is any injustice in Clause 38 it is an injustice which may soon become general.

It is surely wise to observe the remote tendencies of any measure as well as the immediate purpose for which it is used, and to see if it contains some underlying principle, the general application of which would be dangerous. If once a particular body are prevented, on the ground of their being a public nuisance, from the exercise of a particular right, upon a particular occasion, the principle may soon be extended to other persons exercising similar rights, and upon other occasions.

The Torquay Harbour Act contains within it another clause, under the provisions of which all open-air preaching whatever, accompanied with singing, unless held in a desert, can be altogether extinguished; and if there is a design to introduce a provision similar to this into an Imperial measure, religious liberty, in the direction of freedom of open-air worship, may, if such design be carried into effect, receive its death-warrant. Clause 32 reads thus—

> Any householder, personally, or by his servant, or by any constable, may require any street musician or singer to depart from the neighbourhood of the house of such householder, and every person who shall sound or play upon any musical instrument, or sing in any street, near or within hearing of such house, after being so required to depart, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings.

Under this clause, any householder living within hearing distance of anyone singing at an open-air service may, by sending his servant, disperse the assembly.

It may be said that such clauses are not intended to operate against open-air services as they are usually conducted, and that there is no reason to fear that they shall be used for their suppression. Perhaps so. But is it safe to allow laws to be placed on the statute book, the strict letter of which is opposed to freedom of open-air worship? The time may come when someone may wish to put them into operation, and it will be comparatively easy to do so, if the appetite for religious intolerance is whetted by the partial suppression of some unpopular body, like the Salvation Army, and the general public becomes accustomed to the idea that out-door religious demonstration is a crime. How much better it is to exercise a jealous vigilance in time, and to strangle the monster of religious intolerance in the birth.—Yours obediently, N. S. Taylor, B.A., Clerk.

DEMORALISING REPORTS.

Sir,—Many people are bewailing the moral deterioration on the minds of the young and others which must result from the perusal of the proceedings of the Divorce Court in the columns of the daily papers.

One would be thankful if it were taken in hand vigorously, and the editors remonstrated with who are doing their best to reproduce the very crimes that are being adjudged; sowing, also, a sad harvest of contempt of superiors, and evil thoughts in every household they enter.

Yours, &c., C.

A LAST CHANCE FOR IRELAND.

Sir,—It is impossible for anyone to resist the conclusion that in Irish matters we have come to an end of our resources. The proposed remedies are simply leaps into utter darkness, and until the hearts and consciences of the people are touched, none of the proposed legislative remedies can possibly do more than alleviate the suffering. The root of the disease lies too deep for human instruments, and I venture to suggest that, if we call ourselves a Christian nation, it is about time that our spiritual guides should appoint a season for special prayer and national humiliation in this matter. While no class in Ireland is free from blame, it is, unfortunately, only too certain that the chief cause of the evil was the selfishness of the English ruler in the past. In God's sight all are guilty in the matter; but while we neglect Him in our prosperity, we are, to all intents and purposes, defying Him in our adversity, each one blaming his neighbour, none himself.

Is it not time that we changed our attitude as a nation?—Yours, &c., A Voice.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Dec. 19, 1 Tim. i. 1—17; Dec. 20, 1 Tim. ii. 1—15; Dec. 21, 1 Tim. iv. 1—16; Dec. 22, 1 Tim. vi. 1—21; Dec. 23, Psalm cxviii. 1—14; Dec. 24, Psalm cxviii. 15—29; Dec. 25, Psalm lxxii. 1—20.

BUNYAN'S HOME LIFE.

BY DR. A. WHYTE, EDINBURGH.[*]

A CELEBRATED preacher has said that Christ and woman, religion and love are two rocks which stand in the way of every man. If a man's dealings with Christ and woman are wise, he is saved; if they are unwise, he is lost. Build your houses for time and eternity on these two foundations. This was eminently true of John Bunyan. He met a blameless Puritan girl, and had grace enough to fall in love with her. One would think he would marry a woman who would not object to swaggering and swearing in her husband; but he did not. That there was some good in him is seen in the fact that, when one who made a profession of religion swore, his heart ached. He was scandalised when a Christian erred. At his wildest he would have nothing to do with immoral or irreligious women. Young men of our day do not go to the ball-room or the theatre for a companion for the fireside. The name of the Puritan girl is not written in any register on earth, but it is written in heaven. Newman says somewhere that our best benefactors are unknown; and so it is in this case. Bunyan's wife is worthy to be remembered with Mary, Eunice, and Monica (Augustine's mother).

Though the marriage turned out well, it was a great risk for the woman. She cannot be absolved from the condemnation of the Apostolic injunction, "Be not unequally yoked." But she did not hide her light under a bushel; she made it clear from the beginning on whose side she was. They were very poor. They had not so much household stuff as a dish or a spoon between them both. Yet she built a sweet nest, and lined it with religion and a maiden's love. Her only dowry was two books, "The Plain Man's Pathway to Heaven," and "The Practice of Piety," which her father had left her when he died. John Bunyan tells us in one of his sermons that his reading before his marriage was ballads, news-books, curious arts, and old fables. It would be hard work indoctrinating him with a taste for Puritan works; yet his wife managed it. He used to read with her, and grew to like the books, though all the while he could not appreciate the spiritual truths contained in them. Bacon, in his "Essays," declares that some books are to be tasted, some to be swallowed, some to be swallowed and digested. The books Bunyan got along with his wife should be swallowed and digested. They were the first spiritual meat of the great man of God who has fed so many.

Dr. Whyte drew a beautiful picture of what he called a Puritan interior. He showed Bunyan working on his kettles at the flaming forge, and his wife sitting over her book. At some point in her reading she would look up, and their eyes would meet. The scene would be worthy of a painter's pencil.

Two lessons might be drawn from this domestic passage. (1) Young man! look out for a wife better than yourself. This is not difficult to find. Go to a good nest. Incline to a woman who knows good books. It is an excellent courtship that can find a congenial topic of conversation in good books. (2) Scatter good books this Christmas. As we grow in grace, our pleasure bills should grow lighter and our bookseller's bills heavier. You do not know how much you can do for the best interests of men by scattering good books. Try it.

This rough outline can carry to the reader no conception of the imaginative touches and racy comments with which the lecture abounded. Dr. Whyte made the past the present. We saw the rough tinker wooing the Puritan maiden, and we caught a glimpse of the peace, and felt a breath of the sweetness she infused into the life of their home. The popular Edinburgh divine has the gift of a sanctified imagination, and knows how to use it. D. S.

[*] From a prayer-meeting address, at Free St. George's, Edinburgh, Tuesday, December 7.

THE PERILS OF THE DEEP.

THE recent disastrous gales which have strewn our coasts with wreckage, must surely have turned the thoughts of many hearts towards our brave sailors, who literally get their bread at the peril of their lives, and too often, whilst unprepared, go down amid the riot of the storm! Among the many Institutions that look after our sailors when on shore, and, by the preaching of "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," seek their eternal welfare, the Seamen's Christian Friend Society is one of the oldest, though not so widely known as it deserves to be. For over forty years it has been doing a most useful work among British and Foreign seamen, not only in London and Liverpool but in many other ports around our coasts. Its Institution for Seamen in Ratcliff Highway is the oldest place of the kind in that notorious locality; the reading-rooms are open for the free use of seamen all day long, and Gospel, temperance, and other meetings are held every night. The meetings are well attended, and the results are most cheering. The following are testimonies received during the past few days.

PEACE IN THE MIDST OF PERIL.

A Christian sailor who, when in port, is a constant attendant at the Seamen's Chapel, said:—"When our ship was struck last Sunday, we all knew she would go to the bottom in a few minutes. Strong men turned pale, but I felt calm, because Jesus was with me. Some of my mates, who had often jeered and persecuted me, came round me, saying, 'Bill, we always knew you were a man, and acted up to your profession, and we are sorry for what we have said.' I told them I forgave them, and I urged them to trust in Jesus."

GOOD NEWS FOR A SAILOR'S WIFE.

On leaving for sea a few months since, a sailor addressed a letter to one of the workers, and in it he said:—"I thought that nothing would ever touch my hard heart, but God's word from you has done it, and I am going away a saved man." At one of the meetings during the past week this sailor's wife said she had received a letter, and would like to read it:—"Dear wife, I hope you got my last letter, and the ten crowns I sent. Thank God that I have the knowledge that I am a child of God, and have my sins forgiven. Oh! it is blessed that we can commune with our Jesus both at sea and on land."

AN OFFICER'S LETTER TO THE CHAPLAIN.

"Dec. 3, 1886.—My dear Sir, will you permit me to thank you for your kindness to me in the faithfulness of your sermon on Sunday morning, November 14. It led me to think, and now I think—nay, I am sure, I may say, 'Christ is my Saviour and my friend.' and daily do I keep myself in constant call of Him with prayer and supplication. My past has been a bitter one. More than once have I hopelessly abandoned myself to despair, and tried to drown sorrow and remorse in intoxication and dissipation, and this, whilst seeming to have a gait of respectability and gentility. I shudder to think what my fate must have been if I had been cut off in the midst of my sins. Let me assure you of my prayers and sympathy in your holy work. There is much to do, and I wish I could do something, if it were only a little."

"SICK OF SIN."

"About two years ago," said a bright young sailor, "the Lord made me fair sick of sin, and I threw it all up and began trusting in Jesus. On Tuesday I am going home to see the old folks, whom I have not seen for many years. I've been a wild sea-boy, but they'll see the change in me now. I want the friends here to pray that I may be kept steadfast in the faith, and be made useful to others."

During this year the Society's work has been greatly extended, but the funds have fallen off through the decease of many generous supporters and the great depression in the shipping trade. In presiding at the last anniversary, Mr. George Williams said he considered that an enormous amount of work was done by this Society, and the money given to it was splendidly spent.

LADS IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

FOR some time past the great need of an Institute for the older lads in Ratcliff Highway has forced itself upon the friends at the Strangers' Rest. On Thursday, last week, in order, if possible, to bring the matter into practical shape, a conference was held, at which many persons interested were present. Miss Steer, Mr. R. C. Morgan, and Dr. Wilson earnestly pleaded the cause of the many poor lads whom such a scheme would benefit, and who, being too old and too difficult for Sunday-schools to manage, without anyone to help them, are going from bad to worse.

Mr. J. T. Isaacs made a statement as to what it was proposed to do if sufficient support were forthcoming. This was to take a house and open it as a Boys' Institute. A suitable corner house had been seen, the rent being £60. There was a large front shop, which would be fitted up as a coffee bar, and above are twelve rooms that might be adapted as class-rooms, where different trades might be taught besides ordinary instruction and the inculcation of the truths of the Bible—the chief object to be kept in view. For the proper conduct of such an Institute, a large staff of workers would, of course, be necessary, and Mr. Isaacs invited any who could spare one evening a week for this purpose to communicate with him at the Strangers' Rest, St. George's-street, E.

Rev. W. R. Mowll gave some particulars of the Grotto Home for boys of the criminal classes, and mentioned two cases in which lads who had been helped were now filling good positions in society. Dr. Squire, to whose instrumentality the success of the Whittington Club and Chambers is largely due, also gave some particulars of the working of that Institution.

Dr. Andrew Clarke, and Rev. C. H. Turner, incumbent of St. George's-in-the-East, were at the last moment prevented being present. Lady Clarke presented a number of prizes to the children, who were addressed by Miss Macpherson and Mr. Mowll.

SOUTH LONDON MISSION.

THE twenty-fifth anniversary of this Mission was celebrated on Wednesday week, at the Victoria Hall, Lancaster-street, Borough-road, Mr. Robert Paton presiding. After tea, prayer was specially offered for Mrs. Ashton, who for twenty years took such an active part in the Mission, but has been confined to her home through affliction for nearly five years.

Mr. R. E. Ashton briefly summarised the work over a period of thirteen years, during which time he has been Hon. Superintendent, relating instances of Divine aid rendered during times of affliction, adversity, and other difficulties. The record of the Mission for the past year is encouraging, numbers of young converts present at the meeting bearing witness. Mr. Paton gave an impressive address, in which he urged the importance of every servant of Christ being thoroughly purged from everything of a worldly character. Other speakers addressed the meeting, calling to remembrance Pentecostal scenes witnessed in the Victoria Hall years ago. An open meeting followed, lasting long after ten o'clock, during which Mr. Pluck, Mr. Arnold, and others, related the stories of their conversions, and bore witness for the work now carried on by the Mission.

THE CONTROVERSY regarding the organisation of the Mission Intérieure, France, which seems widening into questions of doctrine and practice of the Reformed and the Free Churches respectively, is still going on.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of Rev. Griffith John, of Hankow, China.

As announced, our next issue will be a Double Number, price 2d. Besides illustrated articles, poems, &c., suitable to the Christmas season, it will contain a special and very full report of the addresses at the Protestant Convention in Glasgow this week. These addresses, we believe, will embody an immense amount of valuable and reliable information on the different aspects of the Romish question, and we trust our readers will make an earnest effort to further their circulation among the masses of the people.

In a note in our issue of December 2, relating to Miss Steer's work at the Ratcliff "Bridge of Hope," it was stated that a friend had offered £100 towards the new building fund if nine others gave a like amount by December 3. This date was an error; it should have been December 31, so that the offer is still in force.

The New York Independent reports, in twelve columns of small type, a very able and exhaustive paper, read by Dr. G. F. Pentecost, before the National Council at Chicago, on the Relation of the Congregational Churches to the work of Evangelisation. In our next we hope to give some idea of the scope of this important document.

We are thankful to say that, in response to our suggestion a fortnight since, one of our readers has subscribed for copies to be sent to twenty-five missionaries at his expense, and several friends have accepted our offer to send a copy for four weeks for 4d. (post paid) to anyone likely to become a subscriber. We shall be greatly obliged for further co-operation of this kind.

Last Saturday a clergyman told us that a pretty child of twelve one day travelled in the same compartment. Arrived at Waterloo, a nice-looking woman, dressed as a sister of mercy, looked in, and asked her if anyone had come to meet her. Being told "No," the woman said she would take care of her. The clergyman told the child she had better wait, and soon after her own sister appeared. But for the clergyman's having his eyes open that poor child would have been kidnapped. If other travellers, with a heart at leisure from itself, would look out, they might similarly save a soul from death.

We are glad to see that the committee of the Children's Special Service Mission are making special arrangements for meetings during the Christmas holidays. We believe that many Christian parents find great difficulty in knowing how to interest boys and girls then spending their holidays at home, and at the same time to do something for them that will be of real spiritual benefit. The offer of the Mission to give a magic lantern lecture on "Pilgrim's Progress," and that, too, by way of direct evangelistic effort, is one that we think many Christian parents will welcome. The well-known allegory is of such marked interest to young people, as well as adults, that a "children's party" thus spent should be alike pleasant and spiritually profitable. A letter on this subject will be found in our correspondence columns.

The Franco-Prussian War threw upon public charity in only one province of Prussia nearly twelve thousand widows and over twenty-two thousand children, yet there are thoughtless people who talk and write glibly about war, as if its horrors were to be entered upon lightly.

When Cardinal Manning talks about "subduing an imperial race"—his fellow-countrymen—to the superstition of the Romish Apostasy, few of his countrymen want to hear him. But when he writes, as he has lately to The Times, on the condition of the needy and our responsibilities toward our poor brother, he writes more wisely. We commend the following words to the thoughtful consideration of all those who are disposed to elevate the dismal science to a platform above that of the Sermon on the Mount, with its simple lessons of practical brotherhood:—

> I have a true and reasoned respect for political economy within its legitimate sphere, but it is circumscribed by higher moral laws, to which, if it come in collision with them, it must at least for a time give way. If on the sound and strict principles of political economy, poverty and sickness could be remedied by thrift and provident dispensaries, I should rejoice; but, knowing, as we all must, that thrift and providence have as yet made little impression upon the multitudes who are poor, hungry, sick, and dying, we are compelled to relieve human suffering for which no sounder or more disciplined relief as yet exists. The good Samaritan did not delay to pour oil and wine into the wounds of the man half dead until he ascertained whether he was responsible for his own distress.

In another passage reference is made indirectly to a subject to which we have more than once returned, the necessity for providing healthier dwellings for the labouring poor; the fact being that, whilst London is the healthiest city in the world, the death-rate in the homes of the poor is double that in the homes of the rich, and as, for some time back, the Metropolis has been growing in wealth at the rate of twenty millions a year, it says but little for our civilisation, that the "lower classes" should be allowed to continue to die off, not merely under the baneful influences of competition and starvation wages, a result claimed to be essential to the free play of those social needs of which we hear so much nowadays, but also under the equally cruel, but more easily-preventible, influences of the unhealthy cellars and slums.

The time seems to have come for some sort of action to be taken with the view of preventing the publication in our daily and weekly newspapers of disgusting verbatim reports of trials which are a disgrace to our modern civilisation. Only the other day one of these journals had a leading article in which the necessity of publishing such vile reports was deplored, the necessity being in no way defined, but presumably being simply the fact that opposition papers would cater for the immoral, and temporarily reduce the sale of a paper whose editor had some regard left for public decency. Surely if the proprietors of newspapers really do regret what they deem to be the necessity of such publication, it ought not to be difficult to relieve them from the burden. In any case, it is most desirable, in the interests of morality, that our homes should be saved from the irruption of immoral matter issued in the disguise of news. Nobody can urge that the real liberty of the press would suffer if by legislation an end were put to this disgusting license.

The Pall Mall Gazette quotes the vituperation of The Standard on the revelations made in the former paper eighteen months ago; that criticism is far more appropriate to the present wanton and revolting reports in The Standard and other morning papers, which are without use or excuse, than to the articles in The Pall Mall, which produced the Criminal Law Amendment Act.

Our contemporary, Punch, appears to have been solemnised by the thought of the coming winter with its burden of multitudes of people out of work, and all the untold sufferings of the honest poor, and in a recent issue it had a poem worthy of the old days when Hood wrote for its pages the piteous "Song of the Shirt." To the last verse we give a wider circulation, for the words are well calculated, as indeed, is the whole piece, to stir public sympathy in right directions:—

Go tell the little children to sacrifice their fun,
Remind the giddy women "What is pleasure when it's done?"
Say to the men who gamble, "A better life begin,
Assist a wretch from starving, and a woman's soul from sin!"
This is no time for dreaming; if they are drowning within reach,
Fling out a rope to save them; let us practise what we preach.
There is wailing, there is weeping, there are bodies on the rack,
Let us face the coming winter; and attack it back to back!

The Salvation Army, whatever may be its faults (and they are confessedly many), has emphatically asserted two principles of immeasurable importance: (1) it has recognised and accepted the Church's responsibility to preach the Gospel to every creature; and (2) it has insisted on every convert being one of Christ's witnesses. These are the two pillars, the Jachin and Boaz, of the Christian temple, of which Jesus Christ himself is the foundation and the chief corner-stone.

Dr. Harris, in his magnificent sermon, "The Witnessing Church," preached fifty years ago, declared the design of the Christian Church to be "essentially that of a missionary witness, and that in every age it has prospered or declined just in proportion as it has fulfilled or neglected this primary law of its constitution. Its first, its greatest activity was the season of its greatest prosperity; it expanded without the aid of any of man's favourite instrumentality, learning, eloquence, wealth or arms; it achieved its triumph in the face of it all; though Persecution ten times kindled her fires, the blood of the Church ten times put them out; some of its bitterest foes became its martyrs; God caused it to triumph in every place."

"Oh had we witnessed the activity of its first days, had we heard only of its early history and triumphant progress from land to land, how naturally might we ask, 'How long was the Church in completing a universal conquest? At what precise period did India embrace the faith of Christ? How long was it before China was evangelised? Was there not a year of Jubilee on earth, when the Gospel had been preached to the last of the species? and in what year did it occur?' Alas for the Church that these inquiries should seem so strange! And alas for the world!"

The Christian.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

The Applications are so Distressing and Urgent that every Shilling has been Spent.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

Wm. HORNIBROOK, Secretary.

78 £5 NOTES GREATLY NEEDED.

A CRY FROM THE WEST.

THE Latymer-road Mission (established nearly a quarter of a century) is in great need of immediate help. Upwards of £390 are wanted before the 31st December. There is already much distress in the neighbourhood, and poor people are applying for relief. Our exchequer is exhausted. We want to open our Soup Kitchen, Invalid Children's Dinner-table, &c. The children are looking forward to their Christmas Treat. The Neighbourhood is a very poor one. Visitors are always welcome. Left-off clothing very welcome. Subscriptions, however small, may be sent to AULAY MACAULAY, Esq., Hon. Secretary, Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting Hill; or to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

BETHEL MISSION, Pier Walk, Gorleston, Great Yarmouth. Mr. B. WATSON, Missionary.

A praiseworthy effort is being made to clear off the debt of some £400, standing on this place of worship, which depends largely for its maintenance upon the support of the Fishermen, and poorer members of the community. With characteristic generosity, a kind friend of the Mission has set the ball rolling with an offer of £200, provided that an equal supplementary amount can be raised by Christmastide, and we sincerely trust that the response to the appeal now being made will prove equal to the needs of the hour. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. S. WOODS, Lower Cliff-road, Gorleston, Secretary; or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

HAS ANYONE any Dolls, Toys, or Christmas Cards to spare? Kindly send them for the little children of the Mission Schools, to Miss E. SMYLY, 35, Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

CONSUMPTION. — FRIEDENFELS HOME, St. Leonards-on-Sea.—Males. The only Institution on the South coast within easy distance of London where Patients are received for treatment. 101 Patients admitted last year. Funds urgently needed to pay off the remainder of the debt owing for furnishing.
C. E. S. COLEMAN, Sec.

DEACONESSES' INSTITUTION AND HOSPITAL, Tottenham, London.—Now open for the admission of Ladies and Gentlemen as Private Patients. Two private wards divided into cubicle compartments at £2 2s. per week, and nine private rooms from £3 3s. to £5 5s. per week. These fees cover every expense (except washing of personal linen, and stimulants, when ordered by the doctor) including the attendance of the Resident Medical Officer of the Institution; but the patients are at liberty to engage any medical man besides, at their own expense, whether a member of the medical staff of the Institution or not. The Hospital is fitted up with every modern convenience, and overlooks a lovely garden and extensive grounds. There is easy access by train and tram from the City and West End. Visitors are invited to inspect the premises.—Written applications to be addressed to the Director, Dr. LASERSON, or to the Lady Superintendent.

SERMON LANE MISSION.—Funds are urgently needed for Christmas Dinners, to serve hundreds of poor in the neighbourhood of the Mission, all being well known to our Christian Visitors; also for Soup, twice in the week during winter; also for Tea and Sugar and Coals for our poor suffering sick ones. The Operations of the Mission:—Sunday Services for Adults, Open Air Preaching during summer, Sunday Schools, Adult Bible Class, Visitation of Sick, House to House Visitation, Mothers' Meeting, Girls' Sewing Class, Blanket Club, Coal Club, Youths' Institute, Band of Hope, Christian Band Union, Maternity Society, Young Women's Welcome, Penny Bank, Gospel Total Abstinence Society, Working Men's Temperance Mutual Improvement Society, and Prayer Meetings.
GEORGE FULLER, 54, Liverpool-road, Islington.

TO THOSE who Love little Children for Christ's sake.—Will they send contributions at once? Many little Orphans now waiting and no funds to help. They are fed, clothed, and educated, and kept until 16.—Mrs. BOTTING'S Home, 23, Ridley-road, Dalston, London.

THE BLIND POOR.—The Committee of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society earnestly plead for Aid to give a Christmas Dinner to about 1,000 Blind persons and their families; also coals during the winter months. However great the distress may be amongst the poor at this season, that of the blind is far greater.—Contributions will be gratefully received by W. C. LESTER, Secretary, Office, 27, Red Lion-sq., W.C. Bankers, Williams, Deacon & Co., Birchin-lane, E.C.

PERCY'S HOTEL, LONDON.

40, Bedford-place, Bloomsbury-sq., W.C.

This First-class Private Hotel is highly recommended by readers of THE CHRISTIAN, from all parts of the world. The Bishop of Algoma writes: "The comfort, perfect order, and attendance at PERCY'S Hotel, render it all that can be desired as a central place of sojourn in this great city." Beds from 1s. 6d. Tea, 1s. 3d. Tariff on application.

LONDON.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL.

BURR'S HOTEL, LONDON.—5s. per day for bed-room, breakfast, gas, and attendance; or bed-room, breakfast, dinner (at six), drawing-room tea, gas, attendance, 6s. or 7s. per day. Comfortable winter residence.—10, 11, 12, Queen's-square, W.C.

THE FORCE OF GENTLENESS.—All the mightiest forces of Nature are quiet. Gravitation, which holds the planets in their spheres, works with ease and in silence; the morning dawns without any noise or violence; light and air, though all around us—the elements in which we live—come and go in stillness. Summer heat, and winter cold, penetrating and powerful as they are, are gentle in their operations. The deepest waters are the stillest. Electricity—one of Nature's mightest forces—is yet subtle and impalpable. We see it not, and yet it is one of our most useful agents, serving us in a thousand ways. In the form of Magnetism it is more beneficent than in any other. Do not mistake its gentleness for weakness. As a curative agent it is unequalled. Its action and effect on disease are lucidly explained by B. COPSON GARRATT, 16, Finsbury-square, E.C. Write for information.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a LITTLE BOY at BRIGHTON.

In March last I received a letter from Mrs. HIBBETT, of COLLEGE PLACE, BRIGHTON, relative to a little nephew of hers, nearly four years old. The child had lost both parents, and had "inherited their delicacy of constitution," and an older child had just died of rapid Consumption.

"This little boy (Mrs. H. writes) had whooping cough very badly in December of last year (1885); he brought up a great deal of blood, which weakened him very much. Then he had bronchitis, and congestion of the lungs set in; and now his lungs are reported to be in a very bad state. He is now gradually falling away, he has no appetite or strength, is feverish, has restless nights, with profuse sweats. He requires nursing all day."

I sent medicine and advice, and in less than a month I heard as follows:—"I am thankful to say my little nephew is better. In twelve days the improvement was wonderful; his appetite returned, the cough became easier, and each day he seemed to gather strength. He varies a little, and seems to have got a little cold, but is much better than at first."

In a few weeks Mrs. H. writes:—"I am pleased to say my little nephew has quite recovered, He is getting fat. But I am afraid to leave off the medicine too soon. When he commenced with it, he lay, to all appearance, in a dying state, perfectly strengthless; now he can walk for a mile each day."

On August 4 a letter reports that he had left off the medicine, and continued well.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MEDICAL OFFICERS—Dr. JAMES EDMUNDS, 8, Grafton-street, Piccadilly; Dr. THOMAS BARLOW, 10, Montague-street, Russell-square.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

YEARS.	TEMPERANCE SECTION.		GENERAL SECTION.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

A YEAR OF GRACE.

Dear Friends,

I am anxious that the many mercies that have filled up another year's labour amongst our Waifs and Strays should be crowned with the boon of our being able to say that we "Owe no man anything, but to love one another" (Rom. xiii. 8).

The heavy expenses incidental to sending out our 100 Emigrant Boys to Canada in the spring were a serious drain upon our limited resources, and for several months past our income has not sufficed for our wants. The deficit, however, has not been so grave as to hamper us in our winter's work, and I have managed to tide over our difficulties thus far, so as not to have to make an appeal for help till Christmas was approaching.

To meet these arrears and settle up some large current accounts, so as to be quite free of debt and its harassing anxieties, we shall need £850 in the next week or two.

This may not seem a very large sum, but I cannot tell you what a relief it will be to me to have these liabilities all cleared off. I know, from painful experience, that a load of debt hinders one's usefulness daily, and tells seriously upon one's strength of mind and body.

Sixteen years' unceasing toil amongst our Home Heathen, with the anxieties and disappointments inseparable from caring and providing for 250 of "Nobody's Children" under our roofs, besides our interest in hundreds scattered all over the world, has often drawn heavily upon Nature's reserve-fund; but the Lord has been so good beyond telling to me, that if only this last mercy of closing 1886 out of debt be vouchsafed to me I believe I shall almost feel I am growing young again.

Never was Christian rescue-work amongst street children more needed in the Great City than now. New perils are springing up: poverty and neglect are bearing fruit in communism and atheism. The volcano on which for years "Society" has been sitting in the complacence of ignorance has made its deep rumblings heard, and men's minds are full of apprehensions. It is from amongst the "gutter children" of to-day (if we do not rescue them from their sad plight) that lawlessness and infidelity will find their most eager listeners, and their most ready tools, a few years hence.

May we hear the Master's voice speaking loudly to our hearts through the gathering darkness of these last days: "Work . . . . while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work."

I remain, Dear Friends,

Yours faithfully,

J. W. C. Fegan

We are glad to receive from Mr. John Shrimpton the following, with reference to an offer (referred to in our last issue) which had been made to him of £100, on condition of nine other similar sums being contributed:—

> For some time I have felt that George Müller's work, which you so often refer to in THE CHRISTIAN, is founded on the right basis, and therefore I have declined to make known conditional offers of help. The men of the world condemn so emphatically such beseeching requests as appear so frequently in our various newspapers, for the support of Christian effort, and I have avoided, for conscience sake, doing as seems now to be the custom. May I add that several offers of conditional help I have declined, and in each case the kind donors have met my views, understanding that all I receive for this work comes direct from God, for beyond my ordinary appeals, I seldom, if ever, write begging letters.

We are sure Mr. Shrimpton is right. The Lord's servants are responsible to do his bidding—no more, no less; and for that He will surely supply all the essential means. And, inasmuch as we are members one of another, it is not only right but necessary that all should know what those are doing who are called to take the lead in the Church's work for the bodies and souls of men, and how their needs are being met, in order that each may contribute according to the will of God. We shall all have to give account of the pence or the pounds committed to our stewardship, and there is quite as much need of prayer to know how to give aright, as to obtain funds, and to know how to use them when obtained.

CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE at AINTAB.

AT this place, between Haran and Antioch, in Asia Minor, there was established, ten years ago, by Mr. Hovhannesyan, an Orphanage for boys and girls of the district. These orphans are mostly Protestant, Armenian, Greek, and Syriac, the number the Institution has been accommodating being seventy. The children are instructed in Christianity and in various occupations, and many of them are now preparing to be artists, physicians, teachers, preachers, &c. Even whilst in the Institution they have earned by their own exertions £350.

The Orphanage has been maintained by benevolent persons in Turkey and other countries, but in consequence of the miserable condition of affairs in Turkey, there is now very special need for help, and the principal (Mr. Hovhannesyan) is at present in this country with the view of obtaining the aid so much required. It is desired, also, to erect a separate building for the girls. The work was recommended and helped on a former visit of the founder, by the late Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Kinnaird, Mr. Spurgeon, Dr. Donald Fraser, Sir W. McArthur, the late Mr. S. Morley, General Field, and many others.

The American missionaries in that part of Syria speak of the Orphanage in the highest terms of commendation. Two of the pupils, now in the medical department of the Syrian Protestant College, were prepared there, and in a testimonial, signed by the principals, it is stated that their superior scholarship and humble, consistent character, testify emphatically to the excellence of their training. Any friends who are disposed to help may send their gifts to our care.

AN OPEN FIELD.—Mr. John Trotter, hon. superintendent of the London Soldiers' Home, writes that there is now a remarkable opening for a true-hearted and experienced lady who could devote herself to work amongst the Brigade of Guards in the same way that Miss Daniell does at Aldershot. From the readiness with which these men listen to the Gospel message, and the encouragements of the past year, he believed the results of such labour would be very great. Any one willing to undertake this work should address Mr. Trotter at Brickendon-grange, Hertford.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

IF proof were needed of the graciousness and lovingkindness of the Lord, it might be found in the way in which He has inclined the hearts of his servants to make very special provision for the welfare of orphan and destitute children. Many names occur to the mind at once in support of this statement, and that of William Quarrier, of Glasgow, is not the least of these.

The foundation of the Orphan Homes of Scotland was laid some twenty-two years ago by the commencement of this work of rescuing children in Glasgow. First, a Home for the very poor children of this populous city was formed, and there now one hundred lads are housed. These are for the most part apprentices to various trades, who give up whatever they earn, and are provided with all necessary food and clothing. Another branch is the Children's Night Refuge, the doors of which are open day and night to receive children sleeping out, begging, or deserted. Here there is also a Young Women's Temporary Home, where, during the past year, about seventy of a very needy class of young women have been helped. Much evangelistic and mission work is carried on in connection with this City Home, through which passes every child admitted to the Homes at Bridge of Weir, Renfrewshire. In these there are now about six hundred children. Before next Thanksgiving Day (September 7) Mr. Quarrier hopes to have received a further sum of £20,000, so as to complete a group of houses, giving accommodation for 1000 children. Since the formation of the Homes 2300 rescued children have been passed through them and sent to Canada, 240 of these during the present year.

At the annual meeting held recently, Mr. Quarrier, in the course of his statement, said that in addition to those received into the Homes, there had been hundreds of others that he was not able to house for want of room and other reasons, and many a child he had sent to the industrial school or the training ship. The year had been one of great prosperity, £23,325 having been received. This was a large sum, but if more had come he should have used it, for he regarded it as his duty to expend the money as fast as it came in, to the best advantage. His earnest wish was to help two children every day in the year, in addition to the thousand that might be in the Homes. Referring, then, to the attacks made upon him by the priests during the year, he added that £24,000 was now needed for new Homes, about £10,000 for maintenance, and £2000 for the new house in Canada.

In the annual report Mr. Quarrier also says: "Since he had been connected with the Homes, there had generally been only a week's or a fortnight's provisions on hand, and one week he was down to £6, but the funds required had always been obtained in time; and recently, when he was lower than at any time for five or six years, a legacy of £300 was received. Thus the prayer of faith in simple dependence on God is continually honoured here as elsewhere, and the Lord's people abundantly strengthened.

Mr. Quarrier's address is City Orphan Home, James Morrison-street, Glasgow.

A MINISTER'S ADVICE.—In his useful Friendly Letter to young women, "Warning Words" (Dyer Brothers), Rev. F. B. Meyer says: There are girls in Leicester who constantly go home by different and circuitous routes to avoid the villains who wait for them. It is probably so in other towns. Many a girl would endure almost anything rather than let her friends know of the annoyance she suffers. Yet I would urge you not to keep things so close. Make a confidant of some true-hearted male relative, and let him have the chance of giving the scamp a good thrashing. I suppose I ought not to incite you to break the law, but I feel a few good thrashings in the public streets would be the best possible way of freeing them of these deadly pests. But the still better way is to go down to the police-station, and claim the protection of our police, who are, for the most part, a reliable and kind-hearted set of men, willing to use their great influence on the behalf of the weak.

A REFUGE FOR DESTITUTE MEN

THAT hundreds of men should every night be sleeping out-of-doors, exposed to the inclemencies of our winter is an awful fact, and one calculated to send a shiver of horror through this vast and rich City of London. We are glad to know that steps are being taken to provide a shelter in the neighbourhood of the docks. The idea is to render temporary help in the shape of night shelter, with supper and breakfast to men who are out of work and endeavouring to get employment. These men, if they go into the casual ward, are not able to leave early enough to have a chance of obtaining employment, and it is besides felt that those who are making an honest effort to secure work, should, if possible, be saved from being compelled to resort to the workhouse.

That such a refuge may be worked without any fear of its tending to pauperise the class for whose benefit it is intended there can be no doubt. In Dublin for more than forty years there has been a similar institution giving shelter to 45,000 persons annually. There is one in Bethnal-green, in connection with the Christian Community, and there is also the well-known Banner-street Refuge in St. Luke's, where, during the winter months of 1884, 37,000 lodgings were provided for destitute men and women.

A small committee, composed of members of the Strangers' Rest, have inspected and approved a warehouse of five floors, situated in Wellclose-square, E., a lease of which can be obtained. By an outlay of some £200 or £300 these might be adapted to accommodate about one hundred and fifty men, and it is estimated that from £800 to £1000 a year would cover all expenses. A meeting will shortly be called to consider and further the matter.

OBITUARY.

WITH much sorrow we have just heard of the death of Miss Tulloch, of the Kabyle Mission, at Gibraltar, where she had gone from Tangier, for the recovery of her health.

The Neuchâtel journals announce the death of Mr. F. E. Reichel at Herrnhut at the age of fifty-five. He was pastor of a Moravian Church, and at the same time editor of The Journal de l'Unité des Frères. His death causes very general sorrow where he was known.

The religious press of Germany suffers a very sensible loss, too, by the death at Berlin of Professor Messner, editor of The New Evangelical Church Gazette, which journal ceases with his death to appear. It will, however, be replaced in January by a new organ, Deutsche Evan. Kirchenzeitung founded by Pastor Stöcker, and is to advocate a larger measure of independence in the Prussian Protestant Church. Dr. Messner, who was born in 1824, studied at Halle under Professors Tholuck, Müller, and Neander.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—The Rev. Storrs Turner having retired from the official position which he had occupied with so much ability since the formation of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic, he has been succeeded, on the invitation of the committee, by Mr. Chesson as hon. secretary. Mr. Chesson has been a member of the executive committee from the outset.

CAMBUSLANG, GLASGOW.—A series of evangelistic meetings were conducted in the Argyle Hall, in connection with the Cambuslang Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. James W. Moodie laboured with special success from Nov. 14 to Nov. 26. Mr. William Thomson, evangelist, continued the services to Dec. 3. He also was used of God in the conversion of souls. Their gifts varied, and were used by the Master, and appreciated by his people. We had good times, our cups were running over. D. LEWIS.

MISSION TO ITALIAN SOLDIERS.—This work, conducted by Cavalier Luigi Capellini at Pozro delle Cormacchie 14, Rome, and which is known to our readers, has entered its fifteenth year in spite of difficulties. The members of this Church belong to all the provinces of Italy, and through them the Word of God has been carried to many parts of the Peninsula. Officers, non-commissioned officers, corporals, and private soldiers attend the meetings in large numbers. Night-schools, Y.M.C.A., and a lecture-room, connected with that work, are frequented by more than a hundred soldiers and officers.

Rev. H. P. HUGHES IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR EDINBURGH CORRESPONDENT.)

This well-known preacher and evangelist began a twelve days' mission in Edinburgh on Sabbath week. He was invited by the Scottish Evangelistic Association, which, under the energetic superintendence of Dr. Moxey, promises to become a power in Scotland. He was welcomed at an influential gathering of ministers and laymen, Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte in the chair.

Mr. Hughes conducted three services on the first Sabbath. In the forenoon he preached in Free St. George's to a large and deeply-interested congregation. In his own incisive way he showed the weakness of the pulpit in not giving sufficient prominence to the evangelistic function.

The evening meeting was held in the U.P. Synod Hall. Hundreds were turned away from the doors, every seat and the passages being crowded. Mr. Hughes delivered a powerful and telling address from Acts ix. 26, which was listened to with rapt attention. Later on he met the students in the Oddfellows' Hall. Here he was seen at his best. Young men of literary tastes will not listen to many evangelists, because of their lack of culture. No such objection can be urged against Mr. Hughes. While thoroughly loyal to the truths of the Gospel and filled with a rare enthusiasm for humanity, he is abreast of the intellectual thought of his day, and wields a mode of address which combines directness with language choice enough to please the most fastidious critic. The words he spoke on this occasion will not be quickly forgotten. They touched the hearts of his hearers, and bent stubborn wills. When he asked them to show a sign of their submission to Christ by standing up, more than forty sprang up and thus boldly bore testimony before their companions. It was felt that the mission could not begin in a better way. The presence and blessing of God were experienced.

During the week Mr. Hughes conducts two meetings daily in the Free Church Assembly Hall. In the afternoon at three o'clock he holds a Bible-reading, and in the evening at eight o'clock an evangelistic service. Up to the day on which we write the afternoon is the better attended service of the two. It is chiefly devoted to the deepening of the spiritual life. The appeals to Christians to consecrate themselves more fully to God are very powerful. They probe deep, laying bare the selfishness of the heart and the corrupting influences of worldliness. Numerous testimonies and thanksgivings prove that they have not been spoken in vain. Sanctification has gained a new meaning for many Mr. Hughes knows how to put a great truth simply. His plain, straight-forward statements do not in the least savour of the mysticism so frequently to be met with in the utterances of teachers of "the higher life." To this invaluable qualification he adds a child-like dependence on the Holy Ghost. One feels that his words are not his own, but that he is the mouthpiece of a mightier than he. Students for the ministry have received a special blessing. More than one of the writer's friends have acknowledged that the grandeur of their calling and the need of personal consecration have come home to them with startling distinctness.

The evening meetings are large, but they might be larger. The hall is not crowded as yet. It should be, and we are persuaded that ere these words appear in print, it will be. The addresses grow in interest and unction. Last night's (Thursday's) was the best of all. Mr. Hughes, speaking of Matthew's call, dwelt on the promptitude, the publicity, and the thoroughness of his obedience. In the deep hush which came after his voice was silent, many souls heard the words, "Follow Me." In response to the preacher's appeal, between forty and fifty stood up to signify their obedience to the Divine command. Edinburgh is hard to move, and Mr. Hughes feels its hardness keenly; but the power of the Spirit will break down every barrier. The last days, we believe, will be the best days of the mission.

MEDICAL WORK on the NORTH SEA.

Medical work has recently attracted considerable attention as a means of relieving suffering and winning entrance for the Gospel. Similarly effective have proved the medical and surgical aids rendered by the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen amongst the trawlers of the North Sea.

While in health, the hardy trawler finds his life, though toilsome and lonely, endurable; but in sickness it is far otherwise. There is no provision for the liability of the men to sickness, nor for the inevitable results of exposure and accident. Men and boys are constantly hurt by falling blocks or running gear. The small boat work, too, in rough weather is exceedingly dangerous. A man gets his arm or leg between the boat and the smack or steamer, and in a moment it is crushed or broken. From various causes incidental to the rough, knock-about life, injuries, more or less severe, are sadly frequent. What then? We at home "send for the doctor;" this the trawler cannot do, as there is no doctor with the fleet. If his hurt or sickness be slight, he must bear it as best he can, however painful; if it be severe, he must be sent home, a two days' voyage, his wound or ailment terribly aggravated by delay, neglect, and exposure. Very many lives have been lost in this way—injuries which, promptly treated, might easily have been healed, become so inflamed as to be well nigh hopeless.

In such circumstances, the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen began by affording simple relief, through its medicine chests, and went on to training its skippers in giving "first aid to the wounded," and dealing generally with surgical and medical cases. This effort has proved remarkably successful—not only in relieving pain and sickness, but also in winning the gratitude of the trawlers, and gaining a hearing for the Gospel.

The seven Mission ships are now commanded by skippers who have received from Dr. A. T. Schofield such teaching as enables them day by day in the various fleets to deal with the sick and wounded. One of those vessels returning lately from her eight weeks trip reported two hundred cases dealt with during the voyage. Dispensary reports from the several Mission ships show the number and character of cases treated from week to week, and indicate a large amount of most valuable work. Those who realise the sad condition of the trawlers at sea will rejoice greatly that such efforts should be made to alleviate their physical suffering.

It is still more encouraging to know that, as a matter of fact, the medical and surgical aid rendered has been the means of leading many to the Saviour. In Toilers of the Deep, the monthly organ of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, many instances are given of actual results in this way. In a testimony meeting held lately on board one of the Mission ships, out of fourteen trawlers who confessed Christ, eight distinctly gave the medical work as the means of bringing them on board the vessels to hear the word of life. But for that, they would, humanly speaking, never have come within the sound of the Gospel. Thus, as on land, so at sea, this work exercises an attractive influence upon the most careless and indifferent.

At present an effort is being made to raise a special fund—the Queen Victoria Purchase and Endowment Fund—in order to send forth, in Her Majesty's Jubilee Year, a Jubilee Mission Ship. Whether it be accomplished or not, depends on the response made by her loyal and God-fearing people. Besides, the ships now at work must be supported. True, they trawl towards their own support, but the exigencies of mission work (the grand purpose for which they have been provided) frequently interfere with the trawling. Information as to the work may be had at the offices of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

No good thing is born without travail and suffering. Brain and heart must echo before we can bring forth words of life and power. This is God's law, and hard though it be, we shall hereafter find it our delight.

A GIRLS' GUILD.

How much good and fruitful work might be done in this world, if each of us were to put to himself and herself the question, "What can I do?" and were to respond quickly when the answer came. Last year when Mr. Stead drew aside the veil and revealed the moral dangers that encompass young women in London, Mrs. Rae, wife of the secretary of Hoxton Hall, put to herself such a question. She has answered it to some purpose, as anybody could see who was present at Hoxton Hall on Tuesday week, at the first annual meeting of "The Girls' Guild of Good Life."

Although but a year old this Guild has already done splendid service, and it bids fair to do much more as the years roll by. For the happy and expressive title of her endeavour Mrs. Rae was indebted to a book by Dr. B. W. Richardson. With the willing help of friends and fellow-workers she invited a number of young girls in the locality to spend a social evening at Hoxton Hall on November 10, 1885. More than eighty responded, and the thing was fairly set a-going. The basement of Hoxton Hall (once a spirit cellar, by the way) was garnished, and turned into a cosy, attractive-looking "parlour." Here every Tuesday evening the girls meet and enjoy themselves.

Since the first meeting their notions of enjoyment have been considerably changed. At first some of them seemed to think that dancing was the highest form of pleasure, but a little friendly advice soon changed that, and now their recreation in many cases has taken a very practical turn. In a family party that averages one hundred there must be a good deal of variety in the way of occupation; they read or talk, or paint, or play at innocent games; while not a few are devoted to sewing, so much so that there were, when Mrs. Rae's little report was drawn up, one hundred and forty-two garments in progress of making. Every parlour-meeting is closed with a quiet fifteen minutes of "family worship," which puts a fitting crown on the work or play of the evening, and sends the girls home with chastened thoughts and aspirations.

In many other ways the girls are influenced towards "a good life." Friends go and speak to them occasionally; temperance work is kept to the front; they are taught cookery, music, vocal and instrumental; they are visited in their homes—in short, all is done that advice and sympathy can do to advance the aims of the Guild.

The meeting on Tuesday week was a large and enthusiastic one. After a musical programme had been gone through, by some of the girls, the chair was taken by Mr. W. I. Palmer, of Reading (a fast friend of Hoxton Hall). Addresses well suited to the occasion, and full of excellent counsel, were given by the chairman, Dr. B. W. Richardson, and Mrs. Thomas Richardson, of Stepney; while Mr. Rae read his wife's statement, the leading points of which we have given above. We hope Mrs. Rae may be spared to see many such happy anniversaries, with a growing circle of grateful protégés.

CHINA.—In view of the proposed assumption of imperial authority by the young heir to the throne of China, the Chinese Branch of the Evangelical Alliance has issued a call for special prayer for the young monarch. He is now sixteen years of age, and in accordance with a decree of the Empress Regent, he will take the reins of the government on the first month of the coming Chinese year.

ITALIAN EVANGELICAL METHODIST CHURCH.—The Sunday-school in connection with this church at Palermo (Sicily) has, since its formation in 1878, had on its rolls 193 children, mostly belonging to Roman Catholic families, and at the present time the number is 66. Many of these are now witnessing to the Gospel and attending the meetings of the church, while others, who have gone to different places in Italy and abroad, have taken with them the seed of God's Word. The church itself has 44 communicants, and about 130 adherents, nearly all Sicilian. It is intended to make some special gifts to the children and the poor at Christmas.

CAMBRIDGE UNDERGRADUATES.

The remarkable meetings at the Alexandra Hall were closed for the term on Sunday week. Several senior members of the University were present, among them Mr. Barton and Mr. Handley Moule, who both spoke, as did also Mr. Eugene Stock. The chief feature of the evening was testimony from men who had received blessing during the term; perhaps twelve or rather more actually speaking. Such occasions are often anxious ones, but of this it can truly be said that it was a calm, sober, and truly holy meeting. With scarcely an exception there was not a phrase used, or a trace of opinion or feeling shown, which could do anything but give joy to the Christian, loving souls and jealous for purity of truth; a very wonderful fact, in an assembly almost wholly consisting of young men.

Very various, of course, the testimonies were. One was that of a young Norwegian student, brought to the Lord from entire worldliness of spirit; others spoke of a blessed deliverance through grace from special besetting sins, and one deeply moving utterance was an appeal for prayer on the part of a man who was still "sore grieved and burdened." There was a chastened tone in all. And the holy Scriptures were in their right place, reverently read and constantly appealed to. The Lord Himself guide and bless this most remarkable work, keeping it in his sacred lines of truth and humility, and giving a blessed harvest!—Record.

PETERHEAD, N.B.—Mr. C. H. Judd, of the China Inland Mission, has been here conducting a series of meetings in Topping's Hall. Bible-readings were held daily, and proved to be the means of much blessing to Christians. The Gospel meetings in the evening were well attended, and some were brought into the liberty of the Gospel, while many more seemed deeply impressed.

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.—The sixth annual report of this excellent institution states there are now twenty-two children (ten boys and twelve girls) in this Home, as compared with fourteen last year. It has become necessary to transform the present building into two cottages, each to accommodate twenty children; this enlargement will be carried out as soon as possible. The Secretary of the Orphanage is Mr. George Walker, Ness Bank, Inverness.

POLICEMEN'S MISSION, SOUTHSEA.—Miss Selina Robinson, 5, Sussex-place, Southsea, hon. sec. of this Mission, writes:—Opposite our little hall, which holds about two hundred, the infidels have started their meeting in what was formerly the Scotch Church. They have a Sunday-school, and besides Sunday evening meetings, frequent gatherings during the week. We have had much blessing, and our hall is filled every Sunday night. The meetings are conducted by policemen and bluejackets. We have a very fair Sunday-school, but need a superintendent.

KINGSLAND INSTITUTE FOR WORKING GIRLS (Ridley-road, Dalston).—Dear Sir,—May I ask your readers to give us special help for our Christmas holiday entertainments? The holidays are a special time of temptation for the factory girls, and we are hoping to give a tea and Christmas-tree on Boxing-day, and also to provide some entertainment on the following evening, in order to try and keep some from the public-houses and other temptations. We shall require £80 to £100 to enable us to close our accounts satisfactorily at the end of the year.—Yours truly,

E. Robarts, Hon. Supt.

1, Foley-avenue, Hampstead.

MISS LEIGH IN AMERICA.—We learn from The Evangelical Churchman, Toronto, that for six weeks recently Miss Leigh has been visiting several of the large towns in Canada, giving information to the Christian friends with respect to her work in Paris. In Chicago, during the Convention of the American Episcopal Church, she addressed a large body of workers, and a document commending her noble work, signed by twelve of the bishops, was presented to her. At the Huron Diocesan Sunday-school Conference, she told the needs of her work in a very touching and graphic manner. She also addressed a large public meeting in the Victoria Hall of the Y.M.C.A. At Petrolea, Detroit, and Toronto she was also warmly welcomed.

ADVENT CONFERENCE at CHICAGO.

A very important six-days' conference on prophetic subjects was held at Chicago in the end of November. It was the second of its kind in the States, one having been held at New York some eight years ago. The meetings appear to have attracted very large and interested attention. Long and elaborate papers were read each day, and these were reproduced at length in the Chicago Daily Inter Ocean. The whole have been issued in book form by Mr. F. H. Revell, of Chicago, in conjuction with The Inter Ocean.

Dr. Goodwin, of Chicago, ably argued for the literal, person, and visible return of our Lord. Professor Stroeter contended that his return would be pre-millennial, and Rev. J. M. Orrock dealt with various objections to this theory. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, eloquently expatiated on the motives to world-wide evangelism furnished by a belief in the Second Advent. Rev. W. J. Erdman, of Boston, expounded the Scripture teaching as to the Times of the Gentiles; while Dr. A. J. Gordon, of the same city, read a powerful paper on "Latter-day Delusions," the three chiefly specified being spiritualism, ritualism, and theosophy. Among the other papers were one by Dr. Parsons, of Toronto, on the eternity of rewards and punishments; by Professor Morehead, on the Antichrist, and by Dr. N. West, of St. Paul, on prophecy and Israel.

Great interest was awakened by the reading of letters that had been received by Dr. West from Professor Godet, of Neuchatel; Volck, of Russia, Koch, of Oldenburg, and Delitzsch, of Leipzig. All these were agreed on the main outlines of pre-millennial doctrine. Professor Koch, however, expressed the belief that the Jews, returned to their own land, would be converted, not by the appearing of Christ, but previous to that by "a new Elias." Prof. Delitzsch thinks the saints will reign the thousand years with Christ in heaven, and not on the unglorified earth. Sympathetic letters were also read from Mr. Moody, Dr. Andrew Bonar, Rev. Archibald Brown, Canon Faussett, and others.

REDRUTH, CORNWALL.—Some two years since we started the Town Mission Working Men's Reading-rooms in a four-roomed cottage—one room, with daily papers, &c., on the table, open all day and in the evening. Other rooms are used for teaching reading and writing, where many women and others may be found, instead of loitering about the streets. All is free, and, as I have taken the responsibility upon myself, independent of our Mission fund, I will be thankful for any help your readers may be led to send me.

Redruth. J. W. Wilson, Town Missionary.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—That the Christmas packets which are being sent to Christian soldiers abroad may be blessed to those who receive them.——That efforts which are being made by the British Consul in Madeira to induce the Portuguese Government to put down bad "guides" may be successful.——For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Potterne, near Devizes.——For blessing on a mission at Stretham, Cambs.——For the conversion of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh.——For blessing on a mission at Acton, near Sudbury, Suffolk, being conducted by Rev. A. J. Begbie, of Framsden, to December 19.

GUILDFORD.—The new report of the Mission to Poor Boys and Girls in this town, established in 1860, shows that a true spirit of sympathy towards the unfortunate animates the work. Many poor grown-up lads out of employ were, by cheering and encouraging words, kept from temptation; and taught to become useful and patient, and that God would never forsake them. Mr. Macdonald, the superintendent, has at his own expense, erected a large carpenter's shop, in which, during last winter twelve boys were taught to make useful things; besides this there is a cobbler's shop, where a few boys mend shoes for their respective homes. The Mission school is well attended, and it is interesting to know that these poor children last year contributed £3 7s. 8d. towards the funds of the Royal Surrey County Hospital. During the winter a breakfast or supper of warm porridge and milk is supplied to any poor boy or girl for a penny, or, if need be, for nothing. Any contributions may be sent to the Superintendent, at the Mission-room, Guildford.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mrs. Leavitt, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of America, who is on a tour round the world, has been holding successful meetings in Japan. At Tokio and Yokohama she was able to address, through an interpreter, over 10,000 people, and branches of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union were formed.

To stay the ravages of strong drink, says The Methodist Times, is at this moment the most urgent of all the duties of Christian Englishmen.——At Castleisland, Ireland, the rental is £21,000 a year. There are fifty-one public-houses in the place. It is computed that each house has a gross revenue of £400 a year. If this be so, as much is spent on drink as the whole rental amounts to.

The Globe urges Government to deal with bogus clubs. It says: "One drinking club does more harm than a score of public-houses."——£3100 was recently paid for a small public-house in Exeter.——The late elections in Colorado revealed a great advance in temperance sentiment.——The Belgian Commander-in-Chief has been instructed to treat drunkenness in the army with severe punishments.

The first temperance society in Russia was founded by a Swedish missionary, who had to wait two years for permission to begin temperance work.——The Emperor of Russia has decreed that women may hold temperance meetings in that country, but at the meetings no other topic may be discussed.——The National Temperance League will hold a New Year's conversazione at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly.

Commenting on the recent death and charitable actions of a well-known brewer, The Alliance News says: "These great liquor-traffickers do like to build churches. They are uneasy in their minds about the way they get their wealth, and they willingly pay 'ransom' for it by promoting, in stone and mortar, the glory of God and the welfare of mankind. We do not believe in the soundness of the procedure."

The Springfield Republican is carrying on a fine fight against the liquor clubs in that beautiful Massachusetts town. The saloons there are calling themselves clubs, and defying all law.——The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been quietly at work in Pennsylvania, and the grand result is that there are nearly a thousand fewer saloons than there would have been, if they had not presented enormous petitions to the licensing courts.——Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, called to England by family affairs, has resigned the pastorate of the Union Church, Mussoorie, India. The army temperance work is to be carried on by Rev. E. T. Beatty, chaplain, Madras Presidency.

DISTRESS IN SOUTH WALES.—Mr. Thomas M. Wintle, Pontymoile, near Pontypool, Monmouthshire, S. Wales, writes: Last winter we supplied to the children of the unemployed colliers, miners, iron and tin workers, 32,000 soup dinners and porridge breakfasts, good substantial meal to 5,000 parents, besides a quantity of clothing, coal, &c., and rents paid to prevent many families being sold up. We hope to be able to do as much again this winter, if not more. I am sorry to say that notices are being posted up at some collieries and tinworks that all contracts will cease in twenty-eight days, the cause being that the works cannot be carried on without considerable loss, and the long season of depression has brought many of our Welsh firms to the verge of bankruptcy.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.—Canon Ellison has just written an account of the twenty-five years' work of this body, and it is one for which we are devoutly thankful. He traces the growth of the Society in the first decade after its formation, at the end of which one thousand abstaining clergymen were connected therewith, and tells us that now there are organised operations in every diocese in England and Wales; that there are at least, including those in Ireland and foreign parts, five thousand parochial and Mission branches, with a membership, general and abstaining, of three-quarters of a million, amongst whom are thousands of rescued souls. One very important feature of the work is the Women's Union, which now numbers ninety branches.

A CRY FROM PARIS.—In Paris every mission is cramped for want of workers. There is Mr. Gibson's Mission; Miss de Bröen's Medical Mission among the Communists (3, Rue Clavel), where five hundred patients are tended weekly; there is the Institution of French Protestant Deaconesses (59, Rue Reuilly), who have a hospital for women and children, industrial school, laundry, and infant school for Protestants. Miss Leigh's and Mr. McAll's missions are well known. Notwithstanding the variety of work to be done, there are hardly any English girls who offer themselves as voluntary helpers to these missions. The needs of mission work are very great. The number of lazy young Christians seems equally great. Cannot the two be connected? Can so few bear the pain of leaving home for work which angels would fain do? The work is not given to them; it is given to you. Will you accept the trust?—Methodist Times.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, DEC. 19.—ESTHER IV.

4.—But he received it not.—Mordecai's refusal to forego humiliation and sorrow on hearing of the approaching destruction of his people reminds us of "the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," who refused the proferred sympathy of Peter (Mat. xvi. 22): "Be it far from Thee, Lord, this shall not be unto Thee;" and of whom we read that when offered, on the cross, "wine mingled with myrrh" to assuage his sufferings, "He received it not" (Mark xv. 23).

11.—Except such to whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live.—Canon Rawlinson says: "A modern critic asks, 'Is it likely that a Persian king would always have a golden sceptre by him to stretch out towards intruders on his privacy?' It seems enough to reply that in all the numerous representations of Persian kings at Persepolis there is not one in which the monarch does not hold a long tapering staff (which is probably the sceptre of Esther) in his right hand."

16.—So will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law: and if I perish, I perish.—Esther's approach to the king was contrary to law, and death was the penalty; but she ventured on the ground of grace, and found acceptance. "Let us, therefore, come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need."

MONDAY, DEC. 20.—ESTHER V.

1.—On the third day . . . Esther put on her royal apparel.—The mystical significance of this is very beautiful. The third day points to the resurrection of Jesus, in which, as "risen with Christ," the Church can put on "royal apparel." "Grace reigns," but it is "through righteousness," and clothed in his righteousness the believing soul may be sure of acceptance; "she obtained favour in his sight."

4.—Let the king and Haman come this day unto the banquet.—"Esther seems to have been afraid to make her real request too abruptly, and to have wished to impress him favourably before doing so. She concluded that the king would understand that she had a real petition in the background, and would recur to it, as, in fact, he did."—Sp. Com.

8.—I will do to-morrow as the king hath said.—Though the king had, in the midst of the gaiety, asked what was Esther's request, she did not esteem the time an appropriate one for expressing it. She begins: 'My petition, and my request,' but then stops, and says only, if the king will do her the favour to come with Haman to a banquet again on the morrow, she will then bring forward her petition."—Keil. Those who seek to trace the mystical meaning will not fail to observe that by this double postponement Esther attains "the third day" for preferring what proved to be her successful suit.

14.—And the thing pleased Haman, and he caused the gallows to be made.—The word "gallows" is in the Hebrew "tree," and points (in the mystical sense which runs through the whole book) to the Cross of Christ which Satan "caused to be made" to destroy the object of his hatred, Jesus—"the Jew sitting at the king's gate." But it proved the instrument of his own destruction, for Jesus, by bearing "our sins in his own body on the tree," "through death destroyed him that had the power of death—that is, the devil" (Heb. ii. 14).

TUESDAY, DEC. 21.—ESTHER VI.

1.—On that night could not the king sleep.—"An act of faithfulness had been performed . . . and the faithful servant had been unrewarded. Nay, more: was conspired against by those who hated him for his fidelity. Could the Spirit of God have represented with nicer adaptation to our minds the discernment, and justice, and solicitude of that God who has . . . "a book of remembrance for those who fear Him and think upon his name"? And on that night of time, when at noonday there was darkness over all the earth, well might the King's sleep flee away (see Ps. xliv. 23; lxxviii. 65), because a deed was done upon the earth by men at which the moon was confounded and the sun ashamed. Mordecai's faithfulness was found written in the book, and in the head of another book it is written of another Mordecai: "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God."—R. C. Morgan.

10.—Do even so to Mordecai the Jew, that sitteth at the king's gate.—The tree which Haman had prepared whereon to hang Mordecai was the tree whereon he himself was hanged. The royal apparel and the crown royal which he designed for himself were put on Mordecai. So not only was Satan destroyed on that tree that he had prepared for Christ, but his own design for himself, "I will exalt my throne above the stars of God . . . I will be like the Most High," he had to behold carried out in Jesus. Thus was Ps. vii. 15 fulfilled: "He made a pit and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made."

13.—If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, . . . thou . . . shalt surely fall before him.—"An echo of that far-dated promise: 'I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head.'"—R. C. M.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 22.—ESTHER VII.

4.—For we are sold.—"The allusion is to the 10,000 talents which Haman had undertaken to pay into the treasury (ch. iii. 9)."—Sp. Com.—I and my people.—As we read (ii. 20) that "Esther had not yet showed her kindred nor her people," it would seem that these words conveyed to Xerxes for the first time the information that his wife was a Jewess.—Although the enemy could not countervail the king's damage.—I.e., "Although the enemy (Haman) would not (even in that case) compensate (by his payment to the treasury) for the king's loss of so many subjects."—So Gesenius. Others render: "For the enemy (Haman) is not worthy that the king should be vexed about him."—Sp. Com.

6.—Haman was afraid before the king and the queen.—One is reminded of the words of the hymn—

> "And Satan trembles when he sees
> The weakest saint upon his knees."

For the believer in prayer is the queen holding communion with the king, and "the adversary and enemy," that "wicked one," knows full well that "the king's wrath" will not be "pacified" till he has been delivered over to judgment.

10.—So they hanged Haman on the gallows (or tree) that he had prepared for Mordecai.—As the Lord Jesus was approaching the cross, which Satan had prepared for Him, He said, "Now is the judgment of this world, now shall the Prince of this world be cast out" (John xii. 31). The tree which Satan had prepared for his destruction proved the destruction of Satan himself.

THURSDAY, DEC. 23.—ESTHER VIII.

1.—On that day did the King Ahasuerus give the house of Haman, the Jews' enemy, unto Esther, the queen.—"Confiscation of goods always accompanies public execution in Oriental countries. The house of Haman would include, not only the building and furniture, but the household."—Sp. Com. The mystic meaning finds its expression in Daniel vii. 27, "And the kingdom and dominion . . . under the whole heaven (formerly the possession of Satan, see Luke iv. 6) shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High."

2.—And the king took off his ring, and gave it unto Mordecai.—The ring was the sign of power committed (see Gen. xli. 41), "And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt. And Pharaoh took off his ring . . . and put it upon Joseph's hand." "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth," was spoken not many days after Jesus had said, "Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out."

5.—Let it be written to reverse the letters devised by Haman.—This petition of Esther's could not be granted for the reason given by the king (ver. 8) "for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse." But, though the former writing could not be reversed, the king grants full power to Mordecai to supplement it by writing for the Jews "as it liketh you," and this led to the issue of the edict empowering the Jews "to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy, and to slay, and to cause to perish, all the power of the people and province that would assault them." In like manner the law once uttered by the voice of God Himself cannot be reversed (Matt. v. 18), but it is supplemented by the Gospel of the grace of God wherein those threatened by the law are empowered to gather themselves together in Christ (John xi. 52), and by faith in Him both "to stand" (2 Cor. i. 24), and "to destroy, &c.; all the power that would assault them" (Eph. vi. 11—16).

13.—The copy of the writing for a commandment to be given in every province.—"By the Scriptures of the prophets (lit. prophetic writings) according to the commandment of the everlasting God made known to all nations for the obedience of faith" (Rom. xvi. 26).

15.—Mordecai went out . . . in royal apparel . . . with a great crown of gold.—"We see Jesus . . . crowned with glory and honour" (Heb. ii. 9).

17.—Whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness.—Philip "preached Christ unto them . . . and there was great joy in that city" (Acts viii.).

FRIDAY, DEC. 24.—ESTHER IX.

3.—And all the rulers of the provinces . . . helped the Jews.—"This is very important. It has been stated that according to the narrative of Esther the Jews were allowed to kill '75,000 Persians,' and this supposed feature of the narrative has been pronounced 'incredible.' The present verse shows that the real Persians who formed the standing army which kept the Empire in subjection, and were at the disposal of the various governors of provinces, took the Jews' side. Their enemies were almost entirely to be found among the idolatrous people of the subject nations, for whose lives neither the Persians generally nor their monarchs cared greatly."—S. C.

4.—This man Mordecai waxed greater and greater.—Remembering Him of whom Mordecai was a type, we are reminded of "He must increase, but I must decrease" (John iii. 30). "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end" (Isa. ix. 7).

18.—On the fifteenth day they rested.—"Both the 14th and 15th of Adar are now kept as 'days of Purim' by the Jews universally. They make the 13th a fast, commemorative of the fast of Esther, and keep the feast itself on the 14th and 15th."—Sp. Com.

20.—And Mordecai wrote these things.—"It has been supposed that thus far that part of the book of Esther which was written by Mordecai extends; what follows to the end was probably added either by Ezra or the men of the great synagogue."—Dr. A. Clarke.

29.—Esther, the queen, the daughter of Abihail.—Viewed in relation to the mystical meaning which may be traced throughout this book, the name of Esther's father is significant—according to Gesenius, "father of might."

SATURDAY, DEC. 25.—ESTHER X.

1.—And the King Ahasuerus laid a tribute upon the land, and upon the isles of the sea.—Canon Rawlinson sees in this an allusion to what might probably "have followed on the return of Xerxes from Greece. His exchequer would be exhausted, and steps would have to be taken in order to replenish it."

3.—Mordecai the Jew was next unto King Ahasuerus.—This whole verse forms a fitting close to a book in which Christ and the things of Christ are so distinctly foreshadowed. The position of Mordecai, under, though next to the king, recalls 1 Cor. xv. 28: "When all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject to Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all." While his greatness among the Jews, his acceptance with the multitude of his brethren, his seeking the wealth of his people, and speaking peace to all his seed, forms a beautiful mystical picture of Him of whom it is written, "His name shall endure for ever. Men shall be blessed in Him all nations shall call Him blessed" (Ps. lxxii.).

THE RESCUE SOCIETY

(Formerly of 85, Queen Street, Cheapside),

79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, E.C.

The cry of the weak and helpless is at all times distressing; but this is specially so when, in the absence of the needed PROMPT help, the fall is IRRETRIEVABLE and often ETERNAL.

OUR NEED IS GREAT AND PRESSING.

The winter is now upon us, when many who are out in the streets, COLD, SAD, SORROWFUL, DESPAIRING, yet sinning, will seek our aid—each one SOMEBODY'S CHILD—one of the lost whom the Saviour seeks.

508 young women and girls have this year been in our Homes for a few months' training, and have been lovingly and earnestly pointed to the Friend of Sinners, and a life of happiness and virtue; while several HUNDREDS of other applicants have been reluctantly REFUSED admission.

PRAY HELP US TO HELP THE WEAK.

Several HUNDREDS of POUNDS are needed to close the year free from debt.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott will kindly receive contributions as usual; or they will be gratefully acknowledged, the day of receipt, if sent to Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, 79, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

The Book World.

Similes of the Christian Life. By F. E. Marsh. 1s. 6d. John F. Shaw & Co. Under various figures of a son, a saint, a witness, a pilgrim, &c., the author treats very helpfully of various phases of the Christian life.

Exposition of the New Testament. By Matthew Henry. 4s. Jack & Co. We have received vol. vi. of the re-issue of these well-known expositions. In these days of revisions and new interpretations of Scripture, it is well that books which have done good service in the past should not be overlooked. This volume deals with Acts, chapters i.—xix.

Hymns for Infant Minds. By Anne and Jane Taylor. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This edition of hymns, the fragrance of which, though instilled in far-off days, is now manifest in many a truly consecrated and devoted life, will revive many pleasant memories. As in fact, too, they will exercise a sweet and blessed influence on the young —an influence the rich fruit of which will be seen in future days.

My Travels in the Eastern Hemisphere. By S. O. Gibson. Partridge & Co. This interesting book, which contains descriptions of many lands visited in the course of a four years' commission in H.M.S. Thetis, is certain to commend itself to boys as a pleasant holiday companion. Amongst other things there is an account of the capture of a slave dhow, and some very favourable comments on missionary work are made as the result of personal observation.

Four Thousand Germs of Thought. By Rev. W. W. Andrew, M.A. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co, We have here the fruit of years of careful reading and study, condensed into a series of short sentences, each of which suggests a multitude of helpful thoughts. Young preachers will find it a most useful aid in preparing discourses, and if they can adopt this terse style their ministrations will doubtless prove all the more acceptable. The work is conveniently classified under subject heads, and a copious index renders this book of spiritual proverbs a valuable addition to a theological library.

Lights of the Western World; or, Sketches of Distinguished Americans. By Rev. Jabez Marrat. 2s. T. Woolmer. Short vigorous sketches of such men as Abraham Lincoln, Garfield, Longfellow, General Grant, Elihu Burritt, and John B. Gough, cannot fail to rouse the hopes and direct the energies of young men on both sides of the Atlantic. It is far from easy to give in a few pages the characteristics of men so different as the above, but Mr. Marrat has succeeded well. There are also engravings of the homes of two or three of the "Lights." The likenesses of Gough, Burritt, and Garfield are excellent; that of Longfellow not a very pleasing one.

Summer Voices. By Rev. C. A. Fox. 6d. S.W. Partridge & Co. Those hearts that were refreshed by Mr. Fox's "Mountain Waterbrooks" will find winter's icy stillness joyously broken by "Summer Voices." Small as is his Christmas wreath, its flowers are picked from very varied soils. Spots romantic as Welsh vales and rivers, or familiar as Windsor, Richmond Park, and even London, ring at the singer's footstep with sweet melodies. Two sonnets on General Gordon, and a lyric called "The Martyr Maiden" are full of noble thoughts. Though preferring lofty regions, Mr. Fox can descend with grace to lowlier topics. His "verses for a friend on his silver wedding" are quite worthy of comparison with Wordsworth's famous lines. The lines "After a Mission" are very striking, but we must not rob readers of the pleasures of discovery. In our opinion, Mr. Fox's poetry supplies a felt want in sacred verse. He has Keble's delicate observation of nature, but throws more pulse and tone into his pictures. Here and there he reminds us of George Herbert's quaint fancies, but prefers the temple of nature to the noblest made with hands. His avowed object as appears in his noble text, 1 Cor. xiv. 10, and in the first piece, "Prayer before Nature," is to find in Nature's beauties the reflections of Divine grace, and to interpret them. We do not say that every interpretation is equally lucid, but in one point Mr. Fox contrasts favourably with more known writers. The verse of too many modern singers, however melodious, is marked by a diffidence, if not expressed doubt, of God's love. In every poem of Mr. Fox's there shines out a strong faith in the living God, implicit reliance on Divine wisdom, and a rapturous yet reverent delight in God's everlasting love. "As seeing the Invisible" (not the impersonal) God, he "endures," and so will his verses.

Some Aspects of the Blessed Life. By Mark Guy Pearse. 2s. 6d. T. Woolmer. A welcome sequel to "Thoughts on Holiness." In characteristic language, the duties and privileges of a healthy Christian are described. "Meditation Illustrated" is a bright specimen of devotional exercise. "The Blood" ought to dispel certain false ideas of Christ's atoning death. Psalms i. and xxxii. are made to unfold new beauties, and the chapter on "Rest" leaves the sheep at the Shepherd's feet. Those who need an under-shepherd may safely follow the present writer.

A Woman's Work: Memorials of Eliza Fletcher. 2s. 6d. By Rev. C. A. Salmond. J. N. Mackinlay, Glasgow. This biographical sketch of one whose life gives forth a wondrous fragrance has, we are glad to know, reached its seventh edition, which is enriched with five new photogravures. The life before us was one of much character and force, lit up with a truly poetic spirit, and animated by deep devotion and consecration. The book will be an acquisition to those who are looking for something of more than usual value and weight to present to young friends.

Castle Malling, a Yorkshire Story. By Annie E. Keeling. 2s. T. Woolmer. The elements of this story are simple enough; a widow taught humility and forgivingness by adversity, a love disappointment sanctified, a hard old rich man softened by the Christian life of a diligent though delicate youth, an empty young professor of religion changed in the furnace to good metal: such are the threads woven together with no little skill. Glimpses of Algiers and Southern France are introduced, and Wesleyan readers will recognise many familiar scenes and sentiments. A nice book for a Christmas present or a prize for older scholars.

Biographical Sketch of the Life and Work of Mr. Wm. M'Gavin. 1s., post free, from Mrs. Maria Denoon Peddie, 8, Granville-terrace, Edinburgh. These reminiscences of one who, in his day, stood up manfully against Roman Catholicism, and who, by his writings in The Protestant, and elsewhere, did much to show to the people the true character of this "great delusion," will do good service now. For about twenty years Mr. M'Gavin laboured earnestly in this cause, and proved himself a sturdy champion of Protestantism. Such men are much needed nowadays, and such books as this can scarcely fail in overcoming the lukewarm and apathetic manner in which the whole subject is viewed by too many.

From the Curate to the Convent. 5s. Kensit. This is not only a very interesting and entertaining book, eminently suited for the present day, but much useful information concerning Romish doctrines and practices is adroitly woven into the story, which, perhaps, would not be learnt if presented in a less attractive way, all such statements being given on the authority of Popish dignitaries themselves. It shows the Romeward tendency of Ritualism, and how its insidious growth is secretly fostered by the Church of Rome, while she despises the men who are so treacherous to their own professed position as members of the Reformation Church. The author, who was a greatly valued clergyman, has now passed beyond the reach of controversy, but he has left behind a noble proof of his faithfulness to the Church which he served so well.

Nineteen Beautiful Years: Records of the Life of a Beloved Sister. By Frances E. Willard. With Portraits. Introduction by Bishop Foster; and Prefatory Note by the Poet Whittier. 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. Whittier, the favourite American poet, thus writes: "It seems to me a very sweet and tender record of the exceptionally beautiful life of a young woman, whose rare natural gifts and graces were sanctified by a deep, but cheerful and healthful, religious experience. . . . It is a charming piece of biography." After Bishop Foster's comprehensive introduction there follow two or three pleasant descriptive chapters from the pen of Frances E. Willard, whose name, although not widely known in England, is a household word in America, for she is, perhaps, the foremost woman in the temperance cause in the United States. Three chapters are mainly taken up with extracts from the diary of Mary Willard, the "beloved sister." And to these succeed a narrative of her closing days. The diary is a delightful revelation of the inner life of this young lady; and, whilst full of Christian tone and spirit, the extracts therefrom are remarkable for freshness, naïveté, and instructiveness; wholesome, but lively; interesting, and yet profitable. "Nineteen Beautiful Years" is a book that may be safely put into a young lady's hands, with the assured confidence that it will serve to strengthen and deepen all influences for good.

Life of Rev. Charles Wesley. 3s. 6d. By Rev. John Telford. Religious Tract Society. A review of the life-work of one to whom Methodism owes so much is especially welcome at this juncture of its history. Charles Wesley's hymns, that were such a power in the revival of his day, have enriched the Church of all time. His early life and school days, his university life, the incidents of his American mission, his itinerary labours in this country, and the boldness and gentleness which he ever displayed; his genius as a poet, and his beautiful home life, are all brought vividly before us in these pages.

The Sunday Book of Biography. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a handsome, cheap, and valuable book. It comprises portraits for the most part excellently drawn and engraved, and sketches well written and full of interest, of thirty-six remarkable men and women. The volume forms quite a library of biography, and those who have not the time to read the volumes laid under contribution, here have the cream of them all. Nevertheless, we think the publication of these admirable summaries must lead, in many cases, to the purchase of the original memoirs. The missionary Moffat is followed by archbishops and bishops, philanthropists and politicians, preachers and poets, givers and workers, hospital nurses and men of science, men and women of high intellect and deep human sympathy, and, with very few exceptions, of pronounced Christian character—heroes and heroines of the Church of Christ.

Blessings all along the Line (1d. Horner & Son) is very suitable as a New Year's remembrancer.

Sunday Talk (3d. Nisbet & Co.) should have a large sale. The current number is especially good.

Ali and Beebi, by Rev. G. P. Rea (1d. Marcus Ward & Co.) is a thrilling story of the Indian Mutiny.

Does Man Live for Ever? 2d. By F. W. Grant. W. B. Horner & Son. This is a carefully written examination of a vital subject.

The Monthly Review (1d.), the organ of the Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, has, besides other good matters, an important article on "Christianity and Science," from the pen of Dr. J. H. Gladstone.

Footsteps of Truth. 3d. Shaw & Co. This monthly strikes a beautiful keynote for this season, in its article "Losing the Angels and Finding Christ." The expository portions maintain their value.

All for Christ. By Rev. G. T. Rea. 1d. Wm. Strain & Sons, Great Victoria-street, Belfast. This is a very pleasant variation on the ordinary style of New Year Addresses. Some very important lessons are pleasantly taught and illustrated.

The Church Missionary Pocket Almanack and Calendar (1s. C. M. S., Salisbury-square, E.C.) is a neat little vade-mecum, which will be found of great daily service to clergymen, as well as a constant reminder of their brethren in the mission field.

The Secret of Power, and The Secret of Victory over Sin. By Rev. F. B. Meyer. ½d. each. Partridge. The author goes to the root of the matter treated of in each of these little books, and puts the truth so simply and forcibly that it at once commends itself to the mind.

David Livingstone. The portrait of this renowned Christian explorer that adorns the current issue of the New Biographical Series published by the Religious Tract Society, is as good as any we have seen, and the story of his life is told by Dr. W. G. Blaikie with much freshness.

Bob Micklethwaite's Bicycle, by M. A. Paul Ripley (John Heywood, Manchester), is a capital story, showing how a boy found means to send one who was sickly and deformed to a Boys' Home, and how, by a little self-denial, he gained a large amount of real happiness. The brochure forms the Christmas number of Delving and Diving.

"Child Saving" is the title of the second report of the work of the rescue officers in connection with the Children's Aid Refuge Branch of the Reformatory and Refuge Union (4d. 32, Charing-cross, S.W.), a title which it very amply justifies. We wish the sad facts it reveals might be very widely read and digested by lovers of the many children whose lot is cast in the dark places of our city, which are full of the habitations of cruelty and vice.

Bosworth's Clerical Guide, 1887. 6s. 6d. net. Hamilton, Adams & Co. The value of this clerical directory is well known. Besides an alphabetical list of the clergy, there is a full description of all diocesan and cathedral establishments, and a complete list of benefices, with particulars of interest. The whole is corrected from the latest official returns, so that the volume is invaluable to a large portion of the community.

Loving Thoughts for Loving Homes. By M. G. 1s. Partridge & Co. There is the ring of true poetry about the poems in this charming little book; but that which makes them precious is that the fount of inspiration is clearly in the deep waters of the Father's unfathomable love. Many will recognise this little volume as an old friend when we say it is the third edition, with the addition of two fresh ones, "The Desert Raiment" and "Your Heavenly Father Knoweth." We sincerely hope the book will yet pass through many other editions. Two leaflets, "The Dream of Christmas Eve," and "A New Year's Wish," by the same author, have just been published by Mr. Caswell, Birmingham.

The publisher of Rev. J. Smith's little book, Daily Bread, noticed in our last, is Mr. A. Murray, Aberdeen, not Edinburgh.

A Message for 1887 (½d. John Shaw & Co.) forms a very effective Gospel appeal for general circulation at this period of the year.

Coming to the King (Hawkins) is a choice little volume, in which selections from the poems of Miss Havergal and others are interspersed with fine floral designs in chromo-lithography.

The Baptist Almanac. 2d. Banks & Son. Besides the ordinary calendar and other useful information, this almanac is well posted up in matters of importance and interest in the Baptist denomination.

The Congregational Almanac (same price and publishers) also contains much information of special interest in the denomination.

Alcohol. By Joseph M'Corry. 1d. Heywood, Manchester. This pamphlet, the result of the author's own experience, shows that alcohol has ever been, and ever will be, the enemy of the human race.

The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland Almanac and The Irish Workman (a counterpart of its British namesake), both published by Partridge & Co., will be great aids to Christian work in the sister isle.

The Circle of His Presence, by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins (6d. Marshall Bros.), gives in a circle many attributes of Christ corresponding to the needs of his people, showing what He is to those who abide in Him.

On and Off Duty. The special Christmas number of this monthly journal for policemen contains a variety of well-selected matter, together with information concerning the Force, and work going on in the different divisions.

John Bunyan's Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners is published for 1d. by F. Kirby, 17, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, E.C. Those of our readers who are interested in Dr. Whyte's prayer-meeting talks on the book may like to read it.

The Consecration of Money to the Service of God. By Rev. D. M. Duncan. Aird & Codhill, Glasgow. This address to senior scholars well sets forth the duty of giving, which it is very necessary should be early instilled into the minds of the young.

Be Quick! By J. Forbes Moncrieff. Drummond's Tract Depôt. This little book, completing the series entitled "Be in Earnest," "Be in Time," &c., enforces the importance of decision for Christ "to-day," and the folly of putting off, and is very incisively written.

Stories about China. By Annie R. Butler. 1d. T. O. Smith, 14, Paternoster-square. There is a wonderful amount of information in this booklet which will give all who read it a good idea of China and its people, and the way in which the stories are told is very attractive.

Pearls of Wisdom from the Parables of Christ. By A. L. O. E. 6d. Morgan & Scott. An admirable packet of twenty-four booklets, reprinted from the volume bearing this title. Those who are familiar with the writings of this author will readily judge how aptly the parables chosen are illustrated by her facile pen.

Drink and the Children. Home. And "She hath Done what She Could. 1d. each. By Mrs. J. C. Mackenzie. Monthly Tract Society. These addresses, now published as tracts, form effective appeals to parents, and very forcibly show the evil influence which the use of intoxicating drink exerts upon the home, the children as well as the parents.

Walk and not Faint. By J. M. Weylland. 1d. Partridge. This is the annual statement of the London City Missionaries' Disabled Fund, and contains most interesting sketches of the work of our veterans who during the year have been added to the list of disabled workers. It is fresh evidence of the devotion that animates the men of the London City Mission.

Woman's Work. 4d. Partridge & Co. Under the heading of "Christmas Cries and Christmas Cheer," we have in the December number of this interesting monthly a number of most distressing cases of poverty, that cannot but quicken the sympathies of tender-hearted women, and indirectly perhaps of their other halves. There are several other well-written articles.

Temperance in the Light of the Cross. By Rose E. Faulkner. 1s. Marshall Bros., 3, Amen-Corner. This Christian Abstainers' Text-book will be a help to the temperance cause. There is an able introduction by Bev. W. H. M. H. Aitken, and a text, with brief meditation on each, for Sundays and "Holy Days" throughout the year. The texts are well chosen, and show how much of Scripture bears on the subject, and the comments are very appropriate and significant.

Friendly Words to Young Women. By H. E. Stone. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The author is solemnly in earnest in writing to young women. He sees in them the complement of men, and that a true woman's life ever helps to refine. But he sees also how often the false instead of the true is instilled into her mind, or accepted, because of the glamour with which it is surrounded. He shows how they may be as corner-stones, polished, beautiful, and also how they may soon become coarse, exercising an evil influence on all around.

The Little Gleaner. 1s. 6d. Houlston & Sons. This monthly for the young makes a capital gift volume. The stories are full of pith, and the illustrations are very happy.—The Illustrated Missionary News. 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co. This volume enforces the thought how delightful and how important it is to be acquainted with the work carried on in the vast missionary field. A bird's-eye view is given of peoples and lands of which but very little would be known but for our missionaries, and of their work in making known the Gospel.—The Sower. 2s. Houlston & Sons. This volume well maintains its repute as a standard of religious truth and Protestantism. There are some most valuable memoirs and glimpses of the lives of saintly men and women.

Music.—Consecration. 4s. Weekes & Co. By Mr. Livesey Carrott, Organist of St. James's, Holloway. This is Miss Havergal's well-known hymn, "Take my life and let it be," &c, in the form of a sacred song. The music is well adapted for the words, and if played with due expression, may be very effectively rendered.

National Temperance League's Annual (2s.) is a perfect encyclopœdia of facts bearing on the varied phases of this question.—The Beautiful Snow (4d.); Look on this Picture and on that (1d.); Total Abstinence as a Safeguard (1d.). The first-named (set to music) and the second will be very useful at this season of entertainments, and, as parlour sketches, will give much pleasant diversion to old as well as young. The third, by Lady John Manners, treats the subject of total abstinence very pleasantly and temperately. (337, Strand.)

Mission and other Appeals.

Mrs. W. H. Wrigley (New Wandsworth) desires to express her thanks for scraps, pictures, &c., sent during the past years, and to again appeal for the same this year, to be utilised for scrap-books for the homes of the poor.

French Evangelical Mission.—M. Barbier (10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place) appeals for help in carrying on the work amongst the poorest class of French-speaking people in Soho and Leicester squares, St. Giles's, &c. The need at present is very great.

John-street Chapel, Edgware-road. — Mr. W. P. Russell, 27, Cambridge-street, Edgware-road, W., earnestly appeals for help in carrying on the many operations connected with this mission. It is intended to give free dinners and teas during the season.

London Female Penitentiary (191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N.)—The committee earnestly appeal for funds to enable them to carry on this reclamatory agency and to enlarge the steam laundry. Last week we gave some particulars of the work. Contributions will be thankfully received at the above address by the Secretary, W. Edwin Page.

Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows (32, Sackville-street, London).—This Society has now been in existence 63 years, and it would be scarcely possible to estimate the benefits it has conferred in granting relief to poor destitute widows during that period. Funds are earnestly solicited to enable the committee to sustain this important work. Mr. Samuel Rayson is Secretary.

North London Home for Aged Christian Blind Women (Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, N.). — The committee make a very urgent appeal on behalf of the General Maintenance Fund. During the winter months expenses are necessarily much heavier, age and its infirmities needing so much extra care and warmth. There are 34 blind women now in the Home, whose ages range from 50 to 91 years. Contributions will be thankfully received by the founders and hon. superintendents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bright.

KINGSTOWN COTTAGE HOME FOR LITTLE CHILDREN.—A note of praise is sounded in the year's report for the wonderful health enjoyed by the thirty-four children in this Home. Of some of the little ones very touching stories are told, that might enlist the sympathy of any reader. The news of all who have been sent to Canada and other places is very encouraging, and the children seem to be watched over even after they have left in a very tender way. The address of the Hon. Sec. is Miss Barrett, 7, De Pesci-terrace, Kingstown, Ireland.

MISSIONARY CHURCH OF BELGIUM.—The forty-eighth report of this Evangelical Society states that twenty-seven churches and stations have been founded amidst the Roman Catholic population, while the Gospel is regularly preached in 83 different places, and this influence is extended to 60 other places by open-air preaching, &c. The Society has also nine Bible-readers and five colporteurs, whose visits are well received by Roman Catholics, who, in many cases, are thoroughly disgusted with the priests. One said: "I am tired of their mummeries." During the strikes at the beginning of the year, and amongst the mining population generally, good work was done.

HOMES FOR WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.—There are now eight of these Homes in full working, five of them forming a ring round the city, and, therefore, most conveniently situated. From all there are the most cheering accounts. The beds are nearly all occupied, and the boys are in constant employment. Admission is perfectly free for any homeless boy who is willing to work and to pay, as far he is able, for his board and lodging. Some of the most satisfactory cases have been those of boys who had tramped up from the country, and been directed to the Home from the casual ward. At the present time there is much need of workers and funds. Friends desiring to assist in any way should communicate with Hon. T. H W. Pelham, 25, Brechin-place, S.W.

BLANDFORD-ROAD CLUB, EALING.—Thi Club, established for the promotion of social intercourse, and as a counter-attraction to the drinking places, is open every evening. On Tuesdays and Sundays there is a religious service; on other evenings entertainments of various kinds. There is a reading-room, and shorthand classes are being formed. Hitherto it has been supported almost entirely by Miss Peck; but the number of member is increasing so rapidly that other help is now much needed.

MENTONE.—Writing from this southern retreat, Rev. W. L. Lang says:—The loss experienced by the poor of Mentone, and by the many religious organisations hitherto finding a helping hand and sympathising heart at the Villa les Grottes, in te person of Mrs. Dudgeon, cannot be calculated, but it is, nevertheless, most keenly felt. Hers was the truest, most genuine sympathy, applied after her own most unostentatious manner. Mr. Spurgeon is quietly resting here for a further season, we hope, of useful labour. The usual New Year's International Prayer-meetings are projected.

BAND OF LOVE.—On Sunday week, at The Cabin, Crick, Rugby, a simple and interesting service, entitled "The Feast of Love," was held in connection with the George Smith of Coalville Society. There was a large gathering of young brothers and sisters, to whom Mr. Smith gave a short, telling address on the advantages of the Band of Love, in helping children and others to lead honourable, noble, and godly lives. He urged his young brothers and sisters to bury all cold looks, freezing actions, hatred and envy, and start life anew on paths of love that will lead to happiness in this world and the next.

METROPOLITAN CONVALESCENT INSTITUTION.—This Institution comprises three Homes, situate at Walton-on-Thames, Kingston-hill, and Bexhill-on-Sea, containing 600 beds, and admits yearly, free of charge, more than 4,500 poor convalescents from hospitals, dispensaries, and their own ill-provided and often overcrowded homes. The poor people are generally restored to health and able to resume work after a few weeks' residence in the Institution. The charity is unendowed, and, as the cost of maintaining between 4000 and 5000 poor persons exceeds £8000 yearly, the Board are compelled from time to time to appeal to the benevolent public for aid in meeting the demands made upon their resources. Mr. Charles Holmes, 32, Sackville-street, London, W., Secretary.

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.—On Sunday week, on account of the Cattle Show, it was impossible to hold the usual services in the Agricultural Hall. The vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Cloudesley-square, placed it, for the afternoon, at the disposal of Dr. Thain Davidson and his friends. A large congregation assembled, and an admirable and telling address was given by Rev. Burman Cassin, of Southwark. The hymns were given out by the vicar, Rev. W. E. Haigh, whilst Dr. Thain Davidson conducted the prayers, which were extemporaneous. It is not often that we meet with such a case of fraternal union and co-operation; nor do we recollect another instance of a Presbyterian clergyman conducting the prayers in a church of the English Establishment. The service was held in Holy Trinity last Sunday afternoon, the preacher being Rev. Edward A. Stuart, of St. James's, Holloway.—Islington Gazette.

SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN & MARINERS' SOCIETY.—Storm and tempest have already this winter beat fiercely upon our coast, and the two recent gales, in which our ships and sailors have suffered so severely, have made this year exceptional in regard to such visitations. The harrowing accounts of suffering in the fearful storm of last week, and the painful disaster to two lifeboats, with the loss of so many of their brave crews, must have stirred the hearts of all, enlisting deepest sympathy with those who are thus exposed to danger, and with those also who voluntarily expose themselves to the dangers of the sea in its fiercest moods to save the lives of their brethren. It is a matter for great thankfulness that wherever in these seagirt islands there are shipwrecked men, there the hand of the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society, through its vast network of honorary agencies, is stretched out to help them. We recently gave some particulars of the work of this Society, and need only add now that through its instrumentality between 11,000 and 12,000 persons are every year aided. Such an institution well deserves a warm and ready support. The office is at Sailors' Home Chambers, Dock-street, London Docks, E.; the secretary is Mr. W. R. Buck.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

Instituted 1772.

President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P.; S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C.; and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED IN 1844.

THE Funds of this Society greatly need replenishing. If liberal aid be not speedily forthcoming, the present number of 125 grants to poor and populous metropolitan and suburban parishes must be still further reduced. The Readers visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, and the erring; and they help generally in the Spiritual work of their respective parishes.

The Committee earnestly appeal for Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Collections, which are greatly needed.

"MOON'S" SOCIETY FOR EMBOSSING THE SCRIPTURES AND OTHER BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.

Dr. Moon's simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the Blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 251 languages and dialects. More than 160,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the Blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of The Christian.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. EARL OF ABERDEEN.

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by

John Kirk, Secretary.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

THROUGH the kindness of the readers of The Christian we were enabled last year to give 150 poor boys, gathered from the lowest streets of Deptford, a good Dinner on Christmas Day, and several Teas during the winter. It is proposed this year to increase the number to 250.—Contributions will be thankfully received by H. A. Punnett, care of Mr. Fegan, Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E.

FIELD LANE REFUGES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS,

Maintain and Benefit 3,500 persons weekly.
CRÈCHE FOR INFANTS. HOMES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.
REFUGES FOR MEN AND WOMEN.

We have already overdrawn our account at the Bankers £1,000. £1,600 is required to enable us to close the year free from debt.

Will any of your Readers kindly send a Contribution?

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has characterised the work of this Institution as "A perfect network of charitable operations—an immense boon to the poor."

THE LATE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G. (The late President of the Institution), said: "His Royal Highness has not said a word too much—every word he has uttered is well merited by the Institution and those who conduct it."

The Cry of the Destitute Poor! "Please help us."

The above appeal comes to us from many poor ones, at this time, and many more are anxiously waiting for any help we can render them. But our Funds are exhausted, and we are also in debt to the extent of £100. Will the readers of The Christian help to alleviate the sufferings of the many who are in great poverty by want of work? Pity the poor children who crowd our doors on Tuesday evenings, the school containing between 600 and 700. We are anxious to give them dinners, soup, &c.

Donations towards the above object will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Or Donations and Parcels of Clothing to T. and J. Young, 39, Oswin-street, St. George's-road, Southwark, S.E.; or to the Editor of The Christian.

AN OLD FRIEND writes to MRS. MEREDITH:—

"I will give £20 for the enlargement (Nine Elms House), provided £200 are subscribed before January 31, 1887."

MRS. MEREDITH earnestly begs for contributions or promises of money, within the given time, to enable her to claim this liberal offer.

"We have received a sample Roller Organ from Messrs. Campbell & Co., Musical Instrument Makers, 103, Trongate and 90, Argyle-st., Glasgow. We were extremely pleased with this marvellous instrument.

"We are pleased to have had an opportunity of hearing and judging of the tone and the execution of the various melodies performed, as nothing but a personal inspection could have induced us to give such a favourable verdict on the merits of the instrument as we are now enabled to. The different songs which the Organ performs may be played and used as an accompaniment to the voice, if desired, whilst other tunes can be used for dancing purposes. The tone is extremely agreeable."

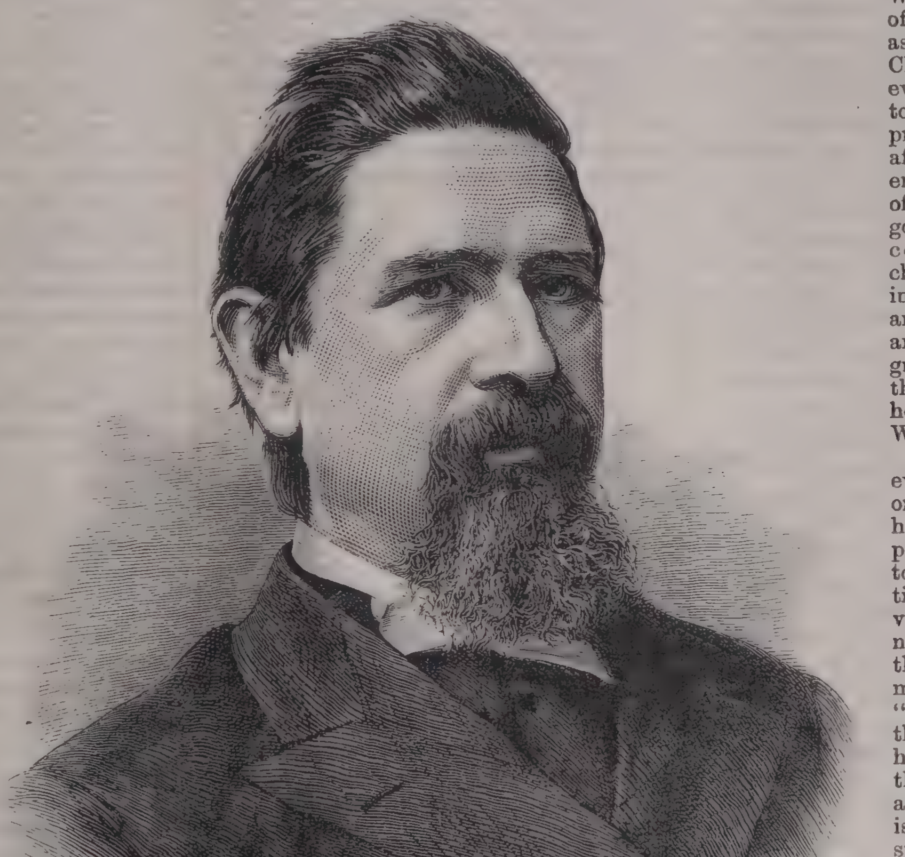
REV. GRIFFITH JOHN, CHINA.

FOR more than thirty years Rev. Griffith John has laboured in China under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, and by his speeches and writings has excited a deep and widespread interest among English-speaking nations in the great work of opening Central China to Christian missions. Others have had more tragic tales to tell, but no missionary of recent times has enkindled deeper emotions in the breasts of old and young than he, when he has related, in words on fire of God, the simple tale of what God has done for him and his beloved Chinese converts.

The first impression of everyone who meets Mr. John is that he was born to be a missionary. The conviction deepens as you converse with him. One more gifted with the human qualities which are so advantageous in "winning souls," or endued with more of the tact and power needful to "become all things to all men," could not be imagined. A charming frankness, both in speech and manner; the power to put a question which would entail a confession, in such a way as to extract that admission without giving offence; a voice which conveys sympathy through the medium of the simplest words; and an easy self-possession which wins confidence yet ensures respect. These are combined with a strong and attractive physique, great intelligence and energy; whilst, beyond all, is a power which makes you feel that you are with one in whom dwells the "fulness of the Spirit," and who is "furnished completely unto every good work." The involuntary eulogium, recently passed by one of the heathen, whose claims he had been opposing, was, "That foreign teacher is a good man."

In Mr. John's preaching there is great power of expression. He has equal control over his thoughts and his feelings, and maintains a fair balance, being free from the coldness of the philosopher and the ravings of the enthusiast. The simple language and apt illustrations adopted, always suffice to convey the thought or emotion. In this he shows some of the chief requirements of the orator. There is also a clear and well-modulated voice, the persuasive earnestness of which has a peculiar power over a heathen people unaccustomed to such addresses.



E. SMITH PHOTO.

(From Photograph by Edward Smith, Cheapside, London.)

That he has great linguistic aptitude is evident from the fact that in sixteen months after his arrival in China, he was able to preach in Chinese so as to command the unqualified admiration of those who were well acquainted with the language. Besides these qualifications, our brother has strong faith that it has "pleased God to reveal his Son in him, that he might preach Him among the heathen."

It may interest our readers to know something of his early life. He was born at Swansea in 1831, of parents who were remarkable for their Christian zeal and piety.

Mr. John's mother died of cholera in 1834. When about eight years of age, he was received as a member of Ebenezer Chapel, Swansea, and even then he frequently took part in the public prayer meetings. Shortly after this, he entered the employ of Mr. Williams of Onllwyn, who was a godly man, and soon perceived the promising character of the lad. He invited him to become an inmate of his house, and treated him with great kindness. Here, at the early age of fourteen, he began to preach in Welsh.

From the first he gave evidence of possessing oratorial gifts of the highest order. The people were delighted to hear him, and invitations flowed in from various churches in the neighbourhood. Among the crowded audiences many were heard to say, "What manner of child is this?" and the strongest hopes were entertained that a brilliant future awaited him in the ministry of the Gospel. Much surprise was, therefore, occasioned when he suddenly withdrew from all public efforts, justifying his conduct by modest references to his youth, and consequent inexperience. For a time he exercised his gifts in more private forms of Christian work. At length, yielding to the solicitations of his minister, and the more prudent of his friends, in his sixteenth year he recommenced his pulpit efforts in different parts of the principality, and with similar results. Everywhere he went it was soon manifest that in Griffith John, God was preparing a mighty witness for Himself, and predictions were not wanting of a fame and career of usefulness as great as that of the venerated Christmas Evans, the Apostle of Wales.

It was represented that a course of study would be of great benefit, and his father asked Rev. E. Jacob, who was then minister of Ebenezer Chapel, Swansea, if "he would teach Griffith a little." The kind-hearted pastor had given help to other young men who were preparing for the ministry, so in November, 1848, he went to reside with Mr. Jacob and remained until 1850, when he entered Brecon College. In 1849, his father died of the same complaint as his mother. The bitter grief which he manifested at the grave so kindled the compassion of Mr. Jacob that he said he should never know the lack of an earthly father so long as he lived. The relationship thus formed has been maintained with touching ardour on both sides to this day.

From his own statement to a personal friend, we learn that he applied himself earnestly to study, with much success, and entertained the hope of becoming a popular preacher. Whilst indulging in this prospect, God met him and cast out the earthly ambition, and in its place inspired a desire to be a missionary to the heathen. Friends remonstrated and argued in vain about home claims—the Macedonian cry was being iterated by the Spirit in his heart. At first his thoughts turned towards Madagascar. Perhaps the fact of his fiancée being the daughter of one of the first missionaries in that land had prompted this feeling, but after a further course of study at Bedford, he left himself in the hands of the Directors of the London Missionary Society, who appointed him to China, a decision which has been fraught with blessing to thousands. Before leaving England, in 1855, he married Miss M. J. Griffiths, daughter of Rev. David Griffiths, who laboured for many years in Madagascar. Mrs. John was a very effective worker, and did much good in a quiet way.

He first entered upon foreign service at Shanghai, where much useful information was gained. Beside the ordinary work of the station, he co-operated in pioneer efforts by accompanying Rev. Dr. Edkins in 1857 to Soochow. In 1858 he established stations at Sung Kiang and other places. In July, 1861, in company with Rev. R. Wilson, B.A., he removed to Hankow and laid the foundation of a permanent station in that city, which is the principal place for commerce in Central China, and then contained about 800,000 people, whilst the cities adjoining had about 400,000 more. With characteristic promptness Mr. John preached the first day of his entry into Hankow. It has always been so with our brother—work first, personal matters afterwards. And only this enthusiasm and capability for arduous toil could have made the history of this Mission such a long series of successes. No one can read through his annual reports and letters without seeing that underneath all the facts narrated there runs an indomitable spirit of perseverance and of hard effort.

Between April and September, 1868, he travelled over 3000 miles, visited Chengtu, capital of Sichuan, and Han-chung, in Shensi, and penetrated to regions where the glad tidings of salvation had never been heard before. Soon after he left Hankow to reside in the neighbouring city of Wuchang. The opening of Wuchang is one of the greatest triumphs of Mr. John's career. The official capital of the two provinces of Hupeh and Hunan, it contained numbers of mandarins, literati, and officials, who not only hated the foreigner and his religion, but who were determined by all means to prevent his coming there. No strategist ever planned a more successful campaign, or followed up each advance with abler and surer movements. As "the first stroke is half the battle," if it be a good one, Mr. John, after a survey of the place, determined to visit the Viceroy, preparing the way by a present of his writings and tracts. This was a bold proceeding, and the mandarins were alarmed. They, with the literati and officials, went in a body to the palace, and indulged in the most vehement protests and virulent abuse. The interview of Mr. John, however, was so far successful that the verbal consent of the Viceroy was obtained. This "lip-sanction" the mandarins declared meant nothing, but a polite acquiescence, and was ignored in fact. A long struggle ensued, and a piece of land was obtained, but had to be relinquished for a less eligible plot, though with these advantages, that the attention of all in the two provinces was drawn to the combat, and the proclamation which was issued, authorising the erection of a place of worship for "the religion of Jesus" on the spot selected by the authorities, virtually announced the humiliation of the mandarins, and the opening of the whole of both provinces for mission work.

In 1870 Mr. John, with his family, paid a visit to England. In 1872 he preached the annual sermon of the London Missionary Society, which subsequently had a large circulation as a pamphlet under the title "Hope for China." After a sojourn, prolonged on account of Mrs. John's ill health, they sailed for China in February, 1873. But his devoted helpmeet died on the journey, in the harbour of Singapore.

In October, 1874, Mr. John married the widow of Dr. Jenkins, of the American Methodist Episcopalian Mission. This distinguished lady entered into rest on December 29, 1885. Her extraordinary character and arduous missionary labours deserve a distinct notice, which we hope to give in our next.

The provision of a Christian literature for China has often occupied the thoughts of Mr. John, and various contributions have been made by him from 1860 onwards. In 1882 he revised his previously published books and tracts, and added six more to their number. Seeing that the zeal of many for missions was flagging, besides "Hope for China," referred to above, he wrote just before leaving England, in 1882, "A Plea for China." This stirring statement was widely circulated by the London Missionary Society. At the same time appeared "China: her Claims and Call;" also a most valuable booklet, entitled "Spiritual Power for Missionary Work," which is published from the office of this journal. This soul-firing address contains the clearest statements respecting the work and power of the Holy Spirit, with the most forcible illustrations, and many confess that its perusal has been to them "a means of grace" of the most awakening character.

Mr. John's chief literary work has been the translation of the New Testament into easy Wen-li—a simple form of the learned tongue — for the benefit of ordinary readers. Several portions were issued as soon as ready, and the complete version was published in 1885. It has long been felt by missionaries that if the common people are to read the word of God it must be conveyed to them in another vehicle than the classical language of China. This has resulted in translations being prepared in some of the provincial dialects.

Speaking generally of Mr. John as a missionary, we may say that unto him has been given in rich measure the spirit of wisdom. He has become a Chinaman in his sympathies, and has sought to know all sides of life and character in the national life of China. By a close study of their sacred books he has learnt what of truth they possess, and his wide experience has shown him how that lies dormant and degraded, while a soul-destroying superstition, or an equally destructive unbelief, reigns in their hearts. But while clearly seeing their plight, he does not go among them as some superior being, but as a brother, and as one who serves; this is partly the secret of his success. By his own testimony, it is during the last few years that real success has come to him as a missionary, since the time when he received as a special gift from God "power from on high." His simple story is that about twelve years ago he was deeply dissatisfied with himself and his work, and felt an unutterable need for more of the Spirit of God. His only resource was to lie in the dust before God, which he did for a whole day, waiting to be endued with power. The next day he went to preach, but without a text. God opened his lips, and while speaking a veritable baptism of the Holy Ghost fell on him and the converts. They were filled with joy, and on all sides those who believed rose up to bear testimony to the love of God, whilst many who had been babes in Christ Jesus became men, and spoke with boldness of Christ to the unconverted Chinese. Some of the vilest characters were changed, and went throughout the country, and soon strangers from afar flocked in, as they said, to hear the Gospel, for they had already seen it in the lives of the converts.

One source of joy to our friend is that he has been called to suffer persecution in various forms for Christ's sake. On his first visit to Hian-kan he was, with Dr. Mackenzie and some of the Christian Chinese from Hankow, who bravely formed a bodyguard, stoned by the people. On putting his hand to his face, and finding that blood was streaming down his cheeks, he said to himself: "I have suffered many things for Jesus Christ, but I was never permitted before to shed my blood for Him." Not the least among his triumphs has been to open a chapel among these very people who had sought to take his life.

One feature in Mr. John's life must not be left unnoticed. It is the close and intimate communion which has always existed between him and his colleagues and native helpers. A pleasant spirit of deference and sympathy pervades their life. They work together, "in honour preferring one another."

TO OUR READERS.

The close of the year is a fitting time for a little confidential talk with our readers.

We are anxious to meet the convenience and to fulfil the wishes of all our friends, but as these are often diverse from one another, it will be well for us to specify a few of our thoughts and purposes.

(1) One of the happiest signs of the time is the revival of the missionary spirit. To this we are giving all the impetus in our power. We shall therefore add to our title the words, "And Missionary Witness."

(2) As the year is closing we earnestly press upon our friends the request that they will enable us to send this paper to every English-speaking missionary in the world. Nothing else so welcome and so desirable could be accorded them at the same small outlay. Will they also do personally what they can to introduce it to their friends and neighbours, to ministers and Christian workers of every kind?

(3) The Christian has been for many years a channel for the transmission of funds to home and foreign missions and other beneficent objects, and this perhaps has led to our receiving numerous appeals for funds. In these difficult times these have become so frequent that it has come to pass that almost every article, short or long, winds up with an appeal. The effect of this monotonous refrain must be bewildering, depressing, exciting, irritating, according to the inward condition and outward circumstances of the reader. We believe it is not good for anyone, and we have been led to resolve on its discontinuance. It will be a refreshing change if the constraining motive for a communication to our columns is not pressing financial need, but the desire to praise God, and to call on others to do so, for the great things He hath done, whether to one soul or to many. Our assured belief from years of editorial experience is, that purses are opened when hearts are opened; and hearts are opened not by what some have called the sting in the tail of a story (meaning the appeal for funds), but by the story itself of human sin or sorrow effectually met by Divine compassion. Sometimes the appeal, like a north wind, freezes the reader up again, after he had been thawed into a giving disposition by the south wind of some true story of God's grace.

We do not say that we will never insert a direct appeal, but it will be for some special or pressing cause. At the same time, we will gladly give information as to funds or anything else which may seem essential. Our readers may rest assured that every battle with sin and suffering requires the prayer and sympathy and money of those who tarry by the stuff. If those who go out to the fight are willing to share the spoil with those who tarry by the brook, the least thing the tarriers should do is to supply the needs of the warriors. It will interest our readers to know that in the ten years now ending the donations which have passed through our hands for various Missions, &c., have amounted to over £97,000, an average of £10,000 a year. This is exclusive of the probably much larger amount sent direct to the Missions themselves.

(4) We are continually breaking up fresh ground, and with the reviving spirit of missionary enterprise we are devoting more space to Foreign Missions. At the same time the work at home is spreading, and as our circulation grows communications from new localities make increasing demands upon our space.

We are consequently obliged to revise our list of Forthcoming Meetings. Our original object in that department was to give information to residents in or visitors to London, of any meetings of special interest. We shall be happy to do this, on as large a scale as possible, but we are obliged to omit such as are of purely local character and interest.

(5) Our having given weekly the engagements of a few prominent evangelists has led to our receiving applications from other evangelists. These applications increase, and in a little while would do so quite beyond our limits. We are also placed in this difficulty, that the insertion of names becomes a credential, and their omission may be construed into the reverse. We shall therefore in the new year discontinue this weekly list of engagements, but shall gladly give such reports of work, and information of coming arrangements, as may be of general interest.

(6) A word to our kind contributors of intelligence. It will save us the thankless task of condensing their communications within our necessary bounds, if they will remember that local colouring and particulars which are interesting on the spot, would occupy too much space in a paper which goes over the whole world, and gives intelligence from all quarters of the globe. For example, some of the daily papers contain a column of news from a large number of towns. In the local journals many of those paragraphs would be extended to half a column or more, while in the London papers they are condensed into a few lines.

(7) On the other hand, events may take place in a village which are of world-wide significance. The details of some special conversion; some fresh method in the conduct of a mission; some unusual operation of the Holy Ghost; some unaccustomed manifestation of the power or grace of God, may be of essential importance to the kingdom of God. The confidences of the inquiry-room or of pastoral visitation are inviolable, but lessons may be and must be learned in dealing with souls which would be of incalculable value to others. Secrets spoken in the ear, and which must never be divulged, may yet contain revelations of spiritual truth or of soul-experience which should be proclaimed upon the house-tops, while persons, places, and circumstances, are hidden beneath a veil which must never be removed except by the individuals themselves.

(8) Words cannot express our sense of indebtedness to our friends for their prayers to God on our behalf. Innumerable evils have been averted, and innumerable blessings bestowed in answer to these unceasing supplications; and now, in the twenty-eighth year of our publication, with a rising tide of spiritual life and energy, and also of Satanic delusion and iniquity everywhere manifest, we heartily desire the continuance and increase of the same loving help at the throne of grace, that we and all our helpers and contributors may have the wisdom and prudence, faith and courage, temperance and patience, love and charity, needful for the work we have to do. We desire and pray, for all our readers, all spiritual and temporal blessing in the closing and the coming year.

PROTESTANTS IN CONVENTION.

The most significant event of last week, in the religious world, was the Protestant Convention at Glasgow. It was significant in more senses than one. The attendance throughout was good, but not such as might have been expected among a people whose Protestantism is of such a sturdy type. Possibly some of our Scottish friends are so satisfied as to the strong hold that Reformation principles have in the hearts of their countrymen, that they see no danger of any serious national lapse to the bastard faith of Rome. Up to a certain point we are disposed to agree with them. Yet there are many unmistakable indications of a partial movement in that direction; and in proportion to the supineness of the spiritual leaders in our Protestant Churches will be the success of those who make no secret of their desire to bring this Empire once again under the iron heel of the Papacy.

The recent exposure of the doings of "the priest in the family" forcibly reminds us that Popery flourishes best in the dark. As it was well said by some of the speakers at the Convention, the teachings of the Church of Rome will not bear honest discussion in the light of open day. It is to this under-ground and hidden working of the Popish system that we may attribute most of the popular apathy on the subject. Rome never shows her hand, unless by inadvertence, and we are apt to think that the lion has become a lamb. If the Convention last week proved anything, it proved that in principle, in aim, and in tactics, Rome is unaltered and unalterable. All she lacks is the opportunity to put her principles into practice.

Herein lies the principal significance of last week's gatherings: they will afford the enlightenment which the nation, too ready to forget the lessons of the past, seems now to need. Our readers will have seen that the programme prepared by the conveners was of the most comprehensive and varied description; every phase of the question—individual, social, educational, political, national, moral, spiritual—was dealt with. Need we say, therefore, that the utterances of the speakers ought to command the calmest thought and closest attention of every loyal and true-hearted British subject, not to say every believer in the evangelical truths of revelation. By the kind co-operation of the readers we are enabled in this issue to give ample reports of nearly all the papers read; pressure of space compels us to hold over several of them till next week. Those we give will more than repay the most careful perusal. We invite our younger readers, especially, to make themselves possessors of the vast fund of information which these addresses afford. Few better ways of spending a part of the Christmas holidays could be suggested than in acquiring a detailed acquaintance, from such reliable sources, with the true nature and inevitable outcome of that system which has done so much, these many centuries past, to obscure the glory and obstruct the kingdom of Him who was born a Babe in Bethlehem.

All the papers read were so excellent that it is almost invidious to specify any; but that of Dr. Hamilton Magee was so valuable in its bearing on our duty to our Roman Catholic brethren that we feel sure all workers among the masses of our city populations will be glad to have their attention specially called to it.

THE END OF THE YEAR.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST.

It is necessary as we approach the end of another year to remind ourselves that the question: "Watchman, what of the night?" must be very much answered by every Christian man for himself. God loves the individual fidelity which reads and hearkens to the sure word of Holy Scripture, and from its prayerful study forms a standard that guides his judgment, and shapes his conduct. Very conflicting just now are the aspects and prospects of that cause which is dear above all things to every loyal-hearted servant of the Lord Jesus. Devotion to Him and to lost and suffering men has rarely been surpassed, and the heavenly watchers probably never saw more of self-forgetting zeal. This is for the first time seen everywhere. Asia and Africa unconsciously are vying with America and Europe in their offering of sons and daughters whose passion it is to spend and be spent for Christ.

But the contrasts were never more marked. If the morning cometh there is also the night. Signs there are that the essential conception and apprehension of Christian character is no longer possessed, and no longer even held by multitudes who bear Christ's name. And if we think so, we must carry the cross of this conviction. A cross it is, and a heavy one. It is not pleasant to be called pharisaic, when, in utter opposition to the pharisaic spirit, we renounce the authority of the age and of the traditions of men, and give our allegiance to inspired authority only. It cannot but give pain to be charged with passing sweeping judgments, uttering querulous lamentations, and indulging in pessimistic prophecies. Let it, however, be noted that it would be very difficult to find an example of an effective worker, in his own generation, who indulged an optimist complacency. When in the sublime Psalm Jehovah announced the mediatorial rule of the Messiah, it is spoken of as a rule in "the midst of his enemies." The subtlest development of the enmity of these malign adversaries will probably be the mark of the times that precede Christ's greatest triumph, and will be the severest test of the fidelity of his followers to Him.

OUR CREDO AND TESTIMONY.

On the return of the Christmas Festival let us repeat the truths in which, through the adorable Spirit of Light, there is belief among the countless host of the faithful in the two hemispheres. The grandeur of our Christianity is that it alone among all religions deals effectually with the awful problem of sin. It is a SALVATION. It does not so much insist on external ceremonies, as that it seeks to make new the inner man of the heart. It comes with a transcendent testimony concerning the Son who came from the side of the Father, and with the authority of the Father, to bear a message of peace and of life to men. It tells of the unparalleled, unsearchable love of Him who gave Himself for our sins, and offered a vicarious and expiatory atonement on man's behalf. It proclaims the fact of measureless grace, that an infinite Helper abides with man, even the Spirit of Almighty, pitying love, and that He communicates between the spirit of the man who believes in Jesus as the Redeemer, and Christ as the High Priest in heaven, who makes intercession. The Christian Gospel lays a grand offer of this two-fold blessing of forgiveness and of a helping presence at the feet of every child of Adam; it condemns sin while it justifies; it releases from the power of sin while it teaches its guilt; it pacifies the conscience while it gives a new Lord to the conscience, and, with all, it bases its unsearchable and infinitely adequate revelations, not on the changing authority of men, but on the immutable Word of God, which abides as an ever-brightening pillar of light throughout all generations.

Such brief, human words cannot indeed express the fathomless depth of Scripture; they are given to indicate that Evangelical believers have a clear testimony to bear. And let it not be forgotten that "Evangelical" is no mere human word. It translates a Scripture term for the very heart of New Testament Christianity. No greater wrong is done to this generation than when preachers — strange contradiction! — have no definite message to deliver from God. Preaching without positive truth, utterance of theological terms, which, like old and empty shells, have no kernel, is an awful wrong to congregations. We hear a modern conceit that religious truth is progressive; that Christian doctrines are not to be chained to the dimmer teaching of a long past age; that no man has a right to insist upon any one form of Christian dogma; that this age finds its freedom in throwing off the trammels of a by-gone authority. Such are the specious reasonings which, under the pretence of a "Liberal" spirit, are perverting not a few in this generation. And the reasoning is not honest. These modern preachers dare not proceed to the legitimate conclusion of their own discourses, and tell men openly that their nineteenth century revelations of Christianity are better than those given to Apostles. They dare not tell congregations that true religious knowledge is emancipation from New Testament theology. They are too wise in their generation to formulate in explicit language what men are now-a-days to believe. Their shallow plausibilities are accepted, and Christian faith is undermined; but no positive truth is taught for the peace and the strengthening of the souls of men.

Therefore it is that while most firmly believing that the Evangelical interpretation of the New Testament is justifying itself as never before; that it is followed by a saintliness of life in its adherents, and by a magnificent benevolence and selfless service, never equalled among men, it appears, nevertheless, needful to point out the emphatic dangers which menace that truth in these days.

SOUL-GOVERNED MEN.

This is the rendering which Professor Agar Beet has given to Paul's word in 1 Cor. ii. 14. They are men governed by the lower side of their nature. The animal element controls the actions and even the intelligence. Other Greek scholars hold, in like manner, that "psychic" in the New Testament is uniformly used to express "self-led," in contrast to "God-led." What a telling description of men! What a penetrating contrast! And if Paul's age brought into the church these soul-governed men, how much more does ours. Positions of wealth, learned ease, dignity, and official prestige have been created by Christianity. Men and scholars make their way to these attractive places. In the Professor's chair and the pulpit they are found. The "offence of the cross" has not "ceased" with them. Their theology, spite of intellectual attainments, is esoteric, and often extraordinary. Professing to accept Paul's writings, and reading them in public, it nevertheless puts in the background his plainly stated doctrines, and minimises his deathless words. Instead of being a system of truth which demands belief, it is a chaotic creed of contradictions which confuses belief. It talks perpetually of aiming at a "reasonable" teaching for this "advanced" age; by which is virtually meant a teaching adapted alike to the "spiritual man" and the "natural man," i.e., to the worldly and even sin-loving man, whose life is death, and to the enlightened aspiring believer who is alive from the dead. It is a fashion with this new school to call evangelical preachers intellectually feeble; and feeble men there are in all schools; but according to the scorn of this new theology, the greatest missionaries, and the preachers who were the most successful in turning men unto righteousness, must have been intellectually feeble; and the epithet in all honesty ought to be applied to the great reformers, who, by the power of the witnessing Spirit, have poured quickening light over nations. May God make us all feeble after the manner of Paul, Augustine, Wycliffe, Luther, Calvin, Baxter, Wesley, Vinet, and Chalmers. Before these suns of evangelical doctrine, the stars of a so-called "advanced thought" may hide their diminished heads.

It is in what are termed the "Free Churches" of England that this leaven of "new theology" is working. Let it but prevail, and it will assuredly quench the grand testimony, prostrate the ancient power, and lay a deadening arrest on the historic influence of Methodist and Dissenting congregations.

A conspiracy against the truth appears in another direction—

ANTI-PROTESTANTISM.

It is in the artifice of names that the craft and maleficent bait of satanic seducement is now witnessed. Let a godly clergyman exalt Christ, and the necessity of implicit and exclusive reliance upon Him, and he is spoken of as "very low"; let a man narrow the Gospel message by concealing the perils of the impenitent, and also the boundless grace which flows to men through Christ's vicarious death, and he is called "broad"; let a third, in order to sustain mediæval usages, hide Christ behind a priest, and resuscitate dogmas, in protest against which illustrious martyrs went to the stake, and he is designated "high." From whom but from him who is the deceiver, could such fatal witchery proceed? Do not the Scriptures warn of this? Are we not cautioned against the arch enemy's "subtlety" and "devices?" Did not the Lord speak of "the gates of hell" taking council against his cause?

Let us take a backward glance. What a magnificent promise of blessed influence had Evangelicalism in the English Church fifty years ago! Silently, but with consummate skill, the tares were sown which were intended to "Catholicise" the Church. As that Oxford intrigue became understood this Protestant nation was scandalised, and then indignant, at the traitorous machination. At that hour even J. H. Newman said to the clergy: "Show yourselves priests, and the nation will cast you off." He himself could not foresee the success of the movement in which he had taken a prominent part.

He sees it now. 1886 closes with this priestly school claiming to be the National Church, and averring that the Protestants in the Establishment are an unimportant sect. There may be much of empty boasting in this language, but it marks a drift towards Romanism which many Protestants are fatally ignoring, and about which some of the Evangelical preachers in the Church of England are strangely silent. Unquestionably there is a continually-increasing number of English parishes where this Catholicising party has, to all intents, its Mass; where Jesus is spoken of as present on the altar as truly and really as He was upon the Cross; where the reading of the Bible is discouraged; where Altar Manuals teach a sacrifice which the officiating clergyman offers; where Catechisms instruct the young in the notion that there can be no union with Christ but through a priest; where Romanising doctrines are taught that are not only contrary to the Word of God, but to the formularies of the English Church; where among the laity private judgment is surrendered, and the voice of the Church is openly substituted for that of Scripture, and dominates all ecclesiastical, domestic, and private life. It is unquestionable that Universities are becoming leavened with this "Catholic" doctrine; that Convocation is mysteriously biassed in its favour; that trusted Evangelicals instead of being in protest are betrayed into assimilating practices; that the secular press has no longer its old English tone against Popery and all approaches to it; that "Confession" is enforced; that Church spectacles, ceremonies, and new symbolical vestments are being multiplied; and that "Retreats" and "Sisterhoods," where priests are supreme, are growing under the shadow of parish churches. I have firm convictions as to the potent, albeit secret, influences that have been at work as a poisonous anti-Protestant propagandism to bring on us this state of things; but that these designs which have been allowed to become pervasive, now seriously threaten the dearest principles of Christian Englishmen will, I am sure, be soon learnt with dismay.

TIMES OF CONFLICT.

It is not in England only that this ecclesiastical retrogression is going on. I do not think I ever read a chapter of Church history with such emotions of pain and astonishment as the report of the Triennial Convention of the American Episcopal Church, held at Chicago two months ago. It was proposed that the name "Protestant Episcopal" should be expunged, and that the designation should be "The American Catholic Church." I say nothing of the assumption of a party, the eighth as to numbers on the list of religious bodies in the United States, to be called The Church of America, although this claim is full of suggestion as an avowed theory of church order; but I ask it to be noted that the discussion plainly proclaimed, on the part of a considerable section of the Convention, a repudiation of our solemn and immortal Reformation. The objection to the term Protestant was an objection to the doctrine of Justification by Faith, and the Right of Private Judgment. The speech that was received with "great cheering" made the latter point palpable. And it is sad to add concerning this attempt to bring all the American people under such an anti-Christian thraldom, and to darken the glorious light whereby Protestant nations have risen to their magnificent ascendency, that the clerical vote in favour of the motion represented one-third of the clergy, and one-third of the communicants of the body. "The communicants:" when a generation ceases to read the Bible; when it ignores the instructive lessons of history; when the sensuous and the spectacular have sway; when pleasure and ostentation are the fashion; when the passion for amusements is all-engrossing,—then laymen, and women especially, will gladly sustain an ultra-ritualistic church, and listen to a priesthood which will offer to take on itself the care of their salvation.

Shall this two-fold peril that menaces our age prevail? Shall a tacit compact in favour of Rationalism among one party, and a conspiracy of Romanism in the other, have the power to lower the sole authority of the New Testament Scriptures? Let there be given an emphatic "no." What is the remedy? Human learning? This by itself intoxicates the intellect with pride. Advanced civilisation? This may but multiply the allurements and opportunities of God-dishonouring pleasure. The power that will overcome is the Spirit of the living Christ. Given at Pentecost to abide with us in this dispensation, He has never been withdrawn. The Spirit is now wondrously moving and actuating minds everywhere. Extraordinary grace is being shed. New protestors are drawing nearer together. Evangelical believers are growing more courageous. In Universities, Colleges, and Associations young Englishmen are emulating the heroism of the first witnesses. In every denomination the spiritual men are asserting themselves. A cleavage is being driven right through the professing church. A new era of home and foreign missions is dawning. The all-sufficiency of Scriptures is seen and held as never before. Aglow with love to Christ, Christian women are showing a self-less zeal not surpassed since Primitive times. Among earnest disciples in all lands loyalty to the Lord is being learnt. If the enemy has come in like a flood before years pregnant with great events, it is inspiring to learn that the Spirit of the Lord is lifting up a standard, and calling the faithful to rally and gather round it, as those who have been consecrated unto Christ by the sprinkling of his sacrificial blood.

As to other devices of the world-powers, these, God willing, will be adverted to next week.

MISSION AT WEISBADEN.

By invitation of some of the evangelical clergymen of Weisbaden, Pastor Schrenk, from Marburg, has lately held a fortnight's mission here. The Kaiserhalle, holding 1000 people, was well filled every evening, and the Gospel preached with wonderful power, clearness, and simplicity by Pastor Schrenk.

The special feature of the Mission, however, was felt to be the morning Bible-reading on John xv. It was held in the Mission Hall, which is quite a centre for Christian work in Weisbaden. It is believed there has been much blessing, and prayer is asked that the work may go on. A Sunday-school, numbering about 1000 children, a mothers' meeting of 100 members, a class for young women every Sunday afternoon, two weekly Bible-readings, Y.M.C.A., &c., are all being carried on in connection with the Mission Hall.

An earnest desire has been awakened to do something more to meet the need of the many servants and young women in Weisbaden. A suitable place has offered, and should the Lord open the way, and send the needed help, a Home will be provided for them. Full information can be had from Herr Pfarrer Ziemendoff, 8, Emser-strasse, Weisbaden.

CHRISTMAS WAITING.

"Wait for the promise of the Father."—Acts i. 4.

The children sat in the homestead,
On the eve of the Christmas day;
And the father had made them a promise
In the morn when he went away:
A promise that he would bring them
A present of goodly things;
So they wait for his coming footstep,
And the gift that his strong arm brings.
We wait for our Father's promise too,
For we know that his faithful word is true.

We wait for the Father's promise!
A living and precious seed:
He has planted it deep in our bosom;
For its blooming we ever plead.
We watch for its first upspringing,
Expecting a flower fair:
But, childlike, are sometimes impatient,
When finding no bright buddings there.
Yet we wait for our Father's promise still,
For the seed He soweth no frost can kill.

We wait for the Father's promise;
We wait as for some dear friend,
Who comes from a distant country,
With gifts that his love will send:
With smiles for the waiting children,
A kiss for the babes in grace:
We wait for the coming loved One,
And look for his sunny face.
Our Father's promise is on the way,
Let us go and meet it in hope's bright day.

I know not what is the promise
Thy Father has made to thee;
But whatever the gracious whisper
Thou waitest in faith to see,
Remember, it is thy Father
Who speaketh the gracious word,
And wait, as a child, believing
To see what thine ears have heard.
We wait—oh, many are they who stand!
And look for the gift of the promising hand.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

The work by the Christian community amongst the homeless poor was resumed at the beginning of October last in our Mission-hall, Thrawl-street; from the first night it has been crowded to the door with poor men of all ages, gathered from the streets. Their gratitude for a bare shelter from the storm was deeply impressive. On two or three occasions from two to three hundred poor starving fellows had to be turned away for want of room.

When gathered in they are allowed to rest themselves on the seats or floor, as best they can, till seven o'clock, when they are served with a good substantial breakfast of bread and butter, sausages, and hot coffee. To see the men consume this is a sight; some of them literally devour it, showing how terrible is their hunger. A short religious service is conducted after breakfast; the men are advised as to their future conduct, and all the help we can give them is cheerfully bestowed. Anyone wishing for more information, or who may desire to assist, can communicate with me.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN LOWER BRITTANY.—Mme. Lecoat, in the Echo de la Vérité for this month, makes an appeal for help, so that food and clothing may be given to the poor children who come, in many cases, from long distances, to a school connected with an evangelistic work carried on by her husband at Tremel, par Plestin, Côtes-du Nord, France. This work, far away from any town, and in the centre of Breton superstition, has now been going on for eighteen years, and has been gradually growing. There is connected with it a small hospital for the sick. Any clothing, &c., for these children may be sent to Mrs. Underhill, 21, Thurlow-road, Hampstead, N.W.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of the work of the late Mrs. Griffith John.

We regret that the great pressure upon our space compels us to hold over many interesting articles and other items, including Rev. Dr. Pentecost's paper on "The Relation of Congregational Churches to the Work of Evangelisation." In connection with this subject we are informed that Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, of Barnsley, has decided to resign his pastorate, after a ministry of eleven years, in favour of special mission and evangelistic work amongst the Congregational Churches in England.

Christmas comes with its message of peace. And through the rich grace of God there is a peace of reconciliation with Him through man's Redeemer; but instead of the season bringing peace among nations Germany is adding 41,000 men to her enormous army, and Prince Bismarck avers that there are apprehended dangers and political reasons for the increase which he cannot divulge. Germany, we are told, only follows a movement going on all around her. Europe, armed to the teeth, seems bent upon preparations for a tremendous struggle, and such military preparations go far to make the struggle inevitable. If our Christmas festival brings joy, it brings also reasons for serious thoughts.

The current Monthly Reporter of the Bible Society contains a remarkable paper on the "Power of the New Testament among the Jews." "There is something," said a Jew to Rev. E. H. Shepherd, "in the tone and manner of the Book which is very taking with the Jew who reads the Hebrew Scriptures." So far from the New Testament being now spurned in Palestine, the readiness to buy is so great that its gratuitous distribution is being abandoned. Even Rabbis assure the colporteurs that they read it, and are beginning to quote the sayings of Jesus and his Apostles in their discourses. Let us take heart. The Lord is working among men.

Messrs. Kerr and Fox have been trying to introduce the Agapemone into Scotland. Our warning prevented some respected brethren from falling into the snare. Now a Dublin clergyman writes us that the same two propagandists "have been here, and have unsettled some whom I hold very dear as fellow-workers." We have sent him "Remarks on the Doctrines of the Princites" (Beecroft, Reading. 1d.) which we commend to others who are troubled by this — "another Gospel, which is not another." It is said that the mantle of "Beloved" (i.e. Mr. Prince, now aged 75) is expected to fall on Mr. Kerr.

A correspondent writes from Maidstone that on Nov. 25, at Mill-street Mission Hall (at which Mr. Wood's doctrine and teaching have been introduced without the consent of the members, half of whom have left), Mr. Pittaway, one of Mr. Wood's teachers, began his address by saying "there were many stiffnecked Christians there that night, and if they did not give in at once they would be handed over to Satan for the destruction of their flesh." Later in the meeting he said: "We handed over one woman at Brighton to the devil last week, and there will be some handed over here to-night." They then formed a ring and joined hands, and from this ring they took some to form an inner ring. They danced around and around for fully twenty minutes, until two females fell prostrate on the floor. After this Pittaway, in the centre of the second ring, with a little girl from Brighton, continually danced, jumped, and shouted until a late hour.

Respecting Mr. Wood's proceedings at Brighton, "An Anxious Christian Mother" writes—

> Three hours with what is called the Army of the Lord, Edward-street, Brighton, and what we saw and heard there:—Children of both sexes lying about the floor, knocking with their feet and hands, at intervals singing choruses, and calling out "King Solomon" (which is really Mr. Wood); he answering, "Yes, dear Lord;" the children giving him messages, as coming from Heaven, as follows: "The devil is here, but we are under the blood," &c., &c.; "They say we are mesmerised, but we can hear the Lord speaking to us," &c., &c. Then jumping up, dancing, squeezing each other, taking each other round the neck, tumbling into people's arms, then down again on the floor in a most indecent manner, and King Solomon saying that was the Holy Ghost in the children. Between the hours of 11 and 12 p.m., King Solomon was dandling the two biggest girls on his knees, the meeting not over. But we left, being deeply pained, wondering what could be done to save people from such delusions, and dear children from having their health ruined for life. For my part, I would rather bury mine than see them doing the things those children did.

The Sussex Evening Times has several columns in different issues headed "Religious Frenzy in Brighton. Extraordinary proceedings. Startling disclosures." A correspondent writes to the same paper:—

> I myself last Thursday night saw a little girl, about eleven years old, under the influence for about three hours. A more painful sight I do not wish to witness. With dishevelled hair, and careworn, unearthly looking face, with closed eyes, this little girl was impelled by some strange power not her own, which drove her round the hall, jerked her furiously up and down the stairs where the platform is, and many times threw her violently to the ground, where she lay thoroughly exhausted and worn out.
>
> A friend of mine (Mr. H. A. Marchant) witnessed similar proceedings on Saturday night, and was so moved by the scandalous treatment of the children, he jumped up from his seat, went straight up to Wood (alias King Solomon) and commanded him to release the children from the spell. Wood, seeing my friend had the sympathy of some stalwart Christian men with him, took off the spell, and in less than a minute the children were acting as ordinary mortals.

The inhabitants of Brighton are apparently waking up to the enormities of this animal-magnetistic adventurer.

It is not difficult to perceive to what Satanic uses this terrorism and indelicacy may be put. We earnestly warn all God-fearing and sober-minded people not only to beware of it themselves, but to do what they can to preserve the young, the feeble-minded, and the uninformed, from this spreading leprosy, disguised under the profession of holiness.

We are more than thankful to see that "The scandals of reporting" are eliciting protests from all quarters. Mr. Samuel Smith writes strongly to The Spectator, and that journal itself has devoted more than one article to the subject. A circular to editors of newspapers is also in course of signature, headed by those of the Duke of Westminster, Lord Selborne, and Archdeacon Farrar.

At this time of the year innumerable books are given as presents. We hope our friends are careful to examine what they give. We have now lying before us an attractively bound and illustrated book entitled "Bartholomew Legate, the Last Smithfield Martyr." It looks just the thing for a Christmas present to some thoughtful lad or girl, and yet it is full of dangerous error.

In the recently published volume of poems by Dr. Alexander, there is a lovely thought, based upon our Saviour's first miracle, a somewhat similar spiritual lesson having also been drawn from the same source by Robert Browning. We are sure our readers will be glad to have it brought under their notice, so exquisitely expressed is it:—

> Lo! the world's gifts are goodliest at the first,
> The rapturous enjoyment, the rich sense,
> The revelling draught, thereafter the fierce thirst,
> The darkening sky, the passionate impotence;
> But Thou hast kept thy light for our eclipse:
> Kept thy good wine for pale and dying lips.

An Irish contemporary states that "in Ireland the Romish Church derives out of the public funds more than £687,900 yearly," the sum including £112,000 to Romish Reformatory and Industrial Schools, £11,000 to Romish chaplains in workhouses, prisons, and asylums, and £21,000, the interest upon the capital amount of the Maynooth grant at the time of the disestablishment of the Irish Church. The rest is the sum allowed for education, and shown in the report of the Commissioners of national education of 1883-4. Archbishop Walsh (R.C.), however, recently stated that shortly the education question in Ireland would be settled to his perfect satisfaction. In that case, the above figures will be largely increased.

It is not very long since, in Naples, street hawkers were doing a good trade in selling straws from the Pope's bed, and it would appear that Leo XIII. is not anxious to disabuse the public mind in Italy and elsewhere, of the mistaken notion that he is in abject poverty. Cardinal Theodoli has just issued the Vatican Budget; it is made to show a deficit for the coming year of £60,000, and that in consequence the Pope will have to retrench. Seeing, however, that the receipts amount to about £240,000, nearly £180,000 being the revenue from the capital left by Pius IX., safely invested in funds, the need for the outcry is not so evident.

A London daily paper says, "nobody nowadays seriously protests against what would have been denounced at one time as reviving purgatory." The remark is based upon the fact that prayers for the dead were used at several of the London churches on All Souls' Day, a list of deceased clergymen and laymen being put into the hand of every member of the congregation, the paper being headed by a request for "your prayers," on behalf of all the members of the English Church Union who have departed this life, including "Sister Benedetta." "Rest eternal grant to them" was sung, and to the Communion service words were added to the effect that the "Sacrifice was received in memory" of the dead, and a prayer also was added for their "everlasting rest and perpetual light." We have not altogether groundless fears with regard to Rome, but it would seem that a man's worst foes are those of his own household.

The most evident results of work in spiritual directions frequently are not the most valuable. Of course the Methodists themselves were the palpable result of the Methodist revival; but, as the eminent historian, J. R. Green, has pointed out, they were, after all, the least of the results of Wesley's labours, the noblest one being "the steady attempt, which has never ceased from that day to this, to remedy the guilt, the ignorance, the physical suffering, the social degradation, of the profligate and the poor." Lecky, by no means disposed to be flattering in such a direction, has admitted that, although the career of Pitt, and the splendid victories won by land and sea during his ministry, were the most dazzling episodes of the time, "they must yield in real importance to that religious revolution which shortly before had begun in England by the preaching of the Wesleys and Whitfield."

The scientific men who do not accept the Gospel are, after all, few in number, and it is a pity that such undue prominence is given to their baseless opinions. Dr. Wakley, who edited The Lancet for so many years, and whose attainments in many branches of knowledge were of a high order, made a written request before his death, recently, that if any biography of him were published, it should contain the following personal testimony:—

> Feeling my deep responsibility to God for the position in which, in his providence, He has placed me, I desire to testify to the comfort derived during my sickness from a lively faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and that I die in the sure hope of a glorious resurrection.

The Apostles ordained seven men "to serve tables;" because it was not pleasing (R.V., mar.) for themselves to do so (Acts vi.). But Stephen, the first of the seven, out-apostled the Apostles in the ministry of the word; and the persecution which followed his martyrdom scattered the whole Church from Jerusalem, except the Apostles, and the second of the seven went to Samaria and preached Christ unto them; and was thence deputed by the Spirit to meet the Eunuch and send him on his way rejoicing, carrying the Gospel into Africa; but the Spirit caught away Philip, and he was found at Azotus—not serving tables at Jerusalem. That early endeavour to separate the religious from the secular did not succeed, and the Apostles never repeated the experiment. Paul set a lively example to the contrary.

There is hope for France amid all that looks so adverse. A Pastor Mouchon, of evangelical sentiments, who is lecturing to his countrymen, writes to the French Signal, and says;—

> This is the time for sowing. Let us begin by striving to arouse here and there the moral and religious sentiment, which is not yet wholly destroyed amongst our fellow countrymen. Instead of saying to them, "Come into our Church," let us say: "Examine, reflect." Let us lead men to desire to know the Gospel, and to study it freely. Instead of opening churches, let us interest public opinion. When we, or our sons or descendants, have succeeded in doing that there will be 40,000 churches in France ready to welcome us. When that time has come—perhaps sooner, perhaps later, than we think: God knows—then it will be time enough to talk of ecclesiastical forms."

A trial at Auxerre, in France, has excited considerable attention. An editor of a paper sent his daughter to a convent-school. On attaining her majority she resolved to take the veil. To the appeal of the parents to give her up the Superior was deaf. They resolved to take her away by force, but the painful fact came out that the education of the girl had utterly destroyed filial feeling. When the mother appeared the daughter rang the bell, and requested the police to remove her. The legal authorities were compelled to express disapproval of the use of force; but such facts are opening the eyes of all classes to the dangers of entrusting their daughters to the training of nuns.

The series of meetings for the quickening of spiritual life held last week by the Congregationalists in London, seems to have been useful and strengthening. It is obvious that the earnestly devout men in the churches are more listened to than they were. Strange methods, new theologies, and materialistic theories, have done their best; and many feel that in relation to the advancement of vital religion their best has been a miserable failure. Mr. Evan Spicer, who presided at the evening meeting of the above, asked, was not the growth of spiritual life hindered by that which was taken as a qualification for the election of deacons, that they were business men? Were there not hindrances through the frequenting of theatres by Church members and even by ministers, by the taking of children to pantomimes, and by the trashy literature of the homes? If these things be so, the Pentecost of blessing which many crave can only be expected after adequate preparation, and much searching of heart and humiliation before God.

A correspondent who has returned from the Holy Land asks why it is that whilst so many volunteer for the Lord's service in China, India, &c., Palestine is almost entirely overlooked as a mission field. Surely this country, associated as it is with all that the Christian holds dear, has a special claim upon the followers of Christ, and it is as spiritually dead as any portion of the globe. There is, he adds, only one Christian by the Sea of Galilee, viz., Dr. Torrance, a medical missionary, who resides at Tiberias, and he finds sufficient scope in that spot alone to occupy the whole of his time and energy. This is a question worthy of consideration.

Is the abduction of a girl with a subsequent promise of marriage, and the putting of her father off upon a false scent, a suitable subject to be performed by the boys of one of our principal schools? And yet this was the theme of the play recently acted at the Westminster School. If boys are allowed to treat such things as a joke in their youth, no wonder they are found practising them in their manhood! A correspondent wisely asks, "Can we marvel at the revelations of guilt in high places which are occupying columns of our daily papers, when our young English gentlemen are taught to perform shameless heathen plays in the presence of their parents and friends?"

An article by the Bishop of Carlisle in The Contemporary Review for October was an attempt to discredit the Biblical account of the origin of the week. Mr. Grattan Guinness's pamphlet, "The Week and its Origin" (Hodder & Stoughton. 6d.), is an exhaustive and crushing rejoinder.

The Catholic Times recounts the visit of a correspondent to St. Bartholomew's Church, Brighton. There High Mass, Prayers for the Dead, Elevation of "the Host," and the Real Presence, are openly maintained. The visitor describes the sermon as one which "might have been preached in a Catholic Church, but sounded very extraordinary from the lips of a 'Protestant' minister in a Church of England pulpit." The preacher was "Father" Black, one of the self-styled monks of Mr. Benson's establishment at Oxford, who told his hearers to "adore the elements on the altar." After showing from the Prayer-Book that this service was distinctly illegal, the writer asks what are the bishops about to allow this sort of thing to go on unrebuked, and concludes his article by saying:—

> I give this brief résumé of what I saw and heard in Brighton, to attract attention to the subject and show how important it is for Catholics to be on the alert and do all in their power to put these poor, erring sheep in the right direction, and rescue them from the paths of doubt and uncertainty, by pointing out to them that the only haven of safety is the true Church of Christ.

This amply justifies the alarm so faithfully sounded at Glasgow last week, as reported in our other columns.

Since the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, when required to give evidence a little while ago, refused to be sworn upon the Protestant version of the Holy Scriptures, it has become not uncommon for a similar objection to be made in the Irish courts. Perhaps not many of these objectors know very much about the version to which they profess to take exception, as it is a lamentable fact that in the Sister Island, those Romanists who know sufficient of the Douay version to be able reasonably to base a preference upon it are only very few in number. If this little movement were to have the result of setting the people to compare the two versions, and to "search the Scriptures" for themselves, the action taken by the Archbishop would not be in any way to be deplored.

Paris is to have the opportunity of accepting what Lady Caithness is pleased to call "the wider Christianity," or, in other words, the nonsensical rubbish to which we have more than once alluded, under its high-sounding and fanciful name of "Theosophy." That France requires moral strength we are as ready to admit as Lady Caithness can be, but its materialism is not likely to be dispelled by the dreamers who are endeavouring to substitute for the masculine and invigorating forces of Christianity the fancies of dead Eastern philosophies. Frenchmen are not likely to condescend from an Atheism which at any rate has some power in it, if it be the power of evil and death, to the weakness and deceptions of "Theosophy." What they require is the simple strength of the Word of God, in which alone France will find that which this new missionary of effete nonsense professes to be anxious to give in the theosophist publication, Le Jour Nouveau.

JAPAN.—A Japanese paper, anticipating the course recently followed by The British Weekly with regard to the religious statistics of London, has obtained from the reports of all the Protestant churches of Japan their statistics for 1885. From these it appears that in the twelve months there has been an increase of sixty-three in the number of churches, and of 7835 in the number of members. This is, indeed, a matter for hearty thanksgiving.

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM."

BY MR. JAMES BOWKER.

THE straggling little hamlet of Longdyke seemed to sleep upon the margin of the tide, so close to the waters its white-washed cottages and tiny chapel had ventured; and everything about it had an odour or a suggestivesness of the sea. The men folk were bronzed by summer sun and winter storm, their faces and garments alike being weather beaten, and even the very children had a seafaring look about them as they stood in picturesque groups keenly watching the boats being tarred or the lines being baited.

Every now and again in the peaceful noontide heat a sturdy woman came to a cottage door, and shaded her eyes from the strong sunlight as she called to a lounger, or an idle lad, to come to his mid-day meal, and but for such vocal disturbances the place would have been perfectly quiet; for most of the toilers were asleep after their night at sea, and the sea itself was ebbing, in a low musical monotone, over the silvery band below the shingle upon which, in times of angry tempest, it dashed and broke in its wild rage.

To the weary fishermen resting after labour there was one exception—a ne'er-do-weel—who was seated at the open window of the public-house, which unfortunately was the occasional resort of only too many of the neighbours. With a glass before him, and a dirty-looking pipe in his hand, his untidy appearance testified plainly that he was a sorrow to somebody. He had no companions, save his thoughts; and, as he lazily watched the smoke curling upwards through the sweet sea air, it was easy to see that they were not of a very agreeable kind. "Nobody's enemy but his own," people said, as he shambled along, for they forgot the poor wife fretting in her loneliness, whilst the husband was idling and drinking, and day by day sinking deeper as his besetting sin tightened its links around him. Many a Saturday night Mary Nesbit spent crying in the cheerless kitchen, and wondered how soon the "bread-winner" would come home, and the Sundays, instead of being days of rest and peace, upon which they went up to the house of the Lord together, had become changed into times of unrest and misery; for, as is only too usual, the remorseful husband revenged upon his patient wife his own sins and follies.

Appeals and warnings seemed to be thrown away upon Nat. The old minister frequently talked with him earnestly, and Mary prayed without ceasing, as she anxiously looked forward into a future that promised to be dark and sad. "Lord, if it be thy will, give him back to me, even through waves of trouble," she cried, night and day, and when she did not see her prayer answered, she began to give way to doubts and to faint by the way, little thinking in what a marvellous manner the faithfulness of God was about to be manifested.

In the meantime Nat sank lower, and his wife with him, for in a little place like Longdyke, where nearly all the dwellers were working folk, it was not easy for Mary to find any employment, and if the minister's good-hearted wife had not made an excuse to give her some sewing, and if her married sister had not helped her a little, times would indeed have been hard with her.

One evening, when matters had nearly reached the worst, she was sitting in the fireless room, and mechanically gazing out upon the moonlit sea. A wild night was coming; clouds were scudding across the sky, and the wind with fitful gusts was wailing and sighing around the cottage. The storm was rising suddenly, and under other circumstances the mournful music of the gale would have found an echo in her heart, for her husband would have been far out at sea, but as it was she knew that Nat was in no more distant place than the public-house bar.

Suddenly, however, a shadow crossed the streak of moonlight upon the beach, and in a moment or two there was a sharp knock. When she opened the door, a burly young man, who stood there, said, without any preface, "Jane Lambert's verra poorly, and wants ye, for her husband's out at sea."

Almost before the messenger had turned away, Mary was hurrying to the tiny house where her sister lived, a feeling of deep dread at her heart, for people in Longdyke were so healthy that sudden sickness had in their eyes more than its usual terror.

The cottage to which she made her way was a very different one to that which she had left. It was on a winding road, leading up from the beach to the low grass-grown cliffs, and it looked over the hamlet to the distant sea-line. Round it there were broad borders of sea pink and other wild flowers, and the house itself was dazzling in its recent coat of whitewash.

Like most of the Longdyke folk, its occupier was a fisherman; but, unlike a number of them, he kept away from the inn, even when the fish carts came back from a more than usually successful journey to the distant large town. The result was that his cottage was well furnished, and his wife and child as comfortable-looking as anyone could have wished them. There was, however, a deeper basis than sobriety for the happiness of the home, for husband and wife were walking heavenward hand in hand, each day's toil being bounded by prayer and praise. Their simple piety sweetened and ennobled their lowly lives lifting them above the common troubles and blessing them with the peace of those around whom the angel of the Lord encamps.

They had their sorrows, it is true, but they took them to Jesus, and, therefore, found them lightened and brightened; yet one that Will had weighed heavily upon him, for he could not share it with his partner. Since the birth of little Ned, some years before, Jane had never properly recovered her strength, and had been ailing, and one night, at sea, with the still stars overhead, and a soft ground swell lifting beneath as the trawler drifted with the wind, he found himself almost unconsciously picturing, in the dreamy silence, what his existence would be without the dear woman who had helped him heavenwards; and the possibility of losing her came upon him like a great cloud, enshrouding his life. After this, he was, if possible, even more tender with her, and when the carts came back many a little delicacy for the ailing wife was carefully brought, by the rough men, at Will's request.

The morning of the day on which the message was conveyed to Mary, the fishermen had put out to sea, and Jane had refrained from letting Will know how ill she was. At eventide, however, she was so unwell, there was nothing for it but to send for her sister. The nearest doctor lived in the town, twenty miles away, and Mary, therefore, prepared to do all that could be done for the patient, and for the little lad and girl who, half asleep, looked anxiously from one face to the other, with a consciousness that something was wrong.

Outside the cottage the storm was still rising, and now and again a gust swept over the dwelling, rattling the diamond panes, and wailing in the chimney. It was easy to see that Jane's thoughts were on the deep, for whenever the wind moaned she peered anxiously at the tiny window opening seaward, and sighed deeply, but Mary wisely said nothing about the absent husband.

Later on Nat came, for when he had made his way home from the public-house, at closing time, he had found the cottage locked, and his wife absent. He entered somewhat roughly and noisily, but a glance at Jane's face stilled him suddenly.

"What is it, lass?" he asked his wife guiltily; "has aught happened to Will?"

"Will's at sea," Mary replied, "and Jane's taken in a fever, so I'm going to stay all night and mind her and the little folks. Here's the key, and when the boats come in to-morrow, break it to Will, poor chap, before he comes home." Nat promised, and crept out quietly.

Throughout the night the fever rapidly intensified, and at daybreak the sufferer was so much worse, that a neighbour was sent to start Nat to Yewdale for the doctor.

In the early morning the waves were lashing themselves to foam on the beach, and a line of white crests could be seen against the leaden horizon. A heavy sea was running, and the wind was carrying the spray upon its wings, and as Mary gazed at the tumult of waters, a load fell upon her heart; for such mornings had more than once been the harbingers of grief to Longdyke. "God help the lads out over yonder," she said, solemnly, "and bring the Curlew with Will and the rest on' 'em back safe."

In many of the cottages anxious watchers were sending up similar petitions, for it is only too true that if men must toil upon the sea, women must weep, and peaceful as the deep oftentimes looked toying with the sloping beach, it had none the less taken the life of Longdyke fisher folk. It never lost its weird fascination, however; the lads of the hamlet grew restless at the sound of its whispers, and, spite of warnings and entreaties, became in their turn seafaring men, to be finally laid to sleep beneath the shadow of the old chapel and within the sound of the waves that had slain them.

There was a band of men gathered upon the old jetty, and their earnest glances were fixed on a little lugger labouring heavily out at sea, as the gale, like a spiteful living thing, seemed to seize and shake her wildly, and the brave craft righted herself, and dipped, and rolled towards the coast, as though consciously struggling with the deep.

"Which is it, Jim?" asked an old man.

"Wait till she tacks a bit," was the answer; and then in a few moments the speaker added, "it's the Wildflower, and she's having a tough time of it."

He watched her steadily with the glass, and in a little while cried, "There's been something wrong, lads, for she's extra hands aboard; but she's putting out again; the master daren't run for the beach."

By nightfall the wind had fallen and veered with the sun, and when the Wildflower ran in, the sad news flew through the hamlet that the Curlew had foundered in the night, in a sudden squall, and that the Wildflower had picked up only two of the hands. Will Lambert and the tiny cook had gone down. The sick woman, therefore, was a widow, and little Ned and Lizzie were fatherless.

A big rough fellow went up with Nat to the cottage, and, calling Mary out, he broke the news to her, and said in a hushed voice: "He was ready for it, missis, quite ready; an' th' little lad, too, young as he were, had lived long enough to find th' road to heaven."

By and by the minister came, and he went in to sit with Jane and to keep the message from her until he could prepare her somewhat. The storm was slowly passing away, and nature was smiling again as though no human hearts would be left scarred when peace fell upon the cruel sea; and the old man's soul was heavy with the sorrow and sadness which the night had brought to his little flock.

Directly the poor woman saw him she cried: "Where is Will?"

"Jane," said the minister, very tenderly, "you must put all your trust in God. Will has met with an accident, and you must bear up bravely. 'All my times are in thy hand.'"

She went very white, and then said, "Is he drowned?"

"The will of the Lord be done," Mr. Hornsby whispered, and, as he did so, the widow sank back upon her pillow.

"I am not telling you not to weep," he said very softly; "God our Lord and Master wept; but Will has only gone before you into the joy of the kingdom, and you will soon be united again, where there is no sorrow or crying, in the midst of the redeemed who have come through great tribulation."

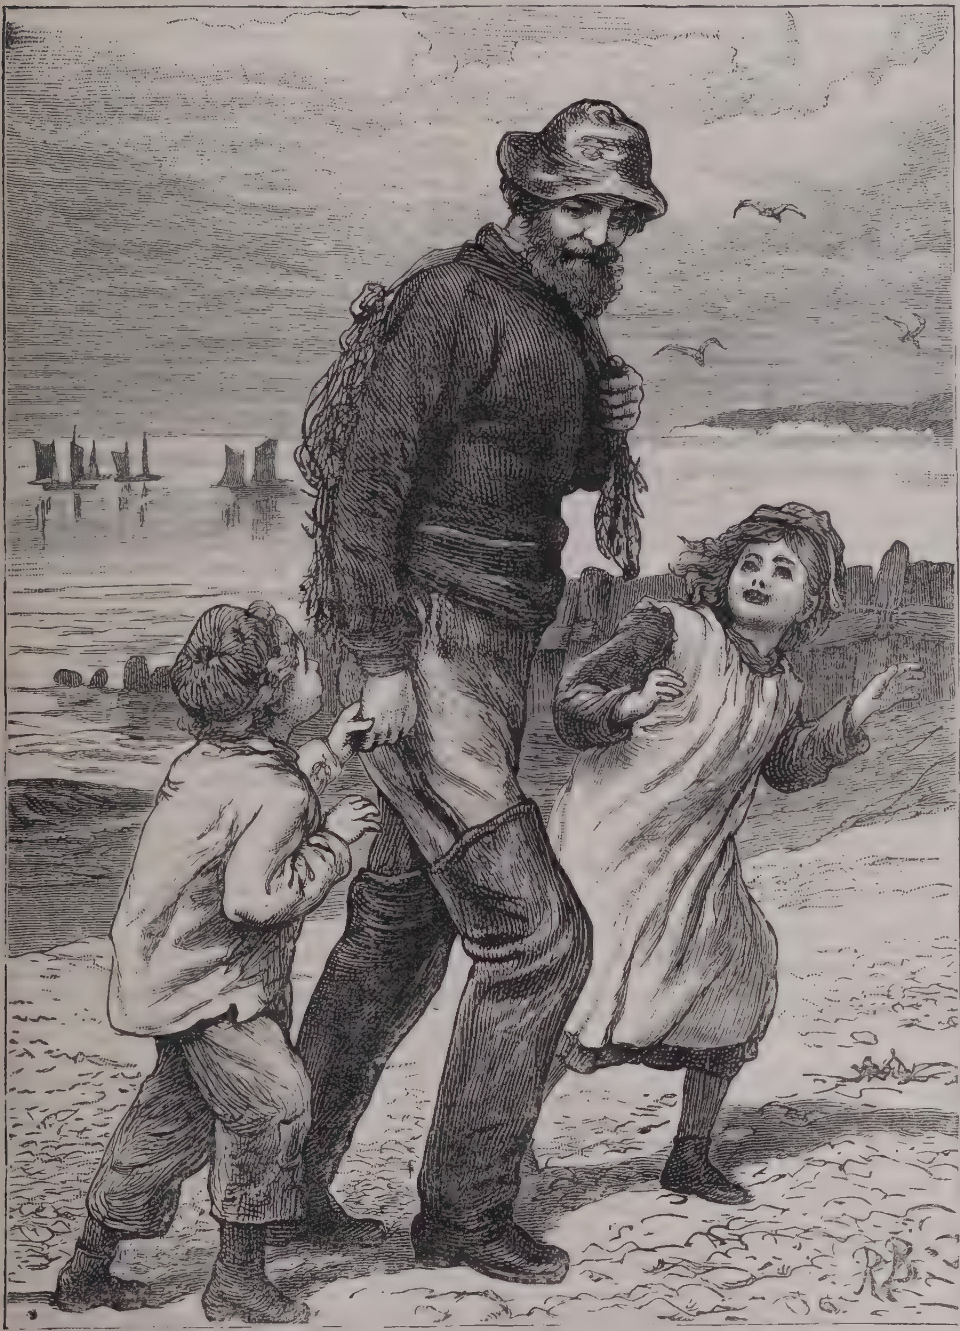
The sobs after a while became less violent, and then Mr. Hornsby took little Ned and lifted him upon the bed, and, as in the scene pictured in our great poet's pathetic verses, a flood o tears came over the dead man's child.

A few days afterwards Nat was again hurriedly sent for; Jane herself was dying.

Like a great many more such ne'er-do-weels

Nat was tender-hearted enough at intervals, and away from the hardening influence of the drink, and he was thoroughly broken down when the poor woman asked him to take charge of the little ones. "I'm not a fit man to take Will's children," he said; "I'm no good, an' th' little chap would only learn badness off me;" and while he was speaking tears ran between his fingers as he bent his head over his hands.

"There's nobody else," Jane whispered; "even if I would give them to anybody else. If the things are sold there will be a bit o' money to pay their keep for a while."



" Taking the lad's hand tenderly in his own, he turned towards the cottage again."

"It's not that I'm thinking about," Nat broke in quickly, "it's not that. They are welcome to all we have, but it's me. I've been very bad, drinking, and I'm no example for a lad to have."

"Nat, dear," said Jane solemnly, "ask the Lord for grace to change, and He will give it. It's to be had for asking. I'll pray to Him, too, the little time I'm left. Try to be a different man. Think of Will and me, and try to be steady. The Lord will help all who ask Him."

"I will, lass, I will," Nat cried, "if I'm spared I'll be like Will."

"It's somebody better than Will you must try to copy," Jane whispered—"the Master Himself, nobody lower; and He will not cast out anybody that comes to Him;" and then, after a while, with her eyes closed, she added, "I can die easy, for I know the children will be a blessing to you both."

A few days afterwards she passed away, and Ned and Lizzie, scarcely conscious of their double loss, were taken away to their new home—Nat Nesbit's comfortless-looking cottage.

For a few weeks after the funeral Nat went on steadily enough, solemnised by the sad events; but after the sale, and he had a little more money than usual, some of his old companions tempted him again to the public-house. When he came home, somewhat late, and flushed with drinking, as he neared the cottage he slackened his pace, and then went to the window and looked in through a broken pane.

Mary was sitting by the fire which had burned very low, and the candle-light fell very softly upon her and the children, and as Nat gazed upon the solitary-looking household, a feeling of deep remorse took possession of him. Before he had time to turn away to the door, however, Mary rose up and knelt, the little ones going upon their knees by her side, and then Nat heard her pray for her erring husband. It was a believer's prayer, and as the pathetic words reached him, conscience smote him, and tears welled up into his eyes as he remembered his wasted days and broken vows. Then there came to him a still deeper pang, for he heard little Ned, in a tiny voice, and in words taught him by his dead parents, plead for a blessing upon the listener. "God bless Uncle Nat," the words went, "and keep him from the drink, and save him for Jesus Christ's sake." A solemn hush followed, as the petitions went up to the great white throne.

"I'm not good enough to live under the same roof," the poor fellow said, quite sobered, and hastily brushing his hand over his eyes, and then looking up he cried, "God help me."

A short prayer surely with its three little words, but it reached Heaven, and was answered, for as Nat turned away too ashamed to enter he began to reflect. The night was very lovely with scarcely a ripple on the deep, but the beauty and the stillness were not for him, for there was deep unrest within his heart. After he had sat upon the beach a while, however, in the solemn stillness, a ray of hope came to him, and he asked God to forgive his fall and to strengthen him for the future. Then, when he saw that all was darkness in his little cottage, he crept off and entered.

Next day, Mary with true wisdom refrained from making any allusion to his lateness, or any reproaches, and after breakfast he took the children by the hand and led them away to the sea, walking daintily to suit the short steps of the lad. Carefully avoiding the fishermen and loungers, he made his way to an old boat, and lifting the lad upon the gunwale, almost before he had begun his work upon it he said softly—

"Ned, who learnt tha' to say thi' prayers so nicely?"

"My mother and father," the lad answered.

"And which of them learnt tha' to pray for me?"

"Both on 'em," little Ned replied, "always said, 'Ask God to bless Uncle Nat, and keep him off the drink.'"

Nat turned away, and looked seaward that the lad might not notice his eyes full of tears. Then he bent to Ned and said softly—

"Thi' father was a grand chap, Ned, an' if the Lord helps me I'm going to be just such another."

Very little more was said, and gathering up the lines, and again taking the lad's hand tenderly in his own, he turned towards the cottage again, with a new and solemn feeling in his heart that he was pledged to a new life in a strength not his own, a proud happy look in his eyes, and even little Lizzie who tripped along by his side, conscious that a joy had come into his life.

When they reached home dinner was ready, but before they gathered around the table Nat said, in a shamefaced way—

"Mary, I'm sorry for my drinking. It shall be the last time. I've been vowing to be different."

"God bless tha'," said his wife, "but vowing's no use without praying. Ask God for strength, and take Jesus for copy."

"I will do both," Nat answered, and then turning to the orphans, he added, "And these small folks will be a help to me, for I shall remember what a grand chap their father was, how God-fearing and faithful, and tender-hearted to all about him; and how he used to pray for me. The sight of that lad will remind me of what I've promised to do and to be, if the devil tempts me, as he will do."

And remind him, the child did, unconsciously enough, and day by day the prayer went up for strength, and the answer came back in blessing, and, as the peace which passeth all understanding took possession of the heart which for so long had been weary and troubled, the little cottage became again the gate of heaven.

"Ah, Mary," he often said, "what I lost by living as I did, and what sorrow I caused: and now we are going heavenward together, and instead of leading little Ned there, why, God sent him to lead me."

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

VIII.—THE STIRRING UP OF THE NEST.

Genesis XXXI.

In that sublime song with which the great Lawgiver closed his words to Israel, we are carried through the steeps of air, to stand beside an eagle's eyrie, perched amid the inaccessible cliffs. Here we may find a clue to explain the ways of God to man. The young eaglets are old and strong enough to fly, but they cling to the old nest, with its scant shelter. They dare not venture forth upon the untried air, or trust their fluttering wings. But they must learn to fly. There are joys awaiting them in the wide oceans of space, which far outvie those of the rude nest in which they have been nurtured. And so the eagle stirs up the nest, and drives them forth. What anguish the young birds feel, as they see that nest destroyed, and themselves thrust forth, as it might seem, to certain destruction! But when once they are launched upon the upbearing air, and learn by glad experience the freedom, the ecstasy of flight, how grateful should they be to the parent bird, who flinched not from the unwelcome task, and who still swoops and flies beneath them, ready to catch them up, if their powers should flag, and to bear them sunwards. There, in mid-heaven, she lets them fall again, and again she catches them; and thus, each moment they increase in confidence and strength, and develop powers of sustained flight, of which they were unconscious when they lingered by the nest.

It is a beautiful parable of human life. We all cling to the old nest. The old home where we were born; the dear protection of strong, true hearts, that screen us from every breath; the place where we are known; the faces with which we are familiar; the competence which we have won. "Let us stay here for ever. Do not speak to us of that great outer world, or of the opportunities which lie hidden there, and which, you say, might bring out powers of muscle and brain and heart of which we now know nothing. We would rather that they should remain hidden than that we should have to suffer the anguish of their development amid the strain and trial of that rude and strange world of which we now catch but distant rumours. We are content; let us stay." But the great love of God has provided some better thing for us. He knows that there are heights and depths of life hidden from us till we go forth. Keen may be the agony of the moment in which we see the nest stirred up, and find ourselves flung forth into a strange element. But it is not worthy to be compared with the glory instantly revealed; for that light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; the glory of a faith that poises itself on the unseen, the glory of a hope that breasts the thundercloud, the glory of a flight that soars ever upward to the sun. "They change their strength and mount up with wings as eagles."

These thoughts give the key to the next experience in Jacob's troubled life. There is a reason for every step in our education, whether we see it or not, and, though Jacob could not have guessed it at the time, yet, as we look back, we can easily understand why his residence at Haran was suddenly closed, and his home broken up, and he driven across the desert, as a fugitive, hotly pursued, much as he had been years before, only in the reverse direction.

In point of fact, Jacob was becoming too contented in that strange land. Like Ulysses and his crews, he was in danger of forgetting the land of his birth, the tents of his father, and the promises of which he was the heir. He was fast losing the pilgrim spirit, and settling into a citizen of that far country. His mean and crafty arts to increase his wealth were honeycombing his spirit, and eating out his nobler nature, prostituting it to the meanest ends. His wives, infected with the idolatry of their father's house were in danger of corrupting the minds of his children; and how then would fare the holy seed, destined to give the world the messages of God? It was evident that his nest must be broken up in Haran, that he must be driven back into the pilgrim-life, to become a stranger and a sojourner, as his fathers were. And this was another step nearer the moment when he became an Israel, a prince with God. This may be your destiny, my reader; and, if it be, accept meekly the discipline which forces you towards it. It is the hand that was pierced with nails that breaks up the nest of the past, and beckons you to the untried but blessed realities in front.

I.—The Summons to Depart. "And the Lord said unto Jacob, Return unto the land of thy fathers, and to thy kindred; and I will be with thee." Whether there was any audible voice, I cannot tell; but perhaps there was simply the uprising of a strong impulse within his heart. Sometimes on a sultry summer day we suddenly feel the breeze fanning our faces, and we say that the wind is rising, but we know not whence it comes, or whither it goes; so does the Spirit of God frequently visit us with strong and holy impulses. There is a divine restlessness; a noble discontent; a hunger created in the heart, which will not be satisfied with the husks on which the swine feed. We cannot always understand ourselves, but it is the Lord saying to us, Arise and depart, for this is not your rest.

There are many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification, and sometimes it is difficult to know the voice of the Lord. But the more truly we partake of the nature of "his own sheep," the more unerringly shall we detect the voice of the Good Shepherd. If you are not quite sure, wait till you are. It is the Shepherd's business to make his presence and wish understood by the timid and perplexed in his flock. The only necessity is to be willing to do his will so soon as it is clearly seen. If you are in doubt, wait in faith, till every other door is shut, and one path lies open before you, and you are able to say: "He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake."

God's voice to the heart is generally corroborated by the drift of outward circumstances. "Jacob beheld the countenance of Laban, and, behold, it was not towards him as before." For some time their relations had been strained. Ten times in six years had Laban altered the method of computing his wages; and now there were symptoms of open rupture. It is always wise to be on the outlook for any evident symptoms of God's will; and here was one.

It is very bitter to behold a change passing over men and women in their behaviour towards us; a change which we cannot avert. We dread it, as the timid passenger by the night mail dreads the roar of the waves, as they seethe, white with rage, outside the harbour bar. And yet God is undoubtedly in all this. It is the way which He is taking through the deep. Listen to the Divine assurance, "I am with thee." The Good Shepherd Himself is putting you forth from the warm fold, now almost bare, that He may conduct you to green pastures, and living waters. The Master Himself is emptying you from vessel to vessel, lest you should settle on your lees. The Husbandman Himself is exposing you to that painful process of transplanting, which is said to be one of the surest methods of luxuriant growth. Take heart; it is only part of the process of making you a prince; you need it badly enough; in no other way can your mean Jacob-nature be re-placed by something better.

II.—The Tenacity of Circumstances.—When the pilgrim-spirit essays to obey the voice of God, the house is always filled with neighbours to dissuade from the rash resolve. "As Christian ran, some mocked, others threatened, and some cried after him to return." There was something of this in Jacob's case. The birdlime clung closely to him, as he began to plume his wings for his homeward flight.

He was evidently afraid that his wives would hinder his return. It would have been natural, if they had. Was it likely that they would at once consent to his proposal to tear them from their kindred and land? This fear may have greatly hindered Jacob. He at least thought it necessary to fortify himself with a quiver full of arguments, in order to carry his point. In those arguments we catch another glimpse of his cowardly and crafty nature. They are a strange medley of lies and cant and truth. He might have saved himself from all this, if he had only trusted God to roll away the stones from the path of obedience. For God had been at work before him, and had prepared their hearts, so that they at once assented to his plan, saying, "We have no further ties to home, now then, whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do." If we would only go forward in simple obedience, we should find that there would be no need for our diplomacy; He would go before us making the crooked straight, and the rough smooth.

In the endeavours of Laban to retain Jacob, we have a vivid picture of the eager energy, with which the world would retain us, when we are about to turn away from it for ever. It pursues us, with all its allies, for seven days and more (ver. 23). It asks us why we are not content to abide with it (ver. 27). It professes its willingness to make our religion palatable, by mingling with it its own tabret and dance (ver. 27). It appeals to our feelings, and asks us not to be too cruel (ver. 28). It threatens us (ver. 29). It jeers us with our sudden compunction, after so many years of contentment with its company (ver. 30). It reproaches us with our inconsistency in making so much of our God, and yet harbouring some cunning sin. "Wherefore hast thou stolen my gods?" (ver. 30). Ah! friends, how sad it is, when we who profess so much give occasion to our foes to sneer, because of the secret idols which they know we carry with us! Sometimes it is not we who are to blame so much as our Rachels, our wives, or children, or friends. But we should never rest till, so far as we know, our camp is clear of the accursed thing.

At last, our Labans who would hold us fast, having tried every expedient, content themselves with groaning, "What can I do this day?" Blustering often ends in bewailing over an unalterable destiny.

Thus the heap of witness is raised at length. Oh, that you might break away from that life of worldliness in which you have tarried too long. Make a clean break with it. Only do not do it secretly, as Jacob did. Better so, than not at all, but it is mean-spirited and cowardly, it always arouses intenser opposition, and it is not worthy of one whose escort is God Himself. The straightforward and outspoken course, which nails its colours to the mast, is always the easiest and safest and best.

A midshipman, who was about to leave the sailor's home, where he had been converted, came to the superintendent on the day of going on board, and asked him to write on a card, in plain bold characters, the words, "I am a Christian." When he was asked his object, he said, "As soon as I get on board I shall go to my hammock, and put this card where everybody can see it; it will save a lot of trouble, for everyone will know at once which side I am on, and will expect me to keep true to it." This is raising the heap of witness.

Let us raise that heap, let me help you rear it, gather stones, and pile them into the form of that cross by which the world was crucified to St. Paul, and he to the world. Eat there the feast that speaks of life through death. Call your friends to witness your solemn act; above all, call God to witness your resolve, that never again shall the world, the flesh, or the devil, come over to you, or you pass over to them. This is the true Mizpah, of the Lord's watch.

III.—The Divine Care. Well might Jacob have thrilled with joy, as he said to his wives, "The God of my father hath been with me." When God is for us, and with us, who can be against us? Blessed is he who is environed by God, and for whom God fights. He must be more than a conqueror. So Jacob found it, and, at the end of his encounter with Laban, he was able to repeat his assurance, that the God of his father had been with him (ver. 42).

At the head of his flocks and herds, with wives and children and slaves, he struck across the Euphrates and the desert, at the utmost speed possible to his encumbered march; but God's angels accompanied him. He met their radiant hosts afterwards (xxxii. 1). His flight remained unsuspected for three days; then Laban set off with swift camels in pursuit, and overtook them, when still threading their way among the richly wooded and watered hills of Gilead. The tents of Jacob were pitched on the slope of the hills, not far from the rushing Jabbok; those of Laban on the opposite declivity. It was a moment of real danger, and it was then that God interposed. "God came to Laban the Syrian by night." That dream laid an irresistible spell on Laban, which prevented him carrying out his design to do Jacob hurt.

Jacob was an erring and unworthy child, but God did not leave or forsake him. He does not love us (as we so often falsely tell little children) because we are good, but to make us so. As He does not set his love on us because of our deserts, so He does not turn it away from us because of our sins. He hates our sin, but his love surrounds us, as the warm summer ocean laps about the iceberg, which has drifted into its midst, until it melts it into streams of crystal clearness. Thus He was able to throw his protection round his erring child, and this was part of the loving discipline which was leading Jacob to a goal of which he never dreamed.

Jacob conceived that he was a model shepherd (ver. 38); but he little realised how lovingly he was being protected by the shepherd care of Him who keepeth Israel, and who neither slumbers nor sleeps. That protection may be ours.

O Thou, who art the Good Shepherd, who dost guard thy flock, in drought and frost, with untired and unabated tenderness, who dost go after that which is gone astray, until Thou dost find it, bringing it back upon thy shoulders, we, too, have gone astray like lost sheep. Seek thy servants; at whatever cost, disentangle us from the meshes of the world, and take care of us until Thine own ideal is realised in our lives.

CHEERING WORK IN ITALY.

A LITTLE book, "Work in a Corner of the Lord's Vineyard in Italy," gives an interesting account of the origin and progress of Dr. Comandi's excellent work among orphans in Florence. In his home there are now seventy-six boys, all orphans; in connection with it a paying Home has been opened in accordance with the wish of several parents, who, themselves Roman Catholics, wished their children brought up in the Protestant faith. About fifty other boys attend the school of the orphanage. There are, also, workshops in which, whilst in the home, the lads are taught trades; one consequence of this is that the boys find remunerative employment immediately they leave. The truths of the Gospel are clearly taught in this school and many signal blessings have proved the vitality of the work, some having witnessed a triumphant confession in their dying moments.

In 1878 Sunday-schools were opened, the attendance now numbering three hundred scholars, and including grey-headed men and women as well as children. District visiting, and various works of charity and practical utility, are carried on by the Sunday-school teachers, and there is also a crèche, where infants are received. Divine service is held every Sunday afternoon in the church, which is usually well filled, and a catechist holds a religious meeting every Tuesday. As showing how such work has in itself the principle of expansion, there has now been formed a sister mission at Siena, where a church has been erected, together with Sunday and day schools, and God is evidently giving his blessing there as well as at Florence.

THE crack of the whip will startle our hearers, but it will not drive them to their duty. We are called to be winners, not whippers of souls. In every congregation there are some earnest minds who say, "Draw us, and we will run after thee." Let love lead the way, and love will follow.—Rev. W. J. Mathams.

A WEST-END MISSION.

BY A CORRESPONDENT.

EVEN so far west as Notting-hill there is much need for the "earnest work" so forcibly urged in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN. I was painfully impressed with this fact when, the other Saturday night, I turned off Lancaster-road and observed groups of tipsy men and women clustering at every corner round the public-house doors, and found, too, in the by-streets, fierce quarrels going on which, in one instance, had come to savage blows between the drunken and brawling women.

The Latymer-road Mission, carried on in Blechynden-street, Notting-hill, by Mr. Aulay Macaulay and his helpers, is situated right in the heart of a district inhabited, in a large measure, by unskilled labourers and loafers. Mechanics, steady artisans, cabmen, and so on, are to be met with, but they are, comparatively speaking, few. In too many cases the women are the breadwinners—toiling all day long in the laundries to support their families. Here and there will be found comfortable, orderly, and decent homes, but, as a little personal inspection soon proves, many are far otherwise. Many of the houses are occupied as "one-room tenements"—a family in a room, and, frequently, by no means a small family. When gently remonstrated with, on the score of sleeping arrangements, the common answer is—"What are we to do? We must sleep somewhere; and can't afford another room." The results of such accommodation on the health and morals of the children are now pretty generally understood.

The earnest work carried on by the Latymer-road Mission in this district has been very successful. Both indoors and out God has been pleased to give blessing. Amongst the outdoor efforts for reaching the careless and non-church-going are open-air services, house-to-house and lodging-house visitation, and in the winter season free teas to the poorest. The personal influence of converted men and women has, however, proved most effective of all in interesting the outsiders.

Sunday is a busy day at the mission-hall. After morning school, which, by the way, is greatly in need of teachers, Mr. Macaulay conducts a well-attended children's service. Every child is made to feel that there is something for him or her. There is plenty of bright, lively singing, and at the close a number of children linger behind the others to practise new hymns. In this way those who give promise of musical taste or talent are encouraged to devote it to the service of God, rather than in learning the unholy songs of the street.

The attendance at the afternoon school is so large as to tax to the utmost the available accommodation. About four hundred children attend, and some of the classes are very large, one lady having frequently sixty girls in her class. The library is in great demand; would that the books were more numerous. Rather a special interest attaches to a little class, held just after Sunday-school, and known as the "Robin Class," because the attraction first held out was an invitation to a "Robin" dinner. It is conducted by the manager, Mr. Cousins, and held expressly for rough, untamed boys who earn their livelihood by selling lights or evening papers, &c. Such is the respect their teacher has won that in this brief hour they yield an obedience they would scorn at other times to render to anyone.

While this is going on inside, Miss Richardson and Mr. Ireson (city missionary), are visiting a neighbouring common lodging-house, holding a brief service, and, so far as possible, speaking personally to each inmate. Mr. Macaulay at the same time is holding a meeting of the Children's Scripture Union Branch; he afterwards conducts a large children's service. The evening Gospel service proves interesting, not only by reason of the good attendance, but also the number of the careless and non-Church-going, some from the lowest class, who are present. At the close, on the occasion of my visit, several appeared to be anxious as to their spiritual welfare.

Every week-day is pretty well filled; for the children there is something every evening, and for the adults most evenings. There are the crèche, the free registry for servants lately commenced, the women's sick and benefit club, the mothers' meeting, the girls' gymnasium, the Gospel temperance meeting, the boys' and girls' night schools, the sewing classes, the evening shelters for boys and girls, the youths' institute, besides other agencies.

The whole Mission forms a capital and deserving example of earnest, personal, persevering work in raising the fallen, saving the children, and winning the wayward. Unfortunately, like many other good works, it needs monetary help. While East-end missions are fairly well supported, it is too often forgotten that such West-end missions are equally important and equally needful.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

IN connection with the Homes and the Open All-Night Refuge, under the superintendence of Mr. Edward W. Thomas, during the year so soon to close, nearly 1500 young women and girls have been brought or sent to 200 Euston-road. In every case the request to be admitted has been most urgent, and the applicants have represented almost every phase of friendlessness and moral defection. To the utmost capacity of the various branches of the Institution, every suitable case was welcomed. There has been one pleasing feature in the work of the year—the erection of a new Preventive Home at Parsons' Green, Fulham, for fifty young girls.

Mr. Thomas has had a long course of labour, and thankfully bears testimony to the faithfulness of the Lord, who has sustained him in this branch of Christian service since 1851. He now hopefully anticipates closing this year with sufficient funds to discharge all claims; but he asks that friends, as usual, will not be unmindful of the Christmas and New Year's donations, which they have been so good as to send in former seasons.

MISSIONS AT BOURNEMOUTH.

THE ten days' mission of Rev. W. R. Mowll, which we briefly recorded a few weeks since, was fruitful and successful. We hear of young people of business—two or four or more in a house—having accepted Christ as Saviour and acknowledged Him as Lord. Mr. Mowll's visit was followed by a three-days' Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission, at which Canon Wilberforce and Rev. Pelham Stokes were among the speakers. This was succeeded by three days devoted to "the deepening of spiritual life," at which Mr. H. F. Bowker presided, and Revs. Evan Hopkins, E. W. Moore, C. A. Fox, H. W. Webb-Peploe, and S. A. Selwyn gave the addresses. These were very helpful to many who had been brought to decision for Christ under Mr. Mowll, as well as to others. This town is blessed with not a few active Christian workers—and it needs them.

It also has many with means, who, as those elsewhere, give wisely or otherwisely. To these we venture a word of counsel. Do not give to attractive applicants without being sure that their object is genuine. We hear that a Mrs. —— has been successful in obtaining funds for a society consisting of one man in London. Those who possess money are stewards, and it is required of such that they be found faithful—not giving out of mere weak human benevolence, but with discretion. The investment of the Lord's money requires as much consideration as that of our own—if anything were our own.

THE wise servant of Christ asks for greater skill in serving, as his reward; leaving the final recompense to the infinite kindness of the Master. It is better to pray for heaven's power than for its glories. If we have the first we shall have the last—at last.—Rev. W. J. Mathams.

For the Young.

"WILL YOU HURT?" *

I think not. But it's a wise question to ask. Bees have stings, but they only use them in self-defence. If Ernie's visitor got under his sleeve, it might, perhaps, under pressure, find its sting; but, otherwise, a good-tempered bee goes buzzing about "improving each shining hour," teaching boys and girls, too, to > Gather honey all the day,

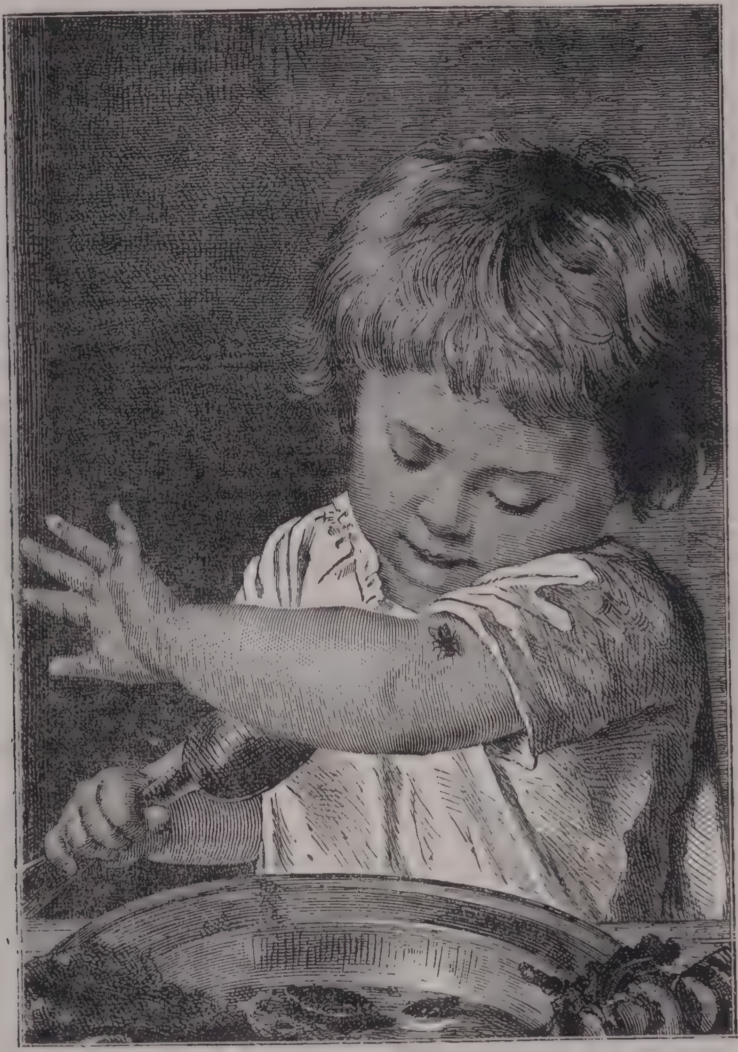
> From every opening flower.



A wasp is quite another matter, and I dare say Ernie remembers a little story about the wasp and the bee which is worth telling:—

A wasp met a bee that was just buzzing by,
And he said, "Little cousin, can you tell me why
You are loved so much better by people than I?

"My back shines as bright and as yellow as gold,
And my shape is most elegant, too, to behold:
Yet nobody likes me for that, I am told."

"Ah! Cousin!" the bee said, "'tis all very true;
But if I were but half so much mischief to do,
Indeed they would love me no better than you.

"You have a fine shape and a delicate wing,
They own you are handsome, but then there's one thing [sting.
They cannot put up with, and that is your

"My coat is quite homely and plain, as you see,
Yet nobody ever is angry with me,
Because I'm a harmless and diligent bee."

From this little story let people beware;
Because, like the wasp, if ill-natured they are,
They will never be loved be they ever so fair.

THE CHILDREN'S CHRISTMAS.

Children play at Christmas,
Round the cheerful fire;
Children sing sweet carols,
To their hearts' desire;

But the Christmas music
Has too short a tune,
And the joyous laughter
Stops too soon.

Let us carry Christmas,
With us through the year,
Bring the joys of Christmas
Other hearts to cheer;
Tell by gentle actions,
And by looks of love,
Of the peace Christ brought us
From above.

For He left his riches
And his palace bright,
To bring home the children
Wandering in the night;
And He bids us follow,
In his footsteps blest,
Giving others always
Of our best.

BIBLE STUDIES.—42.

"The fruit of the Spirit is . . . peace."

I.—THE EXPERIENCE OF PEACE.

(1) The peace of pardon.—"Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. v. 1). "Thy sins are forgiven . . . thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace" (Luke vii. 48—50).

(2) The peace of a subject heart.—"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls" (Matt. xi. 29). "Great peace have they which love thy law; and nothing shall offend them" (Ps. cxix. 165). "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river" (Isa. xlviii. 18). "The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever. And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting-places; when it shall hail, &c." (Isa. xxxii. 17—19). "The meek . . . shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace" (Ps. xxxvii. 11).

(3) The peace of a trusting heart. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee; because he trusteth in Thee" (Isa. xxvi. 3). "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 6, 7). "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid" (John xiv. 27).

(4) The peace of a satisfied heart. "Whom have I in heaven but Thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee" (Ps. lxxiii. 25). "He satisfieth the longing soul" (Ps. cvii. 9). "My people shall be satisfied with My goodness, saith the Lord" (Jer. xxxi. 14). "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content" (Phil. iv. 11). "Having nothing, and yet possessing all things" (11 Cor. vi. 10). "Christ is all, and in all" (Col. iii. 11).

II.—THE LOVE OF PEACE.

(1) Peace-proclaiming. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace" (Isa. lii. 7). "Your feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace" (Eph. vi. 15). "We pray you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God" (2 Cor. v. 20).

(2) Peace-making. "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God" (Matt. v. 9). "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men" (Rom. xii. 18). "Be at peace among yourselves" (1 Thess. v. 13). "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body" (Col. iii. 15). "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace" (James iii. 18).

WEST AFRICA.—In a recent notice of an address by Mr. R. Wright Hay, on his two years' work amongst the Bakwilli, on the West Coast of Africa, he is represented as saying that "hundreds of natives had been gathered within the Christian fold." Mr. Hay desires to state that he spoke chiefly of individual cases as exemplifying the efficacy of the Gospel.

"SHELTERING HOMES."—Several letters from boys and girls, now in Canada, who once found shelter and care in Mrs. Birt's Sheltering Home, Liverpool, are published in pamphlet form. No more eloquent testimony to the value of such Homes could be desired. All are evidently doing well; some state that they have given their hearts to the Lord Jesus, and all are well educated and happy. What a change from the wretched, hopeless life in Liverpool!

AN UNCONSCIOUS MINISTRY.

THE rising sun looked out upon a world of dazzling white,
For feathery flakes had fallen through the still December night,
And the earth beneath his glances flushed rosy in the glow,
As a bride before her lover blushes through her veil of snow.

In every field and hedgerow the sleeping life was stirred,
And moved, as moves a sleeper at some fondly-whispered word;
Soon in every hut and hamlet, by the margin of the lake;
In the valley, on the hillside, were all living things awake.

In a cottage, whose low casement looked out upon the sea,
Knelt a bonnie blue-eyed darling beside his mother's knee;
When suddenly there clamoured, through the murmur of his prayer,
A peal of merry chiming from the tower of St. Pierre.

As he gazed in startled wonder on his mother's smiling face
She told him of the Christ-child, the Father's gift of grace;
Spoke in tender mother-language of the Child of long ago,
Till the wondering blue eyes kindled with a quick responsive glow

Of eager love and longing; while a presence filled the place,
And in heaven his radiant angel sought with smiles the Father's face;
And blending with the story, ever like a rhythmic rhyme,
Rose and fell the joyous cadence of the merry Christmas chime.

* * * * * *

In the byeways of a city, on the outskirts of its throng,
A bowed and lonely figure wandered silently along;
In his heart no thought of healing or of comfort had a share;
In his mien was mute surrender, in his face a fierce despair.

In sweet eyes the tender radiance clouded o'er when he passed by,
As with Love's clear-sighted vision they beheld his misery;
And stern men cast backward glances, with a momentary thought
Of the sinning and the sorrow with which our lives are fraught.

But the sinning and the sorrowing of this one wasted life,
With its miserable failures, with its recklessness and strife;
Its yieldings to the forces that beset a wavering soul,
To hurl it backward, downward—who among them guessed the whole?

(Only One, who measures fairly both the sinner and the sin,
And who truly weighs the outer and the spirit-life within):
But unheeding and soul-blinded, he struggled through the snow
Towards the quarter where the river rolls its sluggish tide below.

No moon or starbeam quivered through the thick December night,
But from lamp and window glimmered here and there a ruddy light;
And across the slippery pavement a momentary gleam
From some partly-opened doorway made the darkness darker seem.

In his face the bitter north wind its stinging ice-drops cast,
And with shrieks of mocking laughter, whirled its driving snowflakes past;
But he heeded not the storm wind—in his soul a deeper gloom
And a fiercer storm were urging his spirit to its doom.

Faster yet he hurried onward, till he reached a quiet street
Sloping down towards the harbour, where the sea and river meet;
Here was heard no passing footstep—was no living thing in sight—
Only round him wind and tempest, and the darkness of the night.

When there fell a sudden silence. And the storm-wind held its breath—
Did it feel the awful presence of the Messenger of Death?
Or was it Life's bright angel, from the presence of the King,
Touched its fury into stillness, as he passed on radiant wing?

For arrested by the silence, in a wondering dazed surprise
The wanderer stood a moment, while across his weary eyes
From a casement at his elbow came a streak of ruddy light,
Like the glimmer of a starbeam through the darkness of the night.

Half unconsciously he lingered, and sheltered by the gloom,
Through the shutter's crevice peering, he beheld a quiet room,
Where, sitting in the firelight, with a child upon her knee,
Was a happy woman, smiling at her baby's merry glee.

As he looked, the tiny figure glided gently from his place,
Hushed his rippling baby laughter, and with sweetly serious grace
Bowed his sunny golden ringlets with a lowly reverent air,
And knelt beside his mother in the attitude of prayer.

At that instant, while the murmur of his accents floated by,
From a distant tower was wafted a gush of melody;
Rising, falling, swelling, dying, in a tuneful rhythmic rhyme,
Rang the clear and joyous prelude to the coming Christmas chime.

As by angel-hands invisible, detained against his will,
Mute and breathless, stood the wanderer, with pallid face and still;
In his heart forlorn and hardened, thrilled a chord of byegone years,
In his eye the fierce light faded, quenched in a mist of tears.

Forty years of life had vanished, and the firelight's ruddy glow
Changed to the dazzling radiance of sunlight over snow;
And that far-off silvery music, rising, falling on the air,
Sounded strangely like the chiming from the tower of St. Pierre.

And the long-forgotten story of the "Father's gift of grace,"
Rising up, as wells a fountain in some dreary desert place,
Cooled the terrible soul-fever, healed the spirit of its pain—
And within the Father's kingdom he became a child again.

* * * * * *

Hours had passed, the storm-cloud vanished; underneath a starlit dome
Lay the streets; put out or darkened were the lights in every home;
In a room a child lay sleeping; by the ember's dying glow,
A mother bending o'er him, watched his breathing calm and low.

Little recked she, as she lingered there beside her darling's bed,
Of the mission which, unconsciously, her little one had sped;
Why his smiles, like wavering sunbeams, flickered softly to and fro;
How his angel, bending o'er him, whispered tenderly and low,
Pointing up with radiant glances towards the holy "dwelling place," Whence, shining down upon them, was the Father's smiling face.

FACTORY GIRLS IN ISLINGTON.

For some years past a meeting has been held in St. Andrew's Hall, Gifford-street, for the benefit of girls working in the various factories in the North of London. Considering the wretchedness of their homes and the character of their associates, it is not surprising that many are lured away by the attractions of the drinking club, with its dancing and theatricals; so that it is a matter of grief rather than wonder to hear of their falling into sin, with all the unspeakable sorrows that follow in its wake.

It has been the object of those engaged in this work to counteract these evil influences, and to seek directly the spiritual welfare of the girls, as well as to inculcate a sense of self-respect, and to cultivate habits of thrift and economy. The means adopted include an attractive room for meeting, personal influence and conversation, bright singing, occasional teas, followed by appropriate addresses, &c. Instruction is also given in "the three R's," and in cutting-out, making, and mending.

There has been much in the past to encourage the prosecution of the work, among other things the fact that many of the girls have been induced to attend a Bible-class either on Sunday afternoon or Wednesday evening. It is felt, however, that the work cannot be fully successful until an opportunity is afforded them of attending more frequently than once a week, instead of leaving them to their own resources every night except Monday. As the hall is not available on other evenings, it has been decided to rent rooms for the purpose, and to inaugurate the Institute on an enlarged basis, including instruction in cooking and nursing. About half the sum required to meet the annual expenses of rent, light, and firing has been promised by personal friends. The Superintendent is Mrs. J. Waters Caldicott, 9, Wellington-street, Milner-square, N.

THE CLOUDESLEY INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG WOMEN. — This branch of the Y.W.C.A. is situated at 34, Barnsbury-street, Liverpool-road, N. Inclusive of the Sunday classes, there are 200 members on the books, and the Institute is open every evening from six to ten o'clock, on Sundays from 2 p.m.; the Bible-class attendance numbers from 70 to 100. Many of the senior members have become Sunday and ragged-school teachers, and are thus missionaries to others. The Home accommodates thirty boarders, the rate of charge for bedrooms being from 2s. 6d. to 4s. per week, and for the four meals 1s. 1½d. per day.

MATCH FACTORY GIRLS.

A series of teas to these girls is being given at the Bow Hall of the North-east London Gospel Mission; about one hundred and fifty are selected from the various factories around for each occasion, and it is hoped in time to reach the whole of the two thousand girls or more in the neighbourhood. On the occasion to which we now refer the number was augmented after tea to over two hundred.

Difficult as it was to control the more lawless spirits among them, yet the loving counsel of Miss Macpherson, and other practical workers amongst the poor of East London, told upon them, and we had soon to praise God for many tearful faces, and one after another rose up from their seats and retired upstairs for prayer and counsel. Each girl, on leaving, was presented with a fourpenny large type Testament. The evening refuge for these factory lasses is largely used, and a large number are taking advantage of the facilities afforded them of getting some sorely needed under-garments. With needle in hand they may be seen all over the premises making up the materials supplied to them at about half the cost.

DR. WHYTE ON CONVICTION.*

Bunyan, describing the beginnings of his religious life, tells us of his marriage, of his reading the books which made up his wife's dowry, and of his listening with pleasure to her talks about her godly father; "but," he adds significantly, "all this while I met with no conviction."

In thinking of conviction, let us begin with the word itself. What does it mean? "Convict," means to arrest a man, to bring him to the bar, to incarcerate him. Coleridge speaks of a visual image at the roots of words. This word has an image at his roots. It is a forensic picture. A criminal stands at the bar, covered with bloodguiltiness. Witnesses swear against him. The judge puts on the black cap, and the gallows are creaking at the gate for him. Carry over this picture into experimental religion, and the forensic scene of justification rises before you.

The Holy Spirit works conviction. It is He who convinces men of sin. He sometimes uses strange instruments. Goodwin writes of Him as raking in the cesspool or dunghill of human lusts and passions. It is loathsome work, but it has to be done. The old schoolmen had a motto to the effect that generalities do not pierce or wound. The Holy Spirit does not deal in platitudes or generalities when He convinces a man of sin. He does not launch into general truths like "the wages of sin is death," but He brings home our particular sin, whatever it may be. He has a searching, penetrating way of laying us in the dust, and making us feel our corruption. He prepares a minister for the prayer-meeting by dragging him through the mud of his sinful thoughts and words.

Contrition is a state of life, not a phase of life. This fact has to be insisted on in a day when the exceeding sinfulness of sin is little dwelt upon. People talk about the evils of morbid views and of introspection! If we have bad hearts, there is no morbidity in knowing it. Let us walk softly, and sit in the shadow, cultivating good affections. Good affections, as Bengel reminds us, are the best fruits of earth. Some poor sinner may feel that he is a reprobate, because he has not got rid of a sense of sin. Let him be comforted; evangelical humiliation on account of sin is a sure sign of grace. The keen, biting sense of sin should deepen and grow with our progress in the Divine life. Bunyan, in the end of "Grace Abounding," says: "I find to this day seven abominations in my heart: (1) Inclining to unbelief; (2) Suddenly to forget the love and mercy that Christ manifesteth; (3) A leaning to the works of the law; (4) Wanderings and coldness in prayer; (5) To forget to watch for that I pray for; (6) Apt to murmur because I have no more, and yet ready to abuse what I have; (7) I can do none of those things which God commands me, but my corruptions will thrust in themselves. 'When I would do good, evil is present with me.'" We may be tempted to exclaim that to call these abominations is an abuse of language, but Bunyan did not think so.

Conviction is the first step in true conversion, and it makes sin become to us the greatest of all evils. If God took death and hell away from their connection with sin, you should still hate it as you hate hell. Sheer, naked sin is the mother of all abominations. Conviction works humility in a proud man's heart. Bunyan says: "Even a lion may be tamed by constant molestations;" and even your heart may be tamed by constant molestations from the slings and arrows of conviction. Surely, the proudest man and the giddiest woman would be humbled to the dust by them!

Our subject should carry a lesson to two kinds of men. First, to the man on "the potter's wheel" to-night. Bunyan means by "the potter's wheel," the man taken out of the clay of the pit, and put, a raw lump, on the wheel to be shaped as a vessel for the Master's use. Conviction of sin is the first turnings of the wheel. Man on the wheel! take care. Many a lost soul in hell had your convictions, but they fell from the wheel. Cling to it. Pray, "Make me not a reprobate vessel."

Second, to the man we will describe as God's ticket-of-leave man. Her Majesty has ticket-of-leave men going about our streets. They were in prison, but a day of merciful visitation came for them. The gates were thrown open, and tickets-of-leave were put in their hands. They are now free men, but they must walk watchfully. They cannot take the liberties honest men like us can take. If they are in the neighbourhood of bad company, or engaged in what wears the appearance of evil, they are liable to apprehension. They have to be very careful about their conduct, and must go from time to time to get their tickets stamped. The Majesty of heaven has ticket-of-leave men. Do you belong to them? In the tenderness of conscience which you had under conviction, you vowed, if you were set at liberty, never to go after evil again, and never to look even in the direction of sin. Disobedience may annul your ticket, and cast you back into life-long bondage. Bring your card to be stamped to-night. When death comes, show him your certificate, stamped with the Cross and signed with Divine blood, and he must allow you to pass to the company of the redeemed, who sing throughout eternity, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father: to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen." D. S.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.

"I have found, through you, much bodily comfort, and the health of the soul which is much more precious. It is through you I heard, for the first time, the good news, and God has touched my heart, He made me understand how guilty I was. I asked God to pardon me, and He is so good He gave me, immediately, peace in the soul. I am so thankful to you, for when one has accepted God as one's Father and Friend, one is much happier. I assure you I would not change this for all the wealth of the world."

The above is one of many grateful letters to Miss de Bröen. Will friends help her more liberally to carry on the Mission, especially at this time of pressing need, so that more souls may join in praise that they are born again through hearing of the Saviour's love.

TOTTENHAM DEACONESSES' INSTITUTION.—At this Institution, where, for a long time the poor have been received and cared for gratuitously, a new feature has just been added by the opening of two private wards where patients of the upper classes can enjoy the advantages of home comfort, good nursing, fresh country air, and Christian surroundings, under first-class medical supervision. The wards are divided into twelve cubicles each, and there are also nine single rooms. Visitors to the Home hospital will be cordially welcomed, and should also inspect the free hospital, including the new children's wards, which afford accommodation for twenty-eight little sufferers. Dr. Laseron is the director, and Miss Christian Dundas is the lady superintendent.

LINK TO LINK.—At the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields, on Wednesday last week, Mr. Eugene Stock, of the Church Missionary Society, in the course of a deeply interesting lecture, gave a review of missionary work in Eastern and Central Africa. From the selection of Krapf, in 1837, and his earliest journeys into the interior, which were the commencement of all missionary, geographical, and commercial exploration of Eastern and Central Africa, he passed on to the travels of Burton and Speke, Speke and Grant, and Livingstone, and their results, the most important of which, at the present moment, is the establishment of the Uganda Mission. Some very interesting incidents in the life of Bishop Hannington were then given, and, in conclusion, reference was made to the persecution which broke out after his death, of which details were given in our issue of November 24. Since then twenty adults have been baptised. It is needless to add that later despatches, which are expected shortly, are looked for with great anxiety.

RAILWAY MEN FOR CHRIST.

The work of the Railway Mission has increased very much during this year. At over 160 stations evangelistic and temperance meetings are regularly held, and there are now thousands of Christian men to be found on the lines of the United Kingdom. The men themselves work well in this movement, and ladies are of special use. We should be glad to hear from any lady or gentleman who will take an interest in their own locality. Specially are the railway boys of the Metropolis needing attention. It is no small blessing to have truly converted and temperance men to care for us when travelling, and there is ample room for labour among the 30,000 stations untouched.

I shall be glad to hear from any who will take an interest in this effort those already engaged are full of work. D. Spencer, Secretary.

GOOD WORK AT WILLESDEN.

The neighbourhood of Willesden Green during the past few years has rapidly developed. What was scarcely a village six years ago has now a population equal to many of our provincial towns. A mission was commenced some five years ago by means of open-air services and tent work. These meetings being well attended, a small building was hired, and fitted up temporarily for services.

It became necessary, however, to surrender that building, and to make other arrangements. In October, 1884, the present building, known as the "School Room," Huddleston-road (a few minutes' walk from the Willesden Green Station, in the Harrow extension of the Metropolitan Railway) was erected, and Mr. F. B. Monti, for many years an agent of the Evangelisation Society, took up the work. From that time it has rapidly increased, so that on Sunday evenings there is not room to accommodate the numbers who attend. Mr. Monti is undoubtedly a talented preacher, and by his genial and homely addresses seems to have won the hearts and souls of those around him. A Sunday-school is also held, and the classes are inconveniently crowded for want of space.

A friend has suggested that this building should be enlarged to meet the present requirements; but the people who attend the services are quite poor, yet they liberally contribute towards the weekly expenses. The address of Mr. Monti is 21, Birchington-road, Kilburn, N.W.

VILLAGE LIBRARIES.—Dear Sir,—It has occurred to me that there may be many village libraries in which there are books which have been sufficiently read by the members, and are lying idle on the shelves. Mr. Thos. Greenwood, of 20, Lordship-park, Stoke Newington, N., having so kindly offered to distribute books sent to him for such libraries, will, doubtless, forgive me for adding to his labour by giving this hint to those of your readers who may take an interest in their own village library. OUR SOLDIERS IN INDIA.—Dear Friends,—Hoping soon to leave our shores for India, to work amongst our soldiers in connection with the Church of England Temperance Society, I should be glad of your assistance in the way of books and illuminated text-cards. Your previous kindness when I was at Peshawur was greatly esteemed by the British soldiers, and I shall deem it an honour to be allowed to convey your gifts once more to the brave fellows whom we honour and love. A special fund is being raised to carry me out. Address, Charles B. White, carriage paid, C.E.T.S., No. 9, Palace chambers, Westminster, S.E.

Donations through Messrs. Morgan & Scott should be marked Special Indian Fund, and will be acknowledged officially, and through The Christian.—Yours very faithfully,

Charles B. White.

THE COW CROSS MISSION.

Under the General Superintendence of

MR. WILLIAM CATLIN.

23rd ANNUAL APPEAL.

This Mission has for its primary object the preaching of the Gospel in the Mission Hall, and in adjacent Factories, Hospitals, Workhouses, Prisons, Public Houses, in Open Air, by the Sale of Bibles, and reading aloud the Word of God in great thoroughfares; by Cottage meetings and House-to-House visitation; also Bible Readings, Mothers' Meetings, Temperance Lectures, Sunday and Week Evening Instruction to the Inhabitants of the parish of Clerkenwell, which has a population of 70,000 souls.

The efforts of the Mission are conducted under the general supervision of well-known Christian Friends, on purely undenominational principles.

The prayerful sympathy and pecuniary help of the people of God are greatly needed at this moment, and are earnestly appealed to, on behalf of this thoroughly Evangelistic work, that it may continue, as in past years, to be a means of spiritual blessing to perishing sinners, and that help in temporal things may not be lacking for the sick poor during the inclement season of Winter. It is sincerely to be hoped that through such help we may be enabled to continue our Halfpenny Dinners to the thousands of poor little children who will doubtless crowd in upon us till the second week in March.

A SPECIAL APPEAL.

"Retiring poverty still hides its head," and must be sought out to be relieved. We are particularly anxious to provide a plain but substantial dinner for a certain number of poor families, well known to us, especially those of the "household of faith," on Christmas Day at their own homes; also during the first week of the New Year, to give our Sunday School and Band of Hope Children an extra dinner of Roast Beef and Plum Pudding, and some articles of Warm Winter Clothing, &c.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; at the Office of WORD AND WORK, 48, Paternoster-row, E.C.; by Mr. G. KIRKHAM, 15, Beresford-road, Highbury, N.; Mr. F. NEWTH, 44, Percival-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.; also by

Yours obediently in the Lord Jesus,
WILLIAM CATLIN,
Gen. Sup.

Collecting Cards on application.

17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, London, N., to whom all parcels should be addressed.

Post Office Orders to be made payable at Amwell-street Post Office, Pentonville. Cheques to be crossed "The London Joint Stock" Bank.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

THROUGH the kindness of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN we were enabled last year to give 150 poor boys, gathered from the lowest streets of Deptford, a good Dinner on Christmas Day, and several Teas during the winter. It is proposed this year to increase the number to 250.—Contributions will be thankfully received by H. A. PUNNETT, care of Mr. Fegan Boys Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E.

The United Christian Mission.

This Mission originated in some special services held in a little Yorkshire town, in the year 1878; now it has branches in about thirty towns and villages, where paid Evangelists and a host of unpaid willing workers daily preach the Gospel in the open air, and in Theatres, Shops, Warehouses, Cottages, Mission Halls, and other places; it is governed by an Annual Conference of its workers, and from one Conference to the other by a General Superintendent and Working Committee. Some 600 meetings were held every week last year, at which 2,000 professed to accept Christ as their Saviour, while a large number signed the temperance pledge. This Mission is entirely dependent on the voluntary offerings of the public to meet its heavy working expenses. Some £400 is required at once to clear off pressing liabilities, which, if not paid, will tend to injure, if not altogether stop, the work of the Mission. The Committee are all working men, and have no other alternative left them but to earnestly appeal to the Christian public for assistance to remove this burden, so that the Mission may still continue its work amongst the poor and neglected in our towns and villages. Donations, however small, will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; or by the TREASURER at the Mission Office, Chapel-street, Goole, Yorks.

Any further information will be gladly given if application is made to above address

DEAR FRIENDS,

I most earnestly plead for help, the present being a time of great need and difficulty. I am without funds to meet the responsibilities incurred, while cases of the most distressing kind are daily claiming aid and sympathy. I feel confident that, when the extreme need of the helpless children is made known to you, aid will be forthcoming as on former occasions.

Yours, in faith and hope,

THE WEATHER.

In civilised countries scarcely any more general and antiquated topic of conversation can be imagined than that of the weather, and yet the subject is not worn threadbare. In uncivilised countries, of course, weather changes make little difference, neither are animals under natural conditions much affected by climatic changes. This means that civilisation and sickness, or liability to sickness, go hand in hand. What an anomaly, and yet how true! George R. Sims, in referring to one of the evils of civilisation, has well put it in the following few lines: "It is the increased civilisation of this marvellous age which has made life a victory only for the strong, the gifted, and the specially blest, and left the weak, the poor, and the ignorant to work out in their proper persons the theory of the survival of the fittest, to the bitter end." Civilisation has given us warm socks and comfortable boots, and yet was there ever more complaining of cold feet and dread of suffering from the ill effects of cold and damp? Very few would have to complain of the after-effects of cold if a vigorous circulation were kept up during exposure. Nothing new in that proposition, says the reader; then, we reply, a knowledge of the disease does not lead to the cure. Nor need we go back to barbarism for the remedy: civilisation and health need not be antagonistic. Nature and art have propounded a means of keeping up a successful warfare against cold and damp, snow and rain, alternate fog and frost, to which we have recently been exposed, and the following will set forth the success which attends its application.

Mr. H. STAFFORD, 14, Frisby's Buildings, Stamford.

Oct. 29, 1885.—"I am pleased to tell you that the Appliance prescribed by you last year has been of great benefit to me. Although I cannot yet say that it has overcome the Asthma, I firmly believe it quickly removed other complicated ailments; for instance, the dreadful pains in the back, legs, and in the lower part of the body generally, soon disappeared, and I do not doubt but that it was a great help to my getting well again. My recovery now dates back five months. I have given up my trade, and am engaged in a different line of business which suits me better, and I frequently walk over twenty miles a day. I am thankful to say my general health is better than it has been for years, and I credit the Appliances with keeping me almost constantly in high, cheerful spirits, a state of things to which formerly I was almost a stranger."

June 2, 1886.—"You will be glad to hear that I have passed through the late severe winter in a most favourable manner; I have been out in all weathers—snow, rain, fog, &c., and have been continually exposed to north-east winds; anyone with an Asthmatical tendency knows what that means. But I think the greatest blessing of all is that I can lie down and have refreshing sleep; I have not had to sit up one night, whereas the winter before I had to be propped up every night, and even then had to struggle desperately for breath. Only those who have similarly suffered can describe the horrors of an attack of Asthma, and my heart is full of gratitude for the blessing of restored health, which, through your instrumentality, has turned the burden of life into enjoyment."

No one can read the following communication without feeling that the writer has gained in many respects not calculated upon. In ordinary practice no one would expect to be simultaneously treated by medicine for such opposite affections as those indicated in this letter:

Mrs. DENNIS, 8, Kenninghall-road, Clapton, E.

Sept. 21, 1886.—"I had been suffering from Muscular Rheumatism for a long time, and my heart had become weakened thereby, when I was advised by a personal friend to try your remedy, and I can assure you that it has wonderfully aided my heart's action and general health. I never have cold feet now as I used to do, and have never had a repetition of the fearful attacks of Rheumatism since, except now and then a little in the knee, for which I use Magnetic Friction—that soon removes local pain. I can therefore, from practical experience, safely recommend Odo-Magnetism. I used to be subject to Bronchitis, but, through the effect of your adaptation which covers my chest and lungs, I never have even the old cough and bronchial cold that ever attended me in the winter."

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be forwarded, and the required treatment suggested by Mr. B. Corson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

Protestant Convention, Glasgow.

December 14—16.

More than once, in critical periods of our Empire's history, has Scotland borne a noble testimony to the revealed truth of God; carried aloft the flag of religious liberty; and struck a blow for the defence of the rights of conscience. We are by no means disposed to be pessimists, or to manufacture a fearsome ghost out of every whin-bush on the roadside of a nation's chequered career. But many events in recent years have conspired to show that the administrators of the Papal system are making unusual efforts to gain a more influential foothold in our legislative councils, and in directing the movements of the public machinery. One symptom of this was the recent appointment of a Roman Catholic to the responsible and influential office of Secretary for the Home Department; the first time, we believe, in Reformation times, that such a post has been filled by one who must, by virtual necessity, be a Roman Catholic first and an Englishman afterwards.

Some of the members of the Scottish Protestant Alliance entered a strong protest against this appointment, with what results our readers must well remember. Out of evil God is still educing good. What was probably expected to strengthen the influence of Romanism in Great Britain, is likely to turn out for the furtherance of the true, rather than the false, religion, and to open the eyes of many to the nature of a system which has been allowed of late to develop itself practically undisturbed. Lord Randolph Churchill's impolitic and impertinent reply to our Scotch friends thoroughly roused them; and though sometimes slow to move, these Northerners are also slow to let go when they have taken hold of any good cause. So the trumpet has been blown throughout the land, and the clans have been summoned to council and to battle—not to fight with the ruthless weapons that find favour among the emissaries of Popery, but to the peaceful conflict of argument and resultant action.

RECEPTION MEETING.

The Convention was held in Glasgow last week, and began with a social reception at the Christian Institute, in Bothwell-street, on Tuesday evening. Glasgow weather is proverbially precarious at this season of the year, and Tuesday was as raw and cheerless a day as could be wished for, even in our moist and fickle climate. But Scottish Protestants are not of the "fair weather" type, and they mustered in good array. Mingling with the throng at the tea-tables, one could not help being struck with the large proportion of grey-haired and grave-browed men. The younger men were not wanting, by any means, but they seemed to be outnumbered by the veterans. If this indicates that those who ought to be the hope of the nation are largely apathetic on the great questions involved in the Romish controversy, it is only an additional argument for the need of such a gathering as that of last week.

The chair at this reception meeting was very fitly filled by Mr. W. J. Maughan, J.P. He sounded the keynote of the Convention by saying that their object in coming together was to testify to their resolution to maintain the Protestant cause in this land. Scotland, he said, had long been eminent for its adherence to those truths that are dear to Protestants, and it was becoming that she should lead the way in this movement for their defence. The promoters of the Convention had been cheered by the warm support with which the proposal was met. He stated, emphatically, that while exercising all due charity, and avoiding anything that would needlessly wound the feelings of their Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen, they must fearlessly uphold the truth. Statesmen of all parties must be made to understand that they were resolved at any cost to uphold the Protestant Constitution and Crown of these realms, and would resist whatever was calculated to undermine their ancient faith or sap the liberties of the people of this country.

Some eighteen addresses are a tolerably full programme for a two hours' meeting, but on the whole the Chairman managed, with a little gentle compulsion occasionally, to keep the speakers within their allotted five minutes. In welcoming the delegates from a distance, Rev. R. Gault, as a veteran in the work, expressed gratification that a large number of young and vigorous men were being raised up to prosecute this warfare against the principles of Romanism. He urged them to take a calm and dispassionate view of the questions at stake, and not to over-estimate, unduly, the power of Rome, or to under-estimate the strength of Protestantism. Rev. A. Halliday, of Portsmouth, gave some statistical account of the recent developments of Romanising teaching in that important garrison town. His chief point was that all the Episcopal Churches that were lukewarm in evangelical doctrine had become strongly ritualistic. He also told of difficulties in disseminating the Gospel at the military hospital, because of hindrances thrown in the way by those in high authority. Rev. George Divorty thought the very fact of such a Conference as this being required was an implied rebuke upon the Protestant Churches of the country. He pressed home the necessity of students and ministers being as well equipped for the defence of the Gospel as for the proclamation of it. Dr. Verner White, of Kensington, drew strong encouragement, in dealing with the present emergency, from the noble stand made on behalf of truth, and the victories won, by their forefathers in the past.

In a reference to the Romanising tendencies at present working in the Church of England, Rev. Dr. Teape, of Edinburgh, told how a young clergyman had that very day come to him desiring to know if he was bound to give absolution to any who might ask for it; his rector had instructed him that he was. Mr. Teape, of course, combated this extraordinary doctrine by pointing his young friend to Scripture teaching about the forgiveness of sins: it was an example, however, of the perverted state of feeling on this subject, that a Protestant clergyman should advocate a system that would compel them, if an intending murderer should come and confess his design, to grant him this so-called "absolution." Another veteran worker in the cause, Rev. Dr. Moir Porteus, of Edinburgh, thought they ought, in view of the gravity of the situation, to organise some authoritative Council that should consider and deal with emergencies as they arise. Above all, let there be renewed and unshaken confidence in God, and his overruling wisdom and providence.

The speech of the evening was that by Lord Robert Montagu, who has of late been so well known in connection with the unmasking of Romish plans and plots. His lordship gave a brief but intensely interesting account of the events that led to the recent correspondence about "The Priest in the Family." The lady in question, who has been admitted into the Church of Rome, lives in the West-end of London. She was formerly of High Church views, believing strongly in Episcopal orders and "Apostolic succession." She had a Roman Catholic lady friend, and this friend said to her one day that the Church of England had no orders and no Apostolic succession, and that these belonged only to the Romish Church. This was a great shock to the lady. She went to the rector of a large and influential parish in London, and wanted his opinion about the matter. He replied that he really knew nothing about it. Her friend had told her that if she inquired of the priest at the Pro-Cathedral he would be able to prove the claims of the Church of Rome. Not getting satisfaction from the Protestant clergyman she went off at once to the Pro-Cathedral, and the result was that she was received into the Church of Rome. As to this point of transmitted orders and of the direct Apostolic succession, Lord Montagu gave a summary of events during the seventy years' schism between the Eastern and Western branches of the Romish Church; during which period there were actually three Popes in office at the same time, and each one claiming to be the only true Head of the Church. In addition to this fact his lordship recited various steps that were taken at that time by those claiming authority, in direct variance with the canon law of the Church, which invalidated many appointments made; in a word, he made mincemeat, so to speak, of that figment of the human imagination—the direct descent from the twelve Apostles, by episcopal ordination, of any ecclesiastics in the present day. His lordship made the remarkable assertion, and yet one that is not difficult to accept, that among Romish prelates there is an immense amount of infidelity. They all know, he said, that what they teach cannot be true, and so they are unbelievers. In the ordination of priests, not really believing in what they do, they must of necessity transgress the ordinance of their own church as to "the doctrine of intention," which lays down that if this doctrine is contravened, all such appointments are ultra vires, and of no effect. Another matter of much interest which Lord Montagu pointed out, was that the years 1587, 1687, and 1787 were all years of crisis in the history of Protestantism, and in each case the following year brought a great deliverance from some threatened danger at the hands of Rome. If these things were more than mere coincidences, they give point to the remark of the speaker that the approaching years of 1887 and 1888 may bring with them a similar danger and a similar deliverance. We can, at any rate, trust ourselves, he said, in the hands of God, if we but do our duty so far as in us lies.

Rev. E. F. Cosens, of Tewkesbury, in an earnest address, strongly advocated the federation of all Protestants, of whatever name, for purposes of defence and of aggression. Rome is united, and it is this which has given her such power. Let Protestants also practically learn the value and the power of combination, and all Rome's efforts will be of no avail. Somewhat the same line of thought was taken in the vigorous utterances of Mr. R. J. Niven, of Dundee. Mr. Robert Scott, one of the publishers of this journal, followed with an address that was much applauded; the leading parts of it we give on a subsequent page. Rev. K. Moody Stuart, of Moffat, spoke of the need of not only instructing the young in the principles of Romish error, but of setting forth these principles by way of contrast to the specific doctrines of Scripture to which they are opposed.

Rev. Jacob Primmer, of Dunfermline, thought that Protestants were too often found fighting against each other, instead of uniting to combat the common foe. After some remarks from Mr. Bannatyne, of Aberdeen, and Mr. Gray, of South Africa, the speechmaking was concluded by a stirring utterance from Rev. J. McCaul, of Canada, who told how in that country thousands of converts had been won from Papal error by the pure and simple preaching of the Gospel. He truly said there is no power that can so effectually be used to pull down the strongholds and masterpieces of Satan as the presentation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. One of the speakers facetiously remarked that the meeting was only "a preliminary canter" before the more solid work of the next two days. For the hearing of the papers then delivered, and most of which we give on following pages either fully or condensed (though not exactly in the order of delivery), it seemed to us that this gathering was an admirable preparation.

Popery in the South Seas.

By Rev. JOHN INGLIS, D.D.,

Of the New Hebrides Mission.

About fifty years ago, Queen Amelia, the wife of Louis Philippe, King of the French, and sister of Bomba, King of Naples, took up the idea that it would be a most meritorious work to establish a Catholic or Popish Mission in the South Seas, wherever a Protestant Mission had been or might be established; this Mission to be countenanced and supported, so far as might be necessary, by the naval power of France. The Propaganda at Rome warmly welcomed the proposal, and the Government of Louis Philippe, to gain the support of the Church, and to supply a counterpoise to the power of Britain at the Antipodes, concurred in the foreign mission policy of the Queen. And the result has been that French priests, and French men-of-war, have harassed the missionaries and the natives for half a century. They began at Tahiti, and they ended, if they have ended yet, at the Loyalty Islands. Rome and France, in relation to the South Sea Missions, remind us strongly of the Apocalyptic Beast, with the Woman as its rider. The woman would not be specially formidable if she were simply walking on foot, and the beast would, in general, be harmless, if he were not guided and goaded on by the rider; but, under the instigation and direction of the ambitious and malignant rider, the beast is ferocious and destructive. Of Popery by itself we are not afraid; truth is more powerful than error or falsehood, and, with the Bible in our hands, we have nothing to fear from mediæval tradition and ecclesiastical authority. And the civil Government of France, when left to itself, and not under the influence of Rome, is, upon the whole, just and generous; but French naval power under the instigation of the Papacy, first forced a protectorate on Tahiti, and subsequently annexed the island, and broke up the Protestant Mission on that group.

The same policy all but succeeded at the Sandwich Islands, where, under the terror of a French man-of-war, it was sought to compel the nation to receive French brandy, and to accept of French Popery. The French extorted from King George of Tonga a treaty altogether in their own form. While the treaty was to be one of reciprocity, the Tongans in France were to be treated as one of the most highly-favoured nations, but in Tonga, the native Government, King George's, was compelled to build as many mission churches and houses for the Popish priests, as the natives had done for the Wesleyan missionaries by whom they had been converted from heathenism to Christianity. I pass over Samoa and Fiji. In the Loyalty Islands the French, under the instigation of the priests, so oppressed and worried the missionaries and the native Protestants, that the British Government interposed, and made representations in their behalf to the late Emperor Napoleon, who, in his answer, distinctly recognised the doctrine of religious liberty, and things were better for a time. We did hope, when ecclesiasticism first declined and subsequently collapsed in France, that Popish influence would have become feeble throughout all the South Seas, and that the Protestant Missions, like the Christian Church in Judea after the conversion of the Apostle Paul, would have had rest and quiet. But it is not so; on the Loyalty Islands the Protestant Mission was never more harassed than at present. For example, no education is allowed to be given to the natives except in the French language.

But to return to the Mission of Queen Amelia. The first act of the Propaganda was to send two Popish missionaries to Tahiti. The London Missionary Society's work on Tahiti and the other islands was at that time in the very zenith of its prosperity. All the cruelties and all the abominations of heathenism had disappeared; Christianity was everywhere accepted and professed, life and property were everywhere secure, industry was flourishing, and a large and daily increasing commerce was being attracted to the island. Dr. Inglis described the banishment of two French priests from Tahiti by the advice of the British Consul, and the forcible reprisals of the French Government. Through an act of treachery the soldiery of the invader gained a footing on the island, and the natives were compelled to submit. Tahiti was placed under a protectorate; such conditions were imposed on the L.M.S. missionaries, they felt compelled to leave the island, and the most prosperous mission in the South Seas was left in ruins. When he was at Tahiti, in the mission vessel the John Williams, in 1860, the French Governor of Tahiti resided in a stately mansion, while the Queen (Pomare) lived in a cottage at the edge of the domain, with a French sentinel standing daily at her gate, and when the missionaries visited her from the ship they had to be accompanied by a French officer. Queen Pomare has been dead for eight or nine years, the Protectorate is abolished, and Tahiti is annexed to the French possessions.

But there is a cheering statement to be made in connection with the Protestant Mission on Tahiti. Before the French occupation, the missionaries had given the Tahitians a translation of the whole Bible, the Old Testament as well as the New, in their own language. They had taught the natives to read it, they had also taught the natives to buy it and pay for it. When the missionaries were banished, they ordained and appointed native pastors to conduct worship and superintend the native congregations, and they continue to do so still. They have, indeed, obtained two French Protestant pastors; but the natives never took kindly to them, they spoke an alien tongue, the native sympathies continued still with the English missionaries. The French have used their utmost efforts to turn the natives from Protestantism to Popery, and have succeeded to some extent with the young generation, those who, like the Israelites of old, had not seen all the wars of Canaan. But they have not succeeded in alienating them from the Bible. The British and Foreign Bible Society have all along kept an agent on the island; and edition after edition has been printed in London, sent out, bought, and read on Tahiti, and as the priests have no Bibles for their converts, they have to procure the Bible Society's edition, and supply it to their followers, otherwise the Popish converts among the natives would leave Popery and go back to Protestantism. That the natives may remain good Catholics the priests have to give them the Bible.

But the French were not so successful in their warlike operations on the neighbouring island of Huahine as they were on Tahiti. They sent a man of war to Huahine, an island of the same group as Tahiti, but under a different king. They landed their forces, some three hundred men or so. The natives were encamped in the heights in three divisions, the first, commanded by the king of the island; the second, by his brother; the third, by a foreigner, a man who had resided many years on the island, and who, for his activity, energy, and good conduct, had been made, like Daniel, third ruler of the kingdom. You can divine this man's nationality, when I tell you that he was known among those islands by the name of "Scotch Jock!" When France and Rome are combined to wrest their liberty from a free people, you would instinctively know on which side a Scotchman would be found! When the signal was given, these three divisions rushed down from their mountain heights with all the fury of a whirlwind; they swept everything before them. Like leviathian they "esteemed iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood." The French were completely routed; they left about one half of their number killed or wounded on the shore; the rest fled to their boats, and the independence of Huahine was secured, and continues so to this day. The French had gained possession of Tahiti and Eimeo, the two central islands of the group, and they could bide their time for the rest. Some two years ago or so, they quietly annexed Raiatea, one of the most important of the remaining islands of the group.

As you are aware they are doing their very utmost to secure the annexation of the New Hebrides, under the plea that it lies contiguous to New Caledonia, and they promise that they will not interfere with our Mission. I may state that they surreptitiously took possession of New Caledonia and the Loyalty Islands which were virtually British possessions by right of discovery, they took possession of these during the Crimean War, when our Government could not afford to have a quarrel with France on this subject. They turned the island into a convict settlement, and wished to do the same with the New Hebrides. Their plan was to bring out 60,000 of the worst criminals of France, and place them on the New Hebrides, but to spread the process over ten years, at the rate of 6000 each year. This proposal was so outrageous, and so loudly condemned, especially in Australasia, that they were glad to withdraw it altogether. They evidently thought that their conduct now, as formerly, would be condoned, although they should proceed to annexation; for, under pretence of punishing the natives for offences committed against French subjects—offences never specified—they, some months ago, landed marines at two points on the New Hebrides, and continue them there still, as if they meant permanent occupation. We naturally infer from the history of the missions on Tahiti and the Loyalty Islands what our Mission may expect if the French annex the New Hebrides; and it is easily proved that it is the Woman and not the Beast; the malignant rider and not the ferocious animal on which she rides, that has worried and harassed our missions. It was the priests that brought the first man-of-war to Tahiti, and the same policy is still followed.

A few years ago the commandant, or chief officer, of the French forces, on New Caledonia was a Protestant. After his arrival the missionaries naturally expected some relaxation in the harassing treatment to which the Protestant natives were exposed; but there was no difference. They were as cruelly oppressed as during the rule of his Popish predecessors. The missionaries remonstrated with him; but, with all the politeness of a Frenchman, he said, "Gentlemen, I am extremely sorry, but I cannot help myself. I am in the hands of the priests. If I do anything to offend them, I shall be reported to head-quarters; and such is the power of the priesthood in Paris, that I should at once be a marked man at the war office; my promotion would be stopped, and, professionally, I should be a ruined man."

But some may think that although the priests are decidedly opposed to Protestant Missions, yet, in their own way, they must do a great deal of good in promoting civilisation, education, and in teaching the essentials of Christianity. Let us see. Cleanliness is next to godliness. The Popish priests are all celibates, although there are sisterhoods of nuns among them here and there. In the South Seas the Protestant missionaries, as a rule, are all married men, and the natives are not slow to remark how much more comfortable and tidy the houses of the missionaries are than the houses of the priests, while the linen of the one presents a great contrast to that of the other. The wife of the missionary effects a mighty difference. All the five great Protestant Missions in the South Seas have taught the natives to read, write, and cipher; the Popish priests have taught them nothing. The Protestant missionaries have given all the natives under their care more or less of the Bible. They have translated and got printed the whole Bible in eight of the languages spoken in the South Seas; the whole of the New Testament in other five of these languages, and portions of the Bible in I know not how many more. On the New Hebrides we have printed the whole Bible in one of the languages, and portions of the Bible in nine other languages. But, so far as is known to me, although the Romish Mission has as many agents as all the Protestant Missions put together, they have done nothing for the elevation or enlightenment of the native races. They have opened no schools, prepared no school books, and they have given their followers no literature. So far as is known to me they have not opened a single book of the Bible to any native tribe in their own tongue. What then, it may be asked, have they done? Their Mission was established as a rival mission, and it has been faithful to the object it had in view. It has always, and everywhere, opposed the Protestant missionaries; it has thwarted them, worried and destroyed them to the utmost of its power. The malignantrider has goaded on the ferocious animal on which she sits, whenever and wherever she could, to destroy our Protestant Missions. But she has attempted nothing positive of her own. If the Protestant Missions in those Seas are Christian missions, the attitude taken up regarding them by the Popish Missions proves clearly that the Popish Missions are anti-Christian, for they are as decidedly opposed to the Protestant Missions as they possibly can be, and hence, so far as the proof from missions goes, the Pope, or the Papacy, is Antichrist, as the Westminster Confession of faith so distinctly affirms.

Dr. Inglis went on to remark that this, instead of being a cause for fear, is a ground of hope. The Papacy is a doomed system; it has a past, but it has no future. Having briefly sketched the recent decline of the system politically, he concluded: But are we to sit still, fold our hands, and do nothing, because Popery is doomed and dying? By no means; we are to redouble our efforts, because our victory is assured. The promise of certain victory at Ai made Joshua hasten to lay his ambush. The promise to Paul of the safety of the vessel made him doubly careful, lest the seamen should leave the ship. France and Rome at present are putting forth all their efforts to annex the New Hebrides to France; and we are hopefully doing our utmost to prevent them from accomplishing this object; and we earnestly solicit the sympathy, the prayers, and the assistance of this Conference, and of this Alliance, to render our efforts a success.

Popery and the Bible.

By Mr. ROBERT SCOTT, London.

From a lad, I have felt a deep interest in the subject that has brought us to this Convention. In my teens, I had my soul stirred to its depths by reading Howie's touching narratives of our Scottish Worthies. My eyes were opened to the workings of the "mystery of iniquity," by reading Dr. Duff's pamphlet on the Jesuits in India. Since then I have seen and read enough of Rome's doings to keep alive the Protestant spirit in me; though I am sure I speak the feelings of every Christian here when I say that with regard to our Roman Catholic friends our "heart's desire and prayer to God for them is that they may be saved." It was meet that this Convention should be held in Glasgow—the headquarters of the Scottish Protestant Alliance—the home of Rev. James Kerr and his co-directors, who had the manliness to protest against the appointment of a Roman Catholic to the Home Secretaryship of this Protestant nation, and the honour to receive an insulting reply from Lord "Random" Churchill—our flippant Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Although I speak thus, let not my Conservative friends suppose that I am an infatuated Liberal, a red-hot Radical, or an unscrupulous Home Ruler. I am a political sceptic. I have lost faith in all the political parties, but not in principles. I am with the Conservatives in conserving all that is good; with the Liberals when they are liberal with that which is their own; with the Radicals when their aim is to eradicate what is evil; and with the Home Rulers when they shall begin to preach the Bible doctrine, that every man should rule his own home in the fear of God.

Further, it was fitting that this Convention should be held in Glasgow, the home of the noble Peter Leys, who dared to obey God rather than man, and who chose to go to prison rather than give up his two motherless grandchildren into the lap of the Romish harlot. The Angel of the Covenant bless the lads, and keep them by his mighty power in soul, spirit, and body unto the coming of the Lord Jesus! When I read Mr. Leys' simple yet telling address, delivered before the Court in Edinburgh, I felt as if one of our grand old Covenanters had risen from the dead.

When I first knew the city of Glasgow it possessed a glorious motto—"Let Glasgow flourish by the preaching of the Word." Like husband and wife, that motto consisted of two halves, the good half, and the better half: true yoke-fellows they were. By what good man, or men, they were joined together, I know not. One thing I know; they should never have been put asunder. About twenty years ago an agitation was got up against the "better half"—by whom, or for what reason, I never discovered. Suffice it to say that, while the Christian men and women of Glasgow were busy here and there, a divorce was effected, and the "better half" was gone, leaving the poor husband to shiver alone. Has Glasgow flourished the better since this ungodly deed was executed? I trow not. The most gigantic and disgraceful frauds have been perpetrated; men whom we used to respect, and look up to, have forfeited their good names; and through them the fair fame of this great mart was, for the time at least, somewhat tarnished.

What has this to do with the subject of our Convention? Much every way! Popery fears the faithful preaching of the Word more than anything else. She can no more stand before the open Bible, than darkness can stand before the light. She hates the light, because her deeds are evil. Some of you will remember that about the time that the "better half" of your motto was ignominiously dropped, the open-air preaching of the Word in Glasgow got a severe check. The late Mr. MacColl, of the Briggate Free Church, in his zeal for the salvation of the poor folk in that neglected district, commenced to preach the Word from the stone pulpit in the tower of his church. The people gathered together, and gladly heard the Word. But he had not done much of this when the priests hired a cab, and drove through the quiet assemblage on the Sabbath; and then, on an early day, brought a complaint before the sheriff that the open-air preaching was causing the thoroughfare to be blocked, and that it must be stopped. The sheriff of that day, himself a Roman Catholic, gave judgment in favour of the priests, and from that time the preaching of the Word from Mr. MacColl's stone pulpit was interdicted. Herein was a marvellous thing!—that a city prospering by the preaching of the Word should stand by and see its motto mutilated, and its glory trampled under foot. If times of prosperity are to return, and to remain, it will be by the preaching of the Word. The chief corner stone of commercial greatness is truth: and it is hewn, laid, and squared by the preaching of the Word. I have no hesitation in saying that Dr. Chalmers' Mercantile Discourses preached in the Tron Church, on Thursdays, long ago, had not a little to do with the formation of the fine characters of many of the Glasgow merchants of the last generation. Christian men and women of Glasgow, restore your motto in its integrity. Let the Word of God have free course. Give Irish Roman Catholics and their priests to understand, that although you are not so intolerant as to require that, when they come to Glasgow, they must do as Glasgow does; yet that they must not think of interfering with your King's command to preach the Gospel to every creature.

The Jesuits and Social Morality.

By Mr. A. H. GUINNESS.

The grave questions that now occupy public attention, especially the action taken by Romish ecclesiastics in support of disaffection in Ireland, invites the consideration of the position of the Jesuits in this country. The recent expulsion of the order from France and Germany has brought its existence into conspicuous notice, and induces thoughtful Englishmen to inquire what will be the effect of their presence among ourselves. Are the Jesuit Fathers, as their admirers proclaim, simply earnest self-denying missionaries, who go forth only to pray, to preach, and convert, or will the conviction force itself on candid minds, that in the constitution and practice of the order there is something which warrants the charge that the Society is an institution for the promotion of principles pernicious in their tendency, and dangerous to the State? If such be its character, is it wise or prudent that whilst Roman Catholic countries banish these men, as abettors of sedition and crime, Protestant England should receive them with friendly greeting, and grant them her protection? It may be well, therefore, to direct attention to the past history of the Jesuits, and to the prominent principles which they profess, that we may learn how dangerous is the presence of these men, and how important it is that every lover of Protestant truth should exert himself to the uttermost to check the spread of their malefic influence.

An examination, on the part of the French Parliament, of the constitution of the original order by Ignatius Loyola, furnished more than sufficient proof that it is "opposed to the laws of the kingdom, to the obedience due to the sovereign, to the safety of his person, and to the tranquillity of the State." A solitary clause from the Constitution will indicate the character of their principles. It is expressly declared that "no constitutions, declarations, or any order of living, can involve an obligation to sin, unless the Superior command them in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ or in virtue of holy obedience, which may be done in these cases or persons wherein it should be judged that it will greatly conduce to the particular good of each or to the general advantage." This principle of blind obedience is made the guiding principle in the instruction of the Jesuit. It may not be generally known that there is a female order of Jesuitesses, called the "Sisters of the Institute of Mary," and founded at York in 1686. The Tablet of May 26, 1883, says the daughters of Mary are now a numerous community scattered over a large part of the world. They do not wear a distinguished uniform like other religious orders, but are dressed like ordinary women of the world; moreover, they do not change their names when received into the community. The object of this, as The Tablet plainly states, is that they may go about visiting hospitals and elsewhere without attracting attention. We have in our midst, therefore, it appears, this organised band of women secretly going about promoting the insidious aims and doctrines of the Jesuits. These Jesuitesses are chiefly engaged in education. Let English fathers and mothers well reflect before they entrust their children to the care of Romish educational establishments.

Any who would like to know the complete history of the open and secret proceedings of the Jesuit order from its foundation to the present time may be referred to the translation from the German of Greisinger's "Jesuits," published by Messrs. Allen & Co. Waterloo-place, London. This fascinating work describes how the community, from a small and almost imperceptible beginning, has developed into gigantic proportions. From time to time it has ruled with almost absolute power different States in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. In this work details are given showing the subtleties, craft, frauds, political and social intrigues, lyings, forgeries, violences, cold-blooded murders and massacres by which they attained their unhallowed ends. They do not shrink from any deed, even of the most horrible nature, in order to attain those ends, and all, as alleged, for the glory of Jesus Christ; but, in fact, to centre in themselves power and pelf, and to stir up a war of annihilation against Protestants. In his "Provincial Letters," Pascal, himself a devout Roman Catholic, unsparingly exposes the criminality and immorality of the teaching of the Jesuits. So great were the evils that arose that, in 1773, Pope Clement, in a famous Bull, suppressed the society. In that document the Pope says: "Desolation and danger grew to such a height that the Kings of France, Spain, Portugal, and Sicily found themselves reduced to the necessity of expelling and driving from their states, kingdoms, and provinces those very 'Companions of Jesus,' persuaded that there remained no other remedy to so great evils, and that this step was necessary in order to prevent the Christians from rising against one another and from massacring each other."

We find a singular comment on the doctrine of Papal infallibility in the fact that notwithstanding this suppression and the manifest necessity for it in order to the well-being of society, the Order of the Jesuits was re-established by another Bull from Pope Pius VII. in 1814, in order, as he expressed it, to save by such vigorous and experienced rowers the bark of St. Peter, tossed and assailed by continual storms. The restored Jesuits pursued their former course with similar results. They were expelled from Russia by a decree of the Emperor in 1820. To show how English politicians viewed the system at a later stage, some words of Lord Palmerston's, spoken in 1853, may be quoted. He asserted in the House of Commons that they had caused the civil war in Switzerland, and went on to express his firm belief "that the presence of the Jesuits in any country, Catholic or Protestant, was likely to disturb the political and social peace of that country."

What are the reasons given by the French Government for the recent expulsion of the Order from that country? M. Ferry stated in the French Parliament that the education given to the rising generation by the communities in question was of a dangerous character, and hostile to modern society. He gave a summary of the books put into the hands of the Jesuit pupils, and said they taught the divine right of kings, and advocated the carrying on of religious wars. Universal suffrage and trial by jury were denounced in them as vexatious institutions; liberty of conscience and of worship were condemned, and the liberty of the Press was asserted to be a principle that had never been admitted by a wise government.

With what object, then, have the Jesuits settled in this country? Have they merely sought here an asylum, or are they engaged in promulgating their pernicious principles? In 1872 Cardinal Manning stated that "the Jesuits are at the head of the great Catholic Mission in this land." In 1882 Lady G. Fullerton appealed for contributions for the expelled orders from France, and said that some of these exiles now in England were "doing missionary work among the people." What is that missionary work, and how is it done? They have their colleges at Stonyhurst, Roehampton, Windsor, and other places in England. The college in Stephen's Green, Dublin, we are told by The Tablet, "is entirely under the control of the Jesuits." In the new Royal University of Ireland seven of the Fellows appointed by the Government are members of this order. The magazine Catholic Progress, edited by Jesuits, has openly and explicitly avowed the objects sought by the Church of Rome in Ireland. "The woes of Ireland," it said, in a leading article, in 1881, "are due to one cause—the existence of Protestantism. . . . The ancient Catholic churches are still in Protestant hands. Would that the misappropriated funds were sufficient to buy off all the Protestant landlords, and that every Protestant meeting-house were swept from the land. Then would Ireland recover herself."

So much for the open workings of the order; what are they doing clandestinely? It has been alleged that the Jesuits, by false representations—nay, even under the disguise of Protestant ministers—are secretly endeavouring to undermine the faith which they profess to defend. A remarkable instance of this occurred some years ago, and was related by the late Canon Miller, at a public meeting. In his parish a very well-informed and attractive clergyman was engaged to take the place of another, who left through ill-health. He speedily secured the love and admiration of the whole neighbourhood, and was a frequent visitor at the Squire's house. A brother of the Squire paid a visit to the neighbourhood, and met the new clergyman at dinner. The Squire noticed that the latter was remarkably mute, and did not seem at all at ease. As soon as dinner was over, the clergyman made an excuse, and went away. The Squire said to his brother he could not understand what was the matter with him. "Oh," said the brother, "he knows me!" "What do you mean?" "Why, he is a Priest; I met him in France, and had a conversation with him." Next morning it was found that he had gone clean out of the parish.

In his work on "Popery and Jesuitism," Rev. Dr. L. Desanctis, once a priest in Rome, and subsequently a minister of the Reformed Italian Church at Geneva, says that his confessor once disclosed to him what seemed incredible facts concerning Jesuitism in England. He said there were Jesuits in all classes of Society, in Parliament, among the English clergy, and among the Protestant laity, even in the higher stations. Desanctis could not understand how a Jesuit could be a Protestant priest, but the confessor silenced his scruples by saying that Paul became as a Jew that he might save the Jews, and it need not be wondered at if a Jesuit should feign himself a Protestant, for the conversion of Protestants. It would be difficult to find a more startling instance of Jesuitical casuistry than that afforded by the case of the late Rev. R. S. Hawker, rector of Morwenstow, who was openly received into the Church of Rome during his last illness in 1875. A writer in John Bull stated that Mr. Hawker had told him he had long been convinced that the Church of Rome was the only true Church, whose doctrines he held to be the absolute faith in Christ; that he wore round his neck a medallion sent to him by the Pope, and that for years he had administered the Holy Eucharist to himself, adopting the service from the Missal. Such conduct is evidently in accord with Jesuit teaching. Gury, in his Casus Conscientiæ, deals with this point, and says: "It is lawful to dissemble the true faith for a while in consideration of any serious inconvenience that might accrue from public profession." The teachings of the order clearly sanction the practice of equivocation and of perjury, the commission of theft, the use of bribery, even the bribery of Judges for the perversion of judgment, the perpetration of the grossest immorality, the deposition of kings and rulers, the release of subjects from their allegiance, and even the commission of murder and of regicide. In 1879 there was published in Dublin an approved translation of "The Church and the Sovereign Pontiff," by a member of the Jesuit Society, and sanctioned by 18 Roman Catholic bishops in Ireland. In one of the chapters, faithful Roman Catholics are forbidden to have any connection with an excommunicated person, denounced by name, either in conversation, letters, business, or habitation. What better definition could there be of the system of "boycotting" that has since developed so largely in the sister isle?

These emissaries of Rome in this country are but parts of the great army whose unceasing efforts are directed first to gain supremacy in Great Britain, and then to destroy all social, political, and religious freedom. There are more than a thousand bishops, and many thousands of Jesuit priests, monks, and nuns, superintended by the watchful eye of the congregation of cardinals, under professed obedience to the Pope, all of whom are engaged in the project of subjugating this empire to Rome. The danger is great, and constant vigilance is needed to guard our hard-won liberties against the enemies of our religion and our freedom.

Legislative Concessions to the Papacy.

BY REV. JAMES PATON, GLASGOW.

Two words, he said, must be strongly emphasised, "legislative" and "Papacy." He did not deal with the social and dandiacal concessions, only with the legislative. He did not deal with the rights of Roman Catholics to civil and religious liberty as much as other religionists, but with the pretentions and demands of those who were the managers and abettors of the Papacy, "the Court of Rome," whose interests were hostile to our interests, the granting of whose demands would be the surrender of British freedom and national independence.

He reviewed the legislative action of the Scottish Parliament for centuries before the Reformation, to show how William the Lion, Alexander I., Robert Bruce, and all the Jameses, had to protect themselves and their people against the encroachments of the Court of Rome. If our fathers found this so necessary, even when they were what is called good Catholics, much more ought we to be watchful to preserve in these days the liberty and independence of our country. England, before the Reformation, had gone through a similar process, as witness her Constitutions of Clarendon, Statute of Præmunire, &c., leading up to the final breach, when Parliament abolished Papal jurisdiction, and proclaimed the Royal Supremacy.

He then outlined the legislation at the Reformation, whereby in Scotland all Papal jurisdiction and authority were abolished—an act renewed at the Revolution—and finally embodied in the Act of Union as "unalterable" for ever. He quoted also to the same effect the Oath of Allegiance as fixed at the Revolution of 1688, securing as far as human words can secure or parliamentary deeds can ratify, the Protestantism of the Constitution, the Protestantism of the Throne, and the Protestantism of the Union.

In dealing with the Legislative Concessions since that day, he elected, rather than give a dry-as-dust catalogue of Acts of Parliament from the pages of Hansard, to select two ruling instances, around each of which clustered a long series of concessions from the Reformation to the present hour; and to illustrate on what pleas and conditions these concessions were won—how they were no sooner won than abused, and made a stepping to other claims, all pointing towards, and issuing in, the treasonable demand of submission to the supremacy of a foreign master. The one series of concessions clustered around the word Maynooth, and the other round the cry of Catholic Emancipation.

He then traced the story of concessions that cluster around Maynooth, quoting the first pretence of a native College for Irish priests, that they might not go abroad and have their loyalty there undermined. The Act of 1795, allowing certain trustees to receive donations for the endowment of such a seminary; the subsequent claims for its endowment out of public money, the annual grant being, under stress of political weather, made a charge on the Consolidated Fund in 1845; and its enormous slice out of the Church Funds, till, as The Times declared in 1873, the Papacy is educationally endowed in Ireland, and we are supporting a system whose teaching is perilous, at the least, to all British interests, and would in practice be destructive of British liberty and independence. Roman Catholics gave every solemn pledge that Jesuitical doctrines, such as are inconsistent with good morals and social order, would never be taught there, and that Papal pretensions, such as the deposing and absolving power, and the infallibility and supremacy, were not received by them, and never would be received or taught. But the managers and abettors of the Papacy laughed all these pledges to the winds, and to-day the Canon law is received and promulgated by them as higher than the laws of the country—Canon law which, whensoever it is acted upon, must confessedly bring them into collision with the State, and imperil the freedom of every British citizen, and the independence of the British Crown. We are forced to ask whether concessions gained by fraud, and abused in a way detrimental to the welfare of the State, are not openly forfeited; or, at least, whether guarantees cannot be taken and made effective, so that neither Maynooth, nor any Romish institution or society, shall undermine our fabric of civil and religious freedom.

Proceeding to the series of concessions that cluster around Catholic Emancipation, out of which has grown quite naturally almost every other Papal demand, he showed that from the days of James I. of England, who, in 1606, tried to introduce an oath that Roman Catholics might swear, and have peace and security, down to 1825 and 1826, when Roman Catholics give every solemn pledge that men could give to the nation, it was perfectly and clearly understood on both sides what was wanted. The nation wanted some satisfactory evidence that Roman Catholics abjured and denied the Pope's jurisdiction here, and especially that he had no power to depose princes or to absolve subjects from their allegiance, or otherwise to intermeddle with civil affairs. Roman Catholics, the Hierarchy, the vicars apostolic, laymen, and ecclesiastics, by oaths, by published protestations, by national and synodical deeds, abjured again and again all such claims and pretensions, and especially solemnly declared that they renounced the idea of Papal infallibility or supremacy, and abjured all pretension to the absolving and deposing power of the Popes of Rome. The nation was so far satisfied that the bait was swallowed by our statesmen and Churchmen. Roman Catholics were held to be no longer "self-disabled;" were declared eligible to Parliament, and every position and office under the Crown was thrown open to them, except five specified in the Act of 1829—one of which, the Chancellorship of Ireland, has since been thrown open too. Instantaneously a process was begun by the managers and abettors of the Papacy, of tearing that Act to pieces, and of trampling into the dust every pledge they had given and every condition on which it was granted. The oath, which their own bishops had drawn up, was denounced as "offensive," and it has now been altered to please them, the "Protestant heirs," being replaced by the phrase, "her successors as by law established." Proposals have been made to cancel the prohibitions of the Act of 1829, as to Jesuits and other persons bound by monastic and religious vows, which, though not legally granted, are being illegally obtained.

The cry has been raised, and echoed all around, that Roman Catholics will never be free till the Queen and the Prime Minister are allowed to profess their religion. In 1851 for England, and 1878 for Scotland, the Pope of Rome parcelled out the country as its master, and gave British territorial titles in invasion of the Queen's prerogatives. In 1864 the Syllabus was promulgated, and in 1870 the Vatican Decrees, whereby everything that Roman Catholics had abjured and denounced is riveted around their necks by the Papal authorities; and the liberty of resisting the Popes, in any civil emergency, which they claimed and in former years acted upon, is rendered for ever impossible to all honest men who accept the Papal infallibility—for "Deity is the measure of his demands, as Deity is the pretext for his encroachments." And it is forced upon us to reconsider whether, if there be nothing in a Romanist's allegiance to the Pope to disable him from sitting in the Parliament or the Cabinet, there can be anything in such allegiance to disable him from sitting on the woolsack or the throne?

Passing by other concessions, with which for forty years the Statute books were crowded, and having shown, from Manning and others, that these claims of the Papacy are not dead speculations or academical debates, but living and powerful principles of action in our very midst, Mr. Paton said the proverbial three courses seemed open to Britain. Submission to Rome was one solution; that would bring peace—the peace of the grave—for it necessitated the surrender of the British Crown to a foreign priest, and the subjection of the British Parliament to the Cabinet behind St. Peter's Chair, the Curia Romana, that never resigns and never dies. A second course was that condensed in the popular cry of "a fair field and no favour;" and that also can be faced, if it is to be clearly understood that neither Romanist nor Protestant shall set up an imperium in imperio; that no person and no society shall be permitted to seek to bring this country into subjection to the Pope of Rome any more than, e.g., to the Czar of Russia; that either proposal, and both, shall be equally put to silence and stamped out as treasonable to the State, as destructive of the liberty and independence of the country. As things are at present, it is not a fair field and no favour; for no Protestant would be permitted to set up the claims of any foreign master to allegiance and obedience, as Romanists are now permitted treacherously to do—it is a field in which all favour is given to the enemies and not to the friends of the country.

Finally, the third course, the only practicable or possible one for us, is self-defence, and no surrender. Our fathers may have erred in some of the penal laws into which they were forced for the security and welfare of their country; but are we not committing a more fatal error in throwing away all our weapons, and facing with our naked breasts men who are arming to the teeth against our liberties and our independence? The silly cry is raised that political guarantees against Romanists are in vain; that depends whether Romanists make political claims, and demand political surrender. Political guarantees alone, backed by the penalties of law, and enforced, if need be, by the power of the sword, can secure the welfare and safety of the State against a political foe, whether he approaches you as Czar of Russia, with a million soldiers at his back, or as Pope of Rome, with Infallibility and Supremacy on his lips.

Romish Ascendancy versus British Ascendancy.

By Rev. C. A. SALMOND, Glasgow.

To those at all acquainted with the subject, it is trite remark that Popery is not merely a religion but a political system; but this is a truth so commonly overlooked that it is unquestionably well to have it distinctly emphasised at this Convention. It is a truth of no mere speculative interest, but of the greatest practical moment. The object of this paper is to show the essential antagonism between the claims of the Papacy and the rights of nations. It is long since Adam Smith wrote: "The Romish Church is the most formidable combination that was ever formed against the authority and security of civil government, as well against the liberty, reason, and happiness of mankind." Both before his time and since there has been only too ample evidence in support of this affirmation. "The Papacy," in the words of Prince Bismarck, "has ever been a political power, which, with the greatest audacity, and with the most momentous consequences, has interfered in the affairs of this world." Some people affect to smile at the notion of the Papacy being now a political force that has to be reckoned with. To my mind there is no more startling evidence of how real and present and potent an influence it is than the manner in which the Emperor William of Germany and his iron Chancellor have found it needful by concession to conciliate Rome.

But it is with the Papacy's relations to the Government of this British realm that we are for the present called particularly to deal; and here, as is the case, indeed, in every country of Christendom, it will be seen how irreconcilably antagonistic Papal claims and projects have been, and are, to the rights of self-government and self-development inherent in our nation.

Romish ascendancy is a direct corollary of the fundamental axiom of the Papal system, that the Pope is the vicar of Christ, and therefore the vicegerent of God. It is an idea which seeks, as it has ever sought, to clothe itself in a universal sovereignty, resting on a divinely delegated temporal power, which knows no limit and anticipates no end.

British ascendancy, again, I take to mean the embodiment given by this country's history to the principle of a nation's inalienable supremacy within its own sphere—the principle that each Government has the right to vindicate its sovereignty within its own domain, and to develop the resources committed to it, without the interference and domination of a foreign power which, under the guise of religion, has consistently worked for political ends, and has sought to establish not merely an imperium in imperio, but an imperium super imperium in every country of Christendom.

That the nature of the Papal claims and aspirations is not here misrepresented might be abundantly shown, did time permit, by reference to the authoritative documents of the Papal Church, and the utterances of its leading champions, or by a direct appeal to the notorious facts of history. It is a claim which has been wrought out in facts, as well as spoken out in fiats. It is not within the province of the present paper, however interesting it might be, to run down the page of history and see the Papacy in practice. But let us just look at the Papal theory as expressed in Papal symbols and Romish declarations, and then let us refer, in a few sentences, to the experience of this country in seeking to contend against it.

Lest it should be supposed that we are dealing merely with a matter of ancient history, we shall go no further back than the reign of the late Pontiff, Pius IX. In his famous Encyclical Syllabus of 1864, we find exhibited the true genius of the Papal system. Professing to impale the principal errors of the time, this remarkable document, while condemning much that all evangelical Christians must condemn, assails also much that is dear to them as life itself. The claim of liberty of conscience is denounced as insanity; freedom of speech and of the Press is characterised as the liberty of perdition. But more particularly, with reference to the subject before us, the Pope's anethema is hurled at those who deny "that the Church has a right to employ force," or who hold "that the Roman Pontiffs and Œcumenical Councils have transgressed the limits of their power and usurped the rights of princes." All history not only warrants but requires us to place ourselves under the sweep of this Papal ban. The keynote of the whole Syllabus and of modern Romish policy is found in the concluding condemnation of those who assert that "the Roman Pontiff can and ought to reconcile himself to and agree with progress, liberalism, and recent civilisation."

These and like affirmations were of course confirmed by the Vatican decree of infallibility in 1870, which had retroactive force: and not only so, but since the death of Pio Nono the doctrines of the Syllabus have received the express imprimatur of another infallible Pontiff. Pope Leo XII., when he ascended the Papal throne in 1878, was spoken of as a mild, scholarly man, and as one likely to be a reasonable and liberal-minded Pope. But, like too many of his predecessors, he has fallen into the hands of the Jesuits, and has become quite as much their tool as their leader in the assertion of Ultramontane principles and the furtherance of Ultramontane designs. On July 27, 1884, we find Pope Leo writing: "The teaching given by this Apostolic See, whether contained in the Syllabus and other acts of our illustrious predecessor or in our own encyclical letters, has given clear guidance to the faithful as to what should be their thoughts and their conduct in the midst of the difficulties of times and events. There they will find a rule for the direction of their minds and of their actions." In his Encyclical of Nov. 1, 1885, he says: "Regarding what they call acquired liberties in these latest times, it behoves to abide by decisions of the Apostolic See, and to judge of these, one by one, as it has judged. . . . It is not lawful to follow one rule in private conduct and another in the Government of the State, so, to wit, that the authority of the Church should be observed in private life but rejected in State matters." As further showing the insidious nature of the influence this high-minded Pontiff is prepared to exercise upon society, we note the following from his letter of June 17, 1885: "It [obedience], while incumbent on all, is most strictly incumbent on journalists; their obligation," he affirms, "in all that touches religious interests and the action of the Church in society is, in a spirit of docility, to submit themselves fully with heart and mind to their own bishops and the Roman Pontiff, to follow and reproduce their teachings, to second heartily their motions, to respect their intentions, and to make them respected." In declarations like these, be it remembered, we have the spring of multifarious activities, which everywhere around us are carrying forward the war of the Roman curia against the peace and progress of modern society.

Enough has been said to illustrate from official sources the unaltered and unalterable attitude of the Papacy toward the civil and religious liberties of nations. The fittest embodiment of Rome's idea was seen in mediæval Europe, with its crass spiritual ignorance, its intellectual stagnation, its feudal subjection to a holy empire overridden by the mandates of the Papal chair. The Reformation shattered Rome's ideal, which she has been strenuously seeking to restore—in vain!

It was in the emergence of Great Britain from Papal control that the rights of "Kingdom versus Popedom" found their most decisive vindication; and it is in the prosperity which, under God, has attended the subsequent history of this realm that the benefits of national independence and the blessed fruits of civil and religious liberty have had their most brilliant exemplification. These advantages were won through a protracted and strenuous struggle, and they will have to be retained and defended in a spirit of vigilant resolution. At a very early period stout resistance began to be offered by English monarchs to the encroachments of the Papal See. From the wise Alfred downward, they had to do their utmost to maintain the supremacy of the Crown. William the Conqueror and his Norman successors flatly denied the obligation of fealty to the Pope. In the ignoble reign of John, when the Papal legate spurned with his foot the English Crown, his people refused to be pacified by the good offices of Nicholas, the "angel of peace" sent by Rome; and, headed by the nobles, in defiance of pontifical fulminations, they wrung from their despised monarch the great charter of English liberties. In Edward III.'s reign John's submission to the Pope was declared null and void, "having been made without the concurrence of Parliament, and in violation of his coronation oath." Then, in pursuance of the previous Constitutions of Clarendon (1164), Statute of Mortmain (1279), Statute of Provisors (1351), the Statute Præmunire, so obnoxious to Rome, was passed, in Richard II.'s reign (1392). At length came the struggle in the time of Henry VIII., which issued in a thorough break with the Papacy. And a thing to be particularly noted—as was well brought out recently by Lord Robert Montagu—is that, during all this time the kings of England, including Henry VIII., were Romish in religion, though determined to be English in their policy. In spite of this, Henry was excommunicated, and, so far as a Papal decree could do it, deposed from his throne on August 30, 1535. The struggle went on in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, whom Pius V., as "prince over all people and all kingdoms, to pluck up, destroy, scatter, consume, plant, and build," declared to be "deprived of her pretended title to this kingdom, and of all dominions, dignity, and privilege whatsoever." The Act of Supremacy in her reign, and the Act of Allegiance in that of James I., threw up further bulwarks against the "pretended authority of the see of Rome."

After the varying fortunes of some of the intervening reigns, the great conflict precipitated under the dark régime of James II. reached its height, and found its issue in that grand Revolution settlement of 1688, in which the principles for which Britain had been contending for generations were so clearly and consistently crystallised. Into the details of that settlement it is, of course, impossible here to enter. Its great aim was to secure for all time coming the civil and religious liberties which had been so dearly won, and which, it was felt, would be so precious a heritage to the generations following. Safeguards were thrown around the Constitution—the throne, the legislature, the electorate—which it was fondly hoped would be a security in all time coming against the recurrence of the evils which, through the interference of the Papacy, this land had found such abundant reason to deplore. It was a thoroughly consistent piece of legislation. Our forefathers did not shrink from carrying their principle of Protestant ascendancy to its logical issues; and, if anything seems harsh in their procedure, or unduly stringent in their enactments, the preceding intrigues and dangers have to be borne in mind as a sufficient explanation.

With but little modification, the settlement of 1688 continued in full force till 1829; and I need not stay to dilate on the material and intellectual and moral pre-eminence which, from the Elizabethan period onward, our nation has enjoyed. At the date mentioned, our legislators took a new departure, in the Catholic Emancipation Act of 1829. The opinions of leading and responsible men, in different political camps and different Protestant communions, were greatly divided as to the propriety and justice and safety of that measure. Certain it is that the protestations of representative Romanists at that time were very unlike the unabashed utterances of a subsequent period—so unlike, that an ingenious man like Newman does not attempt to reconcile them, but tries to evade the difficulty by affirming that no pledge from Roman Catholics was of binding value to which Rome was not a party. Hence some of the leading advocates of the Emancipation Act lived to be more than dubious of the safety of their action—nay, bitterly to repent of it.

Mr. Gladstone himself has acknowledged that the so-called "English and Irish penal laws against Roman Catholics were repealed on the faith of assurances which have not been fulfilled;" and, in view of the Vatican decrees, which are simply the culmination of the policy steadily pursued by Rome since 1829 and before it, he says, in language which is now historical: "No one can become her convert without renouncing his moral and mental freedom, and placing his civil loyalty and duty at the mercy of another. . . . A religious society which delivers volleys of spiritual censure in order to impede the performance of civil duties does all the mischief that is in its power to do, and brings into question, in the face of the State, its title to civil protection."

Lord Russell, on December 4, 1873, gave utterance to an apprehension of Sir Robert Peel, which he himself had by that time come to share, when he wrote to Sir George Bowyer: "I conceive that the time has come, foreseen by Sir Robert Peel, when the Roman Catholic Church disclaims equality, and will be satisfied with nothing but ascendancy." And there was a tone of ruefulness as well as of painful conviction in the subsequent letter of the same aged statesman to Sir John Murray, on January 19, 1874:—"From 1813 to 1829, I constantly voted for the admission of Roman Catholics to Parliament and to office. In 1828 I took the foremost part in relieving Protestant Dissenters from the Disabilities of the Corporation and Test Acts. For many years afterwards I laboured for the liberation of the Jews. But neither for Roman Catholics, for Protestant Dissenters, nor for Jews did I ask for more than equal privileges, and equal laws." Then, after quoting an authoritative declaration of Romish doctrine, he adds: —"This is not liberty, civil or religious. It is to bow the knee to a despotic and fallible priesthood. The very same principles which bound me to ask for freedom for the Roman Catholic, the Protestant Dissenter, and the Jew, bind me to protest against a conspiracy which aims at confining the German Empire in chains, never, it is hoped, to be shaken off."

It is high time our statesmen were awakening to the discovery that to seek merely equal rights is impossible for Rome. Her spirit and purpose are ever the same. Romanists at this time or that may exhibit inconsistencies fitted to allay alarm. But it is necessary to remember the essential hostility of Popery to all that contributes to our country's true greatness; and there never was an epoch when it was more needful than just at this present moment to be alert and resolute in view of its ceaseless machinations and encroachments.

I might quote the testimony of Lord Macaulay and others as showing the natural and inevitable issue, materially and morally, for any people of having intromissions with this noxious system. But enough has been said in the general. Let me simply give this closing word of warning: that the battle is not yet over with Rome, and that the danger is not past. Another speaker is to trace in detail the successive assaults made upon our Constitution by the Popish party since 1829—most of them, alas! successful—till the Queen's supremacy itself, pronounced by Manning to be the "Reformation in concreto," has been brought unblushingly into question. Suffice it to say that a considerable, influential, well-drilled party is at work in our very midst, aiming at the overthrow of British supremacy, and bent on substituting the Romish for it again. The introduction of the Hierarchy into Great Britain did more for Rome than many of us imagine. Men smiled in 1850 and thought, "What harm for Dr. Wiseman to have his title changed from the Bishop of Melipotamus, in partibus infidelium," to that of the "Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster and Vicar Apostolic of London"? What's in a name? But, ladies and gentlemen, this is no mere matter of names, but of stern and alarming facts. Since Wiseman's day another prelate has stepped into his place, no less crafty, dexterous, and indefatigable, and perhaps less scrupulous in using the vantage ground he has secured—once plain "Dr. Manning"—now entitled, in official documents, such as the Royal commission on dwellings of the poor, which gave him a place of precedence to all our English nobility—"Our trusty and well-beloved, the Most Reverend Cardinal Archbishop, Henry Edward Manning." What's in a name? But this man is the culmination, the centre, the inspiration of a thoroughly equipped organisation, whose aim is Romish supremacy. Here is what Dr. Manning now says:—"If England is ever to be reunited to Christendom, it is by submission to the living authority of the vicar of Jesus Christ. The first step of its return must be obedience to his voice, as rebellion against his authority was the first step of its departure. The right of deposing kings is inherent in the supreme sovereignty which the popes, as vicegerents of Christ, exercise over all Christian nations" (Essays, 1867). He already anticipates his triumph in these words: "The supremacy of our crown has literally come to nought. The Royal supremacy has perished by the law of mortality, which consumes all earthly things, and at this period of our history the supremacy of the vicar of Jesus Christ re-enters" (Essays, p. 19). In his address to the Academia, November 8, 1874, the same prelate said: "The infallibility of the holy father, his right to temporal as well as spiritual authority, and the ultimate necessity of acknowledging civil obedience to him is your only safety." And here are the frank terms in which he announces the plan of campaign—a plan which has many agents and many branches.

One who has given a crushing exposure of Vaticanism says:—"My object has been to produce, if possible, a temper of greater watchfulness; to disturb that lazy way of thought which acknowledges no danger until it thunders at the doors; to warn my countrymen against the velvet paw and smooth and soft exterior of a system which is dangerous to the foundations of civil order, and which any of us may at any time encounter in his daily path." These words are not mine, but those of that distinguished, but in this connection enigmatic statesman, Mr. Gladstone. Is not the subsequent apparent indifference to Romish aggression on the part of one who has given so masterly an exposure of its designs fitted to lull into the greater torpor a community which for the moment he successfully aroused, but whose easy pre-disposition to a policy of laissez faire takes comfort from his later silence? Granting freely that Roman Catholics are often better citizens than their political creed, if they were consistent, would make them, has not the country, in these days when every eighth member of the British Parliament is a Papist, and those who elect them have no security under the ballot, a right, a call to offer back to him these words of warning, and to sound them in the ears of the other party as well, which has shown itself no less ready to run a race for the favour of the Vatican? It may not be possible or even desirable to attempt to retrace all the steps already taken, but we are loudly called by recent events to be more than ever upon our guard; and the watchword of all lovers of their country in view of the dilemma in which, as citizens, our Roman Catholic fellow-subjects are undoubtedly by their system placed, must be:—

> Grant them the rights of men; and while they cease
> To vex the peace of others, grant them peace.
> But, trusting bigots whose false zeal has made
> Treachery their duty, thou art self-betrayed!

The Educational Policy of the Papacy.

BY REV. JAMES KERR, GLASGOW.

THE aim of the Papacy in every department of its operations is, and ever has been, one and the same. That aim is represented by the one great, all-absorbing idea—Rome's sovereignty. This inspires every cardinal, bishop, and priest; this lays its impress on every man, woman, and child that comes under Papal influence; this engages the energies of every congregation, confraternity, and sisterhood—in short, the whole multiform and centripetal Papal organisation. Control for the priest: supremacy for the Pope. Among the methods by which it is persistently sought to have this sovereignty established, the educational policy of the Papacy occupies a prominent place.

The Church of Rome has always clearly defined what kind of education she approves and requires. The Syllabus of Pius IX. condemns as error the opinion that "the best theory of civil society requires that public schools open to the children of all classes should be free from all ecclesiastical authority and interference, and should be fully subject to the civil and political power." And the present Pope in his Encyclical of December, 1878, condemns as heretical error the proposition that "either the higher or lower education may be freed from the control of the Catholic Church;" elsewhere he says: "to exclude the Church which God Himself instituted from the education of youth is great and pernicious error." These and other authoritative declarations of a similar character prove beyond question that the Papacy cannot approve of any system of education that is not thoroughly and throughout Romish. All educational systems not of Papal inspiration and under Papal control are subject to Rome's anathema. When this position is clearly apprehended, the whole policy or policies of the Papacy in regard to the educational systems of the three kingdoms is easily understood.

In framing the English and Scotch Education Acts, their authors were careful to institute a system of education that was calculated, in their view, to be acceptable to both Roman Catholics and Protestants. Hence, two special provisions were engrossed in those Acts. One of these is the conscience clause, and the other is Roman Catholic representation on the School Boards; both were concessions to the Papacy. It was supposed by the Parliamentary leaders that a system which protected Roman Catholics in their religious beliefs by debarring the Bible from the school during the special national hours, and denying to the teacher the right to give instruction in religious subjects during those hours, would be satisfactory to Rome. The attempt was unsuccessful, and the compromise sinful. Britain, by express legislation, keeps the Bible out of the hands of the children during certain hours of the day, and the Papacy keeps the Bible out of the hands of the children under its power at all hours—always. Where is the difference in their principles? Both, therefore, interfere with that freedom of the Word of God, with which no Association, political or ecclesiastical, has any right to interfere. To please the Papist, that nation which owes her liberties and lofty position among the nations of the world to the Word of God fetters that Word by denying free range in its national systems for the education of the young. This Christian nation bars the only infallible text-book on Christianity out of the school, while no other book in the world is so barred. The Word of God, and therefore the God of the Word, dishonoured by Britain to conciliate a section of the nation which has ever been the foe of the Bible and human freedom! "Tell it not in Gath; publish it not in the streets of Askelon."

Papal representatives all over the three kingdoms, with loud voice, reprobate the British national system. The Protestants of Britain can yield up their religious views in deference to Papists; Romanists refuse to surrender their convictions to any. Protestants are compromising and weak; Papists are unbending and stern, and the system of compromise is defiantly spurned. Cardinal Manning stated that "no Catholic could confide a child to a Board School without violating his conscience." The Roman Catholic bishops of England adopted a resolution, "instructing all members of the clergy, both secular and regular, that they are bound not to encourage or to permit Catholics to frequent School Boards." A Birmingham priest asserted that the outcome of the School Board system would be "Communism," and that it would "bring up a nest of vipers." A Glasgow priest affirmed that any Roman Catholic child attending a Board School was "violating his conscience and sinning against God." Cardinal Cullen, referring to a similar system in Ireland, complained that "the children cannot use Catholic emblems, and are obliged to pass their whole time without being able to venerate the Holy Mother of God, or do anything for their own salvation during school hours." An Australian priest declared before a commission on education that the sacraments must be withheld from parents and others who countenance the undenominational system. Still more recently, the English Hierarchy issued instructions prohibiting in peremptory terms Roman Catholic teachers from taking office in the Board Schools, on the ground that "education apart from religion was condemned by the Holy See." The Church of Rome even prohibits her children attending the public schools, because of the consequences that might arise from their association with other children, and their receipt of instruction from a master who was not a Roman Catholic. If the British educational systems honoured the Word of God by welcoming it to the school at all hours, and encouraging the teachers to allude to its teachings at any hour they felt disposed, it could not have been more fiercely assailed by the Papacy.

But, while Roman Catholic representatives lustily reprobate the national non-denominational system, priests and other Roman Catholics use every effort to secure and persist in retaining seats on the School Boards. In this department of their policy, Roman Catholics are guilty of a manifest and flagrant inconsistency. The priests prohibit parents sending their children to the Board Schools under threat of exclusion from the sacraments, while the same priests require the same parents to go to the polling stations on the day of elections to do all they can to place them on the School Boards which administer the system those voters dare not countenance. How can Roman Catholics administer a system they have anathematised? How can they administer a system from whose influence they debar all the youth of their Church? How can they sit on the School Board when they prohibit Roman Catholics becoming teachers? And if the association of their children with Protestants and others in the school be so injurious, how can Roman Catholic priests defend themselves in associating with Protestants and others on the School Boards? No doubt Cardinal Manning's statement is accurate: "The Jesuits are at the head of the great Catholic mission in this land." There is certainly design in this department of Rome's policy. Rome's design, by keeping her emissaries on the School Boards, is to interfere, on every opportunity, with the religious instruction of the schools, to secularise, as a first step, these educational institutions, and so prepare the way for Romish ascendancy in Education.

The policy of the Papacy on Education is to erect schools of their own, where the education shall be thoroughly and throughout Romish, and to obtain for them ample endowments out of the public funds. In consequence of the compulsory clauses of the Education Acts and the Papal belief that the secular system is "pernicious," the Papacy has been forced to become an Educator. Papal denominational schools in large numbers have become a necessity. Parliamentary grants are obtained for these schools under the profession that the conscience clause is observed. Are we, indeed, to believe that while the Papacy condemns the national system, because of the restrictions upon religious instruction required by the conscience clause, the Papacy observes the conscience clause in schools under its own direction? In public it condemns the conscience clause, and in comparative privacy it enforces its observance? It is well known that no such clause is observed in the Papal denominational schools. Several of the standard books in use in these schools during the hours when, it is alleged, the conscience clause is in operation, contain some of the peculiar dogmas and ceremonies of the Church of Rome. Certain Roman Catholic representatives have acknowledged that during the hours set apart for undenominational instruction the "scholars may sing Catholic hymns, they may be surrounded by Roman Catholic pictures and images, and they may recite to themselves the prayer at the end of the lessons." The Roman Catholic schools of this country are now in receipt of nearly £30,000 annually, and permission has been given for the erection of such schools, where the existing public schools could furnish ample accommodation for all the children of the locality. It is thus that in England and Scotland the number of Roman Catholic schools, and the endowments of a Papal educational system are steadily advancing. In her infatuation, Britain is thus fostering and warming in her own bosom the viper which, when strong enough, will sting her to the heart.

About the time of the passing of the Roman Catholic Relief Act, the Irish Hierarchy seemed satisfied with the system of education administered in the national schools—united secular and separate religious. The Queen's Colleges were erected for the purpose of securing for the youth of Ireland a secular education in the higher branches. For a time there were but few deep murmurs from the Papal Hierarchy. But the bishops began to see that secular education was far from favourable to that mental condition which is necessary for the retention by Rome of her supremacy. Within the last quarter of a century not the least of Ireland's burning questions has been that of education. Long and loud have been the knocks at the Parliamentary door for more money from the national exchequer, and for the erection of educational institutions under Romish control. At present the Roman Catholic Church has the benefit of the capitalised £400,000 handed over to Maynooth at the time of the disestablishment of the Irish Church—a change which, whatever more may be said for or against it, was effected in part in the spirit of concession to Rome. The Hierarchy have, by their persistent clamours, succeeded in obtaining training colleges wholly under their own superintendence, supported by national funds; they have succeeded in practically setting aside the Queen's Colleges; they have secured the erection of a Royal University, on whose Council they exert a preponderating influence, which is shown, for instance, in the appointment of Thomas Aquinas as an alternative text-book in this year's programme for mental science; they have had Romish colleges affiliated to the Royal University, by which a degree can now be obtained by a student without passing out of the atmosphere of the cloister, or enjoying the still greater advantage of an education under the liberalising influences of general society; and they have again and again boldly demanded a still larger share of the public funds for their denominational schools and the complete control of the whole educational system.

While the Protestants of Ireland and Christian statesmen are vainly endeavouring to find a solution of this vexed question in the Rome-troubled sister Isle, Rome is steadily perfecting an already advanced denominationalism. The only solution of the difficulty that can satisfy these demands is to concede to the Papacy that despotic control of education which Roman Catholic nations have been compelled, in defence of their own existence and independence, to take away by strongest legislation. This Protestant nation, through its spurious liberality, lends itself to the policy of Rome's tyranny over millions of the youth under its care, while Roman Catholic nations have exhibited true and sterling liberality by generously protecting their youth from the mental and moral degradation which Romish education ever entails. While Roman Catholic nations are nobly grappling with the efforts of the Hierarchies in their territories to prevent or misdirect education, the concessions of the English Government are thrown by those Hierarchies in their teeth, and Britain's example becomes an obstacle to the onward march of many of the Continental nations toward civil and religious freedom.

In encouraging the Papacy in its educational policy, Britain is sustaining a system under whose influence the Roman Catholic youth of the nation are subjected to the heartless tyranny of superstition and trained in disloyalty. The Papal boast is that Romish education will raise up a generation that shall be ready for revolution against all rights, civil, social, and personal, to be found resisting the supremacy of Rome. By her so-called liberality toward the Papacy, Britain is forfeiting the high position she has hitherto occupied as the political leader of Europe, and is daily becoming more the abject henchman of that politico-religious destroyer from whom down-trodden nations are laboriously working out their emancipation.

Indeed, if Rome could or dared, there would be little education of any kind under her direction, especially if she were dependent for the support of these schools upon her own resources. Before the Royal Commission on Education (1870) Cardinal Cullen said: "Too high an education would make the poor discontented with their lot, and unsuit them for following the plough, using the spade, hammering iron, or building walls." An article, advocating with great force similar sentiments, has appeared in The Dublin Review, a Roman Catholic magazine, which, according to Professor Maguire, himself a Roman Catholic, is an authoritative exponent of Roman Catholic views. This article declaims against the higher education, and expresses the fear that such education would lure scholars away to apostasy. It says: "Now, it is a plain fact that, by giving Catholic youths a higher education, you open a new and very large avenue by which the godless spirit of the times may gain admittance." And again: "It is simply undeniable that the absence of higher education is a powerful preservative against apostasy, and those who watch over souls will reasonably refuse to bear part in withdrawing that preservative, until they are satisfied that some other very sufficient substitute is provided." Certainly there is plainly enough the motto, lux anathema. Like the owls that screech and hoot in the darkness against the light, the Papists cry out against real education—enlightenment. If the Papacy had the sovereignty in education, we would seldom, if ever, have a blink of the sun. "During the last three centuries," wrote Lord Macaulay about the Romish Church, "to stunt the growth of the human mind has been her chief object. Throughout Christendom, whatever advance has been made in knowledge, in freedom, in wealth and in the arts of life has been in inverse proportion to her power. The loveliest and most fertile provinces of Europe have, under her rule, been sunk in poverty, in political servitude, and in intellectual torpor."

What ought Britain to do, then, to avert the consequences that must follow this policy of Rome on education? Oppose policy with policy; oppose a firm unflinching policy with a policy as firm and unbending. Oppose a light-extinguishing and Bible-despising policy by a policy light-diffusing and Bible-honouring. Oppose the policy of secularising our schools and other public institutions with a view to their being ultimately papalised, by a policy which will Protestantise our schools and public institutions yet more, and such a policy as will sanctify and adorn the state with the offices of religion. Let every Roman Catholic school in the land be stripped forthwith of every penny of its endowments from national funds. How can it be maintained that public funds should be expended on a system which generates an atmosphere that has bred assassins? Then amend the national Acts by inserting a paragraph declaring the ineligibility of a papist to a seat on the school board. Self-defence demands it. To make an alteration as to the cumulative vote is but to deal with the excrescence on the surface while the evil remains in the fundamental policy of the legislation. Men holding the opinions of political, social, and individual rights which papal manifestoes contain are dangerous men in social circles, in school boards, in legislatures.

And, finally, place the Bible in the school and encourage the teachers to refer to it at all hours. No man, though he dwell in St. Peter's, and no association of men, though they reign from St. Stephen's, have a right to lay any restriction on the Word of God. Restrain the air of heaven from the use of man! Stand between your fellowmen and the sun! Who hath required this at your hands, O Britain? The papist! The Pope of Rome! That poor fallible infallible that confessed himself a prisoner in the Vatican! Fear the Lord of Hosts, O Britain? Let Him be your fear, and let Him be your dread. The insignia of this empire are a Bible, a crown, and a sceptre; and the crown and sceptre are sustained by the Bible. Take away the Bible, and the sceptre shall wax feeble and the crown shall fall. It must not be. These fair isles of the sea must not go back under the tyranny and superstition of Rome. The Bible must be elevated to the place of honour. Thou prince of school books, we beckon thee onward to thy coronation. Let there go up a cry and go out a demand from this Convention that shall awake the nation! "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Who knoweth but that we are come to the kingdom for such a time as this. The battle is not ours but God's; and it may be that we might yet turn the strong tide of battle to the gate;

And judgment unto righteousness would yet return again,
And all would follow after it that are right-hearted men.

The Duties of Protestants.

By Rev. Wm. BARRAS, Glasgow.

What are the respective positions in our day of Protestantism and Popery? Has the relationship of these two great systems in any way altered of late, and how do they bear upon one another at the present time? Has the Protestant attitude altered since 1829, or have the Romanist claims undergone any change since 1870? The former date was a marked epoch in the history of Romanism, as it did then by its chief representatives disown the paramount assumption of Popish supremacy and infallibility, and renounced all interference with the loyalty and civil allegiance of British Protestant subjects.

But what the Papacy disclaimed in 1829 it reclaimed in 1870. Dr. Doyle maintained that Roman Catholics were bound to give loyal and undivided allegiance to their sovereign irrespective altogether of Papal Supremacy; while Dr. Manning returns to the old mediæval position of asserting both the supremacy and universality of the Pope's dominion. Now Dr. Manning's denial of the public and Parliamentary position of 1829 seriously affects the contract then made between the country and the Catholics.

Had the position deliberately taken by the Romish party from 1826 to 1829 been honestly maintained there would be much less cause for Protestant complaint than there is; but when we find that position now utterly ignored, what can be thought of either the honour or consistency of Rome? Mr. Gladstone says in his "Vaticanism," "The English and Irish penal laws against Roman Catholics were repealed on the faith of assurances which have not been fulfilled." In his paper on "The present Crisis of the Holy See," Dr. Manning says, "The Catholic Church cannot be silent, it cannot hold its peace; it cannot cease to preach the doctrine of Revelation not only of the Trinity and Incarnation, but likewise of the Seven Sacraments and of the Infallibility of the Church of God, and of the necessity of unity, and of the Sovereignity both spiritual and temporal of the Holy See." This claim is utterly at variance with the more modest claims made sixty years ago, and gravely reflects upon the assumed unchangeability of the Romish Church.

Whatever, indeed, may be the continuity and consistency of Rome's motives, its movements, or modes of procedure alter with the situation. Rome seems to have three well-marked grades of action. 1. It will accept toleration when it cannot get more; 2. It will claim equality where it may; 3. It will assert supremacy where it dare. Rome enjoys large toleration in Great Britain, where, perhaps, it is more at home than in Italy. Italy has had a long trial of Popery, and has not only found it wanting of pure life and love and truth, but also has felt its political yoke to be intolerable. The Tiber has lost its attractions, and the Thames has been for generations regarded as the Holy River. "All the roads of the whole world," writes Dr. Manning, in one of his sermons, "meet in one point, and this point reached the whole world is open to the Church's will. It is the key of the whole position of modern error. England once restored to the faith becomes the evangelist of the world." Such is the brief summary of the present position and claims of Popery, and when it is found that these menace Protestant liberty and faith, it is not only simply dutiful, but really urgently imperative to oppose and expose them.

What, then, is the duty of Protestants? First, it is dutiful to realise, and to fortify, our Protestant position against Popery as a superstition and despotism. We would do well to keep in mind that we seriously disapprove of Popery, both as a system of error and idolatry, and also as a political organisation. Popery, by combining religion and politics, makes itself odious alike to the Bible Christian and the civil freeman. It has, during a succession of centuries, grown into a human-made system, by which the Divine method is either ignored or mutilated. This is, in fact, the fundamental vice of Romanism. Now there is a danger of modern Protestants being beguiled by ritual and ceremonies, while they fail to rely on Divine grace and truth and spirituality. Other systems of error and superstition, such as Mohamedism and Confucianism are different from Roman Catholicism in their vital matter, for while the former have only man-made books of faith and morals, the latter has all Revelation in its possession, but supplants it by tradition. Having regard, therefore, to its corruption and concealment of heavenly truth, it is imperative on Protestants to take their position within the citadel of the Gospel kingdom, holding fast and holding forth the pure Word of Life without either human addition or subtraction. For if traditions, articles, creeds, catechisms and confessions are more studied than the original, religion will assume more a human than a Divine aspect; or if Revelation be read through human media there is serious risk of obscuring "the pattern given in the mount."

(2) It is dutiful to guard against the present persuasive attitude and action of Romanists in Great Britain. Persuasion, not persecution, is at present the apparent policy of Rome. Persecution is a powerful weapon of our antagonists; but while it has done much service in the past and may yet do so, it seems, meantime, to be held in abeyance, and is substituted by conciliation and adroit address. Rome curses in secret but blesses in public. She hurls her anathemas from her altars against heretics, but behaves like a weaned child before her critics. Her dignitaries are careful to propitiate educational influence and acquire political standing, while even social and domestic life is pervaded by her emissaries. "When weak it is often crafty, and when strong tyrannical." Priests make themselves extremely agreeable to ritualistic people, and nuns are sent out on eleemosynary errands, to gather the alms of soft-hearted Protestants. No sooner was a Papist returned for Argyleshire than the "Little Sisters" were abroad on the county; and they, in one district, at least, obtained donations from Protestants who refused to aid or only half-helped the Protestant claims presented to them.

By this course of allurement our Protestant population are to a large extent being bewitched. Were it not for Protestant contributions obtained by feminine agents the efforts of Romanists to subsidise their institutions would be much less successful than they are. When Romanists slip into the Cabinet, secure appointments in Commissions, pass through Oxford as Anglicans, and become Puseyites or Ritualists, and when the priest invades the family, it is time, and urgently requisite, to face and fight the foe. "For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sin. Ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

(3) It is dutiful to organise and unify the somewhat scattered forces of Protestantism. Perhaps Protestantism is as essentially united as Popery is. The latter lacks not only freedom, but also division, for the dead neither strive nor stray; nor do the enslaved express diverse opinions. When one dictates to all, or when the few legislate for the many, it is not in the nature of the case that there should be a variety of opinions or a diversity of custom. But it is otherwise when life is free and like a river, ever gathering strength, growing fuller, and flowing faster, as it approaches the ocean. The waters may betimes overflow their banks, and do some damage; but, at the same time, they may be errigating the land or making a channel for ships. Protestantism, from its very nature, assumes a combative attitude; and not only is it alive to the great host against it, but it is also awake to the distractions which may arise within its own lines.

There is a growing tendency among Protestants to organise and embody their numbers. Unity is showing itself at the circumference of Christendom, and union is becoming practical, if not as yet nominal or formal, at the centre. There is less unity in Popery than appears on the surface, and there is more union among Protestants than might at first appear from their several denominations. There was, however, a period when our country, north and south, was more united against Romanism than at present. We seem to have fallen into a reaction after the long and earnest opposition against superstition and supremacy. Antipathy has given place to apathy, aye, perhaps in some cases, to sympathy. Active Protestants are regarded by by some of their own creed as rather bigoted or severe, while not a few protect or excuse Papists in their practices rather than coincide and cooperate with their fellows in faith and liberty.

But, as surely as the flood-tide follows the ebb, so surely will a revived Christianity arise amongst us, brought together by truth and love, being developed into one Church with Jesus Christ as its sole Head, and the Spirit of God as its animating and elevating life. The spirit of conciliation is abroad. Bitterness is giving place to sweetness, and sects are seeing the issue of their peculiar principles, and becoming gradually disposed to minimise their favourite tenets, and to magnify the graces of Truth, Hope, and Charity.

(4) It is imperatively dutiful to circulate the Bible, inculcate Bible truth, and encourage the private reading of the Scriptures. The Bible societies are the best and biggest Protestant agencies. It was the lack or loss of the Bible which involved Christendom in darkness and spiritual death. Its absence gradually left the people in ignorance of God's way of salvation, and bereft the priests of the knowledge of the Divine will. The Bible made Luther a Christian, a reformer, a hero, ay, a martyr and master man. The Reformation was extended and intensified in proportion as the Scriptures were circulated, for even the reading of the Bible, as well as the preaching of the Gospel, "is the power of God unto salvation unto every one that believeth."

(5) It is dutiful to preserve and promote a free and wholesome public opinion regarding Protestantism. It must be admitted that there has of late been indications of want of sympathy with the Protestant cause, both in Protestant pulpits and in the political Press. This is shown by the reluctance with which many Protestant ministers take anything to do with Protestant questions, and ignore the offices of those who give prominence to Protestant opinions. It is also shown by the way in which a portion of the Press, and chiefly the provincial Press, treat the subject when raised by public meeting or otherwise; for, instead of having a favourable word for the Protestant cause, the editors have rather some defence, or apology for Popery. Members of Parliament, too, could, ten or fifteen years ago, associate themselves with the Protestant cause much more so than now. And why should this be so? What change has occurred, either in Protestantism or Popery, to account for the altered attitude? No doubt the Popish wave of immigration, and the Popish vote, have had much to do with the change, especially in political circles.

But public opinion is, after all, the chief factor in human life. It is it which makes or unmakes parties, sects, and churches, and by it civil rulers are eventually governed, and the Press itself is modelled or modified. Were it not for Protestantism we should have little, if any, public spirit, which is forbidden by Popery. Popery is an autocracy. It aims at absolutism, and asserts supremacy. But, on the other hand, Protestantism cultivates and encourages the will, the feeling, the freedom, and the faith of the people.

(6) It is dutiful to aim at the conversion not only of Romanists, but of all men who are in error by prayer, preaching, and all truly Christian means. Force or persecution in religion is simply out of court. "Force is no remedy" in Christianity, whatever it may or may not be in politics; and while the argument of force cannot be applied, the force of argument may be tried. But mere opposition to Popery is not enough. We have Christ's command to "go and teach all nations—teaching them to observe all things whatsoever He has commanded." Popery itself seeks the conversion of the world, and it is a grand conception; but when it cannot make converts by fair means, it wants to "conquer, subdue, and subjugate" them by force. Protestantism aims, also, at the conversion of the world; but it does not wish to conquer it except by making it free in the faith of the Gospel. It does not want the ascendancy of fear, but of faith; not of dogma, but of truth; not of a Church, but the Church; and not of mortal, sinful, fallible man, but the everlasting sovereignty and supremacy of the Son of God, the Saviour of the world.

Now, to effect this glorious consummation, how wise, loving, spiritual, and prayerful should Christians be! How needful to purge themselves from all malice, hatred, and party spirit! We will require more amity, affection, faith, prayer, and unity of the Spirit than we have now in order to confront Popery and convert the world. We must remember the world is not to be saved by heroism, but by sacrifice; not by material power, but by prayer; not by the fear of arms, but by grace, and faith, and love. It is Christianity itself that is required to guide Protestantism and destroy Popery. All "isms" and systems must do homage to Gospel truth. It is the pure truth, the simple ritual, the free faith, the loving heart and hand which the world needs to help heal it.

In conclusion, it is dutiful in Protestants above all things to be in earnest and constant in their efforts in maintaining Reformation principles. Ease, levity, apathy are the vices of decay; but activity, gravity, and enthusiasm are the signs of prosperity and progress. Protestantism has doubtless been more materially prosperous than ever Popery has been, though Popery has generally had finer climates and richer soils. But Protestantism may, if not on its guard, suffer in spirituality from its very material success. As human nature is, perhaps, most virtuous and most healthy when reared in moderation than in luxury, so religion thrives best when it is exempt from the temptations of affluence. Abundance is apt to engender pride and power, and is prone to run itself into wickedness, unless governed by a wholesome fear of God and animated by a spiritual faith. Numbers, wealth, reputation are doubtless strong forces in their respective spheres, but they are inferior to purity, simplicity, and spirituality. "You Protestants are not earnest enough," said a Catholic, recently. The charge is only too true. We need more enthusiasm, more of the fervour of the martyrs, more of the spirit of the Apostles, more of the fire and fearlessness of the prophets, more, in fine, of the mind of Christ, who "hath set us an example that we should follow his steps."

Popery, Resuscitated Paganism.

By Rev. Dr. WYLIE, Edinburgh.

The plan which Satan has followed from the beginning in opposing God has been to substitute the counterfeit for the real. He does not forbid man to worship; he gains his end just as well by teaching him to worship in a wrong way. He does not boldly and directly affirm that there is no God, he employs his art and cunning in seducing man to worship a false God. Satan did not set up a system of atheism among the ancient nations; on the contrary, he taught them to be very religious. There was no end to their gods, temples, and rites. But all the while he hid from their knowledge the one true God, the Maker of the heavens and the earth. He pointed to the sun in the heavens, who year by year brings the world out of darkness and death, and by the power of his beams clothes it with the fertility, the growth and glory of summer. Then he said to men, There is your god; it is this divine and and glorious object to whom you are to pay your homage.

And coming yet a stage lower, Satan said to men, It is meet that you should have a representative on earth of this god in the sky: choose ye some renowned warrior, some mighty monarch whom you may appoint the vicegerent of the heavenly luminary; and through whom you may offer your worship to the Sun-God. Thus did Satan substitute the counterfeit for the real, and thus did he elaborate a system of worship for the early nations, which spread with their extension over the earth, and in due time became a world-wide idolatry. It travelled eastward into India and China: it journeyed westward into Egypt and Greece: it went on to Rome, and overspread Europe. In the course of its peregrinations it multiplied its gods and its rites; it diversified their names, and the form of the worship paid them; it was mystical in India, utterly gross in Egypt, redolent of beauty in Greece; at Rome it surrounded itself with a halo of battles and victories; but in all lands it was the same idolatry—it was a counterfeit god, and a counterfeit worship, cunningly put in the room of the true God; and the longer men continued to worship, the deeper they sank in ignorance, in sensuality, and vice.

When the Gospel came a new epoch opened on the world. It was now to be seen that as God had not yet developed his whole plan of grace, Satan had not yet produced his masterpiece of imposture. The deceiver at this crisis exhibited a craft and ingenuity which eclipsed by its success all his former efforts. On what plan did he work in rearing his new edifice? or rather, rebuilding the old, for it was a restoration, not a new building he set up, when he took the old stones of Paganism to reconstruct his new temple of Popery. His plan was the same he had pursued from the beginning. He once more palmed upon the world the counterfeit for the true. He now gave himself to the study of the Gospel; not that he might be a devout disciple or an able preacher, but that he might be a cunning perverter, and a clever imitator. He carefully marked the order and arrangement of the Gospel Church; he searched out the sources of the Gospel's power, and noted the ends the Gospel sought to attain, and went his way, and erected an ecclesiastical system as like the Gospel Church as it was possible to be: like it in appearance and form, but distinct and antagonistic in its essence, and in its ends. Even Satan had never succeeded so well before. The imitation was perfect. As in those days when God had his theocracy among the Jews, Satan had his theocracy among the Gentiles, so was it now: God had set up his Gospel Church in the world, and Satan set up his church also.

The counterfeit church of Satan lacks nothing in appearance which the Church of God possesses. Let us run our eye over it, and mark how exactly the form has been copied, while the spirit is utterly extinguished, and the end completely inverted. First of all, Satan's counterfeit church has its high priest, not to speak of its Pontiff, who, like the great Druid of our ancestors, and the Pontifex Maximus of the Romans, stands at the top of the system. There is a body of men in the Church of Rome who profess to offer for the sins of the living and the dead, and to mediate between God and men in virtue of their powers as a priesthood. Second, this Church has its great sacrifice—the the mass, to wit. The worshipper is bidden look, not to the Sacrifice on Calvary, but to the sacrifice on the altar, for the pardon of his sins, and the salvation of his soul. Third, this Church has its Bible—the traditions of the Fathers, together with the Canon Law: the Canons of the Council of Trent occupy the place in the Church of Rome which the Scriptures do in the Church of Christ. They are her rule of faith, and are held by her to be an infallible revelation of the will of God, and an infallible director of the conscience. Thus Christ as the One Priest, his death as the one all-sufficient sacrifice, and the Bible as the one infallible guide, Popery puts aside, and puts counterfeits in their room.

For an Apostolic succession which consists in the doctrine of the Apostles, it substitutes a succession of matter: a long succession of official men, who alone have the power of conveying grace; a chain which has not in it, from beginning to end, one broken link: while the fact is, if history is to be believed, that all the links are broken, and one whole link there is not in it all.

All the Persons in the Godhead Popery denies. It denies them after its usual manner of supplanting them, and adroitly substituting counterfeits for them. It denies God the Father by installing the Pope as the Divine Vicegerent of of the world and infallible ruler of the conscience. It presents him sitting aloft, above magistrates and kings, with power to annul their laws, cast them down from their thrones, plant or pluck up nations, and abrogate even the precepts of the moral law. Popery writes on the Papal chair, This is the seat of God, the throne of the infallible and holy one. He who sits here can pardon or retain men's sins; in other words, save or destroy their souls.

Popery denies God the Son. It robs Christ of his priestly office by assuming the power of offering efficaciously for the sins of men. It is the priest's sacrifice, not Christ's, that saves the sinner. Popery robs Christ of his prophetical office, by presenting itself as the infallible teacher of the will of God, and the only authorised expositor of the true sense of Scripture, without whose guidance we are sure to err in interpreting the Bible. It robs Christ of his office as the one Mediator and Intercessor, by making Mary and the saints intercessors with God for men. It robs Christ of his kingly office, by exalting the Pope to his royal seat as Head of the Church, and Head of the world for the Church. In his vesture and on his thigh the Pope has a name written, "King of Kings, and Lord of Lords."

Popery denies God the Spirit. For the Spirit it substitutes the Sacrament, by giving to the Sacrament the power, by its own inherent efficacy, to regenerate the soul, and to make men holy, and heirs of heaven. It robs the Spirit of his honour as the medium through which divine blessings are communicated to the soul, and by which at last it is made perfect in holiness, by making its Priesthood the only channel of communication betwixt God and men, without whose agency all grace and blessing are utterly beyond the reach of men. Here, then, is what professes to be a Church, a perfect and complete Church; and yet is an out-and-out counterfeit. Every element of strength, and every principle of evil that were found in the ancient idolatries lives over again in the Papacy. That same Paganism whose cradle was rocked in Chaldea, whose youth was passed amid the olive groves and matchless temples of Greece, and whose manhood was reached amid the martial sounds and iron organisation of Rome, has returned anew in the Papacy, bringing with it the old rites, the old festivals, the flowers, the incensings, the lustral water, the vestments, the very gods—but with new names; everything, in short. And were an old Pagan to rise from the dead, he would find himself amid his old environments, and, without a moment's doubt, would conclude that the ancient Jove was still reigning, and was being worshipped by the same rites that were practised in his honour two thousand years ago. To conclude, Popery is an effacement of the Christian Church; by the substitution of a Pantheon of idols, extinguishing the great lights of revelation, it rolls back the world, and places it once more amid the ideas, the deities, and the rites of early and idolatrous ages.

The Romanising Movement in the Church of England.

BY REV. CANON TAYLOR, LIVERPOOL.

THIS movement is by no means, as many imagine, a mere question of ceremonial, more or less, in the public worship of God; a little, more or less, of singing and ornamentation, pomp and pageantry in the ordinances of religion. If it were so, we might justly be expected to exercise forbearance, and be called upon to allow reasonable liberty in matters of mere taste and sentiment. Though even here a certain amount of caution is to be observed, for it is quite possible to have too much of ceremonial, even though there be no doctrinal signification involved.

This movement is not a question of mere ceremonial, but of doctrine. "Ritual," says the Directorium Anglicanum, "is the expression of dogma." This is so, and the dogmas so expressed are the distinctive doctrines of the Church of Rome. The movement itself began about fifty years ago, with the publication of the "Tracts for the Times," by Newman, Keble, Palmer, and R. H. Froude, immediately afterwards joined by Dr. Pusey and Isaac Williams. The first series appeared in 1833, and were moderate enough in their apparent design and scope, viz., to call attention to the primitive doctrine on Church Government, the Apostolic commission of the clergy, the value of ordinances, and the testimony of antiquity. But it soon developed, until it reached the famous Tract 90, by the now Cardinal Newman, who endeavoured to show that the Thirty-Nine Articles, though the offspring of an un-Catholic age, are, through God's providence, to say the least, not un-Catholic; and may be subscribed by those who aim at being Catholic in heart and doctrine. In a word, that the Protestant Articles of the Church of England might, by a process of Jesuitical casuistry and non-natural interpretation, be explained away and reconciled with the doctrines of the Romish Church. The tract was condemned by the Hebdomadal Board of the University as "evading, rather than explaining, the sense of the Thirty-Nine Articles, and reconciling subscription to them with the adoption of errors which they were designed to counteract."

The present Romanising movement, called Ritualism, is the logical outcome and lineal descendant, by unbroken derivation, of the earlier Tractarian movement. The following extract from Rev. W. J. E. Bennett, late vicar of Frome, will show what is the real nature of what is called Ritualism in the Church of England:—"It is not for a chasuble or a cope, lighted tapers or the smoke of incense, the mitre or the pastoral staff that we are contending; but, as all those who think deeply on either side of the question know full well, for the doctrines which lie hidden under them. No one of the commonest capacity would either undergo the trouble or encounter the expense which is unavoidably connected with the proper observance of religious ceremonies, if it were only for the external show which was to be gained by them. It would be impolitic, it would be childish, it would be sinful. Pictures, images, vestments, pastoral staves, mitres, flowers, crosses, processions, prostrations, altar coverings and the like, derive their value, not from the æsthetic beauty which may be in them, but from the fact of their being the means of conveying religious impressions, and guarding religious doctrines. Let us ascertain, then, what the doctrine is which is brought into question. It is threefold:—(1) The real objective Presence of our Blessed Lord; (2) The Sacrifice offered by the Priest, and (3) The adoration due to the Presence of our Blessed Lord in the Holy Eucharist."

Truly did Dr. Pusey say: "We set the bulbs, which were to bring forth the flowers." The bulbs were the doctrines; the flowers are candles, crosses, and vestments.

From the above we sufficiently learn what is the nature of the Romanising movement in the Church of England. It is the restoration of Romanism in England by means of the National Church, and the consequent overthrow of the Reformation.

II.—As to its extent. (1) In regard to the doctrines taught, it is not too much to say that the Romanisers teach substantially and in effect all the distinctive doctrines of the Roman Church, save two, viz., the immaculate conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary and the Infallibility of the Pope. As for all the others, those contained in the Creed of Pope Pius IV., set forth 1564, they hold and teach them all. Prayers for the dead; Invocation of angels; Confession and Absolution; Seven Sacraments; the Mass, the Real Presence, the Adoration of the Host or Wafer.

In regard to the ritual expression of these doctrines, we find it more or less pronounced in hundreds, if not thousands of churches, from St. Paul's Cathedral, London, down to the humblest village church in the land. Our Communion tables are turned into altars, whilst the cross, candles, and flowers thereon are everywhere seen. The internal arrangements and the public services of the Church are completely transformed into imitations of Rome, and the process is rapidly going on. Continually we read of contentions between the newly appointed Ritualistic vicar and the sturdy but ineffectual resistance of the Protestant parishioners. Before long, at this rate, an old-fashioned, simple, Protestant service will be the exception.

Nor is this all. The movement is aided by powerful organisations. "The English Church Union," "The Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament," "The Society of the Holy Cross," "The Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom"—chief among them stands the E.C.U. It is a thoroughly Romanising confederacy. It openly advocates the six points of the Ritualistic charter: altar lights, incense, wafers, vestments, eastward position, and mixed chalice. The President openly pleads for re-union with Rome. It numbers more than 2000 clergy and 18,000 laity; whilst its affiliated guilds and confraternities are swarming through the land. Their catechisms, manuals, and books of devotion are circulated in thousands. The Reformation is openly reviled, and the noble name of Protestantism rejected with scorn. All round the tide is rising higher and higher. Others can see blue sky ahead; I can see but little, or none, as regards the Church of England. Even our Nonconformist brethren seem bitten with the same rabies in their harvest decorations and elaborate musical services. The Church of England is racing after Rome, and some of our Dissenting friends seem unwilling to be left too far behind. Where is this to stop? What shall the end be?

III.—What efforts have been made to resist this evil? English Churchmen have not all stood idly by, whilst attempts are made to Romanise the Church of Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer. Far otherwise. Many noble champions have come forward to do battle for the cause of truth. The names of Dean McNeile, Hugh Stowell, Dean Close, Dr. Miller, Robert McGhee, and Canon Blakeney, will at once occur to the mind of those who have followed this struggle. Men as distinguished for their profound theological acquaintance with the real merits of the cause at issue as for their brilliant eloquence and logical acumen, and whose works remain still an imperishable memorial of their ability, and a refutation of the errors resisted.

But, not to speak of individual men, and to come to organisations, "The Church Association" has for twenty years carried on an untiring, and in one respect, successful contest. At the outset it was maintained by the Ritualists that the Law was on their side, and that the practices which they revived—altars, lights, incense, wafers, vestments, &c., processions, elevations, and genuflections—were in accordance with the rubrics of the Church. A guarantee fund was raised of £50,000, to enable the questions to be brought into Court. Test cases were selected, not with any unkind animus towards the individuals, nor from any idea of persecution, or interfering with lawful liberty, but from the necessity of the case. There was no other possible means by which the matters could be decided. The result has been that, with scarcely an exception, judgments have all been adverse to the Romanising party. So far there is clear gain, and the Church Association has earned the gratitude of every Protestant Churchman, and of the nation, for proving the Church of England to be free from all complicity with Romanism, i.e., as far as her authorised formularies and rubrics are concerned.

IV.—Notwithstanding the years of litigation, and enormous outlay of money, the evil goes on as bad as ever. These sixty judicial decisions of the highest courts of the realm are just so much waste paper, so many dead letters, and might as well never have been pronounced. In one or two individual cases the evil may have been suppressed, but over the broad face of the Church things are not only as bad, but in my deliberate judgment worse than ever. We inquire, How is all this to be accounted for? The answer is twofold:—

(1) This Romanising movement is congenial to the natural heart of man. It has been said that Romanism is the religion of human nature, and the late Archbishop Whately often dwelt, in his writings, on this aspect of the subject. He maintained that Romanism was just such a religion as corrupt human nature would be likely to produce for itself. Ritualism is the same. It satisfies by its ceremonial the religious instinct, whilst it leaves human nature as it finds it. For it is notorious that all this religious formalism is perfectly compatible with the most utter worldliness of spirit and conduct.

(2) The second reason is the fact that our rulers in the State have for a long time past appointed to high places in the Church men who, with few exceptions, either are themselves in sympathy with this Romanising movement, or at least will protect, if not promote its propagandists. Hence it comes to pass that, in defiance of law and judicial decision, and the Protestant sentiment of the nation, the evil spreads.

I conclude with a few warning words. It is, in my judgment, the bounden duty of the nation to demand, in tones which may not be disregarded, that the national Church be reduced to conformity and consistency with its recognised standards, and that it be in truth what it is in profession—the Protestant Reformed Religion established by law. The present condition is not only one of anarchy, necessarily involving strife and contention between the two parties in the Church—the Reformation and the Counter-Reformation parties, and thus causing perpetual irritation and friction; but it is little short of a public scandal that a great national institution should be so completely perverted from its original design and purpose. But it is more than a scandal: it is fast becoming a grave public danger. Many of the clergy of the Church of England are far more effective propagandists of Romanism than Roman Catholic priests could possibly be. Our young people will never, as a rule, be found going to Roman Catholic places of worship; but they will never hesitate to attend their parish church, and they are ready without suspicion to believe all they are taught from her pulpit, and conform to all the showy ceremonial of Ritualism, with its pomp and pageantry, so attractive to the young of both sexes.

We are more affected by what we see than by what we hear. Hence our reformers wisely swept away all the meretricious display and tawdry gewgaws of Mediævalism from the churches. But they are now being rapidly re-introduced, and our young people are learning Romanism from the clergy of a Protestant Church. It is a public danger, not only to the spiritual welfare, and, therefore, the highest interests of the nation, but to the social, moral, civil, and political well-being of the Empire. It is time to awake from our indifference ere it be too late. There is no time to be lost. Let us be faithful to our martyred forefathers, faithful to freedom. Let us "be of good courage; and let us play the men for our people, and for the cities of our God; and the Lord do that which seemeth Him good."

Papal Infallibility.

BY REV. DR. V. WHITE, SOUTH KENSINGTON.

THE Roman Apostasy predicted by Daniel, Paul, and John, which took its rise in the seventh century, and which calls itself "The Catholic Church," has always claimed infallibility, and so to be superior to all religious communities, though no one knew where this infallibility lay. It was to settle this long-disputed point that the Council of 1870 was held. It met at Rome in December, 1869, and adjourned in July, 1870. The largest number of bishops present in one congregation was 764, and the final vote was 533 for, and two against. The rest left Rome and abstained. The vote was taken in a terrific storm of thunder, lightning, and rain.

The decree consists of four chapters and a preamble, and presents four leading particulars. First, the supreme importance of the dogma; in it are found "the strength and solidity of the entire Church." Second, all who do not accept it are accursed. Third, its essence is the personal and "irreformable" infallibility of the Pope, in his official utterances, which are "not dependent upon the consent of the Church." Fourth, that these declarations are "in accordance with the ancient and constant faith of the universal Church."

Dr. White proceeded to consider the bearings of the dogma, as thus defined, in eight aspects: (1) As it illustrated the so-called "antiquity" and "apostolicity" of Romanism, this "article of faith," in which is found the strength and solidity of the entire Church, having been enacted only sixteen years ago. (2) As it bears upon the persecutions of Romanism in past ages, thus binding not upon individual despots, but upon the system itself, and, as a system, everything, however horrible, done with its sanction. (3) In the light of the personal infirmities of the Pope, if he should become insane! a lunatic thus, without any consent required from the Church, imposes, on the most vital questions on all mankind, his decisions as "irreformable," upon pain of everlasting perdition! (4) In view of its social results, the absolute and infallible government of the Roman Pontiff in Rome and elsewhere being a complete contrast to the prosperity and morality of Protestant countries. (5) According to the teaching of Scripture, Christ is repeatedly called the "Head of the Church." Peter is never once so called, and the facts of Scripture history are utterly subversive of his infallibility. Of all the Apostles, he was the most erring and most frequently rebuked. (6) It assumes the incommunicable perfections of Deity, and thus becomes blasphemy of the grossest kind. In 606 Rome made its bishop to be Pope; in 1870, it made that Pope to be God! (7) It completely extinguishes the rights and liberties of man. When God speaks man must be silent. If, therefore, the Pope be as God, with his infallibility, according to this dogma, human liberty exists no more.

In illustration of this, the speaker gave some startling extracts from Dr. Manning's sermons and writings, in the most open manner setting aside such a thing as religious toleration apart from the Church's teaching, and claiming the most implicit obedience in respect to the conscience, the intellect and the life, in all matters not only of faith, but of morals, to whatever the Church imposes as "a legislature, a tribunal and an executive independent of all human authority!"

Finally, Dr. White considered the dogma in its bearings upon the overthrow of the Papacy. It fills the cup of Rome's blasphemy, and thus the predicted end may speedily be looked for. There have been many instances of man assuming the perfections and place of God, and all preceded the destruction of the blasphemers — Satan, Adam, Nebuchadnezzar, Herod; and now the Pope. The blasphemy and the judgment follow each other in 2 Thess. ii, 4, 8. The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah did not speak more plainly of Christ than do the seventeenth and eighteenth chapters of Revelation of the seat, the character, the extent, and the overthrow of the Papacy. With confidence, therefore, he looked for the time, and that ere long, when this demi-pagan, anti-Christian, idolatrous apostasy, Daniel's "little horn," Paul's "man of sin," and John's faithless "woman," usurping the place of the Lamb's bride, "drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus," after centuries of cruel secular and ecclesiastical tyranny over the nations, in the height of her pride and pretensions, shall come to her end; when the mighty angel shall proclaim in the face of heaven and earth, "Babylon the great is fallen!" Even when "She saith in her heart, I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow, therefore her plagues come in one day, death and mourning and famine." And thus "with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down and be found no more at all." "Alleluia; for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!"

Mission Work Among Irish Roman Catholics.

BY REV. DR. HAMILTON MAGEE, DUBLIN.

I MAY be excused for saying that I have made this subject the main study of my ministerial life, since I began to preach the Gospel in the year 1848. Since that time I have been in the very heart of a Roman Catholic population, and my views have been formed in the field of actual experience. And it is but candid to say that, in the course of a prolonged and, I trust, honest effort to benefit my countrymen, those views have been not a little modified. I did not very well understand the subject when I began. Whatever difficulties encompass this question elsewhere are to be found in Ireland in an aggravated form. Ireland has, besides, special difficulties peculiar to herself. I, of course, eschew politics; but it is no politics to say that Irish Roman Catholics look with disfavour on Protestantism, not only because it is opposed to their Church, but, perhaps even more, because they regard it as the religion of England. With them Roman Catholicism is not only a religion; it is a patriotism.

Let us understand what I am asked to speak about: Mission work among Roman Catholics. How to deal with the subject of Romanism for the sake of Protestants whom you wish to guard against the teaching and claims of that system, is one thing; how to deal with Roman Catholics whom you wish to lead to a simple trust in the Saviour, is another and different thing altogether. My theme is the latter. In treating it I must throw myself on your kind indulgence. Many Roman Catholics seem to lie outside the sphere of any hopeful effort. They are stringently put on their guard against us. They regard our doctrines as damnable. Not unusually they wear some charm upon their persons with the view of warding off our approach, and there is no doubt that the wearing of such charms greatly strengthens their attitude of resistance. We can hardly hope to reach such people; but the Spirit of God can, as in the case of the Roman Catholic girl in the north of Ireland during the great revival of 1859, who prayed, "Blessed Jesus, who converted me in the chapel, come and save my dear brothers and sisters." Others are not so inaccessible, and, provided they are properly approached, the number is much larger than we are wont to suppose. In fact, the measure of access depends rather more upon ourselves than upon them. Our inaptitude is a greater obstacle than their hostility. I will give the substance of the hints I am accustomed to press upon our colporteurs in regard to their dealing with Roman Catholics.

(1) Believe in the possibility of their genuine conversion. I almost apologise for saying this. But there is great scepticism on the subject. Many excellent people allow themselves to cherish a kind of incredulity as to the beneficial results of this department of Christian work. There are not a few Protestants in Ireland, I am ashamed to say (I do not know how it is here), who regard the conversion of a Roman Catholic as a practical impossibility. I have met with some who even regard it a point of orthodoxy, that all these people of whom we speak are unchangeably given over to "a strong delusion, that they should believe a lie." Of such almost incredible bigotry is the Protestant mind capable. In vain we tell such people that the atonement of Christ is as available and as efficacious for Roman Catholics as it is for Protestants, and that the Gospel "whosoever" recognises no distinction in our favour. In vain we tell them that God has given us many real converts, who have been an honour to the Christian name. In vain we tell them that in limiting the operations of God's grace in the hearts of others, they raise the presumption that they are strangers to its saving power in their own hearts. I delight to say to such objectors (I admit there may be an element of mischief in it) that every drop of blood in their veins is "Papist" blood—as their ancestors, on both sides, for generations, were Roman Catholics, and, probably, fanatical Roman Catholics, too. We must approach these people inter-penetrated with the conviction that they are as welcome to the Saviour as we are.

(2) Set your heart on their personal salvation. I mean on this and on no lower object. Be sure that this and this alone is your controlling aim. Much work, evangelical and earnest enough, is in my judgment vitiated by the desire of making "converts," in the ecclesiastical sense of the word. This desire (in a very subordinate place, I do not condemn it) arises from various causes —a longing for visible success, or the desire to achieve a triumph over a corrupt and despotic system. But it arises largely, perhaps mainly, from the belief that nothing is done unless the objects of our solicitude "come out;" that, especially, no saving good can have been accomplished, so long as they remain in the Church of Rome. Now, I know I am on delicate ground, but you will, I am sure, allow me to express my judgment. I cannot accept this position. To name only a few points out of many: (a) The history of the Reformation disproves it. Many remained in the Roman Church, of whose personal Christianity there can be no doubt. (b) The biographies of godly men and women since—More, Fénélon, Guyon, Pascal, and many—yes, thank God! many—others disprove it. (c) The experience of many here disproves it. Few who have come much into personal contact with Roman Catholics will doubt that there are among them not a few who fear God, and are trusting with a simple faith on Christ. In any Church—or in no Church—"whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord, shall be saved." (d) The movement of the Church of England towards Rome, I think, disproves it. Among these misguided men, who can doubt that there have been many sincere Christians?

Do not be too solicitous about these people "coming out." Try lovingly to persuade them to lean their whole weight upon Christ. In the matter of their personal salvation that will suffice. Even such a strong Protestant as the late Dr. William Anderson, of this city, quotes with approbation the noble saying of Bishop Hall: "So, then, hold by Christ, though it should be as by a straw; when yet thou holdest on something else as by a cart rope, that straw will save thee." The Good Shepherd will look after his own. Let Him lead them "out" when it seems good unto Him. If they are his, He will care for them. None shall pluck them out of his hands, and He will raise them up at the last day. Even as a matter of policy this effort at proselytism is a mistake: (a) The consciousness of this lower aim will destroy the simplicity and persuasiveness of our testimony. (b) It will be instinctively detected by those we speak to. It will raise up barriers, which, in most cases, will be insuperable; but, I must say, they will be barriers of our own creating. I have been accustomed to say that this suspicion of proselytism on the part of Roman Catholics constitutes our great initial difficulty. Unless you can disarm them of this suspicion (and the best way to disarm them is to make it sure to yourself that there is no ground for their suspicion) you cannot hope to make any hopeful progress. If, on the other hand, they are certain that your only object is to get them to think more highly of Christ, their opposition will, in many cases, be conquered, and they may be won to the Saviour.

(3) Recognise the truth they hold. In the complex doctrinal system of the Church of Rome there are two distinct elements. They may be called the Catholic and the Roman, the Evangelical and the Papal, the Christian and the non-Christian, or even anti-Christian, elements. The Catholic or Evangelical element finds its expression in the Nicene Creed. The twelve articles of that creed, representing, as we believe, with some fidelity the original deposit of truth given to the Christian Church, form an essential part of the authoritative creed of the Church of Rome. The Roman Catholic creed does not consist of either of these elements to the exclusion of the other. It is partly a Christian creed and it is partly an anti-Christian one. The movement in the Church of England, for instance, to which I have referred, cannot be accounted for unless we bear this in mind. These "recruits," as they have been called, were, most of them, attracted to the Church of Rome, not by the Papal element, but in spite of it. They would never have been won without the evangelical element, which the Church of Rome knew so well, especially in connection with her fascinating idea of the Catholic Church, to surround with all the pomp and circumstance fitted to impress susceptible, cultured, and, in many instances, devout minds.

In countries where there is no strong Protestant sentiment, and especially where there is no vigorous Protestant press, the Roman Catholic people hear comparatively little of the evangelical element; but in Great Britain and throughout the length and breadth of Ireland, the doctrines, for example, of the Trinity, the Incarnation, the Atonement, the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ, and his coming again to judge the quick and the dead, find a place even in the popular catechisms. In the same catechisms appear alongside, of course, the peculiarly Roman doctrines, which it is needless here to specify. Romanism aims at binding together, by the subtle casuistry of the schools, these two really incompatible systems of doctrine. But, with all its casuistry, it cannot make them coalesce. In the inner life of every true Roman Catholic one or the other set of doctrines practically governs the religious experience. Through the natural affinity of the human heart for error, and especially for error that ministers to self-righteousness, the great majority cleave to the Roman, and practically reject the Catholic.

Of the danger of this distinctively Papal element I have as deep a sense as anyone here. It hides Christ from the view; and I am old-fashioned enough in my theology to believe that there is no Saviour but One, the Saviour whom God has sent, and that sinful men must trust Him exclusively. But in many an individual conscience, both among priests and laity, there may be going on, all unseen by any human eye, a life-and-death struggle—as in the great heart of Luther before his conversion—between these two constituent parts of an irreconcilable creed. The blessed Spirit can make a little truth go a great way; and it may be that even amid the dark and pestilent superstitions of Romanism, a greater number than we might deem probable accept, with a true though tremulous faith, the evangelical element, and with it the mighty and all-sufficient Saviour of whom it testifies. At any rate, I love to think that such is the case. We should approach such people with sympathy, with tenderness, with delicacy; and especially we should make use of the truth which they imperfectly hold to displace the error from which you would rescue them, and from which, it may be, they would themselves fain escape. This brings me to the next point.

(4) Avoid a controversial attitude and spirit. Proceed rather from the points of agreement than from the points of disagreement. We cannot, indeed, and we ought not, wholly avoid controversy, and there should be a far more faithful and systematic exhibition from the pulpits of the land than there is, of Protestant truth as opposed to Roman error. But in dealing with individual Romanists, as a rule, the less controversy the better. Seek to engage the conscience. Controversy, unless conducted with very exceptional judgment, skill, and religious earnestness, may not touch the conscience at all —possibly it may help even to sear it. We should always seek to start from a sense of sin. The paramount question is—it is a question for all, Protestants and Roman Catholics alike—"How am I to get rid of this burden of acknowledged guilt?" Roman Catholics, as a rule, are not averse to the consideration of this great personal inquiry. When God creates within them a true sense of sin, the simplest exhibition of the Gospel often comes to them with resistless and saving power.

Controversy is apt, and it is calculated, to confirm their impression that your aim is proselytism. This will block the way; your arguments may puzzle or perplex, but they will hold on to their Church all the same. Many of our own people are perplexed by very serious difficulties, which they cannot solve, but they adhere in the main to our teaching, and they do not think of breaking their connection with us. Romanists, baffled in argument, will not unnaturally say, "I cannot answer you; the priest can." You have gained nothing, even though you should silence them. But you have gained a great deal if you are the means of bringing them if it were only to touch the hem of Christ's garment.

(5) Do not hold them responsible for every error and abuse of their system. That system is a pitiless despotism. Look upon them and deal with them as its victims rather than as its abettors. Perhaps they feel the slavery more than you are aware of. Romanism, I say, is a relentless, priestly despotism, and that both on its doctrinal and ecclesiastical sides. Doctrinally it places the salvation of every man in the hands of the priest. The priest is in the place of God. The keys of the kingdom of heaven are in his hands. The Church of Rome, up to a certain point, agrees with us as to purchase of salvation by the atoning sacrifice of Christ. It is mainly as to the way in which that salvation is applied that we differ. Our position is that the sinner gets this salvation (a) from God, (b) freely, (c) through simple and exclusive trust in Jesus. The Church of Rome says it is to be had only through the priest, and within restriction practically on the terms he chooses to dictate. This of necessity places the necks of the people under the heel of a dreadful tyranny.

Ecclesiastically the Papacy is the most absolutely perfect despotism the world has ever seen. The very title, "Vicar of Christ," contains within itself an assertion of the extremest pretentions ever put forth by that system. The Pope wields in this world the delegated power of the ascended Saviour. This power is distributed, for administrative purposes, through the entire body of the Roman Catholic clergy. In a real sense, therefore, the priest is to each individual Romanist an embodiment of the authority and of the personal presence of Christ. Even if priests were all good men, and taught nothing but true Gospel doctrines, such a claim would be unendurable. As it is, it results in the most baleful tyranny which it is possible for man to exercise on his fellow.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE OF MRS. DORA BALDWIN, OF HULL.

This patient is a widow. her husband having been killed by the explosion on board the steamer "Empress," three years ago.

Her illness commenced from that time. Miscarriage, followed by spitting of blood, cough and expectoration, with much pain, "left lung then first affected."

The strength rapidly declined, the flesh fell very fast, night perspirations became profuse. Cod-liver Oil was ordered, but made her worse.

In a fortnight after commencing my treatment she writes: "The spitting of blood has decreased, I can take a little food now without sickness."

Correspondence continued through the autumn and winter, after which she got quite well. Writing me recently (Oct. 7) she says, "Your medicine is beyond all praise. It has been life to me: I am a living wonder. I owe it to you and to the mercy of my God.—D. Baldwin, 5, Higson's Court, Hull."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

Years.	Temperance Section.		General Section.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to GOODNESS and MERCY has been MY EXPERIENCE since I was led to this branch of CHRISTIAN WORK in 1851.

However, only to refer to the GENERAL WORK of 1886 :—

On the 1st of last January there were in the SIX HOMES and OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE about 180 INMATES.

Since that date 1330 applicants for admission and help have been brought or sent by WORKERS in connection with VARIOUS MISSIONS.

To the utmost capacity of the HOMES, every suitable case has been welcomed in the name of HIM who came to SEEK AND SAVE THE LOST.

During the year there have been MANY TOKENS of BLESSING on the ministry of the Word in the Homes.

With RESPECT to FUNDS, the LORD has very GRACIOUSLY DISPOSED the hearts of HIS SERVANTS to supply all needs, and now, on the 18th inst., only about £500 in donations is required to close the WORK OF 1886 FREE FROM THE BURDEN OF DEBT.

READER, KINDLY send A DONATION towards this amount to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, City.

Offices: 200, Euston-road, N.W. EDWARD W. THOMAS.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY

(Formerly of 85, Queen Street, Cheapside),

79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, E.C.

The cry of the weak and helpless is at all times distressing; but this is specially so when, in the absence of the needed PROMPT help, the fall is IRRETRIEVABLE and often ETERNAL.

OUR NEED IS GREAT AND PRESSING.

The winter is now upon us, when many who are out in the streets, COLD, SAD, SORROWFUL, DESPAIRING, yet sinning, will seek our aid—each one SOMEBODY'S CHILD—one of the lost whom the Saviour seeks.

508 young women and girls have this year been in our Homes for a few months' training, and have been lovingly and earnestly pointed to the Friend of Sinners, and a life of happiness and virtue; while several HUNDREDS of other applicants have been reluctantly REFUSED admission.

PRAY HELP US TO HELP THE WEAK.

Several HUNDREDS of POUNDS are needed to close the year free from debt.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott will kindly receive contributions as usual; or they will be gratefully acknowledged, the day of receipt, if sent to Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, 79, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

Forthcoming Meetings.

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

Cassell & Company's ANNOUNCEMENTS.

SECOND EDITION.
In 3 vols. Price 36s. The LIFE and WORK of

THE SEVENTH EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

By EDWIN HODDER.

"These volumes possess a special value, and they furnish a complete picture of their subject in his political, social, domestic, philanthropic, and religious relations. . . . It is impossible to rise from a study of the Earl's life and character without a feeling of pride that his efforts and affections were all enlisted on the side and in the service of the people; and it is equally impossible to believe in the decadence of England so long as she continues to produce men of this noble and unselfish type."—Morning Paper.

"We can honestly congratulate Mr. Hodder on his work. It is carefully, conscientiously, and thoroughly done, and, it must be added, with a rapidity which, considering the many-sideness of the career to be chronicled, is wonderful."—The Record.

HOME AND FATHERLAND.

THE NEW MAGAZINE for Children, "HOME and FATHERLAND," is intended to show to our boys and girls many varied and pleasant ways in which they can fulfil their mission; it is especially meant for those children who are interested in the great and noble work of the HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

They will learn, month by month, from its pages, what that Society is doing to supply the wants of the suffering; they will hear about the unhappy little children who need help from the happy ones; and they will be allowed themselves to speak.

The January Number contains:—

THE LITTLE PRINCESS OF TOWER HILL. A Serial Story by L. T. Meade, Author of "Scamp and I." This story will be illustrated by M. Ellen Edwards, and will run through the year.
HOW DICK CARRIED THE ROPE. A Thrilling Ballad about what a Brave Lad can do. By Geraldine Butt.
THE CHILDREN OF LONDON. The First of a Series of Papers about the Little Ones who suffer and endure in the Great City. These true stories will form an important feature of the Magazine.
MY PUSSY-CAT'S CALL ON THE QUEEN. An amusing Poem for Little Ones.
MY FRIEND'S STIFF SHOULDER. A Thrilling Account of a Tiger-fight.
OUR LITTLE ONES. Stories and Pictures for Baby Boys and Girls.
WHAT THE MISSION IS DOING. A Paper under this title will give an account each month of the Home Missionary Society's Work amongst the Children.
PRIZE DEPARTMENT. For particulars of this department, and the delightful Prizes which will be awarded, see the January Number.
WHAT THE CHILDREN THINK. A "Post-office" will be carried on under this title.

Many other subjects of interest and pleasure will be introduced from time to time.

"HOME and FATHERLAND" can be ordered through any Bookseller or Sunday-school Superintendent.

And shall we not sympathise, I ask, with the victims of so wicked a usurpation?

I must draw these imperfect remarks to the close. I have left out a number of points to which I should have liked to advert. I content myself in saying, in conclusion, that we should sympathise with the Roman Catholic people as against their Church. Dr. Carlile used to say that the great secret of missionary work in Ireland consisted in our getting between the people and the priests. This is not, I admit, a very easy process. But it is, alas! easy enough to speak of, and to, Irish Romanists in such a way as is eminently fitted to throw them back into the arms of the priests, as, after all, their natural allies and their most steadfast and trusty helpers. Protestantism, and Irish Protestanism in particular, has many a sin lying at its door; and this is certainly one of them—that it has often unwittingly helped, by its unsympathising and unloving demeanour towards Romanist, to rivet the chains of their voluntary subjection to an unpitying priestly depotism. It should be the accepted mission of the Christian Protestants of Britain to come to the rescue of their enslaved countrymen.

[The other papers and a report of the closing public meeting will be given in our next.]

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

Sir,—Kindly allow me to suggest as a practical outcome of the late Protestant Convention, that all who realise the importance of being alive to the danger of the Papacy, should place at this "gift season" in the hands of their children, literature bearing upon the undernoted historical periods.

(1) Books about the rise of the Christian Church; (2) About the Reformation; (3) About the Covenanters in our land.

Our hope is in the young. If they know not the history of the past they cannot oppose Romanism in their day.

The following, among other books, should be kept in mind:—

"The Eighteen Christian Centuries." By Rev. James White. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. A splendid book, invaluable for all.

"Romanism." By Rev. R. C. Jenkins, M.A. Religious Tract Society.

"The Days of Queen Mary." Religious Tract Society.

"The Reformation." By Professor Lindsay, D.D. Clark, Edinburgh.

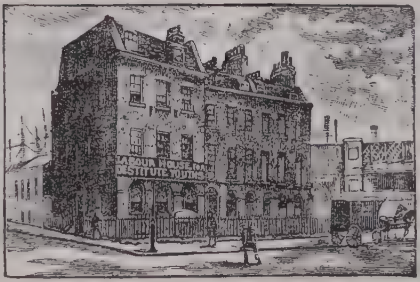
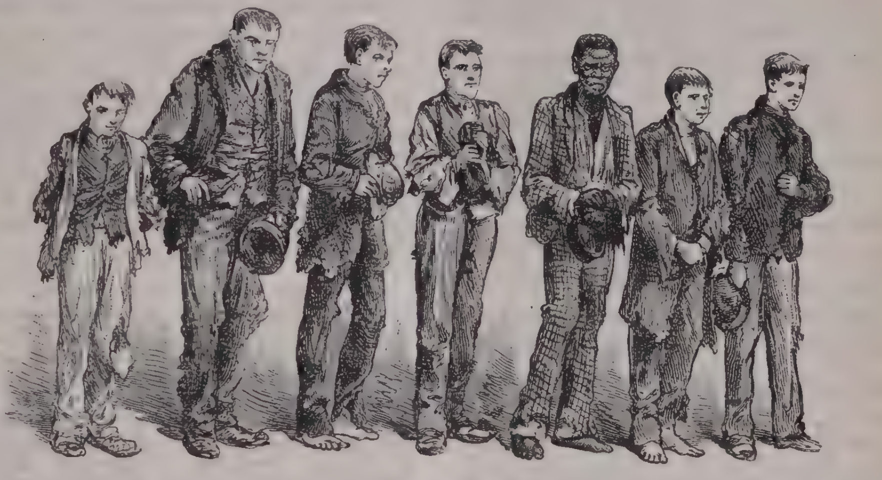
DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

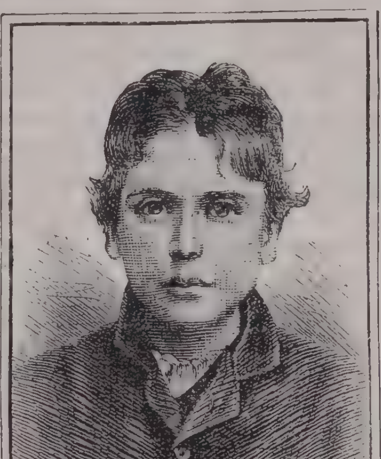


LABOUR HOUSE FOR DESTITUTE YOUTHS

The music of bells is in the air, and by some mysterious influence there is a quickening of the pulses of all hearts. The various members of families that belong to the great Christian branch of the human race are drawn towards each other as at no other time. At the Edinburgh Castle, on Christmas Day, there will be a remarkable gathering of all the boys from Dr. Barnardo's London Homes, and the girls from the Servants' Registry. Bright and happy as these now are, well fed and clothed and sheltered, their future prospects bright, once they were in the utmost need. But loving Christian hands reached down to them, and lifted them up out of their misery.

The second of the accompanying illustrations, drawn from life, gives a correct idea of what these happy lads and lasses once were. Dr. Barnardo tells us, in the January number of Night and Day, the history of some of these. Our young coloured brother hails from Philadelphia. He came over as an assistant cook on board a steamer, was paid off in London, found his way first to a Sailors' Home, then, when his money failed, to a lodging-house, where clothes, money, all soon disappeared. There seemed nothing for him but the streets; in rags and wretchedness, he sought the help that is always freely given at Dr. Barnardo's Home, even to great hulking fellows such as he. Quite unnecessary is it again to describe the road by which hundreds of good lads reach the state of destitution, represented by the other six, when, if some kind hand were not stretched out to them, it would almost seem that they must perish.





It is interesting to know how such fellows are dealt with. On acceptance they are drafted off to the Labour House (see illustration No. 1), 626, Commercial-road, where from ninety to one hundred of them can always be seen at work, hauling timber, stacking it, sawing it up into short logs, working the steam saw, cutting out planks, chopping wood into fire-wood bundles for sale at the shops, making rough packing-cases, and other kinds of boxes. In various other ways they are trained for a life of future usefulness, either in this land or the colonies—a life in which everything will depend upon their own personal efforts; and it is gratifying to know that in the great majority of cases the result proves that in the sore, poor, unlikely-looking outcasts, there were the makings of good men; that all they needed when at their very worst was a helping hand. Illustration No. 3 represents one who had fallen into such dire destitution that he had made up his mind to lie down and die; but keep honest he would. After some months in the Labour Home, he was sent to Canada, and the farmer who engaged him recently said to him, "Harry is worth his weight in gold. He is the best lad I ever engaged all the years I have been in these parts." Is it not a Christian-like thing to do such work, and to help such work?

Of the spiritual work, Dr. Barnardo says, "Never before have so many cases of right-out conversion to God occurred in the same length of time among my dear young people as during the past twelve months. Never have I had from young men and women, who have gone out into the world from our Homes, so many letters telling of hearts broken under a sense of sin, or of the healing operations of the grace that bringeth salvation to the trustful soul."

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—With reference to the letter which appeared in The Christian of December 9, on the above subject, I beg to say that a "Ladies' Church Missionary Union" for London and the neighbourhood is already in existence. There are branches in several of the large London districts, and in some of these monthly drawing-room prayer-meetings are held. Ladies wishing for further information are requested to communicate with me.

TO INTENDING MISSIONARIES.—Mr. W. T. Float, secretary of the Missionary Intelligence and Registration Office, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., writes:—We shall be glad to hear from any who are seriously thinking of offering themselves for the Lord's work abroad, as we have openings for both male and female workers, self-supporting and otherwise; also from a devoted duly qualified medical man, with some capital, married, or about to be.

Rev. H. P. HUGHES IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR EDINBURGH CORRESPONDENT.)

At the end of last week's report of Mr. Hughes' meetings, I ventured to express the belief that the closing days would be the best of the mission. That belief has been realised. The interest deepened, and the blessing increased daily. On Saturday morning a special address was delivered to the students of the various theological colleges in the city. The attendance was large, and the enthusiasm more manifest than at any similar gathering I remember of. Mr. Hughes spoke of preaching—what it is, and how it may be made effectual. He emphasised witness-bearing; let each man tell what he has personally experienced of the grace of God. On the evening of the same day Mr. Hughes met the medical students, who have received much blessing from the meetings begun by Professor Drummond two years ago. The Christians among them are very decided, and give a fine moral tone to the University. Their work in the wards, comforting the sad, and pointing the weary to Christ, is highly appreciated. Mr. Hughes' words to them were calculated to inspire them with fresh zeal and consecration.

The indefatigable missioner had by this time done a good day's work, but that did not hinder him from going to Carubber's Close Mission-hall. This hall is situated in the Canongate, a part of the town which is densely populated by the poorest of the working-classes, and crowds of the lapsed masses. The building is a substantial memorial of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours in the Scotch metropolis, but the Mission has been going on for years, and is a river of life in this region of moral and spiritual death. The meeting Mr. Hughes came to was a Gospel Temperance one, and was attended by 1,500 men and women. He was warmly welcomed, to begin with, and the points of his eloquent speech were quickly caught, and cheered to the echo. He lamented one feature in his mission, and that was the "distressingly respectable" nature of the audiences he had to address in the Assembly Hall. He appealed to working men and the poorest of the poor to come to his meetings. The services of the morrow showed that he was taken at his word.

Sabbath's duties began with a sermon in Newington Established Church, where every inch of space was occupied by eager listeners. The Spirit of God was manifestly at work, and numerous decisions for Christ were made. At five o'clock there was a service for women only in the Assembly Hall. It was crowded, and many stood up to signify their acceptance of savation. At half-past six an immense gathering of men was addressed in the Synod Hall. The subject was "The Love of God." It was presented with such power that stubborn wills were bowed, and the doors of hearts were opened to the knocking Saviour. A memorable day was closed with a meeting for the Undergraduates of the University. It was reckoned that 900 of them were in attendance. Many ministers and leading laymen were on the platform. Mr. Hughes showed his wonderful ability to adapt himself to his audience by discussing in a forcible and interesting manner the intellectual difficulties of our time. He boldly and logically demonstrated that Christ is the greatest and wisest of all teachers. His words, and his only, are words of eternal life. The whole service led up to an appeal of remarkable directness, which met with an immediate response from scores of students, who testified then and there their decision to become disciples of Christ. All the Christians were asked to stand up and sing the Doxology. The hearty praise which followed, and the happy, intelligent faces of the singers, united in forming a scene which few who saw it can forget.

The week-day meetings were larger than those of the preceding week. In the evening the Assembly Hall, which holds nearly 2000, was comfortably filled. Conversions were, we believe, numerous, and the manly expositions of truth went home with power.

But the most striking feature of the mission was the afternoon Bible-readings. In them the presence and power of God were felt in a special degree. The prominence given in them to the person and work of the Holy Ghost made them peculiarly acceptable to many Christians, who lament the secondary place these have in much of the pulpit teaching of our day. Mr. Hughes believes in the Holy Ghost. People talk, he said on one occasion, of getting a blessing; what we need is not so much the blessing as the Blesser. It is time that we were done with things and dealt with persons. We are commanded to be filled with the Spirit. God never mocks us by ordering us to do what is impossible. If we obey, we shall be filled. We should put ourselves wholly in God's hands to be used as He pleases. A pen may be beautiful to the eye and finely finished, but, if it splutters and is not pliable, the writer casts it aside, and takes up another. So God will use the most pliable instruments—pliable in the best sense of that term—to accomplish his purposes. If men of great intellect will not do his work in his way, He will employ those who have little intellect. If preachers of brilliant attainments and ready speech persist in serving themselves and Mammon, God can give power to stammering lips.

Mr. Hughes concluded his mission on Thursday. It is too soon to speak of the full results of his labours, but that they have been attended by much blessing is beyond doubt. That was made manifest by the thanksgivings handed in. The methods of the preacher have been subjected to much pitiless and prejudiced criticism, but they have vindicated themselves. They have been owned of God to the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints. In the presence of this fact the voices of fault-finders must be silent.

"A Medical Student" also writes:—The second Sunday's meeting was one of the most remarkable that we have had. It was the second appearance of Mr. Hugh Price Hughes among us, if we except the social meeting of the Medical Students' Christian Association of the previous evening, at which he was present and spoke. The Oddfellows'-hall was packed. After the preliminary devotional exercises, Mr. Hughes took charge of the meeting, and began by giving out as his text the words, "Lord, to whom shall go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." He showed that we must all go to someone; that none of us is satisfied without some teacher. So the question arose, Who should be our teacher? Some say, "We will sit at the feet of pure Reason, we will have nothing but what she teaches, we will accept nothing on authority." Mr. Hughes pointed out that those who take up this position have set themselves an impossible task—that they are forced to take a great deal on authority. They are unable, he said, to free themselves from the influence of their mother and their nurse; and, if they could do that, there remains the still more impossible task of ridding themselves of the influence of the age in which they live. If they doubt this, let them suppose themselves to have lived five hundred years ago, and think what their opinions would have been then, compared with what they are now. And further, did they think that they could make original investigations into every branch of knowledge, and thereby settle every difficulty? Mr. Hughes then went on to show that as this was quite impossible, such would-be followers of Reason are soon found to pin their faith to some individual, on whose researches they rely. They do not, therefore, worship Reason in the abstract, but accept things just as much on authority as we do.

A few years ago John Stuart Mill was in the ascendancy at Oxford. It was his authority that they accepted. He was the dagon that the students worshipped. But now he has given place to Herbert Spencer, and even his teaching has not the place it once held. "I don't know," said Mr. Hughes, "how often you change your philosophical gods in Edinburgh, but we do it at Oxford about every ten years!"

Seeing it is a question of authority, then, we naturally ask next, "Whose authority shall we choose?" For this is what it comes to, if pushed far enough. Peter did not say "to what shall we go," but "to whom." The remainder of Mr. Hughes address was taken up with the answering of this question. The whole line of argument was one specially needed at the present time, and, as I have since heard, was helpful to others besides myself.

At the close of this address, when all were bowed in silent prayer. Mr. Hughes asked those to rise who were willing to become Christ's. Without a moment's pause men seemed almost to rush to their feet from all parts of the hall. Mr. Hughes was much affected. After prayer and the singing of a hymn, during which those who had to go left the hall (and these were very few indeed), Mr. Hughes put the Gospel in as simple a way as possible. Only two things are essential, he said, to evangelical salvation: repentance and faith.

He dwelt especially on the true meaning of the former. It meant a turning round. Some had the feeling of their sinfulness more acutely than others. It was after we come to Christ that our sin comes most home to us. Atonement was needed, but it was not necessary that we should wait to know why before coming to Christ. Sufficient that we accepted the fact that it was needed, and that it had been fully made. We had as much right as Paul to say: "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." Those who were prepared to trust Christ then for the first time, or who had done so previously, were then called upon to rise.

It was a critical moment for any who were still undecided, as everyone could now see what his neighbour did. The great body of students rose en masse, and sang together—and Mr. Hughes led in prayer for the "brave fellows" who had remained seated, and then the meeting broke up. One of those who kept their seats was sitting on my left. Finding that he preferred it, we left the hall together. After a very little talk it was soon evident that it was by especial providence that we had been brought together, for our experiences were similar, almost identical. God's Spirit had led us to sit next to each other, and He, as He always does, "completed the work He had begun."

Praise God from whom all blessings flow,

So ended a red-letter day for many of us.

STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

For more than a hundred years the Strangers' Friend Society has been going in and out amongst the poor, visiting them in the cellars and garrets, in which so many once lived. In that time about five hundred thousand cases have been relieved, comprising more than two millions of individuals, while small sums given weekly for a month or two have restored thousands of families to comfort and competence.

At the annual meeting in the Mansion House last week, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, Sir Charles Warren remarked upon the happy combination of the words Strangers and Friend in the title of the Society. The human heart yearned for friendship. How great was the longing for sympathy in time of sickness. The Society was based on the truest principles. This thought was expanded by Rev. J. D. Clapham, who said the Society deserved the confidence of the Christian public, because, while unsectarian it was intensely Christian. The great mass of the poor and miserable, even now, are left too much to themselves to struggle alone. Enough is not made of the humanitarian teaching and compassion of the Saviour. Christian men and women need to see that it is not enough to live in a high state of grace, as they call it, and should regard it as their first duty to be out and about doing good amongst the people, as their Master did.

Mr. Wilson Noble, M.P., in speaking of the value of true kindness, especially to the suffering, left it as a question for consideration whether is greater, the gift, or the charity which prompts the gift? During the past year the Society has relieved 3814 cases. The office is at 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

ASHBOURNE, DERBYSHIRE.

A very successful mission has just been conducted in Sion Chapel, Ashbourne, by Mr. Henry Murch, of the Evangelisation Society. The Mission extended over a fortnight; large numbers have been attracted to the services, and much spiritual blessing have been experienced.

CHESHAM, BUCKS.

Mr. Thomas Eyres has recently held a series of Gospel services for children in the Friends' Meeting-house, at Chesham, which, after being disused for twenty years, has recently been re-opened as a Mission-room. The meetings were well attended, and the interest sustained throughout the meetings. There is evidence of blessing having followed Mr. Eyre's labours.

F. B.

TUNBRIDGE.

The special services conducted in this town during the past month by Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, have been very successful. The hall has been well filled on week-nights and crowded to excess on Sundays. Many who have long been prayed for are now rejoicing in the Saviour's love; backsliders have been restored, and believers greatly refreshed and blessed. Rev. Noel Storrs, M.A., his two curates, and a large band of earnest workers, have joined most heartily in the work, with the most cheering results.

KINGSWOOD.

The revival services carried on in this circuit of Primitive Methodists, by Mr. John Wooldridge, evangelist, have been attended with great power and unction; the Churches have been spiritually quickened and edified, and many souls have been brought into the blessed liberty and freedom of converting grace. The services in connection with Bourne Chapel, on Sunday, December 5, will never be forgotten by those present; especially was this the case in the afternoon, when Mr. Wooldridge conducted a service in connection with the Sabbath-school.

BILSTON.

A fortnight's special services have been held by Mrs. Brryman Ridges, of Wolverhampton. The attendance at the week-evening meetings was very encouraging, and a considerable number of men and women who attend no place of worship were induced to come again and again. A number of enquirers came forward into the vestry during the services, many of whom went away deeply impressed, but without being brought to a definite decision. The meetings have also been very helpful to many of the Church workers, fifty of whom formed a band for the visitation of the town prior to the services. A new stimulus has been given to every department of Christian service, and much encouragement to labour on with more earnestness and patience in the future has been received.

BURY, LANCASHIRE.

Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. in this town, a Gospel mission has been conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne. Owing to the hearty co-operation of a representative committee and the warm, interest manifested by the pastors of several of the churches, considerable attention was drawn to the movement. The attendance at most of the meetings was materially affected by the inclement weather which prevailed through the entire period of the mission, but the results were full of the highest encouragement. God honoured the word so faithfully spoken, and many, at the close of each service, passed into the enquiry-room, as anxious seekers after salvation; leaving it, in many instances, having found that blessing.

The Mission was closed on Monday evening, 13th inst., by a praise meeting, at which many thankful testimonies were given to blessings received in connection with it. This brief notice would be incomplete were mention not made of the help rendered by Miss Greenwood in the visitation of many of the mills and workshops, with the view of interesting the workpeople in the services and giving them personal invitations.

BIRKENHEAD.

Captain Warner Dennis has just concluded a most successful mission at the Wesley chapel. The services were largely attended, and the work has been crowned with the Divine blessing. The Bible-readings were seasons of quiet power.

PORTSMOUTH.

A very successful nine days' mission, in connection with Miss Robinson's work at Portsmouth, has just come to a close. The power of God has been wonderfully manifested in saving men, women, and children; backsliders have been restored, and Christians led to a full surrender of themselves to Christ. The visit of Mr. Hogben (the missioner) will long be remembered with thanksgivings by many.

CHURCH ARMY.

The Vicar of Northampton has services every night for the people, conducted by evangelists from the Church Army, assisted by members of his corps, some of whom once bore the worst characters in the town. Major Liebenrood, a retired officer, has been taking an active part in the proceedings. Several of the working-men evangelists of the Army have offered to go out to India or China, to live as natives of the lowest caste.

BRISTOL.

Mr. George Clarke has recently concluded a fruitful sixteen days' mission at Bristol, both in Colston and Y.M.C.A. Halls. Four Bible readings were also given, which were helpful and much valued. The work grew in interest day by day, and on the last Sabbath evening nearly two hundred persons rose to signify their desire to accept Christ as their Saviour. There is abundant evidence of large blessings attending the mission.

BIBLE CARRIAGE WORK.

The colporteur who works with the Bible-carriage of the Evangelistic Mission, has just returned from a tour, extending over the past five months. He first went to the Wimbledon Rifle Meeting, and thence proceeded to Uckfield, Aylsham, and Eastbourne. At these places, as at Hastings, next visited, good work was done, though opposition was met with in the latter town in connection with the by-laws. At Ashford, Kent, where 1,500 men are employed on the railway works, with little or no effort for their spiritual welfare, there was much blessing. Other towns and villages were visited en route.

Space does not allow details of the many interesting incidents that occurred, but a few may be mentioned. In one town a gentleman's gardener had long been under such deep conviction of sin that he meditated suicide, but was arrested by the text, "God is love," on the carriage. The ensuing conversation with the colporteur led to his happy experience of peace with God, which was also shared in by his wife, through the same testimony. Backsliding Christians were met with, having all earthly good that heart can crave, but in a miserable state of soul, from which they were delivered by the entrance of God's Word, in connection with this work. Mere professors have been awakened and converted by the same means.

Over 500 Bibles have been sold at various prices, also close upon 3000 Testaments, in addition to many good books in general literature. Thousands of Gospel books have been given away. The colporteur says that in the midst of superstition and spiritual darkness he has never before witnessed more readiness to receive the truth or more thorough appreciation of the Gospel. Surely this brief sketch must stir many to increasingly support this one of the many departments of Christ's work carried on by the Evangelistic Missions, wherein opportunities abound for spiritual influence upon individuals as well as upon crowds.

"STILL HUNGRY AND COLD"

Thus runs the title of one of the many appeals for Christmas help which reach us day by day. We can but lay these before our readers in the hope that they will respond "as the Lord hath prospered" them. Subjoined are a few of such agencies, briefly stating their work and need.

Mr. John Stabb (6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington, N.)—for poor at Stratford.

Mr. Stuart Thorpe, of the Rescue Society, 79, Finsbury-pavement—for £1400, to close the year free from debt.

Mr. A. J. Vieweg (82, Wood-street, Cheapside, E.C.), of Gee-street Mission—for carrying on the work amongst the poor.

Mr. Wm. Chorley (2, Marquess-grove. Canonbury, N.) is feeding hungry men at Millwall, as long as he can provide the means.

Miss Habershon seeks aid for the annual New Year breakfast for "casuals" at Gray's-yard. The Treasurer is Mr. Geo. Hanbury, 21, Portman-square, W.

Rev. R. W. Loveridge (St. Philip's, Bethnal-green) pleads for help to give a good Christmas treat to 1500 school children and to 500 aged and suffering poor.

Mrs. Wm. Noble (Hoxton Hall, 134, Hoxton-street, N.)—for Christmas treat to the children of the Sunday-school and Band of Hope, and the poor women attending the hall.

Rev. Cæsar Caine (38, Grove-road, Bow, E.), of the Lycett Memorial Wesleyan Chapel, Mile-end—for Christmas dinner and an evening's enjoyment for about 200 of the poorest residents.

Mr. R. Dimberline (Bryant Hall, Roman-road, Bow, E.) asks funds towards some good cheer for two hundred children, and for the general alleviation of distress among the poor in his neighbourhood.

Major A. V. Fordyce (3, Newhall-street, Birmingham), on behalf of the Birmingham Boys' Home and Girls' Night Refuge, where any poor homeless boy or girl may obtain instant admission by day or night.

Mr. John T. Dunn (65, Boyson-road, Camberwell, S.E.), of Richmond-street, Walworth, Mission and Schools—for help in providing good Christmas dinners for the poor at their own homes "for whom nothing is prepared."

Mr. Geo. Gillett (2, Birchin-lane, E.C.)—on behalf of the Juvenile Christian Mission Free Breakfasts given every Sunday morning to from one hundred and fifty to two hundred of the poorest children in Clerkenwell, at the Board Schools, St. John's-lane.

Mr. W. J. Orsman (Milton House, Shacklewell-green, Hackney) asks for help to provide Christmas gifts and food to 150 poor Christian families, besides 1000 children. 350 of the poorest waifs and strays will dine at Costers' Hall, Hoxton, on Christmas Day.

Mrs. Meredith (143, Clapham-road, S.W.) asks help for the poor women rescued by the Prison Mission, to cheer them in their tremendous struggle. Also for her Medical Mission to Women and Children, and for the little ones in her village homes, whose wants are many at this season.

[These are not half the applications, but our space fails. Any sums entrusted to us will be divided as we have been accustomed to do.]

"BE STRONG."—Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson preached his monthly sermon to young men on the 12th inst., taking for his text, 2 Tim. ii. 1, "Thou, therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." Asserting that the religion of Jesus Christ develops the strength of true manliness, he pointed to Christ as the perfect example. "But after Christ there is no higher pattern than St. Paul. In him, next to his Lord, we see the highest type of manhood. As missionary, statesman, thinker, philosopher, he is without a parallel—a great, sublime, inexhaustible man." Referring also to Kingsley, Chalmers, and Thomas Hughes, he showed how great is the strength gained by living in the faith and fear of God, and how also, as in Jesus Christ, true manliness is always united with gentleness.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These brethren concluded a brief mission in Gloucester on Wednesday, the 15th inst., and passed on to Ross and Hereford for a flying visit to each place. Four years previously they held services here for three weeks, and many rallied round them now who took part in the work then. From the beginning of the services to the close of them the Lord's presence was manifested, and a goodly number believed and turned unto the Lord.

There were some interesting cases of conversion. One night, a sea captain, a stranger in the city, passing the chapel at the hour of service, went in, and to him was the word of God's salvation sent; he went away rejoicing in God, determined to "tell" and "show" what great things God had done in him.

There was a very blessed work among young men. One teacher of a Bible-class rejoiced to find that six of his scholars had been converted. The Gospel never was preached with more earnestness and simplicity, and the song service by Mr. Smith could not but touch the hardest heart. May God abundantly bless these brethren in their work for Him.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Dec. 26, 2 Tim. i. 1—18; Dec. 27, 2 Tim. ii. 1—13; Dec. 28, 2 Tim. ii. 14—26; Dec. 29, 2 Tim. iii. 1—17; Dec. 30, 2 Tim. iv. 1—8; Dec. 31, 2. Tim. iv. 9—22; Jan. 1, Psalm cxix. 1—16.

THE ILLNESS OF MR. SPURGEON.—On Sunday last a communication from Mentone, dated Thursday, regarding the health of Mr. Spurgeon, was read at the morning service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The news, though encouraging, was not all that could be desired. The rev. gentleman continued to improve a little daily, although the weather was somewhat stormy. He was still, however, very weak, one foot being much swollen, but he appeared to have got over the worst of his trying attack, and was able to be out of doors daily. Rev. Jackson Wray was the preacher in the morning, and Rev. Charles Spurgeon occupied the pulpit in the evening.

MRS. ORMISTON CHANT AT BRIDPORT.—Mrs. Chant recently held in this town, in connection with the B.W.T.A., an afternoon meeting for ladies, a general evening meeting, and an evening meeting for women only. Several signed the pledge, and it is hoped that a branch of the Young Abstainers' Union, as suggested by Mrs. Chant, will be one result of her visit. The women's meeting was devoted chiefly to social purity, and a resolution condemning the publication of lengthened reports of trials relating to vice in high life was unanimously passed. The addresses throughout were characterised by deep fervour, winning sweetness, and sound common sense.

CAMPBELL STREET MISSION, BELFAST.—The workers here have faithfully set before them the Saviour's injunction to his servants to "go into the highways and hedges and compel the people to come in." Some go every night into the lanes and slums and lovingly invite to the hall corner-boys as well as degraded men and women. There is a flourishing Sunday-school for children whose garments unfit them for congregational schools, and evangelistic services and Bible-classes are conducted every Sunday by earnest Christians of various denominations. Already there has been much encouragement and blessing, and precious souls have been won for the Master. Communications may be sent to Mr. Black, Y.M.C.A., 14, Wellington-place, Belfast.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—On Thursday evening this Society's chapel was crowded with seamen who had come together simply to listen to a Gospel address and sacred songs by Mr. Joseph Benson and his choir, from Belle Isle Mission Chapel. The speaker's earnest words went home to the hearts of the sailors, many of them leaned forward as if eager to hear every word, whilst not a few were moved to tears. At the close of the service several seamen signed the pledge. One openly professed to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, and it is believed that many will look back to that night as the time when they first began in earnest to seek the Lord. In connection with the work at this institution considerable relief is given during the winter months to distressed seamen and others.

A MEMORABLE SERVICE.

Such was the one we had the privilege of enjoying in St. Barnabas Church, Holloway, last Sunday.

A united Communion Service of the Young Men's Bible-class Union for North London, which has for its centre of union the Finsbury Park Branch of the Y.M.C.A. It consists of all denominations of evangelical Christians. The united Bible-classes meet once a quarter for a special service. This year they have met at New Court (Congregational); Finsbury Park (Wesleyan); Finsbury Park Hall (Y.M.C.A.): and last Sunday united in a common Communion Service, at the invitation of Rev. F. C. A. Lillingston, Vicar of St. Barnabas, Holloway. Nearly 300 young men came to hear the address of the Vicar.

He took for the foundation of his heart-stirring address Acts ii. 42: "And they continued stedfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers." He said that the extraordinary sight witnessed in his Church that afternoon ought to be a full and sufficient answer to all the sceptics and infidels in the neighbourhood that though there might be minor differences in forms of worship amongst real Christians, yet there did exist a vital union which enabled them to meet around the table of their common Lord.

He showed that union rested on the Word of God, as it revealed the foundation of our faith in the common salvation and finished work of Christ, and, further, that our union depended, not on our love to God, but upon the love of God in Christ to us. He invited the young men to come to the Lord's table with that one thought filling their hearts, "the love of God to us."

About 170 young men of all denominations then partook of the Lord's Supper. It was a blessed time, and the Lord's presence was very manifest. The closing hymn was—

Stand up, stand up for Jesus.

It went with a triumphant, exultant swing, which rolled through the fine church with thrilling yet solemn effect, as it rose from the hearts and voices of those assembled. All who were present will not soon or easily forget this memorable service.

H. H.

PARIS.—It is stated that the old Yarbœuf English Church, which is now being rebuilt in Paris, Sir Richard Wallace recently having given £10,000 towards the cost, will have, adjoining the chancel, a room "where the sick and sorrowing can hear and join in the service without being seen." A similar arrangement has been followed, it is said, in the new English Church, the cost of which has been defrayed by an American lady, Mrs. Niven.

EAST LONDON TRACT SOCIETY.—Great efforts are being made by this Society to relieve the terrible distress of which, by visiting in the district of Poplar, its workers are aware. Already 760 meals have been given to starving ones this season, and it is hoped to do much more, not only in this way, but by means of fuel and left-off clothing. The Help-Myself and other agencies, temperance meetings, &c., are being carried on with much energy, and receiving much encouragement. Such work is of infinite service amongst the poorer classes generally, but for those who are ill and out of work it is an absolute necessity, and many such cases are mentioned in the report. The address of the superintendent, Mr. George Fuller, is 1, Follett-street, Poplar, E.

A PASTOR IN THE DROME, exceedingly tried and anxious at seeing the youths and maidens of the country obliged by failure of crops and other means of existence to emigrate to Lyons, Paris, and other centres of population, turned his attention to the mineral riches of the country around. A banker lent him funds, and after months of labour, the pickaxe discovered splendid mines of calamine; the company of Asturias has reimbursed the banker, and works are commenced which are expected to employ two or three thousand workmen in a short time. M. Marzials has thus become the benefactor of his parish and neighbourhood, and doubtless it will be a spur to the evangelisation in which his wife and various friends are vigorous helpmates.—Evangelical Christendom.

SCHOOLBOYS AT PRAYER.

A little band of schoolboys, brought to the Lord at the children's services held at the Mildmay Conference Hall, September, 1885, by Rev. E. Payson Hammond, were advised by Mr. Spiers to help each other in their Christian life by meeting together at each other's houses. This advice was acted upon, and resulted in much blessing to themselves and the conversion of some of their schoolfellows. The numbers so increased as to make it necessary to hire a room for their meetings, which are now held at the Mildmay Park Wesleyan Chapel, where, on Friday evenings at seven o'clock, the members of this "Young Christian Union" assemble, the boys conducting the meeting in turn. On the last Friday in each month the services of our adult friends are secured for an address, after which the young converts unite in prayer, praise, and testimony.

The first annual report is now issued, written by one of the boys, and we trust that parents may be led to procure it, through reading this little notice, as its introduction into Christian households can scarcely fail to stimulate and encourage the younger members of the family. It may be obtained from F. Neal, Norfolk House, Queen Elizabeth's-avenue, Stoke Newington, N.

PLATELAYERS' MISSION.—A work similar to that for the platelayers on the Great Western Railway is about to be begun on the Midland line. Any willing to help in sending monthly packets of Gospel papers, &c., should communicate with Miss MacGregor, 17, Castle Hill-avenue, Folkestone.

SECOND ADVENT BIBLE-CLASS—Mr. G. Knight (Oxtead, Surrey) informs us of a corresponding Bible-class, the object of which is the arousing in Christians of an earnest spirit of watchfulness for the Redeemer's coming. It has already done much in stimulating interest in this much-neglected subject.

MANSION HOUSE MISSION CHAPEL.—The Mission to the poor of South-east London, conducted with so much energy by Mr. G. W. Linnecar, 89, Bellenden-road, Peckham, S.E., has now entered upon its thirteenth year of labours. The services are well attended, and in the six years since its commencement, 265 members have joined. The Mission has been of great benefit to the poor of the district, as help is given in various ways—by visitation of the sick, the distribution of clothing to the many who sorely need it, and by monthly free teas, of which between 300 and 400 partake.

RESCUE WORK IN CHELSEA.—Since March last nearly one hundred young girls have passed through the Rescue Preventive Homes, at 28, Margaretta-terrace, Oakley-street, Chelsea, and of these seventy are now doing well in service. Girls are helped and instructed in various ways, and suitable employment is then sought for them. One young girl was recently received into the Preventive Home, who, with a six months' character, had taken a situation which in two or three days she found to be in a bad house. She was directed to the Home by one who had formerly been an inmate. Now that every such Home is full, more are applying to us for admission than we are at present able to accommodate.

Y.W.C.A. KENSINGTON BRANCH.—The third yearly report should be an incentive to all who feel themselves prompted to any work for Christ's sake. In this comparatively short period there have been more than one thousand six hundred attendances at the Sunday Bible-class, and 142 members are now enrolled. The difficulty caused by so many houses of business closing their doors to their employés after an early hour on Sunday morning is here met by dinner being provided for young women who would otherwise have to walk the parks or frequent public restaurants. Much spiritual as well as temporal good has been received by those who have been in the Home. Many members are themselves Sunday-school teachers, while for some months the members have made themselves responsible for a Bible-woman in Ningpo, and have besides collected over £3 towards buying a piano. All this is evidence of a warm and loving spirit, which will do much to further the work of Christ in their midst. The hon. secretary is Miss Virgo.

The Committee earnestly appeal for contributions to

"THE CHRISTMAS DINNER AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS FUND."

There are already signs of great privation amongst the respectable poor. Visitors report cases of "no work" continually; the greatest distress prevails. We are anxious to provide a Christmas Dinner for 700 Destitute Men and Women, and for 600 Poor but Deserving Families, and also to replenish our "Fund" for Relieving the Poor during the Winter.

Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, Bankers, or by PEREGRINE PLATT, Secretary, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

The Book World.

The second part of The Biblical Illustrator (James Nisbet & Co.) more than sustains the promise of the first. Its anecdotes are fresh, and its similes are not hackneyed.

The December number of The Contemporary Pulpit (6d. Swan Sonnenschein, Lowrie & Co.) is rich in homiletic matter. The sermons on "The Lawyer's Question" and "The Prayers of Jesus" are specially suggestive. Preachers who know how to use without abusing such a help should get it.

Rescue the Children. By W. M. Mitchell. 2s. 6d. Isbister. The author gives the result of twelve years' work amongst the poor children of Glasgow. Out of 90,000 of school age, there were, when he commenced work, 20,000 either not at school at all or very irregular attendants. The majority of these, of course, belonged to the most destitute class, and were in a miserable plight. The story of what has been done for these is here before us, and the book should have the double effect of increasing sympathy on behalf of such little ones, and of inclining public opinion in the direction of providing some means whereby they may be rescued from the contaminating influences by which they are surrounded.

Women and Medicine. Farncombe, Lewes. This prize essay, by Miss Edith A. Huntley, is an exhaustive treatise on the study and practice of Medicine by Women. It shows historically that this is by no means such an innovation as some would have us believe, chronicling the distinctions in the profession of the healing art enjoyed by women in Ancient Greece and Rome, thence from the middle ages down to the present day in other countries than ours. Miss Huntley gives also a history of the trials, defeats and successes of the past quarter and a century, during which women have tried to obtain a share in modern medical education. Her reasons for this effort, and statements of the benefits likely to accrue from the medical treatment of women by women are worthy of serious study. It is difficult to understand why an anonymous postscript, signed "Anglo-Indicus" opposing the combination of medical and missionary work should be added to this useful pamphlet.

Bartholomew Legate: The Last Smithfield Martyr. By Florence Gregg. Swan Sonnenschein, Lowrie & Co. This book is a bold protest against all intolerance. If that were all, we should heartily commend it. But one of its principal aims appears to be the dissemination of Unitarian ideas—e.g., denial of the Special Inspiration of the Scriptures, of the Atonement, and of the Divinity of Jesus Christ. The following extracts will explain our meaning:—"God dying on the Cross! It was too awful, nay, was it not blasphemous?" (p. 67) "God cared for and loved them, so that they needed no priest to offer sacrifice on their behalf, as mediator to intercede for them, not even Jesus, their elder Brother; for the Father Himself loved them" (p. 129). Bartholomew Legate is represented as a faultless hero, the very incarnation of New Testament morality—a fact which makes the error attributed to him exceedingly seductive. The story is almost entirely a work of fiction, for history seems to be strangely silent respecting the real Legate. It does not appear what his actual opinions were.

Joseph: The Prime Minister. By Rev. William M. Taylor, D.D. LL.D. Sampson Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington. 6s. No form of study has a deeper human interest than the Divine records of the lives of men. Dr. Taylor has given much attention to this, and his discourses vividly represent the correspondence between the past and the present. For history repeats itself, and the histories of ancient men are reproduced in modern circumstances. The life of Joseph affords Dr. Taylor material for fifteen scenes, from each of which he brings forth lessons for the young men and women of America and England. For example: "Every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians;" "every tradesman is an abomination to our modern exquisites." Young men are hereupon exhorted not to be ashamed of an honest and useful handicraft. The expositions are high minded and spiritual, scholarly and practical, and the lessons deduced are wise and shrewd, and within the range of daily life. The best and latest authorities have been laid under contribution, and the side lights thrown upon the story from these sources add much to the interest of the book, which is a valuable contribution to Scriptural biography.

The Theological Review (Quarterly 1s. Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace), is a new venture. It is conducted by a committee of the Divinity students of the Free Church of Scotland Colleges, but its articles do not appeal to any one denomination. Specially worthy of notice is the paper on "The Holy Spirit," by Rev. James Stalker, M.A. We are glad to find that all the writers are thoroughly loyal to the fundamental principles of the evangelical faith. Their ability is beyond doubt.

MESSRS. J. F. SHAW & CO.

Another tastefully got-up budget reaches us from this firm:—We Wives; or, All Hallowe'en. By Lina Orman-Cooper. 2s. 6d. Will prove a treasure to those who wish for something really good to put into the hands of young women entering life. The unselfish life, and the true object of life, to be a gift of God, serving Him first, are lovingly taught by their governess to three young ladies at a finishing school—but the reader must find out the rest.—Madge Hardwicke, by Agnes Giberne (2s. 6d.), is a healthy story, with plenty of incident, and that of a startling character. Into a most varied scene are woven some of the tenderest touches, that reveal the true artist.—The Witch of the Rocks, by M. E. Winchester (2s. 6d.), is a fascinating story for boys, though there is rather much of the savour of the title in the contents.—One of those Little Ones, by Mrs. Fabian Brackenbury (1s.), may be useful in many a family where boys and girls have not yet learnt the lesson of kindness and gentleness to one another.—Those Two, by Emily Dibdin, is a realistic picture from the streets, giving the history of two alley children and some scenes from school life. It is, of course, not without its moral, and may be useful amongst the class of children for whom, doubtless, it is intended.—Through Unknown Ways; or, The Journal Books of Dorothea Trundel, by L. E. Guernsey (5s.), is a truly delightful story, simply written, purporting to be the autobiography of a "fayre mayde" in the troublous days of James II. There seems to be a great deal left out between Books i. and iii., but the story is so well resumed that we feel we have lived with Mistress Studley all her days.—To-morrow. By Mrs. Stanley Leathes (3s. 6d.). Not in every respect a wise book; but, as stories go, harmless enough. It will be popular, because there are a wilful girl and her lover in it, and young men do the gallant and otherwise in a great many of its pages.—Not So Very Long Ago, by the Author of "At All Times" (3s. 6d.), well illustrated, and daintily bound and printed. The story itself is charming. The sweet Christianity that was so helpful in "At All Times" is equally so in this volume.

Mr. Francis G. Heath's pictorial threepenny magazine, Illustrations, will in future be published by Messrs. W. Kent & Co., Paternoster-row.

The Lord's First Parable. 3d. Partridge & Co. A very practical exposition of the Parable of the Sower, in seven little chapters for Christians and the New Year.

The Methodist Family. 61, Paternoster-row. The contents of this annual volume are varied and full of interest, and it will prove itself acceptable in many families.

Our Own Gazette. 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co. This literary representative of the Y.W.C.A. is exceedingly bright and cheerful. It is besides a true companion, help, and guide; the stories are entertaining and full of healthful suggestion for the regulation of the daily life of young women.

The Teacher at Work. Elliott Stock. This annual volume is altogether most helpful work for those who are training the young in Scripture truths. The notes on lessons, Bible dictionary, &c., are admirably compiled. "Kitty Longdale's Sunday class" is a very interesting story, illustrating the practical, out-of school side of such work.

Ireland's Need. 3d Maclaren & Sons, Glasgow. In a series of well-written papers, which may be called parables, so well do they illustrate the point kept in view throughout. Dr Wallace forcibly demonstrates that Ireland's great need is the Bible, and the cure for her many troubles that righteousness which exalteth a nation. The papers lead us step by step from the establishment of the Jewish power to the Crucifixion, which sealed its doom: and in the causes of the downfall of this nation are seen those which operate to-day to produce like effects We learn also that the nation that would be truly free must have spiritual life.

Church Missionary Gleaner.—The annual volume is one of thrilling interest. From its texts and illustrations we learn a great deal of the wonderful mission field, and gain many a glimpse also of "the regions beyond," into which the missionary is only just entering. The illustrations give a most graphic idea of the scenery and incidents of life in these far-off lands This book should be in every Christian household. The Church Missionary Juvenile Instructor, the well-known "little green book," as it is called, is a truly charming book for the little ones, teaching many a lesson by its records of the noble army of martyrs, and inculcating a true missionary spirit in the minds of the lambs of God's flock.

MEDICAL MISSION WORK ABROAD.

The Friends now have medical missions established in Syria, Palestine, Constantinople, Armenia, India, and in Madagascar. The importance of giving medical education to the Malagasy has been so urgently felt by the four missionary doctors resident in Antananarivo, that, though representing two different societies, they have formed themselves into a board and have instituted a Medical Training Academy.

In Philippopolis, Mrs. Tonjoroff, the English wife of a missionary just arrived in this country has laboured most indefatigably in the hospital which was built some years ago by the Bulgarian Government, but which is now left without any resources for efficient management Under existing circumstances many incurable or troublesome cases have to be dropped, but Mrs. Tonjoroff is desirous of raising £300 to start a cottage hospital near her home, where she can watch over and nurse those who, through her, have been led to the Saviour. During the Servian war last winter this devoted lady's physical and pecuniary resources were taxed to the utmost.

At Underhill Station, Congoland, two hospital tents have been erected within the B.M.S. enclosure. Mr. Scrivener reports that before treating one patient, an influential chief, he required him to give up his fetishes—a bold request, which after a slight hesitation was complied with, to the extent of allowing the missionary himself to disengage them from the chief's neck and ankles.

The Medical Mission initiated by Miss Roberts in Florence, Italy, has during the year received a fresh impetus by the work of a Bible lad nurse, Signorina Violetta Fasulo, whose ministry is not confined to patients at the Mission rooms, but extends to many sick in their own homes. The house-to-house visitation affords opportunities for private, and therefore, more free intercourse with the sufferers, and at the same time is not unfrequently the means of spreading the blessing of Christian teaching to several members of a family.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The United States liquor traders have agreed to raise, by a trade tax, a million and a half dollars for political purposes in 1888.——In Queensland, temperance legislation is bearing good fruit.

We would remind our readers of the immense injury often done by giving drink to employés at Christmas and the New Year.——A Colonial and International Congress on inebriety is to be held in London early next year.

The vineyards of Victoria, Australia, cover 10,000 acres.——At a recent meeting of sheriffs in Iowa, seventy present, it was unanimously admitted the present prohibitory had decreased court business at least 50 per cent.——In an article in The Contemporary Review, Mr. Joseph Thompson says:—"Mohammedanism not only throws down the gage to Christianity, but declares war against our chief contribution to West Africa—the gin trade."

The British Medical Association has decided to ask Government to institute an inquiry into the effects of the drink traffic.——A United Kingdom Convention in favour of Local Option is to be held in London in February.——Mr. Haslett, J.P., the new Mayor of Belfast, is an abstainer, a Band of Hope worker, and a vice-president of the Irish Temperance League.——The Dundee U.P. Presbytery has renewed its injunction against toast-drinking at Ordination dinners.

Ten men have been indicted for complicity in the murder recently of Rev. Mr. Haddock, at Sioux City, Iowa.——Last Sunday was Temperance Sunday among the Wesleyan Methodist Churches throughout Great Britain.——During the past year six public-houses have been closed in the Ratcliff Highway district.——Mrs. Leavitt, representing the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has been in Japan, and has addressed large and attentive audiences at Tokio, Kotio, and Osaka.

LAWYERS' PRAYER UNION.—The half-yearly meeting of law clerks took place on the 16th inst., at the Mission Hall, St. George's, Bloomsbury. Mr. Gresham (chief clerk at the Mansion-house) presided. Among the speakers were Dr. Anderson and Mr. Baker (barristers), Mr. Moser (solicitor, of Kendal), Mr. Robert Brown (a solicitor and author, well known in Christian circles), and several clerks.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, DEC. 26.—JOB I.

1.—There was a man in the land of Uz whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, &c.—"The very first verse informs us as to the nature of its subject. The name Job signifies 'the persecuted one.' He is described as a thoroughly just man. According to the clue thus given, we should judge the theme of the book to be the sufferings of the righteous—how they are to be explained and to be shown consistent with the Divine righteousness, what should be the conduct of men so situated, and by what means the heart is then to be quieted and consoled."—Hengstenberg. The same writer gives the following excellent summary of the typical teaching of the book. "The history of Job is a type of the Saviour as well in his sufferings as in the glory which followed. If Job's imperfect and needy righteousness was an object of such hatred to Satan, how must he be enraged against Him who is the absolutely Righteous One. Immediately after entering on his vocation the Redeemer was tempted forty days by the devil, and when he had ended . . . he departed from Him 'for a season.' Satan is always in the background of Christ's sufferings. But, as Satan was put to shame by the typical Job, so did his attack on the antitype end in his utter overthrow. See Rev. xii. 9, 10."

5.—Cursed God in their hearts.—This should be rendered as in R.V., "renounced God in their hearts."

6.—The sons of God.—"This appellation occurs in Gen. vi. 2, and in this book xxxviii. 7. Here there can be no doubt it means spiritual beings who were called into existence before the creation of the material universe (see xxxviii. 7), and are constantly employed in executing the will of God: comp. Ps. ciii. 20."—Sp. Com.

11.—He will curse Thee to thy face.—R.V. better—"he will renounce Thee to thy face."

12.—All that he hath is in thy power—or "hand," as in marg. Satan had said (11) "put forth thy hand;" the answer is, "all that he hath is in thy hand." If it be asked how can this be, since "God is love;" the answer is, wait till the end of the book, or rather as it is in Jas. v. 11, "the end of the Lord," and seen that "the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy."

22.—Nor charged God foolishly.—Better as in marg. and R.V., "Charged God with foolishness." "The writer hints that later on Job committed himself by some unwise thoughts of the government of God."—Delitzsch.

MONDAY, DEC. 27.—JOB. II.

3.—Although thou movest Me against him to destroy him without cause.—These words of the Lord to Satan exhibit the sort of judicial claim which Satan urges—probably owing to his having been originally entrusted with the government of the world—to accuse the brethren "before our God day and night" (Rev. xii. 10); in which passage, too, is shown the true answer to Job's accuser "without cause." "They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb," &c., and this victory of faith appears from Job's offering burnt offerings for his sons (i. 5). His only hope for them, as well as for himself, was the coming sacrifice.

6.—But save his life—or "only spare his life" (R.V.). "Job has not forfeited his life; permission is given to place it in extreme peril, and nothing more, in order to see whether or not, in face of death, he will deny the God who has decreed such heavy affliction for him."—Del.

7.—Sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown.—"The symptoms of the disease are incidentally noted in the course of the following dialogues, and leave no doubt that it was elephantiasis. The original word means an intense heat, hence a burning and ulcerous swelling, or leprosy in its most terrible form, taking its name from the appearance of the body, which is covered with a knotty cancerous bark, like the hide of an elephant; the whole frame is in a state of progressive dissolution, ending slowly but surely in death. One of the most painful results to Job was that he knew it would be regarded as a decisive proof that he was suffering from some hidden and unpardonable sin."—S. C.

9.—Then said his wife unto him.—Satan is no more mentioned in the book; but he is no less behind the scenes than he was when Eve, "being deceived," conveyed Satan's temptation to Adam. Job repelled the temptation as "folly;" but Jesus (of whom he is here a type), when Peter said, "This be far from Thee, Lord: this shall not be unto Thee" (Matt. xvi. 22), replied "Get Thee behind me, Satan." Curse God, and die.—Better as R.V., "Renounce God and die" (i. 11).

TUESDAY, DEC. 28.—JOB III.

1.—Cursed his day.—The word used here is different from that occurring i. 5, 11; ii. 5, 9 and is rightly rendered "cursed" in R.V.

8.—Who are ready to raise up their mourning.—"This translation has no authority, it should be 'who are prepared to arouse Leviathan' (so R.V.). This word undoubtedly means the crocodile in chap. xli.; but it is in all probability here a symbol of the dragon, the enemy of light, who, in old eastern traditions, is conceived as ready to swallow up sun and moon, and plunge creation in original chaos or darkness. This tradition probably originated in the Scriptural account of the Fall. Comp. Rev. xii. 4—9."—Sp. Com.

11.—Why died I not, &c.—"Job passes to the next alternative, death before the awakening of consciousness. Job counts up, with the wild ingenuity of a diseased mind, all the chances which might at once have cut his life short. In the following verses he enumerates the actual inhabitants of the nether world, whom he conceives as without sensation, beyond the reach alike of joy or misery."—Sp. Com. It is important to remember that Job, though perfect as to his standing before God, was far from perfect under trial upon earth, as his own confession (xl. 4) frankly owns. Moreover, though the record of his ideas is inspired, the ideas themselves are by no means inspired, and can only be regarded as the conceptions of his own mind.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 29.—JOB IV.

1.—Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered.—"The first speaker among the friends who now comes forward is Eliphaz, probably the eldest of them. In the main they all represent one view, but each with his individual peculiarity: Eliphaz with the self-confident pathos of age, and the mien of a prophet; Bildad with the moderation and caution befitting one poorer in thought; Zophar with an excitable vehemence neither skilled nor disposed for a lasting contest. The skill of the writer is manifested in this, that what the friends say, considered in itself, is true; the error lies only in its inadequacy and inapplicability to the case before them."—Delitzsch.

6.—Is not this thy fear, thy confidence? &c.—"This verse should be rendered, 'Was not thy piety thy confidence? Thy hope, was not that also the integrity of thy ways?'"—Sp. Com. R.V. renders it substantially the same, but in the present "Is not?" &c., instead of past tense.

10.—The roaring of the lion, &c.—"Five different words are used in the original for lions... in each stage of their growth. The object is to show that in every stage of its development, guilt, especially the guilt of cruelty and oppression, brings ruin: It may suggest the first suspicion likely to present itself to the mind of a chief that Job, or still more probably his sons, had oppressed their neighbours or secretly joined in marauding expeditions." 12—16.—"We have here the oldest and the finest description of a spiritual visitation."—Sp. Com.

17.—Shall mortal man be more just than God?—The margin of R.V. gives a better rendering than its text, or than the above. It agrees with Delitzsch, who translates: "Is a mortal just before God? or is a man pure before his Maker? The question raised is not the possibility of man exceeding God in righteousness, but of his standing before God in righteousness. In other words, it is the great problem of which the Gospel offers the only true solution.

THURSDAY, DEC. 30.—JOB V.

1.—Call now, if there be any that will answer thee.—"The chief thought of the vision in the last chapter is that God is the absolutely just one, and infinitely exalted above men and angels. Resuming his speech from this point, Eliphaz tells Job that no cry for help can avail him unless he submits, as being himself unrighteous, to the all-just One. 'If God does not help thee, no creature can help thee.'"—Delitzsch. To which of the saints is better as in R.V., "to which of the holy ones," for angels are meant.

2.—Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth the silly one.—Alluding to Job's wrath against the providence which called him into being (iii. 1—10), and his envy of any lot but his own, even non-existence or death (iii. 14—19).

13.—He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.—Quoted by St. Paul (1 Cor. iii. 19) as usual when Scripture is referred to, "It is written."

17.—Happy is the man whom God correcteth: therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty.—"The same thought as Prov. iii. 11—13, Ps. xciv. 12 (and also, quoted from Prov. iii., Heb. xii. 5), in both passages borrowed from this."—Delitzsch.

24.—And shall not sin.—R.V. renders this, "and shalt miss nothing," so Delitzsch, "without missing anything in the place where thou seekest it," so also Sp. Com. An interesting illustration of the fact that this, the ordinary word for "to sin," in Hebrew, means to miss the mark.

FRIDAY, DEC. 31.—JOB VI.

2.—Oh that my grief were thoroughly weighed.—"Or wrath, the same word which Eliphaz uses (2). The change of word in A.V. obscures the force of the argument. Eliphaz regarded the wrath (or vexation, R.V.) as indicating moral folly, Job answers that it is not out of proportion with his calamity."—Sp. Com.

3.—Therefore my words are swallowed up.—Delitzsch renders this "therefore my words are rash," so also R.V., and Sp. Com. says, "the word more probably means 'wander' or 'are idle.' Job admits that his words are blameworthy, but excusable, as the overflowings of natural sorrow."

10.—Then would I have comfort.—"The general connection is clear; some words are difficult; but the meaning may be more clearly expressed, 'So would it still be my comfort, and in the midst of my unsparing anguish would I exult that I have not denied (i.e., renounced) the words of the Holy One.' This comfort is not that death will end his troubles, but that to the last he has had the consciousness of having kept the faith."—S. C.

20.—They were confounded, &c.—That is, "disappointed." Job compares his disappointment at his friends' mode of comforting him to the disappointment of a band of desert travellers who, approaching a mountain stream, find it dried up.

26.—Which are as wind.—The latter clause of this verse is rendered by Delitzsch, and in the margin of R.V., "the words of one in despair are for the wind." That is, apparently, for the wind to carry away and put out of remembrance, not severely criticised, as by Job's friends.

SATURDAY, JAN. 1.—JOB VII.

1.—Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth?—"The reference is specially, but not exclusively, to military service. Job argues that since life is bounded between certain limits, with its appointed work, when those limits are reached and that work done, a man is justified in longing for the rest of the grave. This chapter marks another stage in the development of Job's inmost feelings. In the first part (1—10) he repudiates altogether the hope of a possible restoration to life, and claims the right of unqualified complaining. In the latter part (11—21), he enters into direct expostulation with God. In all this, he still keeps clear of the sin of renouncing God; so far, the temptation completely fails; but he incurs the very serious reproach of arraigning his government. This distinction must be borne in mind throughout. Job is faulty, and 'darkens counsel by words without knowledge,' but his fault is that of a man who fears and loves God, yet cannot understand his ways."—Sp. Com.

9.—So he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more. The word "grave" should be Sheol (or Hades), the place of departed spirits. It is so rendered in R.V. Job is not denying the resurrection, but the return again to earth of the spirit that has left it.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

WINTER MONTHS
OF 1886.

The Committee are putting forth renewed and extended efforts to check Immorality throughout the Land, and to Rescue its Victims. They have repeated the Meetings in Edinburgh, where there was an aggregate attendance of 400.

FOREIGN FALLEN WOMEN, unhappily a numerous and neglected class of evil-doers in London, have been brought under the Gospel of the Grace of God. Suitable Tracts and Appeals in Foreign Languages have been judiciously distributed, in addition to the holding of Special Meetings.

BREAKFAST MEETINGS have been opened to gather in those who, though impressed by the Over-Night Meetings, still remained Undecided!

The Town Agent of this Movement is employed in Missioning among the Lowest Outcasts in the London Parks; and throughout the entire metropolis Meetings for the Rescue of Outcast Women have recently been held.

£5 will cover the expense of Missioning a District and holding an Afternoon or Midnight Meeting.

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing toward the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited to communicate with J. H. L. Christien, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or to

C. WILSON McCREE,
Financial Secretary.

Office—8a, Red Lion Square, W.C.

THE CHELSEA PREVENTIVE & RESCUE HOMES.

For particulars apply to Miss Hugill, at the Homes, 28 and 30, Margaretta-terrace, Oakley-street, Chelsea, S.W.; or to Mrs. L. Forster, 12, Carlyle-square, S.W., to whom Donations may be sent; or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

THE TREASURER OF THE East London Nursing Society

Earnestly requests Immediate Help. Funds are deficient. Twenty trained nurses are now working in the homes of the Sick Poor. Without fresh contributions, nurses will have to be withdrawn.

Donations received by Hon. Mrs. Stuart-Wortley, 16, Clarges-street, Piccadilly; and A. W. Lacey, Esq., Secretary, 49, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, E.

THE HOMERTON RAGGED SCHOOL AND GOSPEL MISSION.

President—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Urgently appeal for funds to meet the inevitable distress of the coming winter. A Committee of ladies, well acquainted with the district, will, with the assistance of a Bible-woman, satisfy themselves of the genuineness of every case before giving relief. Every penny thus contributed will reach the poor without deduction either for management or other expense.

Contributions should be sent either to Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., Bankers, Lombard-st.; or to the Hon. Sec., Mr. Henry E. Shaw, 15, Muston-road, Upper Clapton.

HAVE FAITH IN GOD. Mark xi. 22.

PORTSMOUTH AND GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.

Established May 1, 1853.

Will the Readers of The Christian kindly help towards the expenses of our Mission in general.

At this season of the year, the Fishermen are now assembling for the Mackerel Season at this port. These we invite once a week on board to Tea, besides Meetings every night for the Word of God.

Our vessels need a refit to accompany the Fleet of Boats to the West of England.

Bibles, Gospel Papers, Books, Comforters, Cuffs, Bags, &c., are welcome gifts.

Address HENRY COOK,
Seamen's Fund, Gosport.

£650 is still needed for our New Mission Ship now building.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

President:—GEORGE WILLIAMS, Esq.

This Society supports Bethels, Free Reading Rooms, Sailors' Rests, and Schools; employs Missionaries in London, Liverpool, Fleetwood, Whitehaven, Workington, Maryport, Fowey, Isle of Man, and Ireland, to labour among British and Foreign Seamen; places Libraries on board ships, circulates Bibles and Tracts in many languages, carries on a large and successful Gospel Temperance work, and provides food and shelter for many destitute seamen. The Society is now in debt to its Bankers, and owes £500 on its Institution in Ratcliff Highway. Help is most urgently needed. See last week's Christian for notice of the Society's work, under heading of the "PERILS OF THE DEEP."

For Fortieth Annual Report, apply to Rev. G. J. Hill, at the Office, 255, Burdett-road, E. Contributions may be sent to Morgan & Scott; or to M. H. Hodder, Esq., 27, Paternoster-row, E.C. Donations, if sent to the Office, whether by cheque or post order, should be crossed London and Westminster Bank, Eastern Branch.

A CRY FOR HELP FROM THE WEST.

HELP THE HELPLESS POOR.

THE LATYMER ROAD MISSION is in need of help for the various branches of the work. Upwards of £350 are needed to meet all the claims before December 31. There is much distress in the neighbourhood, and poor people are applying for relief. Our exchequer is exhausted. We wish to open our Soup Kitchen and Invalid Children's Dinner Table, and start Half-penny Dinners for the poor school children. 500 children are anxiously expecting their Christmas treat. Funds are wanted for coals and blankets, and parents' annual tea.

We wish to give a dinner on Christmas Day to some of the poorest families in their own houses.

The work consists of Gospel and Temperance Meetings. Shelters for Ragged Boys and Girls. Mothers' and Fathers' Meetings. Night Schools. Infant Nursery. Convalescent Homes. Sunday Schools, and many other agencies too numerous to mention.

Gifts in kind and left-off clothing most useful.

Cheques and Post-office Orders should be made payable to Aulay Macaulay, Hon. Sec., Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting Hill, W.

BETHEL MISSION, Pier Walk, Gorleston, Great Yarmouth. Mr. B. WATSON, Missionary.

A praiseworthy effort is being made to clear off the debt of some £400, standing on this place of worship, which depends largely for its maintenance upon the support of the Fishermen, and poorer members of the community. With characteristic generosity, a kind friend of the Mission has set the ball rolling with an offer of £200, provided that an equal supplementary amount can be raised by Christmastide, and we sincerely trust that the response to the appeal now being made will prove equal to the needs of the hour. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. S. WOODS, Lower Cliff-road, Gorleston, Secretary; or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

THE BLIND POOR.—The Committee of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society earnestly plead for Aid to give a Christmas Dinner to about 1,000 Blind persons and their families; also coals during the winter months. However great the distress may be amongst the poor at this season, that of the blind is far greater.—Contributions will be gratefully received by W. C. LESTER, Secretary, Office, 27, Red Lion-sq., W.C. Bankers, Williams, Deacon & Co., Birchin-lane, E.C.

SERMON LANE MISSION.—Funds are urgently needed for Christmas Dinners, to serve hundreds of poor in the neighbourhood of the Mission, all being well known to our Christian Visitors; also for Soup, twice in the week during winter; also for Tea and Sugar and Coals for our poor suffering sick ones. The Operations of the Mission:—Sunday Services for Adults, Open Air Preaching during summer, Sunday Schools, Adult Bible Class, Visitation of Sick, House to House Visitation, Mothers' Meeting, Girls' Sewing Class, Blanket Club, Coal Club, Youths' Institute, Band of Hope, Christian Band Union, Maternity Society, Young Women's Welcome, Penny Bank, Gospel Total Abstinence Society, Working Men's Temperance Mutual Improvement Society, and Prayer Meetings.
GEORGE FULLER, 54, Liverpool-road, Islington.

PADDINGTON CHILDREN'S HOME, 44, Marylands-road, Paddington, W.—Dislocated hips, &c., treated by Mr. R. H. HUTTON, the well-known specialist. The Ninth Annual Report (just issued) may be had upon application to the Lady Superintendent, Miss HALL HALL, as above, or Witley Manor, Godalming, Surrey, by whom subscriptions and donations will be thankfully received.

ANXIETY OF SOUL. — Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, College-avenue, Hackney.—Our little ones are looking forward to spend a happy Christmas in spite of their sad affliction. The smallest contributions will be gratefully received by Miss RYE, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE, 58, St. George's-road, S.W.; undenominational. Ladies trained for Medical Mission work. Two years' curriculum. Ladies may train for midwifery alone. Non-resident Students received; partial board if desired.—Treasurer, G. J. GREEN, Esq., London & County Bank, Victoria-street, S.W.; Hon. Sec., Dr. GRIFFITH.

GEE STREET MISSION, Goswell-road. Voluntary workers earnestly solicit funds to carry on the work of doing good to the poor. Subscriptions thankfully received by the Treasurer, ROBERT BAXTER Esq., 6, Victoria-street, Westminster; the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY, 54, Lombard-street; A. J. VIEWEG, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside.

FAITH-HEALING and Power for Service.—Meetings conducted by the Rev. JOHN ALLEN or his workers. Bishopsgate (32, Spital-square), Tuesdays, 7.30 p.m. Camberwell Gate (The Hall, Horsley-street). Tuesdays, 7 p.m. Hackney (Trinity Church, Triangle, Mare-street), Sundays, 3 p.m.; Mondays, 7 p.m.; on Fridays, Baptism of the Spirit, 7 p.m. Railway Mission Hall, Leyton House, Major-road, Stratford, Thursdays, 7 p.m.

Postal address, Balclutha Lodge, Southgate, N.

SPECIAL CHRISTMAS OFFERING, 1886.

For the purpose of providing a number of Deserving Poor Families in the neighbourhood with a Dinner at their own homes on Christmas Day.

This effort is in connection with the several Agencies and Missions at Radnor Street, St. Luke's, and is irrespective of Creed, being promoted by one desire, to alleviate the condition of the Suffering Poor at this season of the year. (There are 1,000 Children in the Sunday Evening Ragged School.) Last Christmas Eve 550 Families were thus provided for.

Contributions will be thankfully received by Mr. JOHN JAMES YEO, Treasurer, 79, Upper Street, Islington, and late of 61, Barbican, E.C.; or to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

THE LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.

President—R. C. L. BEVAN, Esq.

Established 1826 for granting Monthly Pensions of 10s. to the decidedly Christian poor, 65 years of age and upwards, whose income is not more than 7s. 6d. per week. Subscribers to the amount of £2 can recommend a case, which is placed on the Pension List in rotation. There are no elections; 164 Pensioners are now on the roll. Annual Subscriptions and Donations are earnestly solicited to maintain present efficiency, and admit most deserving cases now waiting.

REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE, M.A.,
E. S. EARDLEY, Esq. } Hon. Secs.
ROBERT JOHNSTON, Secretary.

Office: 32, Sackville-street, W.

UNIVERSAL WEEK OF PRAYER.—The Council of the EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE have arranged for MEETINGS in the West-end daily during the week commencing January 3, at Steinway Hall, Lower Seymour-street, Portman-square, each morning at 11.30, except Saturday, when the Meeting will commence at 10.30. The Addresses will be given respectively by the Revs. E. A. Stuart, C. Wilson, Dr. Donald Fraser, Sholto D. C. Douglas, John Kilner, and Prebendary Billing. Programmes of these Meetings, and other papers relating to the Week of Prayer, may be had on application to the SECRETARIES of the Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

CHRISTMAS AND THE NEW YEAR.—The Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for help in aid of the poorer patients and their families. Special Donations for the purpose of giving Christmas or New Year's Gifts will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

KIRKLEY RUN, near Lowestoft.—Mr. W. JOHNSON, Seamen's Missionary, has been asked by fishermen and labouring men residing near Kirkley Run to help them in getting a Mission Room, for Sunday School and Gospel work. A piece of land has been hired, and a wood building to accommodate about 160 people has been commenced, the cost of which will be about £60. The people in the neighbourhood are poor, but are willing to help. Nearly £30 have been collected, and any kind friends who may be disposed to help may send their contributions to Mr. JEREMIAH GOLDSMITH, Kirkley Run; or to Mr. W. JOHNSON, Sailors' Missionary, Lowestoft. The Mission Room will be quite unsectarian, and will be open to any Christian to take part in the work that may be carried on there.

ASYLUM FOR FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, near Caterham Junction, Surrey.—£1000 will be required to meet the Christmas bills of this unsectarian charity, which at the present moment is maintaining 302 Fatherless Children. The Institution is entirely dependent upon the benevolent public for every shilling of its income, and is greatly in need of funds. Children are admitted to its benefits as early as at three months old, and are retained in the Asylum until they are 15 years of age. Annual subscriptions and donations are earnestly requested.—JOHN R. EDWARDS, Secretary, Office, 35, Finsbury-circus, E.C.

This valuable work should be on every bookshelf, and especially in families amongst the rising generation. This edition complete in one volume, contains 12 full-page Steel Engravings, and 200 Illustrations on Wood, including portraits of Martin Luther and other eminent Reformers; published at 21s., offered for

Matthew Henry's Commentary. 28/-

Complete in 3 volumes. Unabridged edition, published at £2 12s., offered for

Bunyan's Works. 10/6

Handsome volume, well Illustrated, and containing, in addition to "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Holy War," the following works, many of which are now out of print:—"Grace Abounding;" "The Jerusalem Sinner Saved;" "Come, and Welcome, to Jesus;" "The Saints' Privilege and Profit;" "The Water of Life;" "Barren Fig Tree;" and Bunyan's last Sermon, preached twelve days before his death; published at 21s., offered for

Dr. Pusey's Doctrine of the Real Presence. 1/-

(Refuted by the Rev. John Harrison, D.D.)

An invaluable Book for these times, when the modern sect, call Ritualists, are striving to bring in this unscriptural teaching.

From The Curate to Convent. 5/-

(By the late Rev. S. Walker, Rector of St. Mary-le-Port, Bristol.)

Mr. Walker speaks from a large and varied experience, and portrays only too truly the Jesuitical character of Romanism and Ritualism. The story is well told, and deserves to be attentively read.

THE STORY OF PIERS GAVESTONE.

By EMILY S. HOLT.

Author of "Mistress Margery," "Not for Him," &c.

Large Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, Gilt top, 5s.

"No æsthetic devotee ever anticipated more eagerly the finding of a rare specimen of the antique than do we the arrival of a story from Miss Holt's wonderful mind and pen. This time we are certainly not disappointed; indeed we never are. The picture we get of matters political, social, and religious, in those bygone times, is a very vivid and instructive one, and we linger over the pages with a sort of reluctant delight that fears to reach the last one sooner than we would."—The Christian.

THE BIBLE PORTFOLIO

Containing Seven Charts of History and Prophecy, selected and arranged by Elizabeth Ranyard.

WITH A DESCRIPTIVE COMPANION VOLUME.

In the above a variety of Charts represent the Year-day and the Literal-day, the Historic and the Futurist, interpretations of prophecy. Specimens of the Historic Inscriptions on the Rocks of Sinai, and a comparison of the Mosaic and Christian dispensations are also included in the Portfolio. The Companion Volume explains the whole, and links together the love of the Lord and preparedness for His coming.

"This large and striking Bible Portfolio is intended for educated young people in Christian families, whose interest it will undoubtedly quicken in a very vivid and memorable way. It will also furnish endless opportunities of interesting and teaching intelligent children, and in fascinating the boys and girls with Bible story and Bible truth."

A NEW YEAR'S GIFT FOR 1887,

CONTAINING, BESIDES OTHER ARTICLES,

A Thrilling Story of the Sea, entitled, "Gripped by an Octopus." By Agnes E. Weston. With Full-Page Engraving.

". . . . It was the terrible Octopus! How his suckers burned and blistered! and how his hairy arms gripped and twisted! I had been near death scores of times; but never near such a dreadful death. I was not a man of prayer: but the words, 'Lord, save me! save me!' rose from my heart, although I could not open my lips. If ever I realized what it was like to be drawn by the devil into hell, I realized it in those few seconds. . . . . Through the good providence of God, I thought of my knife. My left arm was bound to my side, but my right hand was free; and as I drew the knife, I caught sight of the body of the reptile, as the arms were drawing me within reach of the beak. . . . . I struck straight at the jelly-like body until pieces floated round me, and the arms let go their grip; and, thank God, I was saved! . . . . The awful picture was burnt into my brain—the fearful monster; his resistless power; and the stark, white corpse of my old shipmate. I remembered that I had read in God's Book that the devil seeks whom he may devour; and I felt if I had never believed in sin or a devil before, I did then. My poor shipmate was a victim; he had got him fast enough, and I called to mind many old chums who had caroused with me, and I had always called them 'jolly good fellows'; but now I saw that, like Paterson, they were in the devil's grip, and that he had destroyed them body and soul in hell: and why wasn't I destroyed? Why? Only through the sovereign mercy of God, who willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may be converted and live."

STERLING SILVER.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being Silver, and the intermediate Steel; forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas Thimble this annoyance vanishes.'"

THE LATE MRS. GRIFFITH JOHN.

ON December 29, 1885, the Christian residents at Hankow were called upon to mourn the loss of one who had occupied for many years a foremost place among the Christian workers of this age. Mrs. Griffith John was in no sense an ordinary specimen of the Master's workmanship.

Physically, mentally, and spiritually, she was endowed with a combination of gifts and graces such as one seldom meets with in one person. Her figure was tall, graceful, and commanding. Her features were finely cut, and her face was expressive of a rare blending of intelligence, firmness, and sweetness. Her physical constitution was naturally strong, and amply developed into vitality; and in her best days she could accomplish a vast amount of work, both mentally and physically, without exhaustion or fatigue.

"She has," wrote a friend, some years since, "brain enough for a lawyer and statesman; and she would do well as a scholar in the higher branches of culture." The faculties which relate to thought, mental speculation, and invention, were predominant, while those which gather knowledge, and deal with facts and things in daily experience, were amply developed. Hence the contemplative Mary and the practical Martha were remarkably combined in her. Whilst given to think much and deeply, and whilst she found in mental exercise and Christian work her chief joy, yet there is hardly a detail in the whole round of domestic duty which she had not theoretically and practically mastered. "She was," remarked a lady, when speaking of her in these respects, "the most remarkable woman I ever knew."

Among the elements of power in Mrs. John must be mentioned her strong, deep-rooted conscientiousness. The law of duty, even in the minutest matters, swayed her conscience; and in regard to words, promises, and engagements, she was the very soul of honour. When once she had made a promise or given her word, no one who knew her could feel the least anxiety as to whether it would be fulfilled or not. To fail in these things was to her mind, not a misfortune to be overlooked, but a sin to be severely censured. Without this important mental, or rather moral, trait of character, she could not have commanded the influence which she did, neither could she have been the patient, earnest, persevering worker she proved herself to be, and especially in the midst of the sufferings of the last six years of her life.

(From Photograph by Pow Kee, Hankow, China.)

Another element of power was her affectionate nature. Mrs. John was a true friend, and was specially known to all who really knew her, for the depth of her love, the strength of her affection, and the tenacity of her attachments. Self-reliant and resolute as she was, she longed for and valued the love of others. She never failed to return heart for heart to the full. She could bear with people's pecularities to any extent, as long as she was sure that they were true in their love and friendship, and she would stick to them tenaciously, though they might have traits far from being agreeable to her. Gossip of every kind was hateful to her; but an unkind word about a friend, she treated very much as she would a falsehood, whether true or not. If she knew it to be true, she would shut her ears to the tale; and if she did not know it to be true, she would mentally insist upon its being false.

She made friends in abundance wherever she went; and the way they used to write to her whilst she was living, and write about her now that she has gone, shows that she possessed in an eminent degree that something, which can call out in great fulness what is best and most lasting in the human heart. The sailor felt this when he came in contact with her; and it is difficult to say which of the two sentiments, love or respect, dominated in his breast in respect to her.

"Dearest mother," writes one of these dear fellows to her, "is there anything wrong in smoking? There is a young chap on board the Frolic, who told me last night, when he saw me smoking, that I had not given up all for Jesus, so I thought I would ask you if you think it is wrong, and I will give it up. I will do nothing that my Saviour does not love; and anything you do not like I will not do. I would not displease you if I knew it, you who have promised to be my mother. You do not know how I love you as a mother, more now than when I was with you. You were kinder to me than any one else has ever been. If I had not known you, I should not have known Jesus."

The above is only one specimen of the way the sailors used to write to their spiritual teacher; and it is certain that no one, whose heart was not a well-spring of love, could have so completely won the affection as well as the admiration of these honest, blunt, and simple-minded men.

Among Mrs. John's special gifts, that of language and speech must not be omitted. She was not an eloquent speaker in the ordinary sense of the term. She never attempted the orator either in England or China. But she had a good command of language, was thoroughly self-possessed, and was able to set forth her thoughts with clearness, freedom, and fulness. Her style was calm, earnest, and perfectly natural. In the year 1881, she addressed large audiences in England, Scotland, and Wales, and it is certain that she will never be forgotten by those who heard her. The impression she made was often overpowering at the time, and we know now that it was genuine and lasting in its nature.

She had another gift of priceless value, namely, the gift of dealing personally with men and women. She yearned for the salvation of souls; she grappled with them, and forced them to yield, or to set up a conscious resistance. She seemed to be able to look into the very souls of those with whom she had to deal, and talk to them with wonderful directness, and often with instantaneous effect. This power of personal dealing was also manifested with blessed results during Mrs. John's visits to England. Christian men and women came under its influence, and their Christian life became enriched and ennobled in consequence. "You have greatly helped me," wrote one to her on the eve of her departure for China, "and the year 1883 has been a blessed one to me through you." Another wrote: "My conversation with you has given me quite a substantial lift heavenward. I long to be filled with all the fulness of God; and my constant prayer to God is that He will make my life a power for good." Another wrote: "I feel as though I was writing to a friend I had known for some years past, instead of one I have only seen for a short time. But oh! how glad I am I have seen you; for you have been to me a messenger from Jesus." In a letter received by Mr. John, one of the many to whom Mrs. John was made a special blessing wrote: "I cannot tell you how I loved her, or what she has been to me. Only the Lord who gave her to me knows. She it was who led me to find that perfect peace which she herself so enjoyed, and I can truly say that my whole life was changed through her influence. And I expect very many can tell the same tale."

The grand secret of Mrs. John's power and influence was her strong and deep religious conviction, and her whole-souled consecration to God and to God's work. In creed she was strictly orthodox, according to the standard of orthodoxy in the Methodist Church, of which she was a member, and to which she was deeply attached. She was in full sympathy with the higher teaching of her church on the doctrine of sanctification and holiness, and her whole soul went out in unutterable longings for the perfect life. She had no doubt respecting the great verities of the Gospel; she embraced the truths and promises of God's Word with all her heart; and preached them to others, not as matters to be discussed and speculated upon, but as Divine realities to be accepted and lived on. Her spirituality was decidedly strong, and she strove to live as seeing the Invisible. Perfect union with Christ was to her mind the one essential in the Christian life. She loved Christ with something like a passionate love; and so fully consecrated herself to his service, that she could say truly, "To me to live is Christ." This was the grand secret of her power and influence.

It was in this spirit she came to China, as the wife of Dr. Jenkins, of the American Methodist Episcopal Mission, South, in 1854. In 1871 Dr. Jenkins died, and she returned to the States. Her stay was not long; she felt she must return to China in obedience to the will of God. Her visit home, however, was not in vain. During her short stay, she came in contact once more with those Christian friends who had been so helpful to her in her earlier days, and the old longings for the perfect life in Christ broke forth anew. Once more there came a season of earnest heart-searching, followed by deep sorrow for past failures, and an honest surrender of self. She waited for the Comforter. As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so her soul panted for God. Ere long the Heavenly Dove descended upon her as a Spirit of purity, peace, and power.

Thus baptized anew she returned to China. She sought God's guidance, and asked Him to give her a work that would fill her heart. One day, as she was going to Union Chapel, at Shanghai, she met about half a dozen sailors walking in the other direction, and each one carrying under his arm a bottle of whisky or Old Tom. For the first time in her life she began to feel a special interest in the sailor, and she asked herself instinctively—"Is not this the work that God has given me to do?" She spoke to them, got them to fling their bottles into the ditch hard by, took them to the chapel with her, and after the service brought them to her home. She gave them tea, and there and then commenced her Sunday evening services for sailors. At those meetings from forty to eighty sailors, and others, would gather in her drawing-room every Sunday evening. It was in some respects the most interesting meeting in Shanghai, and certainly the most fruitful in results. The prayers were short and fervent, the addresses earnest and to the point, and the singing always bright and full of spirit. Mrs. John expected conversions, and made a direct aim at this end. There was nothing vague about her teachings or her appeals. Certain days and hours in the week were appointed for private conversation, and all were invited to come and see her at those times. These were her opportunities of dealing personally with her Sunday hearers. She also conducted a very extensive correspondence with her children (as she delighted to call the blue-jackets), after they had left Shanghai for other parts of the world. The results connected with these efforts were simply astonishing. Conversions were numerous, and the change in the general conduct of the men-of-war's-men who visited the port was marked by the residents generally.

In October, 1874, she was married to Rev. Griffith John, of the London Mission at Hankow. Her work at Hankow lay less amongst European sailors, and more amongst Chinese women and girls. Nevertheless she carried into her new sphere the same spirit of consecration and earnest purpose. Her love to the sailor remained the same to the end; and whenever a gunboat or a tea ship visited the port, she threw her whole soul into the work of ministering to the spiritual needs of the men. Neither did she labour in vain at Hankow. As at Shanghai, so here, her ministry was abundantly blessed; and there are to-day many sea-faring men who bless God that they were led to Hankow, because it was here, through Mrs. John's instrumentality, they were brought to know God in Christ. Whilst in England, in 1881, she raised a considerable sum of money amongst her friends for the purpose of erecting a Sailors' Rest and Reading-room at Hankow. With this money a suitable and beautiful little building has been erected on the premises of the London Mission. At Hankow Mrs. John threw herself into the Chinese work with great enthusiasm, and her influence amongst the Chinese was great. She took a special interest in the hospital, and devoted much of her time to the instruction of the female patients. Day by day, through rain and sunshine, was she to be seen on her way to or from that Institution. She knew how dark and sad their souls were, and she felt she must go and give them light and comfort. And her labours in this direction were not in vain. Some of the most satisfactory female converts were brought to Christ through her efforts in connection with the hospital work.

Mrs. John's death was in perfect harmony with her life. She had been suffering more or less for some weeks, but neither her husband nor herself had any apprehension of danger till Christmas Day, 1885. On that day serious symptoms appeared, and Dr. Gillison pronounced the case to be one of peritonitis. All that love and medical skill could do was done for the patient; but she gradually grew worse, and died about noon on December 29. The event was felt to be very sudden, because it was very unexpected. The physician hoped almost to the last, and those who stood around her were only too glad to share in his hope. Till within two hours of the end, her husband had no idea that it was so nigh; and when the fact became evident, she was too weak to say much that was intelligible. About half-an-hour before her departure she said, "Griffith," first indistinctly, then quite clearly. Her husband spoke to her and asked her if she was happy. In an instant a strange light shone upon or from her face; she opened her eyes, and gazing upon some vision of the unseen, she said, "Beautiful! Beautiful! Jesus the Lord! Beautiful!" She must have repeated the word beautiful fifty times at least during the last half-hour, and she heaved the last sigh with the word upon her lips. Those who were present can never forget what we saw and heard during that half-hour. They felt that heaven was in their midst, and they were standing in the very presence of the King. What was that light? Was it not the reflection of another face which was just then looking on her? "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

"THE RAPTURE of the CHURCH."

The question raised by my dear friend, Mr. Thomas, of Bath, in a recent Christian, is an important one. "When the Lord Jesus comes for his Church—that is, at his Second Coming—are all that are alive (who are believers) caught up to meet Him? or is it only those who are walking worthy of Him? There is a distinction being made between the firstfruits and the harvest (Rev. xiv.). It is said that these firstfruits are consecrated believers, who will be taken away before the tribulation, while unfaithful believers will be left on the earth to be purged by the fires of tribulation, and will be ingathered as the harvest, at the end of the seven years."

In reply, I submit that Rev. xiv. 1—5 contains a vision of one of the many and varied glories of the Church. Even now, believers, as such, are said to have "come (anticipatively, of course) unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, and to the general assembly and the Church of the firstborn" (Heb. xii. 22, 23). Thus answering to an earthly and a heavenly Jerusalem (both future), we see in Rev. vii. and xiv., respectively, an earthly and a heavenly people, both associated with Mount Zion, "the hill of God, that hill "which God desireth to dwell in," with its "thousands of angels," of whom it is witnessed that "the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place" (Ps. lxviii. 16, 17).

The number, "144,000," I regard, with Mr. Faussett, in each case, as symbolical of fixity and completeness. Those in Rev. xiv. are seen in a glorified condition, for they are said to "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth," which is not witnessed of those mentioned in the former chapter. Redeemed (purchased) from the earth, they stand with the Lamb on Mount Zion surrounded with heavenly glory (just as Moses and Elias stood on the Mount of Transfiguration, the three apostles standing there also, as heirs with them of the same glory, though as yet in bodies of humiliation). Their condition of purity is evidently to be understood as indicating what they are in the judgment of God, by virtue of their union with the Lamb, consequent on their sanctification through his blood. This is affirmed of all saints in Heb. x. 10. As firstfruits, the 144,000 in Rev. xiv. are not contrasted with those who are left behind at the coming of the Lord (to say so is really to beg the whole question), but in contrast to the great body of the saved in the millennial age.

But whether this be in very brief a truthful outline of the teaching of a confessedly difficult passage, or not, I must say that such a question as Mr. Thomas has raised in your columns, is not to be settled by a reference to the Apocalypse, but rather to those plain statements of the Word where instruction on this point is evidently the purpose of the inspiring Spirit. Thus in 1 Cor. xv., where the order of the resurrection is given, we read, "Every man in his own order, Christ the firstfruits; afterward (next in order of succession) they that are Christ's at his coming," or presence, This appears to me decisive. Those to whom, at the coming of the Lord, the description "Christ's" does not apply must belong to those who are not Christ's, and so not believers at all, faithful or unfaithful. It is written "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ (i.e. the Holy Spirit) he is none of his. But those who have the Holy Spirit are his; therefore, according to this Scripture, they will rise at his coming. Will any be left behind? Look at 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17: "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and the voice of an archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds." Does the "we" in this Scripture include only "consecrated believers," or does it embrace the whole of the redeemed then on earth, as forming with the dead in Christ "the Church of the firstborn?" Does not the "we" answer (at least in the character and condition of those intended) to the "ye" of chapter i. 5—9, to whom the Gospel came in power, and who "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God?"

Can it be denied that those who are spoken of in chapter iv. as sharing in the rapture are identical with those mentioned in chapter v., and there designated "Children of light, and children of the day," for whom Christ died (ver. 10), and appointed "to obtain salvation" (ver. 9). "Wrath" is the appointed portion of all the rest, which cannot be said even of "unfaithful believers."

Returning to 1 Cor. xv. we read (ver. 51), "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, at the last trump" (clearly the trump of 1 Thess. iv.). Does the "all" in this verse include only the consecrated? The first resurrection and the rapture of the living saints are simultaneous. Are, then, the sleeping saints, who in life were not fully consecrated, left behind in their graves till the "end of the seven years?" How, then, are they consecrated, or rendered faithful? By the fires of tribulation? No fires of tribulation can reach them, for, according to the word of the Apostle, they are with the Lord (Phil. i. 23). Shall they not come with Him? If not, what poor comfort we must have concerning those who have fallen asleep in Jesus! How tortured by the question, Were they sufficiently consecrated? Who is to say? Views differ so as to what true consecration is.

Again, what of that blessed host which are shown us in Rev. vii., who "have come out of great tribulation" ("the tribulation, the great one."—Alford). Do these represent the "unfaithful believers" who were left behind? If so, how honoured! What, too, of the glorious martyr-host in Rev. xx.? Are they, too, unfaithful believers (for they are certainly among those on the earth amid the fires of tribulation under Antichrist), of whom it is said that "for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God they were beheaded?" What, too, of those of whom, under the persecutions of Antichrist, it is witnessed, "they keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus" (Rev. xiv. 12). Surely this is Bible consecration. The infant Church at Thessalonica, were its members reckoned as among the unfaithful? Why then are they not promised rest until "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven" (2 Thess. i. 7), an event which, when it has taken place (as all students of prophecy of every school admit), the fires of tribulation will have been exhausted? Are the saints mentioned in ver. 10 as those in whom, when He comes, the Lord Jesus will be glorified, are they unfaithful believers?

But it is affirmed that such will be left behind "to be purified in a furnace of affliction seven times heated more than it usually is." So says Mr. Pember in his recent work.* But we have the furnace now, and are not to count it "strange" if fiery trials try us (1 Pet. iv. 12). "In the world," said Jesus, "ye shall have tribulation," and we have it (John xvi. 33). "We must," says the Apostle Paul, even now "through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God," and we do (Acts xiv. 22). Tribulation and Christ's love seem inseparably linked even now, else the question would not be asked, "Who shall separate?" (Rom. viii. 35). Will those who, to escape tribulation, it is to be presumed, have been "unfaithful" before the rapture of their more devoted brethren and sisters, will they, after these are caught away, count it all joy to endure the fiercer persecutions from the hand of the Antichrist? If now, in spite of the indwelling Spirit within them, and the example of their more faithful fellow-believers, they yet remain unfaithful, will they be found otherwise when left behind at such a disadvantage? Having been *un*faithful in the least, will they be faithful in the greater?

"The harvest," says our Lord, "is (not is at) the end of the age"—that is, it marks the close thereof. What then? The wheat is separated from the tares. The tares are bound in bundles to be burned. This is judgment, not purgatory. The distinction made is not between wheat and wheat, but between wheat and tares. So in the parable of the ten virgins; it is a question of oil or no oil.

The Lord's word, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself" (John xiv. 31), is adapted to all who have been given Him by the Father (John xvii. 24), and in virtue of a claim, grounded, not on the measure of their practical holiness, but on the blood of redemption; not the Spirit's work in them, but Christ's work for them.

Do I seem to be pressing these points unduly? Believe me, though I write earnestly, I do so in all love, and under a most solemn sense of the confusion that the view I am contending against is working in many minds. With very many others, I long, with an increasing longing, for a fuller and deeper consecration both in word and deed to the Lord. I believe this to be the one great need of the present time; but I fear lest in our anxiety to promote this we should be found dislocating the truth of the Scriptures (not wilfully, no Christian would do this). In the "due praise" (1 Cor. iv. 5) and the promised rewards for faithful service (1 Cor. iii.), we surely have a sufficient motive for whole-hearted fidelity, together with that still higher consideration, "Who loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20). May God the Holy Spirit guide our hearts and minds, and make us, in all our communications one to another, true helpers to a fuller "knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding," and so much the more as we see "the day approaching."—I am faithfully yours, in the truth,

Frank H. White.

COUNT CAMPELLO'S WORK.

Something like a revival of Christianity has recently been commenced in Arrona, Italy, under the leadership of the Count de Campello, who was formerly a canon of St. Peter's in Rome, but is now a true and devoted servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. The account of the conflict with the powers of darkness, as represented by the Church of Rome, that commenced immediately on the opening of this new mission at Arrona, would be amazing, if it did not reveal such almost incredible folly and blindness on the part of those who assume to be the spiritual leaders of the people.

On the Sunday when the mission-hall was opened for the first time, the priest preached a violent sermon against "these pests of Protestants—heretics, excommunicated, rapacious wolves, devastating his fold; more to be feared than the cholera," and warned his people that if any went to hear this new preaching they would be excommunicated. This being the day on which a festa of the Madonna del Rosario was held, a huge doll, dressed in silks, was carried round the town, the "devout" following and reciting the rosary, and when, amid the clanging of bells and firing of guns, the priest blessed the people, he bade the "wolves" to fly. In the evening, however, as soon as the mission-hall was opened it was crowded with people, who during the service listened with the utmost attention, and at the close, said, "we shall always attend these services, we have found what we want." A fortnight after, on October 24, another mission-hall was opened at Ferentillo, and this also was crowded, in spite of the anathemas of the priests, the people manifesting their sympathy by frequent applause.

The meetings at Arrona are now crowded every evening, more than a hundred persons leaving their work, their homes, and their shops, to hear God's Word read, and even when the service is over they are unwilling to leave. It is hoped also that a mission will shortly be commenced at Terni. The alarm of the priests, who would rather see Italians atheists than truly believers in Christ Jesus, is great. In a recent sermon the Archbishop called the Protestants rapacious wolves, &c., and warned all to have nothing to do with them, not even to give them a morsel of bread, that they might be forced to leave his diocese.

THE END OF THE YEAR.—2.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST.

It will be well remembered that when the disciples asked our Lord, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" the answer was, "Take heed that no man lead you astray." To mere curiosity Christ gave no reply. He led them away from the curious to themselves. He did not give the knowledge they sought concerning "the end," but a caution they and all his followers would need; and He sent down a word that was to be the motto-word for his servants in all after times: "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

Can we be wrong in saying that to those earnest and faithful disciples of the kingdom of light to whom we referred at the close of our last week's paper, the attitude of heedfulness is specially becoming? The year has brought on every hand

UNREALISED HOPES.

Let us, as we close this period, take a glance backward, and also one at present conditions. The twofold glance will teach important lessons for the future, and may reveal counter-plottings which must be marked. We look back three centuries and see this great nation, with an all but universal indignation, throwing off by a Protesting Reformation the notions which an arrogant clergy had spun out of Christianity, and which had sought to prostrate the people at the feet of ministers of religion: we now look round, and see a deep-laid design to undo that national Reformation, and by adaptation of pre-reformation practices to the sensuousness of the age, to get back the influence of the priesthood over the homes and lives of Englishmen. We look back, and see during later years, when a destructive criticism and agnostic science had weakened confidence in Divine Revelation, how, by the bringing to light of hidden records, and by the proved rashness of scientific conclusions, corroborations of Scripture were given on every hand: we look round, and see the leaven of the baseless unbelief abiding after the refutation,—how it is at present paralysing faith in the nominal Church, and fostering a sceptical pride in those without, that makes them inaccessible to the message of Christianity. We look back, and note how England set itself to legislate for the toilers; shortening their hours of labour, establishing schools, and giving them political enfranchisement: we look round, and see a small but determined body of the enfranchised propagating an envious discontent, and teaching doctrines that would abolish the moral law, destroy the healthy principle of individualism, and which look on to such an appeal to force as could only be put down by that which would be civil war. We look back, and behold in recent years how culture has made its boast, and philosophy has taught that material civilisation and social advancement must eliminate the sins, pride, and animalism of society: we look round, and we see beneath the veneer of fashion, evidences of—shall I speak frankly?—an impurity in certain sections of what is termed "Society" that is not a whit behind what characterised the Parisian indulgencies of the sixteenth century. Once more: we look back, and mark political efforts to assert popular control, and the sovereignty of the people in making war, with its wasting horrors: we look round as we close 1886, and we see monarchs and representative ministers, virtually uncontrolled, as they crush the life out of peoples with their multiplied costly armaments, as able to plunge nations into devastating wars as they were centuries ago, and filling all Europe with dread of a tremendous outburst of warfare. And what do we learn from such glances? That mere naturalism is miserable reliance; that an improved humanity without supernatural action on human hearts is an impossibility; that there is a no more childish or pitiful dream than that of an era that has outgrown Christianity; and that our age, as much as the past ages, justifies Christ's warning to his followers, not to be led astray. Yea, more:

THE TIME WILL COME,

said the guiding and prophetic Spirit concerning the professed followers of Christ, "when they will not endure the sound doctrine; but having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts" (R.V.). Let us note the words. There is the sound doctrine (or teaching, as in the margin). There will be a time when this will be disliked and not borne with. Another doctrine will be sought, and novelties hankered after. The false or minimised doctrine will accommodate itself to the appetite. The likings of the people, and not their perfecting in righteousness, will guide the way to the accommodating teaching, and to the choice of pastors. And this being so, there will be no lack in this regard. Those who cannot endure the wholesome doctrine will be able to "heap" to themselves teachers after their own heart. That is, men and women, not willing to carry themselves according to the truth which tends to godliness, will find doctrines and expounders who suit their lives, and there will be no lack of opportunities adapted to their taste. What a comprehensive and searching word!

And let this be noted: a self-indulgent and worldly life may cling to the grand traditions and hopes of Christianity, while it is totally disinclined to its high morality and spiritual requirements. If, therefore, New Testament teachings in their integrity demand separateness and denial of self in believers; and if the doctrine of Christ crucified reveals, as nothing else does, the awfulness of sin; and, while it cleanses the conscience, lays on it a binding demand for holy service, a new theology which promises an emancipation from a cross-bearing life, will be in request by such professors, and the doctrine of expiatory atonement will be undesired in the pew, as well as that it will be ignored in the prayers and sermons of the pulpit. Such is the state of things upon us.

CONTRASTS.

"There is nothing," said Dean Church last year, "more wonderful in the religious history of our race, than the interval between the Book of Judges and the Book of Psalms." Certainly the contrast is an expression of extraordinary growth. It is true that the kingdom of Judah was becoming a mere kingdom of this world, but beyond all the past had known, from "hidden depths of enlightened souls sprung up unexpected and vivid words, in which generation after generation has found the counterpart of its own convictions and hopes, its own fears and perplexities, its own confidence and joys, in its brightest and darkest hours."

I will not say that progress has not been also the mark of the Christian ages, but assuredly there are aspects of Christian communities now that are far from contrasting so favourably with the first century of the Church of the Lord Jesus. The more carefully that century is studied, the more do recent Church students tell us of the heavenly citizenship of the primitive Christians; their bond of love; their self-surrender and self-devotion; their jealousy of evil; their high standard; their deep joys; their direct and simple religiousness in the whole intercourse and direction of life. That dawn of a new life in the Church lifted up the gates of a new era for the world. Since that first period, magnificent have been the results of the faith as it has prompted zeal manward in the Christian Church. But now, alas! the very word "Church" is weighted with reproach. It no longer describes "the faithful in Christ Jesus." If the possibilities of language allowed, it would be well to use the word no longer in such a sense. Of old it was "the Camp of Israel," and "the mixed multitude." With us, the mixed multitude and the Church are one. Should a martyr spirit of the first ages revisit the earth, he would see much to fill him with a strange astonishment. Instead of the mutual love among believers that once filled a pagan and selfish multitude with wonder, he would witness gulfs of chilling and even hostile alienation among Christians, and which sections among them were seeking to deepen and widen. Instead of churches of believers filled with the gifts which the Spirit distributed of old, and enriched by endowments for reciprocal profiting, he would witness all the teaching and exhortation confined to one official head. Instead of disciples meeting on the Lord's day to "sing hymns to Christ as God," he would observe a growing custom to depute the praising of Christ to a choir, the members of which mostly went away when the Lord's death was to be shown forth. Instead of the unsaved "who were perishing," in a congregation, being warned and entreated, he would hear in thousands of worshipping places, sermons that took for granted that there was no longer any distinction between the saved and the unsaved; and he would hear precious assurances of peace and safety applied to men who would repudiate the character of being new creatures in Christ Jesus. If such a martyred one revisited us now, and listened to recommendations made with a view to getting absentees to worship God on Sundays, he would hear counsels, not to churches to humble themselves in prayer, but to hire men singers and women singers, who should entertain the people by solos and quartetts. It is to be feared from his knowledge of the past, that he would call very much of our nineteenth century public worship a pagan entertainment under a Christian garb, and would be in danger of thinking that to multitudes Christianity had become a mere tradition, a form out of which the vital meaning had dropped, and that its services were kept up as a performance.

But we turn from these thoughts. Thank God, alarm about these things is seizing those who glory in nothing so much as that they belong to the world's Redeemer. Indifference in relation to these falsehoods in Christian profession is coming to an end. It is more and more alarmingly seen that these new methods of Christian life are doing nothing to reach the depths of vice, foulness, drunkenness, extravagance, and misery, that lie heavily upon the times. There is growing on all sides

A WITNESSING PROTEST.

Some tell us ours is an age of transition. Rather it is an age when a growing number of faithful Christian disciples disclaim and discountenance very much that passes under a Christian name. If the Reformation of the sixteenth century was that of doctrine, a movement is now more silently, but not less powerfully, going on everywhere, that insists upon a reformation of life. I do not mean that all these protestors are separating themselves from Christian churches. To many of them the unorganised does not commend itself, and is, as they think, apt to become chaotic. But they have strong convictions that the confounding of merely human methods in ecclesiastical arrangements with the authority of inspiration has been the hugest of mistakes; and I venture to affirm, and say it after unusual opportunities of observation and intercourse, that advocates of the questionable in Christian methods, and preachers of strange or superficial matters in Christian pulpits, have apparently very little apprehension of the heavy cross which these things are to many who are the very salt of Christian churches. We are closing a year of Conferences for counsel and prayer. Many of those Conferences have been composed of intensely earnest persons. There may be a temptation to make too much of man and of mere sentiment in these assemblies, but I have known one when man was forgotten in the overpowering presence of the Spirit of God; where the one desire was to be supremely Christ's; where spirits were prostrate before the Lord like vine-branches ready for the pruning, and where (as Robert McCheyne once reminded Scotland in his tract, "Why is God a Stranger in the Land?") it was in measure realised that when "the apostles and disciples were praying together, they were all filled with the Holy Ghost; and great grace was upon them all." Doubtless others could tell of a like experience.

I will say more: during a life of many years I have not known a period when yearnings, aspirations, and out-reachings after the incoming of the Spirit of Power, have been the mark of so many Christian men as at the present hour. Truly such men are wearied of an age of materialism, and of human substitutes for spiritual life. And such men are to be found everywhere, in all churches, and in most unexpected places. We know not unto what this silent and widely-pervasive action of the Spirit will grow. We need not be solicitous to know. Our attitude at such a time should be that of quick understanding of the Spirit's motions, and obedience to his monitions. "Speak, Lord; thy servant heareth," expresses our true position. The unexpected will come to the waiting ones. Their duty in relation to the formal, or doubtful, or false, in Christian working and advocacy, will be made plain as step by step they are in union with Him who was sent forth to glorify Christ, and to bring all things to remembrance that He spake when present with men.

At the beginning of the New Year we may at least try to learn our duty for the new period.

Tunbridge Wells.

GOSPEL WORK IN WALES.—The constant supply of Gospel tracts, papers, and booklets to people attending the Brecon markets, soldiers in barracks and hospital, lodging-houses, mission-room and open-air services, has been continued in Brecon and its neighbourhood for months, and an occasional parcel has been sent to a navvies' camp near Brecon. The supply being now exhausted, any parcels of illustrated religious papers, tracts, &c., would be most gratefully received. The most encouraging reports have been received of the blessed results attending the distribution of former parcels kindly sent by Christian friends to Mr. D. Devoir Thomas, Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Brecon.

OUR CITY WORK-GIRLS.

The needs of factory and other working girls of the lower class is a matter which has been much laid on the hearts of Christian workers of late. Truly much has been done, when we consider the self-denying labours of some who have realised the awful need, and striven to save some of these girls from the temptations by which they are daily and hourly surrounded. But what has been done is but very very little compared with what needs to be done.

In London alone there are from 100,000 to 150,000 women and girls employed in day labour, exclusive of the better class of shop girls, milliners, dressmakers, &c.

What becomes of these girls after work hours? Of course they ought to go home, but they do not. They are thronging the lowest public-houses, music-halls, theatres, standing in the streets, doing anything to find excitement and amusement after the drudgery and monotony of their daily labour.

It is possible to help them, but they must be sought out. Hidden all day, as they are, in the factory or work-room, few of those who are sheltered in luxurious homes realise even the existence of the thousands on thousands of girls under twenty years of age who have nowhere to spend their evenings. Let us only think what it would be to stand or sit in the same place day after day, and all day long, in the same close room, listening to the same whirr of the engines, performing the same mechanical action—it may be hundreds of times each hour. Let us think what it would be after a day like that to go home to a closer room, to hear the worse sounds of swearing and drunkenness. Is it to be wondered that they rush headlong into scenes of what is pleasure to their imagination, at all events, and that they go willingly enough to the public-house or music-hall, where there is light and warmth and laughter.

The Y.W.C.A. have done something towards founding evening clubs where the girls may meet, and be brought under Christian influence; all of these have been most successful, the girls come willingly, and become warmly attached to any lady who devotes herself to their interests. Many other missions for this class have been carried on by those whose names are well known, for instance, that of Mr. Holland in Whitechapel, Miss Macpherson, Dr. Barnardo, and many others.

Though we have written chiefly of the need in London, we need but to enforce our appeal on behalf of our large manufacturing towns. The successful Evening Homes in Manchester, Nottingham, and many other towns have proved the good which can be done, but here again the need is so enormous that the present efforts should be multiplied a thousand-fold.

Perhaps, through the medium of your columns, or privately, others who are seeking the benefit of this class will communicate with us, in order that we may mutually endeavour to form some scheme by which real lasting good may be effected.

Of course, to do this work efficiently, large funds and many workers will be required; but we feel sure that many will come forward to save these girls from the peril to which they are at present nightly exposed.—Yours faithfully,

Emily C. Kinnaird, Hon. Sec. London Council, Y.W.C.A.

Some men tread on thorns the moment they step outside the cradle. Every step is a progression in suffering. Poverty, misery, disappointment, are their inheritance. But, thanks be to God, it is possible for torn and weary feet to tread the cool green pastures of heaven. Pierced feet led the way to glory, and pierced feet tread it still. YOUNG WOMEN and their DANGERS.

Seeing an extract from the letter of "An English Mother," in your issue of November 25, and the comment thereon, I am induced to make known, through your paper, the work of the "Travellers' Aid" Society, one of the objects of which is to prevent young girls from falling into the clutches of bad registry offices and agents of the description she mentions. The "Travellers' Aid" is willing to make inquiries about a situation that any young woman is in negotiation about, if application is made to the Secretary. It is able to do this both in the provinces and abroad by means of its local workers and its connection with the Young Women's Christian Association and the International Union of the Friends of Young Girls.

If all young women were to take the precautions suggested by "An English Mother," there is no doubt that many would be saved from the terrible fate to which they are so easily decoyed. Unfortunately, those to whom these dangers are greatest, namely, the friendless and uneducated, can scarcely be expected to know how to set about obtaining the information which would enable them to write to the British Consul, and the Chaplain of the Embassy, or satisfactorily to investigate the character of a situation, even if they did obtain the address of the proposed employer. It presents a much smaller difficulty to such girls to write to the Secretary of the "Travellers' Aid," stating the address of the registry office to which they have applied, and all particulars they know of the situation, which it is suggested they shall take, asking that inquiries may be made as to its character. Better still, if they would write before applying to a registry office, a list of respectable offices would be forwarded to them. These lists have been issued by the Registries Committee of the National Vigilance Association, and can be obtained from their office, 267, Strand. This is one of the ways, by means of which the "Travellers' Aid" endeavours to protect the unprotected working girls for whom "An English Mother" so rightly feels anxiety.

Other ways are: In England, meeting girls arriving at the stations in London and other towns, and seeing them into safe hands; watching the arrival of trains at the London stations by means of a station visitor and through the kind help given by many of the station officials, and taking charge of young women whose circumstances appear to be dangerous; meeting the boats arriving at the London docks; putting up notices in country stations, with a reference to a lady living on the spot who is willing to advise and befriend any girls who go to her.

Abroad, the Society has now ladies living at ports in all parts of the world, who have undertaken to deal with any girls who may apply to them according to their different needs. There are warnings up in the steamships begging young women on landing, on no account to go to addresses given them by strangers, but if they have no friends at the port, to go at once to the lady living there, whose address is appended to the warning, with those of ladies at other ports. Passengers can take away copies of these papers on landing.

May I take this opportunity of reminding all English mothers, and others, of the valuable assistance they can give to our work by sending even a small gift to our funds. The scheme cannot be carried out in all its details without money, and it is not yet sufficiently known to command the necessary support.

(Miss) E. Dimock, Secretary.

[This is one of the most important and valuable agencies ever established for the benefit of young women. We hope our readers will not only support it most generously, but will use every possible endeavour to have the foregoing statement reprinted in all provincial and continental papers.—Ed.]

Protestant Convention, Glasgow.

(Concluded from our last.)

Probably the famous case of Rev. P. Leys did as much as anything that has happened of late to rouse the feelings that culminated in the calling of the Convention. It was not unfitting, therefore, that that case should be referred to by the assembled fathers and brethren. Early on the second day of the Conference a semi-private conclave was held at the Christian Institute, when the bearings of the case were freely discussed. In the result a large and representative committee was appointed, embracing ardent friends of the Protestant cause in the three kingdoms. They will confer and decide as to what steps should be taken for furthering the immediate and prospective interests of Mr. Ley's grandchildren, who were the subjects of the recent action.

At the various sessions of the Conference, the chair was occupied by well-known friends of Protestant truth, all of whom contributed substantially to the sum total of information and of stimulus. At the close of the Conference proper, a free discussion took place as to what practical measures should be adopted in order to arrest the progress of Papal aggression in Great Britain. Many suggestions were made, which might be comprehensively summed up in the wider dissemination of evangelical Protestant doctrine, by the establishment of institutes, the delivery of lectures, the training of students, the holding of classes for the instruction of the young, &c.

The Convention closed by a public meeting, on Thursday evening, in the City Hall, which was probably three parts full. The speakers, delegates, and others filled the spacious platform, and the gathering was presided over by Mr. J. A. Campbell, M.P., of Glasgow University—the only parliamentary representative, we may say, connected with the city who manifested any interest in the gatherings of the three days. Mr. Campbell's sympathetic and important utterance we give pretty fully in a subsequent column.

Resolutions were submitted, (1) calling for the preservation of the Protestant safeguards around the throne and for the application of Scriptural principles to the civil constitution and administration of the realm; (2) declaring that Popish agression should be strenuously resisted by every legitimate means; and (3) empowering the Directors of the Alliance to transmit a memorial to the Queen and several prominent statesmen, protesting against any attempt to renewed diplomatic relations with the Vatican. These resolutions were spoken to in earnest addresses by Canon Taylor, Mr. A. H. Guinness, Rev. Dr. Magee, Lord R. Montagu, Dr. Verner White, Rev. G. Macaulay, and others, and enthusiastically endorsed by the meeting. The address of Lord Robert Montagu, so valuable as showing the identity of the aims and principles of the Romish system before and since the Reformation, will be found at length in succeeding columns, and also that by Mr. Guinness.

We earnestly reiterate the hope we expressed last week, that the important utterances at the Convention, which we have so fully reproduced, may receive from the public generally the attention and study they deserve. We consider that the nation owes a hearty debt of gratitude to the directors of the Scottish Protestant Alliance for the enlightenment and guidance they have afforded to it at this crisis in its religious history. No one, we may add, who had a share in organising the Convention, has earned a greater meed of thanks than the Hon. Secretary, Rev. James Kerr, whose devoted and assiduous labours contributed so largely to the success of the meetings.

At the close of its report of the proceedings, The Christian Leader says:—"The good work accomplished by the Convention began to be apparent on the day following this demonstration in the City Hall, when the walls and hoardings of Glasgow were covered with posters intimating a series of lectures against Scottish Protestantism by one of the local priests, a fiery pervert from the Free Church. Father Munro has his work cut out for him if he is proposing to reply to the indictment tabled in the second city of the Empire against that baptized paganism, by her unqualified revolt from which Scotland has become the nation that she is."

Principles of the Church of Rome.

By Lord ROBERT MONTAGU.

We have to consider the leading principles of the Roman Church in pre-Reformation times; and then compare them with the principles of that Church since the Reformation. We must begin with the fundamental principle of Popery in early times, and its corollaries; and then the fundamental principle of Popery in somewhat later times, and its corollaries; making seven principles in all.

It will not be denied by any student of history that, from the middle of the fifth century up to the time of the Reformation, the assumption of the universal supremacy of the Pope, spiritual and temporal, on the one side; and the absolute obedience to the Pope, of all men, kings and people, on the other, has been the fundamental principle of the Papacy. It was with knowledge and perception that, just as the Reformation was breaking out, the Papal Legate of England, Cardinal Pole, declared that the whole movement sprang entirely from a denial of the Pope's absolute authority.

The argument on which that principle was founded proves the same. That argument will be found in the Canon of Pope Celestinus I. in the Third Council of Ephesus, in 431 A.D., which was rehearsed and endorsed by the Vatican Council in 1870. It said that Peter is the Pillar of the Faith, and the foundation of the Catholic Church; that he received the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and lives, presides, and judges in all the Popes, who are Peter's successors in the Holy See of Rome, to this day. That was the fundamental principle.

Pope Nicholas I., in 858 A.D., decreed three other principles, which are corollaries to that fundamental principle: (1) There may always be an appeal, to the Pope, from the judgments and decrees of kings and their courts of justice; but no appeal from any ecclesiastical sentence to a king or his courts of justice. In the language of the Canonists: "The Pope may reopen the judgment of every judge and ruler, but no one may review a decision of the Pope." The following was the decree of Pope Nicholas I.; it is called "Distinctio 96, cap. Satis": "It has been sufficiently proved that a Pope can neither be bound nor acquitted by any secular Power; for the Pope, as is well known, was called God by that pious Emperor, Constantine; and it is very clear that God cannot be judged by men." That is part of the Canon Law of Rome, and a matter of faith for all Romanists.

(2) All clerics, even to the lowest grade, are exempted from the jurisdiction of all civil courts, and from all civil laws, and from all secular taxes. Pope Innocent III., in 1215, renewed this decree in the Lateran Council.

(3) The Pope may depose kings and absolve subjects from their oaths of allegiance, and may give away their kingdoms to whomsoever he may choose. That principle is asserted in the decretal letter of Nicholas I. to the Emperor Michael. Thus I have given four principles of the Roman church—a fundamental principle, and three corollaries. Another fundamental principle was decreed by Pope Adrian IV. in the Fourth Council of Constantinople, in 869 A.D., I mean, the Infallibility of the Pope, or, as it was then termed, "The supreme power and authority to teach all nations and men." Pope Pius IX., in 1870, declared this to be the basis or fundamental principle of Popery. This he announced in his decretal letter to the Archbishop of Munich.

Before mentioning the two corollaries of this second fundamental principle, let me call your attention to the theory of the Papacy. You will find it clearly stated in the "De Regimine Principum" of Thomas Aquinas, in 1250, and also in his theological "Summa." It is as follows: The Church of Rome is one Monarchy over all the kingdoms of the earth, and is, among temporal kingdoms, as the mind or soul in the body of a man, or as God in the world. The church of Rome was instituted by Christ to direct men to the ultimate end of man; and, therefore, must be unerring, and must also govern all secondary ends; she must order everything which has the least relation to the ultimate end, whether it helps or obstructs men in attaining the end. Therefore the church of Rome must not only have all spiritual power, but also the supreme temporal power. Further, the church of Rome was ordained to teach all doctrines which are to be believed, and all moral laws to be observed; and, therefore, she must have a certain knowledge of all doctrines and laws, and must regulate every act of man; because no act can escape a moral character.

Then the Doctors of Rome ventured on the ground of prophecy, and thus interpreted Nebuchadnezzar's dream: The stone which crushed and took the place of the great image, that is, the place of the four great Universal Empires, was the church of Rome; and, as the four Pagan Empires were not spiritual, but temporal dominions, therefore the church which took their place must also be a universal temporal dominion. Those Roman Doctors added that, as our Lord had said, "Unto Me all power in heaven and earth is given," therefore the Roman church has all power in heaven and earth. That is the "plentitude of power" which is ascribed to every Pope, not only over all the affairs of earth, but also a power to admit to the kingdom of heaven whom he choses, and to exclude whom he likes.

That was the theory which Thomas Aquinas and other great writers developed. But I must also quote the words of Cardinal Saint Peter Damianus, a great divine in A.D. 1049. He thus paraphrased those words of 2 Thess. ii., namely, "He that letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way." The paraphrase of Peter Damian is: "Our Lord said, as it were, I have placed in the hands of thee, Peter, and of thy successors, the keys of my Universal Church; and have constituted thee my Vicar or Vicegerent; and, if that be too little, lo! I have given thee all the kingdoms of the world also; and in time, the Roman emperors, and all kings, who now let and hinder thee, shall be taken away from the Universal Empire of Rome; and then thou shalt be the sole legislator and sole ruler."

Thus we see how it was that all the Popes aimed at filling the universal throne of the Pagan emperors of Rome. This was so much the idea, that Pope Adrian IV., according to Petrus Parisiensis, exclaimed: "We are not the successors of Peter in feeding the sheep; but the successors of Romulus in fleecing and killing them."

To show the extent to which this principle was carried, I will quote a passage which occurs four times in the Canon Law of Rome. It is a decree of Pope Nicholas I., in 858 A.D., just after the false Isidorian Decrees had been published. It is as follows: "The Pope can change the natures of things, applying the substantials of one thing to another" (this is an allusion to Transubstantiation, although the question was not mooted until 831, by Paschasius Radbertus; and was not decred until 1215). The decree continues: "He can even make something out of nothing" (in allusion to the Pope's supposed power to decree that a sin, or defect, shall be a righteous act). The decree continues: "He can change injustice into righteousness; he can correct the laws of States, and alter them altogether; and, by the plenitude of his power, he can, since he is above all law, dispense from every law." Remember, further, that, in the Canon Law, in an "Extravagans" of John XXII., the Pope is said to be "Our Lord God the Pope"; and the Pontificale directs him to be adored on the High Altar at his consecration.

Now we come to two corollaries from the principle of Infallibility. (1) The Bulls "In Cœnâ Domini," or the annual cursing on Maunday Thursday, the anniversary of the institution of the Lord's Supper. On that day, all who doubted a single article of faith, according to the maxim of Canon law "Dubius in fide hæreticus est:" as well as all who refused absolute obedience to the Pope's authority, were anathematised and excommunicated. It will be observed that refusing obedience is a denial of the first fundamental; and doubting is opposed to the Infallibility.

(2) The other corollary is the duty of persecuting. This comes under three heads. (a) Ecclesiastical persecution. Thomas Aquinas states this doctrine succinctly, in his "Secunda Secundæ," question xi., article 3; every bishop at his consecration, has to swear that he will, to the utmost of his ability, persecute and exterminate every heretic. (b) Persecution by private persons. Pope Urban II., in 1088 A.D, decreed—and it is embodied in the Canon Law of Rome, as Cause xxii., question v. chapter 47, "Excommunicamus"—as follows: "Those are not to be accounted murderers or homicides, who, when burning with love and zeal for their Catholic Mother, against excommunicated persons, shall happen to kill a few of them." When the Canon Law was revised by a Commission of Cardinals, under Pope Gregory XIII., in 1580, this decree was left in, and was made an article of faith. It is now De fide, and part of the unalterable law of the church of Rome.

(c) Boycotting. This was invented by Pope Alexander III., in the Third Council of Lateran, chapter 27, in the year 1179. The Canon is as follows:—"We decree that all heretics, and those that defend them, and those even who receive them, shall lie under anathema; and we prohibit all men, under pain of anathema, to admit such into their houses, or to allow them to subsist on their lands, or to give them any assistance, or even to transact any business, as buying or selling, with them...Moreover we command all the faithful to make war with great hardihood against such pests of society, and to protect all Christian people against them; and we grant to such, remission of all their sins for doing so. Moreover, we will that all the property, goods and chattels of heretics, and of their defenders and receivers, be confiscated; and that they themselves shall be seized and sold as slaves," &c.

That Pope, Alexander III., was the Pope who, in 1162, permitted himself to be adored in the public streets, and to be called, by a Saracen prince, "the good God of the Christians;" and the Papal Court, who stood around, applied to him the words, concerning our Lord, in Ps. lxxii. 11: "All kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him." He was the Pope who met the Emperor Frederick I., "Tilebeard," in the square in front of St. Mark's, Venice, and made the Emperor throw himself flat down in the dust and pray to the Pope for absolution; while the Pope planted his foot on the Emperor's neck and quoted the words of Ps. xci. 13, applying them to himself: "Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder; the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet." The Emperor, hurt at the indignity, said, "I bow not to thee, but to Peter in thee;" and the Pope replied, "Et mihi, et Petro."

Now let us pass to the modern, or post-Reformation period. As to the first fundamental principle, the present Pope, in the Encyclical of August 12, 1879, commanded all bishops to adopt and teach all the doctrines of Thomas Aquinas, and to command the study of his works. And in the Encyclical of November 1, 1885, called "Immortale Dei," he proclaimed that the Roman church was instituted by Christ, comprising all races of men, without limit of time or place; who are in subjection to the Pope, who has supreme authority, spiritual and temporal, over all societies; and who has the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and has a supreme legislative, judicial, and co-active authority in both spheres. He further stated that the Reformation was a rebellion against this truth, and so can never be tolerated by the Pope.

The right of appeal from the King's Court to the Pope was reasserted in 1824 by Pope Leo XII., in the decretal letter to the King of France.

The exemption of all clerics from civil jurisdiction and taxes was reasserted in the Bull Apostolicæ Sedis, of December 19, 1869, which was promulgated in the Vatican Council.

The deposing power was re-asserted by Pius VI. in 1786, in the Bull Super Soliditate, when he declared that "The Pope can deprive kings of their authority to rule, and absolve subjects from their allegiance." And Suarez, the Jesuit, in his Defensio Fidei, book vi., chapter 4, lays it down that: "It is of faith that the Pope has the right of deposing heretical kings, and kings that rebel against his authority. Monarchs so deposed by the Pope thereby become notorious tyrants, and may be killed by the first who can reach them...If the public cause cannot find its defence in the public death of a tyrant, it is lawful for the first comer to assassinate him." Up to the time of James I. of England, there were many Romanists who held to the theological doctrines of the church or Rome; but their allegiance was centred in the king; and they therefore abjured the Pope's deposing power. But Pope Paul V. issued two briefs, and Pope Urban VIII. another, and made all men "Catholics first, and Englishmen after" like the Jesuits; that is, he made them centre their allegiance in the Pope.

The second fundamental principle, the infallibility of the Popes, from the first on the list, and of every Pope that ever shall be, was made an article of Faith in the Vatican Council of the year 1870; and Pope Pius IX. declared it to be "the fudamental principle" of Popery.

The Bulls "In Cœnâ Domini," or the annual cursings, were renewed by the Bull "Apostolicæ Sedis," of December 19, 1869, which was promulgated in the Vatican Council. Therefore, all heretics, and all who deny the Pope's universal authority, are ipso facto excommunicated.

As to the duty of persecuting, the bishops' oaths are the same as formerly, they still swear that they will use their best endeavours to persecute. Pope Pius IX. declared, in an Allocution before a Consistory of Cardinals in September, 1851, that "the Roman Catholic religion must be exclusively dominant; and every other worship must be banished and interdicted." The Encyclical of 1854 anathematised Liberty of Conscience, as "a pestilential error, and a pest of all others to be most dreaded. The Encyclical of 1864 repeats all this and a great deal more, so that Earl Russell declared it to be utterly incompatible with civil Government, the rights of every people."

As to boycotting, I will quote, "The Church and the Sovereign Pontiff," a catechism by the Jesuit Maurel, because it has been endorsed by a Brief of the present Pope, and by two archbishops, about twenty bishops, and the General of the Jesuits. There the people of Great Britain and Ireland are taught that "it is forbidden to hold any communication, or to have any connection with an excommunicated person," whether by speech or by letter, or merely by personal salutations; and all intercourse in business, and even the amenities of society, are forbidden.

As to the awful doctrine of homicide, Busembaum, in his "Moral Theology" (Lacroix's edition, 1757) teaches that "a man who has been excommunicated by the Pope may be killed anywhere; because the Pope has an indirect jurisdiction over the whole world, even in temporal things." But I do not wonder at this awful doctrine, because Cardinal Bellarmine had thus expounded the doctrine of the Roman church: "The Pope can, if expedient for the church, alter the positive precepts of the Apostles."

In conclusion, I will only remind you that the Papacy is using the Roman Catholic church in Ireland, and the ignorance of the Irish peasants, as well as the learned and accomplished Ritualists, and bishops, and statesmen in England, to spread and enforce those principles, and to form a basis of operations against Europe, America, and our Colonies. Great Britain is to be crushed under the Pope's feet, and is then to be used as a fulcrum against the liberties and all that is pure in the religion of Christendom. Enormous issues are involved in the success of the conspirators. The overthrow of the Protestant Crown and Protestant Churches in Great Britain is the destruction of Protestantism throughout the world, and the establishment of the absolute and universal dominion of the Pope.

Romanism in Scotland.

By Mr. A. H. GUINNESS, London.

Mr. Guinness said that, as the representative of the Protestant Alliance of England, united as it was in a firm bond of nnion with the Scottish Protestant Alliance, he felt it a duty to attend this Convention in order to cement even more strongly the union of the two Societies. It was not the first occasion on which he had had the pleasure of addressing a Scottish audience. When Pope Pius IX., said to be of blessed memory, but who, according to the evidence of The Tablet and other Romish journals, was still in purgatory—when this Pope first proclaimed his intention to confer a Romish Hierarchy on Scotland, he (Mr. Guinness) had been invited to a meeting of delegates from the Protestant Associations throughout the country, convened to consider whether any, and what steps should be taken to oppose the accomplishment of the projected invasion. At this Convention ministers from all parts of Scotland were assembled, men of profound learning and sagacity, some of whom were present on this occasion. Upon discussing the question at issue, he found that all the gentlemen present were thoroughly satisfied and convinced that the existing Scottish law was ample and sufficient to prevent the intrusion of a Romish Hierarchy; and, notwithstanding all that he could urge, it was resolved that it was unnecessary to take any steps to ascertain the state of the law.

As soon, however, as the Romish Hierarchy had been established, these gentlemen were awakened and aroused to action. They proceeded to obtain the highest legal opinions; cases for counsel were submitted to the Lord Advocate and the Dean of Faculty, who gave as their opinion that there was no existing law which could prove effective to hinder the establishment of the proposed Romish Hierarchy in Scotland. Mr. Guinness said that, in referring to these facts, his object was to rouse his Scottish fellow-countrymen from a state of apathy and indifference, and to point out how easily they might be lulled into a false sense of security, only to be awakened when it would be too late.

Mr. Guinness proceeded to describe the effects of the establishment of the Romish Hierarchy. Scotland, he said, had been parcelled out into Romish provinces, districts, and parishes; Romish churches, chapels, schools, colleges, monasteries, and convents had sprung up in their midst. Romish priests now proselytise and pervert with impunity, and their votaries, in increasing numbers, are being trained up in allegiance to a foreign power, prepared to enforce in this country the mandates of the Pope, and to compel obedience to his Canon Law. All this is demanded in the name of toleration. Toleration, he said, is a grand principle, and cost what it will, toleration we will uphold and maintain; but, asked Mr. Guinness, is there one single particular in which our fellow Roman Catholic subjects fail to receive toleration? Have they not every liberty for the fullest profession of their religion? But the toleration asked for in the present day is absolutely one sided.

Every appeal for toleration made by Roman Catholics and Romanisers in this country is held up to admiration; but if we ask that the rights of Protestants shall be considered, we are treated with derision, as "senseless and irrational," as bigoted and intolerant. Call attention to the fact that the laws are broken by Roman Catholics—laws against monasteries, laws against lotteries, laws against the assumption of Ecclesiastical Territorial titles—and an outcry is at once made, not against the law breakers, but against the law abiders—the bigoted, intolerant Protestants! Ask that the services in our churches may be carried out according to law, and a deaf ear is turned to our remonstrances. But if the Protestant laity appeal to the law in their own defence, immediately the cry of persecution is raised; the Bishops are up in arms, and impose their veto in defence of the lawless! The object aimed at is the establishment a sacerdotal tyranny, and in the end to effect re-union with the Church of Rome, and to bring this "Imperial race under subjection" to the Papal power.

Men of Scotland! Are you prepared to submit to this despotism? Are you willing to place your necks under the wheels of this Romish Juggernaut? Has Scotland lost its manhood? Have you forgotten the sufferings of your martyred fathers? Are you slaves so base—the degenerate descendants of those who won your liberties with their blood, and "counted not their lives dear unto them" for the cause of the Gospel of Christ? (Cries of "No.") I hail that denial; but if it should be so—if, after this Convention is over, you relapse again into a state of apathy and indifference, and allow yourselves to be lulled asleep into a false sense of security, then I would warn you solemnly, in the words of Canon Melville—words more true, words more forcible I cannot find—in his words I say to you: "Make peace if you will with Popery; receive it into your senate; shrine it in your churches, plant it in your hearts. But be ye certain—as certain as there is a heaven above you, and a God over you—that the Popery thus honoured and embraced is the very Popery that was loathed and degraded by the holiest of your fathers; the same in haughtiness, the same in intolerance, which lorded it over kings, assumed the prerogative of Deity, crushed human liberty, and slew the saints of God.

The Priests & Work among Children.

By Mr. WILLIAM QUARRIER.

Roman Catholicism, as a religious system, has been weighed in the balances, and found wanting. France has tried it, and she is now largely ransomed from its power. Italy and Germany are emerging into freedom, and in many other parts of the civilised world that hateful tyranny can never again be re-established. In our work among the children the Romanists have crossed our path again and again during the last twenty-two years. The priests have done their best and their worst to hinder and oppose us. We have often asked them to care for the young of their own flocks; we have sent their children to them, but they have often returned them to us, saying they could do nothing with them; yet they have sought to stop us in doing that which they have refused to do.

Rome has everywhere failed to provide a remedy for the evils of drunkenness, pauperism, and crime. The other day there was a convention of Romanists in Liverpool, when it was stated that 13,600 Roman Catholics had been committed to prison in that city in one year, as compared with 7000 Protestants of all denominations. How can we account for that? I say it is because Rome does not give the people the Bible, the teaching of which alone can control the powers of evil that rule in the natural heart. In our city of Glasgow about 40 per cent. of the paupers belong to the Roman Catholic church, and yet they only number one-sixth or one-seventh of the population. Again, I attribute this to the lack of the Bible and Bible-teaching. As to crime, about 70 per cent. of the thousand children on the streets are the children of Roman Catholics, and there will, of course, be about that proportion of criminals. I can prove that to any priest who questions it.

Some people say that Romanism is increasing in Scotland. I believe it is only the natural increase by birth, and not by conversion. Those who have gone over to Rome among the poor of Glasgow could almost be counted on one's fingers, and they were no credit to either system. On the other hand, it is my privilege almost every day to help those who have been converted from Romanism. The priests, as I say, have tried all they could to hinder our work. I see by their newspaper they have resolved to ask the Home Secretary to close up the Orphan Homes, and send us about our business. But we are not afraid of that. Though the earth remove, we shall not fear. God is our refuge and strength; our very present help in time of trouble. The priests dragged me into the courts in connection with the case of a child whom I refused to give up. The case went against them; but they have never paid me my costs yet. They sought to saddle them on the poor woman whom they put up as a shuttlecock.

A good deal has been said about proselytising; that is the great card of the priests. For my part, I would not go the length of my finger to proselytise any man; but if I find them down in the gutter it is my duty and privilege to help them all I can. The priests object to Board Schools because they are not denominational, yet they seek to get appointed to the School Board. We have three priests on the Glasgow School Board at the present time. If we could get the cumulative vote removed, that matter would regulate itself directly. If the priests want denominational education let them pay for it; but let the Bible be in every school, and in every child's hand, when the nation pays for it. If the Romanists will not give the Bible in the school, the nation should refuse to give them the grant, Let us have national education free, and the Bible in every school, and then we shall see Scotland rise higher and higher, and Romanism as ashamed shall hide its head.

The Duty of the Hour.

By Mr. J. A. CAMPBELL, M.P.

We are assembled to-night for a serious purpose. It is twofold: in the first place, to declare our firm attachment to the Christian principles on which depend, as we believe, the freedom and welfare of our country, and the moral and religious interests of the people; and next, in order to call the attention of our fellow-citizens and fellow-countrymen to the importance of asserting these principles at the present time. We are not here to attack others, or to deny to any the liberty we claim for ourselves. The amplest religious toleration is consistent with our principles. Nay, more, religious toleration can best be secured by these principles. Any want of toleration for the opinions of others would, on our part, be an act of inconsistency. But there is opposed to us a system which is intolerant—which would deny us our liberty, civil and religious, and we are here to raise our protest against it, and to warn our fellow-countrymen of the danger of allowing it to gain a controlling influence in the country. Our opponents are very active. For evidence of that we have only to refer to the papers which had been read at the meetings during the past two days, and to what will be said this evening by the speakers. But another reason for this movement is that we are living at a time when there is something like a prevailing indifference as to religious opinion. There was a time when religious opinions, perhaps, were formed on too severely definite a plan. Now the pendulum has swung in the other direction, and nothing for some people can be too vague or indefinite. This religious indifference makes the progress of Romanism all the easier, and hence comes the need for those who see the danger to raise a voice of warning.

It is no part of our creed that there are no serious social evils to cure, that there are no miseries to relieve, that there is no infidelity to meet, that there is not a world to gain for the Church of Christ. What we say is that our principles are those by which alone the good work can, by God's blessing, be done. We say so because we believe that these principles alone are in harmony with the Divine rule of faith and conduct—the revealed Word of God. We say so, also, because in the history of the world we have found that those peoples have prospered amongst whom the principles of the Reformed Church have been most faithfully held. This result is patent to all. What we ask is that our fellow-countrymen should seriously give their attention to aiding the truth, which must prevail in the end. But every intelligent man is called on to do his part towards bringing truth to prevail soon; yea, even now. Let us not forget that we are as citizens of a Protestant State. Our principle is that no Italian priest should tithe or toll in these dominions. As Christians we are members of various branches of the Reformed Church. We claim to be members of the Church Catholic. Others may be members of the Roman Catholic Church, and others, not members of the Roman Catholic Church, may hold by a good deal that is essential to that Church; but we claim to be members of the Church Catholic—the Church of which we read in the New Testament. If the Conference is to have its due effect upon us, it should send us back to our various branches of the Church more zealous in the cause which united us all, and at the same time more devoted to those duties which have to do with our title: not to be Protestants only, but to be Protestant Christians.

The Sensuous Worship of the Church of Rome.

By Mr. WILLIAM C. MAUGHAN, J.P.

Anyone who has seen those great ceremonies in which the Church of Rome delights must have felt that an appeal to the senses of the worshippers far predominated over anything likely to move their souls. It is the same throughout every department of the Romish system, and this degrading idea is ever present, showing the essentially unworthy tone of the homage professedly offered to God.

In the first place, it is thought necessary to have a great and imposing edifice, adorned with costly marbles, gold and silver shrines, and pictorial representations by famous painters, as though God could be propitiated by the choicest representations of sculpture and art. Then, as if the sensuous feast is not complete, exquisite music must be introduced, and the minor accessories of the jeweller and costumier are enlisted to play their part in the dramatic display. While in St. Peter's at Rome, and other celebrated Continental churches, to all this is added the "pomp, pride, and circumstance" of a great array of soldiers, priests, and officials, while the prostrate worshippers, bewildered by the scene, the crowd, and excitement, resign themselves to the emotions of the hour. Go into any ordinary Roman Catholic chapel or church, and see if the whole aspect of the building is not evidence of the unworthy nature of what is supposed to be offered as homage and praise to the Creator. The tawdry splendour of the altar, with its crucifix and paltry decorations, is sufficient to repel any but those who have handed over their conscience to the officiating priest. While even in the more magnificent edifices which adorn the great cities of Europé, attesting the material wealth of the Romish Church, how are the resources of art brought into play to kindle the devotion of their frequenters!

To take, as an instance, the principal Roman Catholic fane in Europe, St. Peter's at Rome, with all its sacerdotal prestige, and the traditional power of the Papal throne, occupied by the poor mortal who arrogates to himself the title of God's Vicegerent upon earth. For some time, however, the great functions celebrated in St. Peter's on special Sundays in the year have been in abeyance, because the Pope has assumed the attitude of "prisoner" in the Vatican, who is not free to take part in the imposing ceremonials of that system which claims absolute infallibility as well as universal supremacy. But, during a residence in Rome some years ago, having been present on various occasions when High Mass, with all its concomitant musical interludes, was celebrated by the late Pope Pius IX., I would seek to give a description of the same. The church of St. Peter's is an immense building, with a vast area for accommodating the multitudes who assembled to see the spectacle; and under the noble dome of Michael Angelo, unequalled in architectural grandeur, the Pope and his cardinals, the array of officials in varied costumes—many of the latter of mediæval type and richest material—with his noble guard in full uniform, were all gathered round the high altar. The Pope had previously been borne in solemn procession from the Vatican, wearing the triple crown, with his attendant retinue, every incident and item of the processional march having a symbolical meaning. The seven candelabra borne by acolytes typified those of the Seven Churches in the Apocalypse, while numerous officials with sounding titles—thurifers, cross-bearers, Greek and Latin deacons and sub-deacons, bishops, monsignori, patriarchs, prelates, and chamberlains each had his special place, while the two junior cardinals faced each other before the altar to represent the two angels who guarded the holy sepulchre. During the incessant changes, genuflexions, and crossings, which wearied the uninitiated spectators, the Papal choir of choice, trained, singers rendered various pieces of music appropriate to the occasion, while some of the older cardinals furtively took snuff, or indulged in whispered conversation, acts of indecorum which seemed strangely out of place. Then, when the Pope took the host in his hands and elevated it above his head, there occurred what was extremely imposing and dramatic in effect. At the word of command the hundreds of soldiers keeping back the throng of more than sixty thousand persons, also every devout Catholic in the vast building knelt down, while absolute silence prevailed for a minute or two. After this there sounded from the overarching dome that wonderful burst of melody known as the "Silver Trumpets," played by musicians stationed in the lofty gallery, and which has a marvellously thrilling tone, as though the strains were wafted from the skies. Unquestionably, this weirdly, beautiful strain of music did profoundly impress the great audience, but can it be for an instant maintained that this was an act of intelligent and reverent worship?

Then in the evening, as the brief twilight began to shroud the picturesque campaniles of Rome, there was displayed that beautiful illumination of St. Peter's, when its outlines were traced in silver fire by innumerable small lanterns which, at the hour of Ave Maria, suddenly were merged in a splendid full yellow glare, dazzling in effect. As mere gorgeous spectacles of rich dresses, coloured uniforms, resounding music, and glancing fireworks, all this appeal to the senses of her votaries may have served the purpose of the Romish church, but what a vain offering and oblation to the Most High God, who "dwelleth not in temples made with hands," and demands from the believer the sacrifice of a broken and a contrite heart.

And so it was with all the grand ceremonies of this apostate church, various of which I have seen, and I may allude to another imposing parade of Papal splendour, namely, on the festival of Corpus Domini. On this occasion the Hierarchy in Rome was mustered with Pius IX. at its head, the college of cardinals, archbishops, bishops, and priests of every degree, and walked in stately procession through the noble colonnade of Bernini, in front of St. Peter's, while the complete and well-appointed army followed with martial panoply. As the long and gorgeous array defiled under the spacious colonnade, military bands poured forth their music, and the great crowds looking on saluted the host carried by the Pope himself, while the eye was surfeited by glittering colours, and the ear regaled with stirring melody.

But again where could be marked the spirit of true adoration, where was the humble recognition of the glory and majesty of the Lord? for, in the inspired language of Isaiah, it might have been said: "The haughtiness of man shall be made low, and the Lord alone shall be exalted." But the rampant idolatry in the church of Rome was but too painfully witnessed in that monstrous profanity, the well-known Bambino, or child, a little figure gravely alleged to have been carved by a pilgrim out of wood from the Mount of Olives and painted by the evangelist St. Luke. This scandalous exhibition I saw in the famous church of Ara Cœli, near the Capitol, and which occupies the site of the celebrated Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. The church is ascended by one hundred steps from the piazza below, and these were thronged by crowds of Romans, many of them peasants from the Campagna, while inside was a crowd of poor deluded worshippers. The doll, which is held in great esteem for its sanctity, and is carried to sick persons in a special carriage of its own, is richly adorned with jewels. On this occasion it was reverently borne by a dignitary of the Church, attended by priests, and preceded by a military band, discoursing a lively air; and upon reaching the outside of the church, the Bambino was held up in full view of the concourse of people, nearly all of whom knelt down and did reverence to this wooden doll! Well might the late Dean Alford, who had himself witnessed a similar exhibition in the Church of Santa Maria Sopra Minerva, thus write: "That the real character of Romanism is to be sought not in the best sermon one may hear, nor in the simplest and least objectionable rite, but in its lower and more revolting idolatries, not tolerated only for the sake of the commonalty, but practised and sanctioned, as we have seen, by the regularly organised and more learned bodies in the Church."

I might go on to give many instances of how the Romish Church deliberately countenances outrageous impostures in its so-called "miracles," and leniently overlooks the scandals freely alleged against even some of its high officials, lay and clerical; but this is a subject which I need not pursue. It certainly says little for the confidence which this Church has upon simple teaching from God's own Book, and calm reasoning with sinful creatures, that an entrance to the heart is sought to be gained through the senses, and public approach in prayer to the Throne of Grace is made in a dead language. And can anything more painful to the mind of those who would in all penitence and humility offer their prayers and praises to our common Father in heaven and his well-beloved Son than the idolatrous sacrifice of the Mass?

Romish Organisation.

By Rev. D. M. CONNOR, Glasgow.

Organisation is the strength of the Papacy. As a system it is the most elaborate, skilful, perfect adaptation of means to end the world has ever seen. There is nothing comparable with it, in unity of design, in comprehensiveness of sweep, in tenacity of grasp, and in minuteness of detail. One definite, dominant purpose runs throughout the whole complicated mechanism of the Papacy, and directs and controls every movement and motive. That purpose is the most dazzling and ambitious that ever fired the imagination, or engrossed the mind and will of any man or body of men. Its aim is universal dominion both in things secular and in things sacred. It claims supreme authority over the souls as well as the bodies of men. It affects to determine their eternal destinies as well as regulate their temporal affairs. Law and government, morals and religion, time and eternity, lie equally within the sphere of its sovereign jurisdiction.

> Three mitred crowns the proud impostor wears;
> For he in earth, in hell, in heaven will reign;
> And in his hand two golden keys he bears,
> To open heaven and hell, and shut again.

And this grand comprehensive purpose it prosecutes by an organisation which stands unique and alone in solitary, unapproachable perfection, unrivalled by any scheme the genius of man has ever contrived. The best human organisations last only for a time. They soon get disorganised, and need to be re-organised. Their methods and rules of procedure fall into abeyance and desuetude, and require to be resuscitated and reconstructed. But the Papacy possesses an organisation which is permanent, universal, and self-regulating. It is not a dead mechanism, but a living organism which never dies, never fails, never grows obsolete. From age to age it has gone on developing, and adapting itself to the new forms and phases of society and government. It is a model for all organisations. It sums up and concentrates within itself all the excellences of all other systems, ecclesiastical, political, and social; and the result is a combination unequalled for completeness and effectiveness. If only its aims were good and true, its means would be all-powerful.

The principle of organisation is centralisation, the binding of the many into the one, and the diffusion from the one throughout the many. The power, the supreme direction, the vitalising influence, must emanate from only one source, and spread itself through all the ramifications of the organisation. The centre of Romish organisation is the Pope, who claims to be the successor of St. Peter, prince of the Apostles, supreme Pontiff of the Universal Church, and vicar of Jesus Christ. He is the fountain of all authority, in the words of Cardinal Manning, "the supreme judge on earth and director of the consciences of men—of the peasant that tills the field, and the prince that sits on the throne—of the household that lives in the shade of privacy, and the legislature that makes laws for kingdoms." He issues his commands to the sacred college of cardinals who form the staff of this great general, the privy council and cabinet of this universal sovereign. The work of this world-wide empire is assigned to committees or sacred congregations of cardinals, each being charged with the surveillance of one of its numerous departments, such as the suppression of heresy, the censorship of the Press, the propagation of the faith in infidel regions, receiving reports from bishops on the state of their dioceses, and generally supervising the whole work of the Church. These seventy cardinals (at present sixty) have the oversight of the twelve patriarchs and the one hundred and seventy-five primates, metropolitans, and archbishops; and they in turn exercise authority over the seven hundred and twenty-two residential bishops, and over the two hundred and sixty-two archbishops and bishops of titular sees who have the charge of the churches in infidel regions. Each of these bishops again has the oversight of all the churches, chapels, missions and stations within the bounds of his diocese. Each of these churches, &c., is ministered to by one or more priests, whose duty it is to exercise authority over families and individuals.

Besides its bishops and priests, who are distributed all over the world and are in close communication with the Sovereign Pontiff, there are innumerable communities of men and women spread like a network over all the kingdoms of the earth, and charged with special missions of a religious, benevolent, and educational character. They teach in schools and colleges, visit houses soliciting alms for their manifold philanthropic undertakings, and are ever on the outlook for opportunities to advance the Romanist cause. It is not one organisation, but countless organisations, which are working side by side, each helping the other, and all eager to win converts and stimulate the zeal of Romanists. All these varied orders are kept in closest contact with head-quarters, receiving commands and sending reports.

And yet, with all its might and majesty, its unity and perfected and multiplied organisations, Popery is a decadent cause throughout the world. There are places, no doubt, where it is making converts; but the ratio of its increase is not beyond the ratio of the natural increase of populations, and in most cases it is far below. Protestantism, on the other hand, with all its disadvantages, its divisions, and the comparative imperfection of its organisations, is going forth everywhere conquering and increasing. We have statistics to show that, in spite of all her efforts, her rapidly increasing number of priests, of churches, chapels, stations, and missions, of religious communities of men and women, and of colleges and schools, the sceptre is departing from Rome, and its glory is fading. Protestantism has grown rapidly during the present century. Let us compare the two: first, over the whole world; secondly, among the English-speaking populations; and, thirdly, in the United Kingdom.

(1) Over the whole world. At the close of last century Protestantism numbered only 40,000,000 of adherents; now it has reached 150,000,000. It has gained 275 per cent.; it has nearly quadrupled its numbers. Romanism, on the other hand, was three times the number of Protestantism at the end of the last century, 120,000,000; now it has only one-fifth more, 180,000,000. It has added only fifty per cent. If Romanism had increased in the same ratio as Protestantism its numbers now would have been 450,000,000. If both continue to increase during the remaining years of the century, in the same ratio as they have done during these eighty-five years, the numbers will be almost equal. In one century Protestantism will have advanced from one-third of the numbers of Romanism to equality with it.

(2) Among the English-speaking populations of the world. The present calculation presents a total of 101,400,000, of whom 89,900,000 are Protestants, and 11,500,000 Romanists. The proportion of Romanists is only one-ninth, while that of Protestants is eight-ninths. In the population of Great Britain and Ireland, 36,100,000, there are only five million Romanists, or scarcely one-seventh; in the United States, with 56,700,000, there are only 5,200,000, or about one-eleventh; in British America, with 5,200,000, there are only 800,000, or two-thirteenths; and in Asia, Africa, and Oceania, with 3,400,000, there are only 600,000, or three-seventeenths, less than one-sixth. Romanism is being absorbed by Protestantism among all the English-speaking populations of the world.

(3) In the United Kingdom the statistics are cheering beyond all expectation. The population of Great Britain and Ireland in 1801 was 16,160,047, of whom 5,395,456 were in Ireland. The population in 1881 was 35,246,562, of whom 5,151,888 were Romanists, or slightly over one-seventh. The proportion of Protestants in the United Kingdom advanced during these eighty years from two-thirds to six-sevenths, while that of Romanists has declined from one-third to one-seventh. Or roughly in millions, Protestantism at the beginning of the century numbered ten millions, and Romanism five millions, and in 1881 Protestantism had increased from ten to thirty millions—had, in fact, trebled their numbers—while Romanism has remained stationary at five millions, though the population has increased from sixteen to thirty-five millions.

There is one department where there has been progress made by Popery during this century in Great Britain—Romanism has enormously increased its working staff and working centres. The greatest increase dates from the restoration of the Hierarchy in England in 1850, which was followed after a long interval, by the restoration of the Hierarchy in Scotland. But when we consider the statistics in regard to population, our fears are allayed. We find no further cause for alarm, than that the enemy is increasing his forces. The tremendous increase in the working staff and working centres is not owing to the increase of adherents, but to the determination of the Papacy to try issues on the grandest scale with Protestantism in its stronghold.

Protestantism has much to learn from Popery on the subject of organisation and unity. We do not speak of the Protestant Church, but of Protestant Churches. They are split up into sects and denominations, standing apart and alone. Their greatest comprehension is national, but the Papacy is one grand organisation, uniting in its wide embrace the Churches throughout the whole world. It is fused into one whole, animated by one purpose, and dependent on one common centre. It possesses a solidarity which is unbroken by differences of language, or race, or clime. It adapts itself to all classes. It utilises all talents. It finds work for all its members, and is most inventive in plans for gathering those outside into its fold, and for keeping fast hold of those within. There is no waste of energy through disunion. Everywhere it is permeated by one idea, and works for one purpose. Its aggressive power is sustained from age to age by its organic unity.

This is the grand lesson we ought to have deeply and indelibly engraven on our hearts by the contemplation of the organisation of the Church of Rome. Let us close our divided ranks. Let us unite in one grand sacramental host. Let us organise into bands all working for one common end, the glory of God in the conversion of the world to the Saviour.

BIBLE STUDIES.—43.

"The fruit of the Spirit is longsuffering."

Longsuffering is a very marked feature in the character of God. "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth" (Exod. xxxiv. 6; Num. xiv. 18, 19). "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Pet. iii. 9). "The richness of his goodness and forbearance and longsuffering" (Rom. ii. 4).

The Spirit's work is to produce in us conformity to the image of God. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (of the Lord the Spirit: margin), (2 Cor. iii. 18). "Be ye therefore followers (imitators) of God, as dear children" (Eph. v. 1).

This fruit of the Spirit is to be shown by us (1) as children of God. "Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love" (Eph. iv. 1, 2). "Strengthened with all might...unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness" (Col. i. 11). "Put on, therefore, as the elect of God...longsuffering" (Col. iii. 12). "Charity suffereth long, and is kind" (1 Cor. xiii. 4).

(2) As servants of God. "Take, my brethren, the prophets...for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience" (James v. 10). "In all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God...by pureness, by knowledge, by longsuffering" (2 Cor. vi. 4, 6). I charge thee... preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering and doctrine" (2 Tim. iv. 1, 2). Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James v. 7, 8).

"THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT IS GENTLENESS.'

(1) In thought. "Charity thinketh no evil" (1 Cor. xiii. 5). "Judge not, that ye be not judged" (Matt. vii. 1). "Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way" (Rom. xiv. 13).

(2) In speech. "Let your speech be alway with grace" (Col. iv. 6). "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another" (Eph. iv. 31, 32). "The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men" (2 Tim. ii. 24). Ananias is an example of this gentleness, in his manner to Saul, hitherto only known as persecutor of the Christians. "Putting his hands on him, he said, Brother Saul, the Lord...hath sent me" (Acts ix. 17).

(3) In act. "Approving ourselves as the ministers of God...by kindness" (2 Cor. vi. 4, 6). "Put on ..kindness" (Col. iii. 12). "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head" (Rom. xii. 20). "We were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children" (1 Thess. ii. 7).

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—That an evangelist may offer to go to Cape Town, to work in connection with the Soldiers' Home. Mr. Hannington, who went out for a few months, will be leaving in March. He has had remarkable blessing on his work; the fruit of Mr. Varley's mission, and also the fruit of years of patient labour on the part of others, and of increasing prayer. Praise for blessing on a mission at Tunbridge, conducted by Mr. John Elliott.

THE BIBLE PORTFOLIO,*

Forty years ago, Sir Edward Denny, with his "Stream of Time," led the way in presenting the course of the ages in pictorial form. He has had many followers, but we know of no one production so comprehensive as the series of charts before us, with their illustrative companion volume. The first is a pictorial index to Bible history and prophecy, containing seven periods—from the Creation to the New Jerusalem. The second is a threefold aspect of God's dealings with man in law, grace, and glory. The third contains a number of inscriptions taken from the rocks of Sinai, as translated by Rev. Charles Forster. The fourth is a coloured copy of Professor Gaussen's fivefold diagram of the times of the Gentiles, including the chronological tables of Ptolemy and Las Casas. The fifth represents the seven parables of Matt. xiii. and the seven epistles of Rev. ii., iii., as corresponding with each other, and with seven historic ecclesiastical periods, from Pentecost to the first resurrection. The sixth, the Book of Revelation, as divided into three periods—past, present, future. The seventh is the year of Messianic Cycles, reproduced and enlarged from Mr. Grattan Guinness's "Approaching End of the Age."

The first is a useful and instructive bird's-eye view of the world's history: the only thing we do not understand being that "Empire and Papacy" are not given in the circle representing the present time, but in that after "the rapture of the saints." The second is of great value, true throughout, contrasting with the Aaronic priesthood, that of Christ, its antitype after the order of Melchizedec. The third must be taken cautiously, as other travellers, like the late Professor Palmer, dispute Mr. Forster's translations. They are, however, of great interest, and not improbable. The fourth, by Prof. Gaussen, will repay the closest study. We protest, however, against vulgarising in coloured pictures the visions of Daniel and John, by which the dignified word-pictures of the prophets are degraded beneath the level of a child's toy-book. Virgil's word-picture—"Monstrum, horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum"—is sublime, but a painting of the monster would be disgusting. We are at a loss to know what is meant by the statement in the Table of Contents that the three columns containing the visions of Nebuchadnezzar, Daniel, and John, "show a period yet entirely future." Surely this cannot be intended. The fifth is a view set forth at length by Mr. William Lincoln, in his "Javelin of Phinehas." It may seem fanciful, but the more it is considered the more luminous it becomes. Of the sixth, Mr. Hucklesby, its author, says that the Revelation "is divided by the Spirit of God into three parts, (1) 'The things which John had seen,' (2) 'the things which are,' (3) 'the things which shall be hereafter.'" This is by no means certain, and if it were, it would not follow that chapters iv. to the end have no present fulfilment, but are all yet in the future. The seventh is based upon a different view of the Apocalypse, and regards it as descriptive of the period now near its end. We do not deny a fulfilment in crisis, but if we are to have only one, let it be the one that concerns us most—that is, historical rather than speculative. We wish Miss Ranyard had drawn out at greater length her remarks on "Year-day and literal day interpretations combined."

We cordially commend these charts; but let them be used with discrimination. It is well to know what others think, but not to adopt their interpretation without testing it by diligent and prayerful comparison of Old and New Testament Scripture. Only those who "eat up" the little book—only those who feed upon the Book of God—are endowed with power as Christ's witnesses.

THOUGHTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

ONCE more the billows breasted, once more a voyage o'er;
How near may be the haven, how close may be the shore!
My soul, consult the reckoning, and look upon the chart,
And ere the Old Year dieth, take counsel with thy heart.

'Tis sad, the looking backward; and yet 'tis glorious too;
How skilful was our Pilot—what straits He brought us through;
A peaceful voyage had it been, though storms might seem to 'whelm,
If only we had trusted Him who never left the helm!

If only we had trusted Him! sole guerdon that He sought;
Nor questioned of the course He took, when waves tempestuous wrought;
If only we had trusted Him, upon the ocean lone,
One-half the sorrow of the way we never need have known.

As if He could forsake the souls for whom his blood was shed!
As if He could forget their cry in hours of pain and dread!
He sends us on a lonely path—He suffers angry skies,
And listens then in hope to hear one trusting word arise.

For trust is love, and love is trust, and when the heart is won,
The need for many a bitter grief, for many a stroke, is done—
Oh, hast thou learned thus much, my soul, since this Old Year was born?
Then hang thy brightest colours forth to greet the New Year's morn!

The flag of Hope! now cast it out to flutter from the mast!
Let Faith her pennon fair unfold, we'll wave it to the last!
Without a fear for sea or sky, we'll trust the Pilot's hand,
For sure the course, and safe the bark, that yields to Christ's command.

Then forth once more with courage fresh, as chime the New Year bells,
He may have come ere once again that midnight echo swells;
Or we may rest, our voyage o'er, beside the crystal sea,
Beyond the tossing waves of time—for aye with Him to be!

CHRISTIAN WORK IN BUSINESS HOUSES.

ST. PAUL'S YOUNG MEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

It is very pleasing to find in connection with the great field of Missionary effort that the special feature of Christian work in business houses is not the least prominent. The above-named Society, in connection with the well-known firm of Messrs. Hitchcock, Williams & Co., St. Paul's Churchyard, has now been in existence for forty-three years, and during that time it has quietly maintained a Christian influence among those connected with the establishment; at the same time extending its efforts in a practical form by assisting several of the well-known Missionary Societies.

That this Society may be better understood by our readers we give a brief sketch of its operations. It is managed by a committee of young men employed in the firm, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams. The objects of the society are (1) to organise and sustain efforts for the spiritual welfare of the employés; and (2) to collect funds to assist missionary work. A service is held every week-day morning at 7.40, conducted each alternate week by one of the chaplains of the establishment. In addition to this, devotional meetings are held on Sundays (morning and evening), and other services are arranged from time to time, as opportunity serves; also on Monday evenings, during the winter months, when they are frequently addressed by some evangelical ministers and laymen.

One interesting feature of the above is the annual missionary meeting, the forty-fourth of which was held on Friday evening, December 17, the President (Mr. George Williams) occupying the chair. The report was of an encouraging character, and the statement of the Treasurer (Mr. F. G. Williams) showed contributions to the amount of £135 17s. 6d., which will be distributed among the following societies:—The Church of England, Baptist, Wesleyan, Irish Church, China Inland, South American, London City, Young Men's (in connection with the Y.M.C.A., London), and the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews.

The Chairman referred to the great heathen world, with its 1,000 millions still without the Gospel, and remarked how necessary it is that as many native preachers as possible should be raised to help in the great work.

Rev. F. D. Waldock (Baptist missionary from Ceylon) gave some striking contrasts between the Buddhist religion and that of the Great God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. He had just conversed with Mr. Durbin, one of the former members of the establishment, who, having passed through Mr. Spurgeon's College, is leaving to take charge of a church in Ceylon. He spoke warmly of the benefits received during his five years' stay in St. Paul's Churchyard.

Rev. J. Johnston (a native pastor from Lagos, West Africa) testified of the happy recollections he had of being at a similar meeting of this Society some thirteen years ago, and had never ceased to speak of it and cherish it in his heart, as he then saw that Christian and business life were not incompatible. In his stirring address he spoke of the enduring capacity of his race, what privations and cruelties they had suffered from the abominable slave trade, yet the more they were crushed and oppressed the more they grew in number. He looked with the greatest concern upon the commercial traffic of European countries with Africa and the scarcity of Christian merchants. What is wanted in dealing with Africa is the introduction of Christian principles in commerce. The gin and rum traffic now forced upon them by Europe is, he said, most appalling; while his race had such enduring capacity, in reference to what has before been mentioned, they have no power to resist this evil, and he feared it would soon issue in their extermination. He appealed to Christians to help by prayer, pen, and personal effort in this great battle, and trusted that a Wilberforce or Buxton might again be raised to protest with a loud voice against this fearful imposition. He also gave some instances of the glorious achievements of the Gospel in Africa during the past eighty years, and showed how successfully it is carried on by the natives themselves.

Mr. G. F. Easton (of the China Inland Mission) followed, and said we need to keep pace with the Almighty. God was opening doors, it was for us to grasp the opportunities.

Rev. Mr. Allen (of Gipsy Hill) gave the concluding address on Christian enthusiasm; he remarked how men were willing to hear of enthusiasm in everything but the Lord's work, and appealed to Christians to be on fire for the Gospel.

While the above work is taking place in one part of this establishment, the manufacturing portion is not overlooked by the firm, those employed in the various factories being regularly visited by the missionary (Mr. Hazeldine), whose services are deeply appreciated, Mr. George Williams himself meeting them once a year for a general Gospel meeting, when a book is given to each. We should like to see more business houses doing a similar good work.

An opal of many tints is lying on my table. It filled me with pleasure when first I found it, and it has been a daily delight ever since. Hold it in whatever position I may, it always presents a fresh aspect of beauty. Looking down into its ruby and emerald fires, I discover depths and avenues of light unseen before. Christ is my perfect opal. His beauty enraptured my soul when first I found Him, and He has been a continuous and increasing revelation of grace and glory until now. Viewing Him in the varied aspects of his titles, words, and works, whether through tears of sorrow or of gladness, I always see deeper into the fathomless fire of eternal love and loveliness. What will my vision be when my eye is clear and my soul is pure?—Rev. W. J. Mathams.

EMIGRATION OF POOR CHILDREN.

In a letter to Mr. Tallack, the Secretary of the Howard Association, London, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., remarks as follows upon this subject:—

You say there are about 80,000 children already kept by the State who are truly wards of the State, and whom it ought to provide for without regard to their degraded relatives, who often drag them back into the corruption of the slums as soon as they are placed out in our great towns, after costing the ratepayers £100 per head, or more, for their education. Were the State to allow them to be emigrated, under suitable arrangements, so as not to worry and annoy the benevolent people who would undertake it, and were the State to grant a reasonable sum for their outfit and emigration, on condition of being relieved of them hereafter, voluntary agencies would soon start up to do the work.

What is wanted is: (1) That the State encourage Guardians so to dispose of their children; (2) that it should authorise a grant of, say £16 per child, for emigration purposes, and for six months' preliminary training before sending them out, which is indispensable if the scheme is to succeed.

The Canadians will not take pauper and destitute children without some intermediate cleansing process, such as living in a Christian Home, where a short stay has a marvellous effect upon the children; and the success of our experiment entirely depends upon this preliminary training; without it, the plan would not work. The children must turn out well in Canada to encourage the farmers to apply for more.

The Government should send out inspectors and inspectresses to Canada from time to time to make inquiries; not in a worrying inquisitorial spirit; but in a kindly reasonable manner, just to satisfy the State that no imposition is practised. But it must be remembered that the Canadian farmers will not submit to the arbitrary intrusion of strangers into their houses in the same way as poor labourers would do here. They would justly resent it, as they take the children without payment; and the tie between them usually becomes one of kindness and honour; the thing would have to be done with delicacy, or it would be wrecked.

The children must go young, before they are hardened in vice; girls should go from six to twelve, and boys from ten to fourteen; if the boys are well behaved and of good principles they may go up to the age of sixteen; but children settle down best in a quiet country home in Canada when they go young.

If we could relieve this country of these 80,000 children, who are replaced every four or five years, we should do more to lessen the terrible pressure for employment than by any other means that I can think of.

Notes and Comments.

OUR first issue for 1887 will contain portrait and sketch of the late Rev. Francis Tucker, of Camden Town.

The cartoon in Punch of last week is entitled "The 'Spirit' of Christmas," and represents a room in which is a carpenter out of work, with his famished wife and children round him. Charity (the Spirit of Christmas), as a female figure, is entering with a basket of provisions, but is stopped by Bumble, who says, "I do assure you, Miss, the distress hain't noways exceptional!" To which Charity replies, "No! Then we must make it so!"

Mr. A. H. Baynes, Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, announces a meeting for special prayer on behalf of Foreign Missions on the morning of New Year's Day, 1887, at eleven o'clock, in the library of the Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn. He says:—

> Not a few of the friends of the Society both in London and the country are very deeply impressed with the necessity of waiting upon the Lord for his guidance and blessing at the present time, specially in view of the urgent and pressing need for a large increase in the staff of labourers; and they feel there can be no more fitting occasion for such united petition than the commencement of a new year. We hope to have the presence and sympathy of representatives from other missionary and kindred institutions.

In connection with this subject we would again direct attention to the various meetings arranged to be held in London during the week of United and Universal Prayer; particulars will be found on p. vii. The topics set down for prayer and meditation cover much ground, and embrace almost every conceivable subject bearing on the welfare of the Christian Church and its relations to the world at large. Programmes of the subjects can be had of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

As an instance of a lawful method of directing attention to the Gospel, we have observed lately the announcement of a series of sermons on "pointed questions from the Word of God," to be preached in one of our large manufacturing towns, and there are few people who would be able to put aside, without some serious thought, the list of queries in the words of Scripture: "Where art thou?" "Wilt thou be made whole?" "Are the consolations of God small with thee?" "Will a man rob God?" "Art thou in health?" "Will ye also be his disciples?" "What meanest thou, O sleeper?" "What is life?" "Why will ye die?" "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" "Where are the nine?" "Will ye also go away?" "Lovest thou Me?" "Is thine heart right?" "What wilt thou do in the swellings of Jordan?" "Who is on the Lord's side?" To these might be added many more.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, writing upon work in India, complains that most missionary organisations in that country place education before the Gospel. Money is expended in schools, colleges, &c., but a man who devotes himself exclusively to evangelistic work is regarded as peculiar and eccentric. He therefore suggests that, without interfering with existing missionary organisation, churches, districts, families, and individuals might send out evangelists to different parts of India, where the Gospel has been seldom, if ever, preached. Such evangelists should go two and two, and be able to "endure hardness;" £100 a year would support each, i.e., £60 for living and £40 for travelling, which is a very different amount from that required by those who reside at stations, and are obliged to conform to European conventionalities. Mr. Gregson urges the expected coming of the Lord as a sufficient reason why such special work should be undertaken, and calls upon wealthy Christians to have their own individual representative in the mission field.

A few weeks since we gave a portrait and sketch of the late valued and lamented Rev. W. Fleming Stevenson. Probably many of our readers are acquainted with his interesting and useful book, "Praying and Working," which contains records of the life and work of John Falk, Immanuel Wichern, Theodore Fliedner, John Evangelist Gossner, and Louis Harms—all Christian philanthropists of the highest type, whose work was the outcome of their prayer. We are glad to state that Messrs. Eason & Son of Dublin have re-issued this book in cloth at the almost nominal price of a shilling (1s. 6d. gilt lettered). We trust it will be largely bought and given. It is published in London by Messrs. Bagster & Sons. A biographical sketch of the author enhances the value of a volume which was greatly blessed during the author's lifetime, and we are sure will continue to be.

Jules Verne's idea of a submarine vessel is being realised. Last Monday a party of nine, including Mr. W. H. White, of the Admiralty, and a representative of The Pall Mall Gazette, went to the bottom of Tilbury Dock in the Nautilus, a cigar-shaped air-and-water-tight submarine boat, which had on a previous trial trip sunk and floated, and generally showed its capacities in swimming under water, beneath the critical eye of Admiralty authorities. Nor is this the only vessel of the kind. A steel steam-launch, capable of being "dived" and steered under water, and with a speed of eight or ten knots, has made a successful trial trip in New York harbour. A torpedo boat of this advanced and novel type may revolutionise all our former ideas of naval warfare. With a grim irony this new instrument is called the "Peacemaker," from the idea that in presence of such a danger sailors will not fight. But we may be sure it will have no such result. Slowly but surely the nations are drifting into the coming struggle. The true Peacemaker is on the throne of God; but peace can only come by righteousness, and "in righteousness He doth judge and make war."

How little Bunyan thought what would be the future of his marvellous Pilgrim! The Religious Tract Society have recently received copies of The Pilgrim's Progress in Japanese, with illustrations by a native artist. These drawings are stated to be of remarkable power, and deeply interesting, as showing how fully the spirit of the various characters in the great dreamer's allegory has been caught by an Eastern genius. We are sure the same blessing will follow the introduction of the book into Japan, as has attended its translation into the eighty languages in which it has already been printed. The next translation will, we believe, be into the tongue of a people on the West Coast of Africa.

It is reported from New Zealand that on the occasion of the Conferment of Degrees at the Dunedin University, the Colonial Premier, who is stated to be a freethinker, attended to deliver an address, but the students would not listen to him, and left the Lyceum in a body. If some of our freethinkers nearer home were treated in the same fashion, we should perhaps have fewer foolish utterances inflicted upon the public.

Since the trial of Keatinge in Dublin, a somewhat warm discussion has been going on in some of the Irish papers with regard to re-ordination, some surprise having been created during the trial that a Roman Catholic priest would not be required to undergo re-ordination if he conformed to the Episcopal Church of Ireland, whereas "Puritan ministers," to use the term applied by one of our Irish contemporaries, would. It does seem somewhat remarkable that a Spurgeon or a Fleming Stevenson would require to be re-ordained, and that a Roman priest would not; but in defending the position the organ of the Episcopal Church of Ireland says:—

> To re-ordain bishops or priests would be to follow in the steps of the Arians and of the modern Church of Rome, which re-ordains our clergy who may conform to her communion. The Church of England (and Ireland) has always recognised the validity of the orders of foreign Roman Catholic priests, and admits them with an Episcopal licence to celebrate Divine service within her communion. On the other hand, she has never accepted the office of an unepiscopally ordained ministry. To break through this rule would be the downfall of episcopacy.

The italics are ours, and we emphasise the passage because it seems to us that unless the sentence has been thoughtlessly penned, the admission is one for which members of Episcopal communions will not be grateful to the writer.

A recent trial in Ireland brought to light the unpleasant fact that an association with the name of "The Priests' Protection Society," out of an income of over £300, expended only about £60 upon the object for which the contributors had given their subscriptions. The Roman Catholic journals have commented very sarcastically upon the statement, and we are not disposed to blame them for so doing, but the subject is one that will bear to be lifted into a higher region than that of such discussion. It concerns all those who give of their substance to either spiritual or philanthropic objects; and whose duty it is to see that their gifts are not frittered away in "expenses."

In Italy, the feeling against the monastic and conventual institutions appears to be deepening day by day. The Minister of Justice and Worship is stated to be rapidly preparing a measure for the re-organisation of ecclesiastical affairs, a Bill which the Romish organs outside Italy do not hesitate to denounce as one for "the robbery of church property." It is reported, too, that a number of nuns have been ordered to quit Modena and Faenza, and that four orders of monks have been directed to leave Verona. There is something instructive in the fact that such a feeling should be developing into intensity in a land which for so long has been, willingly or unwillingly, the head-quarters of the Romish apostasy.

VIEW OF MARY'S BIRTHPLACE.

Nineteen Beautiful Years.

The Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.

BY

Frances E. Willard.

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER; and a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER.

From the Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is the sisterly tribute which Frances, in tears and loneliness, brings to lay on Mary's grave—a tribute as full of fragrance and touching beauty as the life whose memory it seeks to perpetuate was full of sweetness and innocence.

"It is more than a tribute: it is the fulfilment of a solemn commission breathed from the lips of the dying: 'Tell everybody to be good!'

"In this way the one whom she most loved—if a sister's can exceed a mother's love—the one to whom she was most dear, seeks to discharge the dying trust. How faithfully, how transcendently she has performed this duty, you have only to read to ascertain."

From the Preface by JOHN G. WHITTIER.

"The impression made upon me by the first perusal of this little book has not been weakened by the lapse of time. It seems to me now, as it did then, a very sweet and tender record of the exceptionally beautiful life of a young woman whose rare natural gifts and graces were sanctified by a deep—but cheerful and healthful—religious experience; free from cant, affectation, or bigotry.

"The story is told by her sister, FRANCES E. WILLARD, so widely known and honoured for her work of Christian philanthropy. It is a charming piece of biography."

From the PREFACE.

This little volume may, I hope, awaken in some minds thoughts of a devotional character. Some of the ideas contained in it came to me in a chamber of sickness, which was at one time expected to be my chamber of death. The thoughts were pleasant and soothing to myself. May they, by God's blessing, be so also to some of my fellow-pilgrims.

THE PAPACY:

Its Position, Policy, and Prospects.

BY
REV. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.,

Author of "History of Protestantism;" "The Papacy; Its History, Dogmas, Genius, and Prospects;" "Egypt and its Future, &c."

Reprinted from "The Christian" of September 30. Revised and extended. Printed in LARGE TYPE.

"The most ominous part of this business is the changes which have been effected in our Statute Book. The whole legislation of the past five hundred years has been diligently searched; and not an Act or Statute which could offer the smallest hindrance to the advance of Popery to place and power in the State, but has been weeded out and swept away, or greatly modified. Upwards of forty Statutes of this character have been repealed. All the securities embodied in the Emancipation Act of 1829, with two exceptions (the Irish Viceroyalty, and the English Woolsack), have been abolished. All the securities in the Revolution Settlement, with one exception, have been swept away. All offices under the Crown, with the two exceptions just mentioned, are now open to Romanists. The oath of the Royal Supremacy has been swept away. The Act of Settlement alone is left, the one barrier between us and a Popish reign. If that solitary Act were to share the fate of the others, we should speedily see a vassal of the Pope on the throne of Britain."—EXTRACT.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.—Mr. BAMFORD, of LITTLEBOROUGH, MANCHESTER.

For nearly three years the father of this young man corresponded with me. For although the son went to work two years ago, he wisely continued the medicine until he got thoroughly well; in consequence of which (the father tells me) he only stopped from work one half-day.

Before applying to me first, the cough was of the most aggravated kind, the spitting very offensive, the pains in the back, chest, and sides were most severe, strength and flesh decreasing daily.

It was some months after commencing the medicine before there was any special manifest improvement in case, and the patient was simply kept from declining further, yet having faith (a matter essential in complaints of this description) he persevered and recovered.

It was in about six months after the commencement with my medicine, that the father writes:—"My son is now eating much better, his cough is less, he is stronger. We are thankful to the Giver of life that he has followed your advice."

In the next letter he reports him "still improving." "Your medicine has a wonderful effect. I wish we had heard of you sooner."

The winter tried him a little, yet he was able to work. "He has got through well with your valuable medicine and the blessing of the Lord." He was still delicate, yet every letter told of some improvement, and expressed the most grateful thanks.

Sept. 25, 1886. Mr. Bamford, sen., says:—"I want a large bottle of your valuable medicine for my family, as it has been so very useful to my son. It is good to all of us. I shall recommend it wherever I go.—John Bamford, 13, Sale-street, Littleborough."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"Footsteps of Truth" says:—"We can cordially recommend this book, which is chiefly, indeed, God's own words carefully and skilfully grouped together, and given in full, with brief marginal comments. We have not seen a book which collects together so much Scriptural evidence on this important subject."

"The Silver Morn" says:—"This book is quite unique, and certainly the best of its kind yet issued."

SPECIAL MISSION TO WAIFS AND STRAYS.

HELP URGENTLY NEEDED.

There are still thousands of Homeless Children around us, unsheltered in any institution, exposed to terrible hardships, and, what is even worse, horrible temptations. In a few years (if we do not rescue them) they will swell the incapable and depraved residuum, which already presents a problem that baffles everyone.

I propose gathering from the streets and tramps' kitchens in all parts of London, one night in every week this winter, the most woebegone, degraded boys to be discovered in the great City, and after providing them with a good hot supper give them a plain, straight, kind talk, and as far as possible offer every one of them who seems in earnest to lead an honest, respectable life, A CHANCE IN THE WORLD.

The place, day, and hour for these street-boys' suppers will be announced weekly in The Christian, commencing with the issue of January 6, and tickets will be issued, on application, to a few friends to be present on these occasions. I earnestly appeal for IMMEDIATE HELP to carry on this ADDITIONAL EFFORT to seek and to save NOBODY'S BOYS.

Please look through your boys' clothing and see if there are not suits, linen, socks, boots, &c., which can now be spared for clothing these half-naked, shivering street-wanderers. Parcels may be forwarded (carriage paid) to me at address beneath, and should contain a list of contents. A post-card advising despatch should be sent also as a precautionary measure.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED IN 1844.

THE Funds of this Society greatly need replenishing. If liberal aid be not speedily forthcoming, the present number of 125 grants to poor and populous metropolitan and suburban parishes must be still further reduced. The Readers visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, and the erring; and they help generally in the Spiritual work of their respective parishes.

The Committee earnestly appeal for Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Collections, which are greatly needed.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

YEARS.	TEMPERANCE SECTION.		GENERAL SECTION.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

Now that Foreign Missions are receiving so much attention, and their importance is widely recognised, an effort should be made not only to instruct congregations as to what is going on, in the vast fields beyond, but to stir up a warm and lively interest in the work. It is painful to think of the apathy with which too often the subject is treated by the great majority of our churches. Instead of being first and foremost, as it should be in the programme of every active church, it is, as a rule, shelved from year to year, the congregation generally hearing nothing whatever of it except on the occasion of the annual sermon preached by some deputation.

Yet it is not too much to say that there is no subject more calculated to quicken the sympathies of God's people, to intensify faith, and (especially in view of the great sufferings that many converts from heathenism have to endure) to inculcate self-denial. In comparison with the heroism displayed by those who now in dark places of the earth are not counting their lives dear unto them so that they may win Christ, whom they have just learnt to know, multitudes of professing Christians, who all their lives have been under the sound of the Gospel, are indulging in shameful lethargy; and from this the shining example of these infant churches might do much to arouse them. In a recent number of The Presbyterian Messenger the subject is treated of in a timely article by Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, of Swatow, China; he insists that it is incumbent on ministers to bestir themselves in this matter, and make full and frequent reference to missionary subjects.

"Some time ago," says Dr. Pentecost, "I wrote an article entitled 'Almost a Lost Art,' suggested by figures culled from our Year Book. When facts and figures show that the combined labours of more than four thousand ministers have resulted in the conversion of an average of about five souls each, may we not fairly say that the conversion of sculs is almost a lost art? And when we see that in a denomination numbering close on to a half million souls, all professing to have been regenerated and made partakers of the Spirit of Christ, our best showing is that it takes about twenty of us, with the aid and help of our pastors, to effect the conversion of one soul in a year's time, who shall say that we are even measurably fulfilling the commission of Christ to preach the Gospel and make disciples?"

At the last meeting of the Executive of the Church of England Temperance Society, a letter was read from Rev. G. Howard Wright, the superintendent, in which he expressed his earnest wish to surrender his salary for the next twelve or eighteen months. The fact that the generous offer was not only made but accepted, proves the necessity for increased effort in order to sustain the efficiency of its important work, and such an act of devotion can scarcely fail to be a spur to the liberality of others.

Much has been written on the subject of supplying cheap dinners to the poor, and although the halfpenny has for some time been recognised as a remunerative token, when these are supplied on a large scale, to many it will appear little short of marvellous that the farthing may now be regarded as sufficient for the purpose. This is clearly set forth in a pamphlet, entitled "Farthing Dinners," issued by Mr. George Herbert Sargant, Colmore-row, Birmingham. This gentleman has succeeded in producing leguminous soups at three-halfpence a gallon. It has been found that this thinner soup is actually preferred by the half-starving children for whom such help is so necessary, and that it is more suited to their enfeebled digestion than richer soups or food. At a time when distress abounds, such information as is contained in this pamphlet is most suitable. And, indeed, it may be added, if people can be fed so cheaply, none should be allowed to starve.

NOTTINGHAM GENERAL MISSION.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

THE last general mission in this town was held about eleven years ago, and many have long felt that it was time for a similar vigorous assault upon the forces of evil, and in clerical meetings a deep and unanimous feeling existed that a mission was greatly needed to meet the spiritual wants of the town. Extensive preparation was made early in the year. A letter of invitation, issued by the Bishop, was sent to every house in the borough. "Quiet Days" for the clergy and Christian workers were conducted at intervals by Revs. H. Dening, W. Hay Aitken, and G. Body, whilst earnest efforts were made by distributing religious literature (of which the S.P.C.K. provided £200 worth), house-to-house visitation, mission services, prayer and cottage meetings, to create anxious expectation and interest in view of the coming general mission.

This was opened on November 20 by the Bishop. All the parishes of the town took part, thirty-five churches being open for eight days or more for the especial work of the conversion of souls. All kinds of services were held daily, early and late, for rich and poor, men, women, and children, in warehouse and factory, and in the open air.

In some parts every house was visited twice a day, impromptu crèches were instituted to set weary mothers free for the services, singing processions perambulated the parishes, lanterns of illuminated calico proclaimed the mission in darkest corners, and all the powers and ingenuity of printers and advertisers were put to the test. From every parish the same report comes in—congregations crowding the churches, and large numbers remaining to the after-meetings.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature is the hold gained upon large masses of men, a class generally most difficult to reach. At the close of his evening sermon at St. Mary's, Mr. Aitken drove to St. Ann's Church, where, at the invitation of Canon Lewis, the vicar, and his missioners, he gave a second address to large congregations, and helped many inquirers. He also held a mid-day service in St. Mary's, addressing from seven hundred to one thousand men with great power and effect. On four Saturday nights the Mechanics' Hall, seating nearly two thousand, was filled with men, who were addressed on Purity, Unbelief, Gambling, and other subjects especially suitable to men, by the Bishop of Lincoln, Revs. W. H. Aitken, S. E. Pennefather, C. Bodington, and other speakers. Mr. Aitken's address upon, "Who made the World, the Bible, and the Christ?" produced deep impression.

At the last of these gatherings, on December 4, the chair was taken by Rev. J. E. Richardson, the new vicar of St. Mary's, an able speaker and an ardent teetotaller, and Mr. Aitken gave a temperance address. At the invitation of the clergy, Mr. Aitken has continued to preach for a fortnight after the mission in the churches has closed. On Sundays he has visited four of the largest churches in the morning and evening, with very marked results, while in the afternoons Holy Trinity Church has been crowded with 1500 men to hear his words. Large numbers of these men have professed to decide for Christ.

The crowning blessing of the mission has been given during the last fortnight. In spite of the weather, the building has been crowded to its utmost extent, and the power of God has rested upon his servant to a remarkable degree. Many awakened in the churches have been gathered in during these services, and many more outsiders have been brought to the Saviour.

A large number of clergy and carefully selected workers were nightly engaged with anxious ones, and numbers accepted Christ while listening to the meseage so earnestly and faithfully delivered.

This memorable mission closed on Monday, December 20, with Holy Communion and a farewell address by Mr. Aitken, at 7 a.m., in the St. Mary's Church. The large and earnest congregation will never forget his wise and living counsels on the words, "Finally, brethren, farewell." Great efforts are being made to follow up the work carefully and well. Those who have been impressed are visited, special services and classes are formed for them, and in some cases the meetings in factories are to be continued at intervals. Our Nonconforming brethren have done all in their power to aid us in this attempt to rescue souls from the thraldom of sin by closing their places of worship on week nights, and working in the open air, and in other ways. The Y.M.C.A. has also rendered valuable aid. We owe a great debt of gratitude to the Parochial Mission Society, which sent us in all about twenty well-trained and experienced missioners. To God be all the praise.

INCIDENTS.

In a sermon to young men Mr. Aitken spoke in moving terms of the love and prayers of a mother, until the vast audience of men seemed to be thoroughly broken down. A great number remained to the after-meeting, and among them was a rough fellow, who said to Mr. Aitken, "I have just come out of prison, where I have been locked up for a year and ten months for attempting the life of my mother. While I was confined there she died. She was a true Christian, and often prayed for me. What you said quite broke my heart, and I felt I must come down from the gallery and tell you about it."

After Mr. Aitken's address on gambling, a retired jockey, who was a great authority among sporting men, went home and burned all his racing note-books. He said to his wife, "I am determined to live a new life from to-day, and I will begin by destroying these," and he cast them upon the fire.

A Y.W.C.A. CONFERENCE of Secretaries and workers in the Southern and Home counties took place recently at Brighton. Over one hundred ladies were present, representing branches at London, Croydon, Chichester, Dover, Eastbourne, Brighton, Folkestone, and many other places. The subjects for consideration were:—Jesus Christ as the Captain of our Salvation, showing his everlasting love; as the Guide of his Children, showing his unerring wisdom; as the King, showing his sovereign power. In the consideration of these subjects the Lord's presence was manifestly felt. The quiet-hour meetings, conducted by Mrs. Bannister, were especially restful and edifying.

RAILWAY MEN.—In the large dining-room of the Broad-street Goods Station (L. & N. W. Railway) there is now held, every second and fourth Tuesday in the month, a short Gospel service. Whilst the men are having their tea, between 5 and 6.30 p.m., hymns are sung, and short addresses given. Mr. Harris (City Missionary), aided by several friends, amongst them two of the clerks at the station, conducts these services with the sanction of the Company. At the inauguration meeting on November 23, a good tea was given to the men, addresses by Mr. George Williams, Rev. R. Dawson, and others following. On Tuesday last week the workers again met, and the hour and a half's singing of hymns and speaking of the love of God and his call to men everywhere to repent and turn to Him, were evidently well received by the men, who listened with great attention, many joining in the singing. Tracts were given as they passed out to resume work. The work is appreciated by them, and already deep impressions have been made on some.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD:

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

IX.—THE MIDNIGHT WRESTLE.

Genesis XXXII.

On the morning after his interview with Laban, Jacob broke up his camp on the heights of Gilead, and slowly took his journey southwards. He little knew that that day was to be the crisis of his life. "Thou knowest not what a day may bring forth," not of evil only, but of blessing. It may be that this day has been predestined from all eternity to be that of thy transformation from the craft and cunning of years, to a life of subjection to the will of God, and of power over men.

This wondrous scene does not, in my opinion, correspond to that change which we call conversion. That was determined, surely, by the angel vision at Bethel. But it may rather be compared with that further blessing, which sometimes comes to a Christian after some years of religious experience and profession. There is no reason, in the nature of things, why it should be so. There is no reason why, at the moment of conversion, we should not at once step into the realisation and enjoyment of all the possibilities of Christian living. But still, as a matter of fact, it very often happens that some years of wilderness wandering do intervene between the deliverance of the Passover and the passage across the Jordan into the land of promise, and rest, and victory. Many a child of God who has no doubt of acceptance and forgiveness, is conscious of a broken and fitful experience, often foiled and overthrown, wishing to do good but unable to do it, full of self-reproach and bitterness of soul. Then there comes a time when he is almost forced into a new experience. He passes into a climate that brings into glorious fruitage the seed-germs which were lying in his nature undeveloped. He receives an abounding freshet of grace, that lifts him sheer above all the former levels of his existence, and launches him on the flood-tide of blessedness. If you have never known this in happy experience, you can hardly understand what an extraordinary change comes over all things, or how great a contrast severs the new from the old. Such an experience fell to Jacob's lot after that memorable night.

Three events are narrated in this chapter, corresponding to morning, afternoon, and night of that memorable day.

(1) IN THE MORNING, we are told that the angels of God met him. Those words tremble with mystic and indescribable beauty. How did it befall? Did they come in twos and threes? or as he turned some corner in the mountain pass, did he see a long procession of bright harnessed angels, marching four abreast, with golden bands girding about them their lustrous robes, whilst the music of heaven beat time? Would it not remind him of Bethel, that lay across the chasm of five-and-twenty years? Would it not nerve and prepare him for coming danger?

Doubtless these angel-bands are always passing by us, only our eyes are holden so that we do not see them. But whether we see them or not, we may always reckon on their being at hand, especially when some heavy trial is near. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them." This is Mahanaim. Here two hosts are meeting; the mountain is full of horses and chariots of fire around us; more are they that are with us, than all they which are against us.

(2) As the day wore on to AFTERNOON, Jacob's spirit was shaken to the centre by ominous tidings. He had sent messengers, as Arab chiefs would do still, to announce to Esau his return, and to ascertain his mind. They now returned in breathless haste to say that Esau was coming to meet him, with 400 men at his back. Jacob was panic-stricken, and well he might be. His all was at stake—wives and children, herds and cattle, the careful gains of six laborious years. The Mizpah-tower barred the way back; his bridge was, so to speak, burnt behind him. Around him were robber tribes, eager to seize on the rich booty if he showed the least sign of vacillation or fear. But to go on seemed to involve a risk of inevitable ruin. There was just one alternative, which most men will only turn to when all other expedients have failed: he could at least pray, and to this he betook himself. It may have been a long time since he prayed like this.

For years his nobler self had been overgrown by a noxious growth of weeds, and drugged to unconsciousness by the cares of this life, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of many things. The evil conscience cannot pray. Prayer cannot live in the heart with deceit, and craft, and villainy, but passes out unnoticed and unmissed. But now, under the shock of this terrible danger, the olden spirit revived in him, and the hair of consecration began to grow again. Is not this the key to God's dealings with us all? He brings us into sore straits; he shuts us up in a corner; he causes the walls and ceiling and floor of our room to draw together as if to crush us. At such moments there is only one resource left. It is Himself. We must fly to God, to escape from God. We are driven to our knees, with no language but a cry. And though that cry consists mostly of a confession of unworthiness, yet it is enough; the silence is broken, the avenues are cleared of their choking undergrowth, the child has already left the far country and is on his way home. Was not this the experience of the Syrophenician woman? Her utter misery made her seek Christ; she found Him out in a retirement which would have concealed Him from all save one in her dire need; and his apparent denial drove her to climb an altitude of faith and to utter words of desperate boldness, from which she would have shrunk except under the pressure of that terrible agony of soul. The love of God is great enough to cause us pain, if only it can force us to positions from which we had heretofore shrunk, but from which we shall never again recede.

There are many healthy symptoms in that prayer. In some respects it may serve as a mould into which our own spirits may pour themselves, when melted in the fiery furnace of sorrow. He began by quoting God's promise: Thou saidst. He did so twice (9 and 12). Ah! he had got God in his power then. God puts Himself within our reach in his promises, and when we can say to Him, Thou saidst, He cannot say nay, He must do as He has said. If Herod was so particular for his oath's sake, what will not our God be? Be sure, in prayer, to get your feet well on a promise, it will give you purchase enough to force open the gates of heaven, and to take it by force.

He next went to confession: I am not worthy There passed before his mind his deceit to his aged father, his behaviour to Esau, his years of trickery to Laban. All the meanness of his heart and life stood revealed, as a landscape is revealed when the midnight sky is riven by the lightning-flash. Conscience came forth from its retreat in the dungeons of his nature, and climbed the stairs, and stood in the throne-room of his spirit, as Nathan before David, or John the Baptist before Herod, or Paul before Felix the Roman governor, who trembled as he spake of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. And as the sea of memory gave up the dead past to a terrible resurrection, and as it all stood in vivid minuteness before him, was there not plenty to justify his penitent confession, "I am not worthy?" Great soul-anguish will generally wring some such cry from our startled and stricken hearts. If there is one position that better becomes us than another it is that of the publican with downcast eyes; nor can we improve on his prayer, "God be merciful to me, the sinner."

Then he passed on to plead for deliverance: "Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau." It was, of course, quite right to pray thus, but I cannot feel that it was a whole-hearted prayer, for he had hardly finished it when he reverted to the plan on which he had been busy before he turned aside to pray. Jacob's first thought was always a plan. He had a plan for Isaac's blessing, and another for his property, and now another to appease Esau. Of course I have no word to say against planning, when that is evidently God's method of delivering us; but I am desperately afraid lest our planning should take the place of simple waiting on God, till the cloud rises, and moves forward, and shows us our path across the trackless sands. We are all so apt to pray, and then to try and concoct a plan for our own deliverance. Surely the nobler attitude is, after prayer, to stand still for God to develop his plan, leading us in ways that we had never guessed. The blessed life of our Lord was absolutely planless.

There was too much self-hood in Jacob, as there is also in us. This must be broken down, and put in the place of death. The I-life must be crucified before the Christ-life can take its place. The sinews of the old nature must be utterly shrivelled, that the new nature, whose only strength is to cling, may be manifested in power. This was the object of that mysterious conflict, which left so deep an impression on Jacob's life.

(3) IT WAS MIDNIGHT. Jacob had already sent across the Jabbok his property, his children, even the beloved Rachel. It seemed as if, amid the awful pressure of that anxiety, he could not bear the noise of the camp, the prattlings of the children, or even the presence of the only woman he ever really loved. "He caused them to pass over the brook, and sent over that he had. And Jacob was left alone." When the soul enters its Gethsemane, it withdraws a stone's cast from its most trusted friends. Around him was the profound stillness of those most desolate regions. Beside him the murmur of the rapid brook over the stones. Above him the infinite depths of heaven, bejewelled with stars. There, alone, he considered the past, and anticipated the future, and felt the meanness of the aims for which he had sold his soul, and saw the wretched failure of his life; and so suddenly he became aware that a mysterious combatant was at his side, drawing him into a conflict, half literal and half spiritual, which lasted till the break of day.

Was this a literal contest? There is no reason to deny it. We know that the Son of God sometimes anticipated his incarnation by assuming literal physical shapes. "His delights were of old amongst the sons of men." And it would have been as possible for Him to wrestle literally with Jacob, as for Him to offer his hands to the touch of Thomas after his resurrection. The physical must have been largely present, because, when he resumed his journey, Jacob halted upon his thigh; it was a physical fact, physically commemorated by the Israelites to this day, who abstain from eating of that part in animals which corresponds to the sinew that shrank in Jacob's thigh. Men do not become lame in imaginary conflicts. But, in any case, the outward wrestling was only a poor symbol of the spiritual struggle which convulsed the patriarch's soul, and is as real in the experience of earnest men to-day as when the world was young.

Remember that the conflict originated not with Jacob, but with the angel: "There wrestled a man with him." This passage is often quoted as an instance of Jacob's earnestness in prayer. It is nothing of the sort. It is an instance of God's earnestness to take from us all that hinders our truest life, whilst we resist Him with all our might and main. It was not that Jacob wished to obtain aught from God, but it was that He, the angel Jehovah, had a controversy with this double-dealing and crafty child of his, desirous to break up his self-sufficiency for ever, and to give scope for the development of the Israel that lay cramped and coffined within.

There is an illustration of this in the life of Moses. For forty years he lived in the retirement of the desert. At last he set out for Egypt, accompanied by his wife and children. Concerning those children, in deference to their mother's wish, he seems to have neglected a rite, binding, by Divine command, on every son of Abraham; and it came to pass in the way, that the Lord barred his journey, and even threatened him with death, until he had obeyed the injunction he had ignored; then He let him go. So it was with Jacob. There was much in him that needed to be laid aside, much self-sufficiency requiring to be broken down, much dross that had to be burnt out by a consuming fire, and so the Love of God drew near to him on that solemn night, to wrest these things from him at whatever cost.

Has not "this man" that wrestled with Jacob found you out? Have you not felt a holy discontent with yourself? Have you not felt that certain things, long cherished and loved, should be given up, though it should cost you blood? Have you not felt that you should yield your whole being to God, but there has been a rebellious uprising of self-will within you, as if it were impossible for you to make the surrender? Have you not felt in an agony, between the stirrings of God's good Spirit on the one hand, and the preferences of your own choice on the other? Have you not felt as if some mighty power were wrestling with you, against you, and for your good? Surely these convulsive throes, these heaven-born strivings, these mysterious workings, are not of man, or of the will of the flesh, but of God. It is God that worketh in you, and wrestleth with you. Glory be to Him for his tender patience, interest, and love!

At first Jacob held his own. "He saw that he prevailed not against him." The strength that, years before, had rolled the stone from the well for Rachel's sheep was vigorous yet, and he was in no humour to submit. And thus we do all resist the love of God. We carry out our own plans, we follow our own will, we are strong in our own self-sufficiency. "When thou wast young thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest." Each one of us is dowered with that wonderful power of holding our own against God, and He knows, sorrowfully, that He cannot prevail against us, without taking some severe measures which will give us no alternative but to yield.

Then the angel touched the hollow of his thigh. Whatever it is that enables a soul, whom God designs to bless, to stand out against Him, God will touch. It may be the pride of wealth, or of influence, or of affection, but it will not be spared; God will touch it. It may be something as natural as a sinew, but if it robs a man of spiritual blessing, God will touch it. It may be as small a thing as a sinew, but its influence in making a man strong in his resistance of blessing will be enough to condemn it, and God will touch it. And beneath that touch it will shrink and shrivel, and you will limp to the end of life. Remember that the sinew never shrinks save beneath the touch of the angel-hand—the touch of tender love. This is why your schemes have miscarried, and your children have faded in untimely decay, and your life has been haunted by disappointment. God has touched the sinew of your strength, and it has dried up. Oh you, who are still holding out against Him, make haste to yield, lest some worse thing come upon you.

Then Jacob went from resisting to clinging. As the day broke, the Angel would be gone, but he could not, because Jacob clung to him with a death grip. The request to be let go indicates how tenaciously the limping patriarch clung to Him for support. He had abandoned the posture of defence and resistance, and had fastened himself on to the Angel, as a terrified child clasps its arms tightly around its father's neck. That is a glad moment in the history of the human spirit, when it throws both arms around the risen Saviour, and hangs on Him, and will not let Him go. It is the attitude of blessing. It is the posture of power. It is the sublime condition, in which Christ will whisper his own new name, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it. Have you ever come to this? Have you abandoned the art of self-defence for the artlessness of clinging trust? Have you felt able to rejoice in your inability to stand alone, because it has made the Lord Jesus so real? Have you reached the point of self-surrender? If not, ask God to show you what sinew it is that makes you too strong for Him to bless you; ask Him to touch it, so that you shall be able to hold out no more. And then you will discover the threefold blessing which is yours.

(1) The changed name. In olden days names were given not for euphony, or by caprice, but for character. A man's character was in his name. Now, when Jacob came into the attitude of blessing, an attitude which has two parts, viz., absolute abandonment of self and a trust which clings to Christ, then immediately the Angel said, "What is thy name?" And he said, "Jacob. By nature I am a supplanter, a rogue, and a cheat." Never shrink from declaring your true character: "My name is Sinner." "And he said, Thy name shall be no more Jacob, but Israel, a prince with God." The changed name indicated a changed character. Jacob was swallowed up of light. He was clothed upon with the name and nature of a prince. There is only one way to princeliness—it is the thornset path of self-surrender and of faith. Why should you not now yield yourself entirely to God, and give Him your whole being? It is only a reasonable service, and out of it will spring a tenacity of faith, and a power for service, and a royalty of character, enough to make you willing to bear the limp, which proves that your own strength has passed away for ever.

(2) Power. The better rendering of these words would be: As a prince hast thou power with God, and with man thou shalt prevail. We sigh for power—power over ourselves, power for service, power over the principalities of wicked spirits. But before we can receive power with the creature, we must obtain it from the Creator. The man who would have power with men must first have it with God, and we can only get power with God when our own strength has failed, and we limp. "I glory in infirmity, that the power of Christ may rest upon me; for when I am weak, then am I strong." Oh for the withered sinew of our own strength, that we may lay hold on the strength of God!

(3) The beatific vision. "I have seen God face to face." Our moments of vision come at daybreak, but they are ushered in by the agony of dread, the long midnight vigil, the extreme agony of conflict, the shrinking of the sinew. Yet, when they come, they are so glorious that the frame is almost overpowered with the brightness of that light, and the exceeding weight of glory. The price is dear, but the vision is more than worth it all. The sufferings are not worthy to be compared with the glory revealed.

This is life; a long wrestle against the love of God, which longs to make us royal. As the years go on we begin to cling where once we struggled; and, as the morn of heaven breaks, we catch glimpses of the angel-face of love, and hear his whispered name, and as He blesses us we awake, to find ourselves living, and face to face with God; and that will be heaven itself.

MR. S. WALTON AT WALLINGFORD.

THE old town of Wallingford has been visited by a most blessed revival. A week's mission has been held, conducted by Mr. Spencer Walton. Evangelistic services were held each day at 8 p.m., in the Town Hall, which was crowded. Every evening large numbers remained for the after-meeting. The addresses were earnest and powerful, many people were seriously impressed, and many gave themselves to the Lord and confessed Him as their Saviour.

Each afternoon Mr. Walton gave Bible readings in the room of the Y.W.C.A., their object being to help those who love their Saviour to live closer to Him, to lead them to a higher standard of Christian life, and a determination to put Christ first in all things. Great blessing attended the meetings, and many were stirred up to do more for their Master and to desire to live more fully to his glory. Some very remarkable answers to prayer were given, and long-prayed-for children and friends were brought to trust in the Lord. Our hearts are full of praise for such an abundant outpouring of God's Holy Spirit. We believe one result of the mission will be a large increase in the members of the Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A.

A WELCOME HOME was recently given to Mrs. Lucas, at the Memorial Hall, London, when that lady gave an interesting account of her tour in the States, and especially of the Minneapolis Convention.

For the Young.

A MISSIONARY'S LAMENT FOR HIS PONY.

DEAR little Kitty, I see her again,
As she sped on good errand, o'er hillock and plain;
She lightened my labour and solaced my care,
While she willingly aided my burden to bear.

Kind little Kitty, the sound of her feet
Was music to many a child in the street,
For they knew that she carried the things that were best,
To brighten the homes of the sad and distressed.

Good little Kitty! though humble and plain,
The eyes that once saw her desired her again,
For everyone knew that in sunshine or shower
She would do all to aid them that lay in her power.

Poor little Kitty, her labours are o'er,
She will join me in labours of mercy no more;
Her work is all done, but the toil of the past
Makes a garland of love for her memory at last.

"But who was this Kitty?" I think you will say;
Was she sister, or friend, or one dearer than they?
Who shared all your labour, and lightened your [toil,
And from long, painful effort would never recoil.

She was but a pony, dear reader, and yet
Her nineteen years' service I may not forget;
And I know that in matters of duty at least
Some Christians might learn of my poor little beast.

ORPHAN CHILDREN IN BOSNIA.

The following letter from the English governess of the orphan children under Miss Irby's care in Bosnia will describe the daily life in the Orphanage:—

Seragivo, November 18.—I will tell you first about the little ones. There are nine of them under ten years—smaller than English children, younger in their ways, and not so active. They enjoy playing together, and are very merry and happy, making progress in many ways, and learning to be useful. All of them, except little Savka (about six years old), are knitting themselves winter stockings; they can also mend and darn. On Wednesdays you would see them seated round the workroom, each with some garment, sewing at a patch fixed by one of the elder girls. They can all repeat many beautiful texts and Scripture stories, and at morning prayers some of them take their turn in reading a verse of the chapter.

The girls who come next to them (ten to fourteen years of age) are thirteen in number, growing up fast, and many of them much improved. They have each their share of housework to do, are also making progress in their studies, and some of them give good promise for the future. These girls have learned by heart several Psalms and portions of the Gospels, which they repeat on Sunday afternoons.

One of the older girls, Stoja, was married last spring to our Serbian teacher, and it has proved a very happy marriage. She often comes and sits with us here, while her husband is teaching in the school-room. We hear that there are many people in different parts of the country who wish to send their girls to be trained as schoolmistresses in our school. It is cheering to see how much it is appreciated by the people themselves.

I trust friends at home will continue to support us by their prayers and their kindly help, which is much needed. Year by year there are between thirty and forty girls to be fed, clothed, and educated; most of them orphans, with no home; children who will not be able, for some time to come, to earn their own living.

I am sure you will join with me in prayer that God's blessing may rest upon our work, and that these girls, when they leave us, may all become little centres of usefulness amongst their own people, and be the means of bringing the Gospel to them.

THE WARRIORS OF THE SEA. A LIFE-BOAT STORY.

[From "Punch."]

Up goes the Lytham signal! St. Anne's has summoned hands!
Knee-deep in surf the Life-boat's launched abreast of Southport sands!
Half-deafened by the screaming wind, half-blinded by the rain,
Three crews await their Coxswains, and face the hurricane.
The stakes are—death or duty! No man has answered "No!"
Lives must be saved out yonder on the doomed ship Mexico!
Did ever night look blacker? did sea so hiss before?
Did ever women's voices wail more piteous on the shore?
Out from three ports of Lancashire that night went Life-boats three,
To fight a splendid battle, manned by Warriors of the Sea!

Along the sands of Southport brave women held their breath,
For they knew that those who loved them were fighting hard with death.
A cheer went out from Lytham! the tempest tossed it back,
As the gallant lads of Lancashire bent to the waves' attack;
And girls who dwell about St. Anne's, with faces white with fright,
Prayed God would still the tempest that dark December night.
Sons, husbands, lovers, brothers, they'd given up their all,
These noble English women, heart-sick at duty's call;
But not a cheer, or tear, or prayer, from those who bent the knee,
Came out across the waves to nerve those Warriors of the Sea!

Three boats went out from Lancashire: BUT ONE CAME BACK to tell
The story of that hurricane, the tale of ocean's hell!
All safely reached the Mexico, their trysting-place to keep:
For ONE there was the rescue; the others in the deep
Fell in the arms of victory—dropped to their lonely grave,
Their passing bell the tempest, their requiem the wave!

They clang to life like sailors; they fell to death like men:
Where, in our roll of heroes?—when in our story?—when?—
Have Englishmen been braver, or fought more loyally
With death that comes by duty to the Warriors of the Sea?

ONE BOAT CAME BACK TO LYTHAM—its noble duty done:
But at St. Anne's and Southport the prize of Death was won!—
Won by those gallant fellows, who went men's lives to save,
And died there, crowned with glory!—enthroned upon the wave!
Within a rope's throw of the wreck the English sailors fell,
A blessing on their faithful lips, when ocean rang their knell.
Weep not for them, dear women! cease wringing of your hands!
Go out to meet your heroes across the Southport sands!
Grim Death for them is stingless! The Grave has victory!
Cross oars and bear them nobly home!—brave Warriors of the Sea!

When in dark nights of winter, fierce storms of wind and rain
Howl round the cosy homestead, and lash the window-pane;
When over hill and tree-top we hear the tempests roar,
And hurricanes go sweeping on from valley to the shore;
When Nature seems to stand at bay, and silent terror comes,
And those we love on earth the best are gathered in our homes,
Think of the sailors round the coast, who, braving sleet or snow,
Leave sweethearts, wives, and little ones, when duty bids them go!
Think of our sea-girt island—a harbour, where alone
No Englishman to save a life has failed to risk his own!
Then, when the storm howls loudest, pray of your charity,
That God will bless the Life-boat and the Warriors of the Sea!

A CASUAL'S STORY.

Dear Sir,—A few weeks ago a letter from Mr. Gough told the needs of the work at Gray's-yard, and it has been thought that the readers of The Christian would be interested in hearing one of the "strange tales" to which he refers, giving as it does such a striking instance of what the grace of God can do.

Last June, at the close of one of the afternoon services, after the tea and bread had been distributed to the poor outcasts, we noticed a man who had not been at Gray's-yard for some time. Through the help of one of the gentlemen he had been enabled to go to sea, but having been taken ill at Trieste he had been obliged to remain in the hospital there till able to return to England. As he left the room in which the service had been held he was asked if he were a Christian. "No," he replied, "I'm out of the hunt altogether—it's not for me." After a little conversation he went on to say that there was one thing for which he had been living, and had been for three years—if he lived he meant to have it—he didn't care what happened after that—he loved it better than life. "Is it something you can ask God for?" I enquired. With a very bitter sneer he exclaimed, "Me pray! no indeed!" "Well, what is it you want?"

"I can't tell you that." "Is it revenge?" "Well, yes, it is, and I mean to have it, too." "Have you a wife?" "Used to have." "Then the revenge has to do with her?" "Yes, her and another," was the reply.

Then he told something of his sad story. He was born in Texas, and early left an orphan. He went to Australia, having made up his mind to get a home of his own. In thirteen years he had succeeded, and during six years of that time was supporting a girl till she was old enough to marry him. He earned his living as a sail-maker and guide in the bush. They were married, and lived happily together for seven years, when this other man came in during his absence in the bush, and the home was ruined. That was three years ago, and since then he had lived for only one thing—revenge. It quite made one shudder to hear him talk, for he was so hard, and perfectly indifferent. He did not care what became of himself if he only gained the object for which he had followed his enemy from continent to continent.

In the evening he was again at Gray's-yard. During the service his head was buried in his hands, and when we spoke to him afterwards he was quite broken down. He told us he had been a Christian once, but that he had not prayed for three years. It was too late now, for he could never forgive. We urged him to tell his troubles to the Lord, and ask Him to take away all the longings he had for revenge; but he said it was no use, he could not pray. It was very piteous to hear the poor fellow! "Oh, dear doctor," he said, "if you only knew how I loved her; I don't believe anybody ever did love anyone as I loved her." We heard afterwards that he went out and sat in the corner of the yard for a long time, sobbing, and crying "Lord, have mercy upon me."

The following Sunday afternoon he was again at the meeting. I asked him if he had yet lost his burden. He said he had tried to pray, but it was too late. "Are you willing to forgive?" "Yes," he said, "I can forgive, but never forget." "Well, there is nothing in the Bible about forgetting. We are told to love our enemies, and pray for them that despitefully use us, and the Lord will help you to do that too, if you will only return to Him." "Ah, it's too late for me to return, it's no use—I'm out of it altogether. If I were to meet that party, I know I should throw up everything." "But God is able to keep you, and with the temptation, to make a way of escape; and you know you must serve either the Lord or the devil—whom is it to be?" "Well," he said, "I know who I am serving now, but I would like to be forgiven, if it's not too late."

We talked for some time, and again he went away, to return in the evening. When asked if he had yet come back to the Lord, he shook his head, and said, "I don't know, but I am willing for everything now." I told him how willing God was, how He would help him to pray for his enemy, how Christ had done everything for our salvation, and then quoted Isaiah liii. 5, 6: "All we like sheep have gone astray," &c. "He was wounded for our transgressions," &c. Gradually a smile came over his face, and as I repeated the last sentence, "By his stripes we are healed," his face quite lighted up; he saw how his sins had been put away.

A few Sundays ago, after asking how he had been getting on, and whether he was still trusting—I was speaking of how impossible it was for us to stand in our own strength, and how the Lord helps us to resist temptation—he replied, "Yes, I have found that true this week. If it hadn't been for that I wouldn't be here to-night." "What happened? Did you meet your enemy?" "Yes, I passed both of them in Piccadilly last Tuesday." "What did you do? Did you speak to them?" "No," he said, "I didn't. I just turned up Bolton-street. I'm not sure whether they saw me." "Did you feel you could forgive?" "Yes, I could forgive, but I can never forget." "Of course not, that would be impossible; but you can pray for them, and it would be grand if they were both brought to know the Lord." "Yes," he said, "I do pray for them. I think I could almost have spoken to them, but she looked so changed;" and the tears filled his eyes. "Ah!" he said, "it would have been very different if it had happened a few months ago."

All who speak to him now at Gray's-yard, say it does their heart good to listen to his bright testimony. As he said last week, he is "trusting only in the blood." Although living from hand to mouth, he never grumbles, but says he rubs along somehow, and hopes in a few weeks to be able to return to the Colonies.

We could tell many more histories, equally interesting, of those who have been brought up out of a horrible pit and the miry clay; but this one case will prove that the Lord is blessing the work. We hope the friends of Gray's-yard will not forget our great need of help, both for the general work and for the New Year's breakfast, which costs about £80. Our treasurer is Mr. George Hanbury, 20, Portman-square, W.

Yours truly, A. R. H.
70, Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

Paul was an agnostic of the right stamp. Hear him: "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." The agnostics of the present day know everything but Christ, therefore they are agnostics indeed.

Whilst sailing far to the south in the Antarctic regions, we were completely surrounded with icebergs. Walls of ice from 300 to 400 feet high rose up on every side. Every moment the destruction of the ship was threatened. There was no way of escape, though we sought it eagerly. At last the impenetrable barrier was burst asunder, and left us a broad, free passage, through which we sailed into the safety and sunshine of the Pacific. Difficulties may crowd around us, and threaten to destroy, but if we keep our hearts praying, and our eyes watching, the way will open, and with Christ at the helm, we shall sail into that sunny Pacific which gleams and glows with the smile of God.—Rev. W. J. Mathams.

The White Fields of France.

A correspondent, who has for some months been staying at St. Etienne, Loire, sends us particulars of the good work carried on by Dr. Hastings Burroughs, the indefatigable director of the McAll Mission there. He has added a free dispensary to the Mission in the town, and three times a week this is besieged by the poorest and most suffering class of people. In many cases they are utterly ignorant of the way of salvation. Besides preaching the Gospel six evenings in the week in the three salles occupied by the Mission, Dr. Burroughs visits the people in their own homes, and has been chiefly instrumental in establishing an aisle de unit for many destitute workmen who pass through the town.

Our correspondent is now at Lyons, and speaks warmly of the excellent work carried on there, under the direction of Major Colquhoun. There are generally good audiences at the Gospel services held six times in the week, and these are frequently followed by after-meetings for prayer, testimony, and inquiry. There are Sunday-schools, and women's ouvroir, and a most interesting class for young women, conducted by a French lady. Here, as well as at St. Etienne, there is great need for lady workers, and the question is asked, " How is it that in these days of quickened Christian activity, so few are ready to take part in bringing the Gospel to the multitudes so near our own door ? "

Miss Mittendorff's Orphan Home.

The report which contains the account of the Lord's dealings with Miss Mittendorff in her conduct of the Home at Epsom, where upwards of ninety destitute children are safely housed and cared for, is of very deep interest. It can hardly fail, either, in ensuring an answer to the prayer with which she commences her statement—"Oh ! that this report may be blessed to Christians in strengthening their faith, and in stirring them up to be up and doing." She tells plainly and simply how the Lord has provided. Time after time there has been necessity to plead earnestly for help, and on one occasion the workers all united in prayer together for the much-needed silver and gold, and the answer came shortly after in a gift of £100. Though the funds have at times been at the lowest possible ebb, yet there has always been food for the children. They have never lacked a single meal; like the birds of the air, they have waited on God for their daily food, and this has been graciously provided. At the beginning of the year, a long list of articles needed—blankets, &c. —was written out and laid before the Lord day by day, until in March last the long list was " almost prayed off "—boots only were not sent.

Something of this was told by Miss Mittendorff herself at the annual meeting held recently at the Y.W.C.A. rooms, Old Cavendish-street. Several instances were given of help sent at the moment when most wanted. The past year, she added, had been nothing but trial upon trial, yet the Lord had never failed her; looking unto Him, she was able to go on with the work. She also stated that during the year seven girls had gone out to service, all of whom had done well, and seven orphans had also been admitted. Reference was also made to the house at 2, Aberdeen-place, which was recently taken, where a few elder girls ready for service may always be seen.

Mr. Joseph Weatherley, who presided, after saying that he felt these meetings to be times of spiritual refreshment, referred to the help given by young ladies who made garments for the younger children, and then presented Miss Mittendorff with a cheque for £100, collected by his son, mostly from strangers who had been touched by hearing about the work. Mr. J. Denham Smith said what most delighted him was that the great aim of the work was the leading the dear children to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. Mr. George Williams and others also spoke.

Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society.

This Society has signalised the opening of the new Seamen's Institute which has been erected at the corner of Brown-street and the Broomielaw, at a cost of £7,500, by knocking down another public-house, the site of which is occupied by a bright coffee tavern, large recreation room, smoking room, lavatories, and a small hall for the daily half-hour prayer meeting. These are all connected with the Seamen's Chapel in Brown-street, to which men can pass without going into the street. On the first floor are reading-room and library, officers' reading-room, rooms for foreign seamen's meetings, and a temporary night shelter for distressed seamen. There is also a sailors' boarding house on the upper floor, so that the accommodation is altogether most complete.

At the inaugural ceremony, which took place in the chapel, under the presidency of the Lord Provost, Ex-Bailie Dickson, after speaking of the tender interest felt in all that concerned our seamen, said that their behaviour on foreign shores very much affected the estimate formed of this country. Therefore, in seeking to make our seamen true, moral, and Christian men they were really developing a large missionary institution. Mr. R. H. Hunter, hon. sec. and treasurer, in the course of his address, said that the securing of that site was in direct answer to prayer; he began to pray for this four years since. The first donation towards the cost was that of 10s. from a widow, and of this he felt as proud as of the hundreds that had since come in.

The Orphanage, Nazareth.

Dear Sir,—Ninety young women are here being trained and taught for this life, and for the eternal life to come. My own work, however, is not with them, but with a day-school within its walls, where from seventy to eighty girls attend. A room is greatly needed in another part of the town, where there are many without teaching.

A few days ago, the C.M.S. clergymen here, seeing the same necessity for it as we do, called and proposed that I should have a room, and place a teacher there, The week before last my teacher went for a Bible-reading to one of the houses in that distant part of the town, and fifteen women immediately came in, listened most earnestly, and begged her to come again. On the same day last week thirty-five attended, without invitation, and, fearing that my teacher would not go (as there had been no promise to do so), they sent to bring her, and after the meeting, pleaded unanimously for a school for their girls. £10 a year would, I think, provide all that is necessary at present.

In the poor dark villages around us, not a ray of Bible light (except from the Latins) reaches the women and girls. During the last two years I have been able to place a teacher in each of the two nearest to us (Renne and Yaffa), and for this I am thankful, for the Moslems gladly avail themselves of the help. But Keffr Kenna (the ancient Cana), Majedal, and several others call for the same. £12 a year will be enough for each, to begin with. We know not how short our time for work may be in this land of lands.

Communications may be addressed to my sister, Miss M. C. Lee, Lashlahe, Thame, Oxon., who has flowers, olive wood, or other articles from Nazareth to sell for my work; or to Miss Webb, Secretary of Female Education Society, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, London, S.W.

Hariot M. D. Lee.

The Orphanage, Nazareth, Syria.

BROOKLYN Y.M.C.A. has 2500 members, and about a half-million of dollars in property. There are 621 members in classes, not including the students instructed by Dr. E. P. Thwing on "First Aid to Injured." The German Y.M.C.A. have just dedicated a new edifice in the Eastern District. Mr. V. Der Beken, of Paris, has been visiting New York and Brooklyn Associations, to get suggestions for the management of his own.

Loved so Well, and Loved so Long.

"I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee.—Jer. xxxi. 3.
" He hath remembered his covenant."—Ps. cv. 8.

Master ! Thou hast never failed me,
And when Satan's spite assailed me,
Broke my harp, and stilled my song ;
As I fell in fear before Thee,
Sweet thy whisper floated o'er me—
" Loved so well, and loved so long."

Yea, before the ancient mountains
Rose above the depths and fountains,
Or God earth's foundations laid—
He had chosen me for ever :
Will He fail me ? Never, never !
He a Covenant hath made.

In a desert land He sought me ;
In His arms of love He brought me
To his everlasting fold.
Shall I fear His love is waning,
And rebel against His training ?
He is faithfnl, as of old.

His the Arm that changed the current,
Stilled the devastating torrent,
And His mercies—who can tell ?
Who can price my matchless treasure ?
Who His lovingkindness measure
Unto one He loves so well ?

Long, ah, long before I knew Him,
He had drawn the wanderer to Him,
When my steps were far astray.
Can His Covenant be broken ?
Shall I doubt one loving token,
Or distrust my Lord to-day ?

Cold and dead each faint desire,
Yet, when glowed the furnace fire,
He was seen the flames among ;
Scorners mock, and fools may wonder,
Fire nor flood can part asunder,
From the loved one, loved so long.

Sharp the thorns that rise around me,
But the love that sought and found me,
Stills the sigh and wakes the song ;
Can He fail me ? Never, never !
I am His, and His for ever ;
Loved so well, and loved so long.

Anna Shipton.

The Blind Pension Society.

This Society, instead of gathering the blind into institutions, seeks to provide them with a pension, so that they may be enabled to live in their own homes. This, of course, refers especially to those who are overtaken with blindness too late in life to be able then to learn any calling by which they could earn much. The late Mr. Fawcett well said: "In my opinion what the adult blind, above all things, require is, as far as possible, to share the joys of home life." This principle has been acted on throughout the whole existence of the Society.

Since the last report fifty-three pensioners have been elected, but there still remain 200 candidates whose circumstances have been inquired into and their eligibility proved, while other applications are being daily received. Of the 500 pensioners of the Society, over 200 reside in different parts of the country, the remainder being within the metropolitan area. Mr. Thomas Pocock is the hon. sec., and the office is at 235, Southwark Bridge-road, S.E.

MR. GEORGE WILLIAMS succeeds the late Mr. S. Morley in the presidency of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union.

DR. MACKENZIE, of Eilenach, Inverness, died on Saturday week, in his eighty-third year. For many years he was one of the best known and most striking figures in the Highland capital; he filled the office of Provost for six years. He was an ardent friend and advocate of the temperance and every other good cause.

NOW—AND THEN:

"Now, we see through a glass darkly, but then, face to face. Now, I know in part, but then shall I know, even as also I am known."

Lord, as in a glass we see
Gleams of Thee,
And the shadows that arise
Dim our eyes;
But, for aye, in days elysian,
Thou wilt give a truer vision.
When we stand before thy throne,
We shall know, as we are known.

Lord, we only know in part
What Thou art;
Something only we discern,
Something learn.
But, amid the shades of even,
We await the dawn of heaven.
Darkly now we see and trace;
Then, we shall behold thy face.

Mission and other Appeals.

Christian Blind Relief Society.—The Committee will thankfully receive contributions towards the Society's twenty-third annual tea for 500 of the blind and their guides, which will be given on January 25, 1887.—T. Clarke, Hon. Secretary, 59, Burdett-road, Bow.

East London Nursing Society.—This Society sends trained nurses into the homes of the sick poor. Many lives have been saved by its help. Unless assistance is promptly given some of these nurses must be withdrawn.—Hon. Mrs. J. Stuart Wortley, 16, Clarges-street, W.

Boys' Farm Home (Church Farm, East Barnet, Herts).—This Home has for many years provided healthy work, combined with a thoroughly Christian training, for destitute orphans or sons of very poor widows. Colonel W. J. Gillum, the Treasurer, is now in want of funds for the maintenance of the good work.

Y.W.C.A.—Applications are reaching us, asking our assistance in sending poor, consumptive girls and others for a temporary change to mild resorts. Contributions, or subscribers' letters for hospitals, homes of rest, &c., will be very acceptable, and may be sent to Miss Fraser (the Secretary for Convalescent Homes), 4, Inverness-terrace, W.

Children in Bosnia.—Miss Irby writes from Bosnia that she does not see how she can pay for the keeping up of her Orphan Home during next year, and yet the children are still too young to be turned out among a half-civilised, and often cruel people. I shall gratefully receive money or clothes; strong, old clothes are very useful for the orphans.—Miss S. May, care of Mr. W. Dillwyn Sims, Ipswich, Suffolk.

Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel.—The objects are to save the working lads of London from the temptations of the streets and public-houses, and vicious amusements, and to afford them means of recreation with mental and moral improvement. The total cost of the new buildings and freehold land is £15,000; £4,900 is urgently needed, as well as funds to carry on the work.—Henry Hill, Hon. Sec., 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

Chest and Throat Diseases.—The object of Friedenfel's Home (Upper Maze Hill, St. Leonard's-on-Sea) is to supply a Home Hospital for the treatment of cases of diseases of the chest and throat which would be specially benefited by sea air. Although open to the artisan, it is more particularly intended for the poor clerk and tradesman's assistant. A debt of £450 was incurred in furnishing and making necessary alterations for the reception of patients; of this £290 10s. remains unpaid. Help will be thankfully received by C. E. Sherard Coleman, Secretary.

JOY OF HARVEST.—Mrs. Parsons writes from her Orphan Home, Cumberland House, Walthamstow:—Through much mercy my children are kept from sickness, and we have the joy of knowing that many of them have received the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. We had a nice little gathering a few weeks since of young women, now in situations, who were brought up in the Home, all doing well, and most of them decided Christians. This is a sweet reward for toil now, and we look forward to meet all "in the sweet by and by."

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN has issued the first number of a little monthly organ, called The Child's Guardian, which contains some pathetic stories of the sufferings of children who are cursed by cruel parents. The Society has had thirty-two cases under its care in the month, in which seventy wretched little victims were concerned. Of these cases seventeen resulted in prosecutions, which were nearly all successful. Information as to cases of cruelty should be sent to 7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury.

The Book World.

Footsteps of Truth. J. Shaw & Co. The January number of this journal (a double one, price 6d.) contains several articles of special and lasting interest. There is also a carefully prepared prophetic chart, coloured, that is sure to receive much attention.

Oliver Cromwell, and other Poems. By Dawson Burns, D.D. S. W. Partridge & Co. Dr. Burns is not a poet, but he has read history to some purpose, and has the gift of putting the conclusions he reaches into pleasing verse. His picture of the great Protector will serve to correct some popular misconceptions.

Cur Deus Homo? Why did God become Man? By Anselm. Translated, with an introduction, analysis, and notes, by Edward S. Prout, M.A. Religious Tract Society. We cordially welcome this valuable reprint. It is a classic on the Atonement, and cannot be read too often. It is worth its weight in gold. A fresh career of usefulness, we trust, lies before it in this form.

Christ in the Heart, and other Sermons. By Rev. Alexander Maclaren, D.D. 5s. Christian Commonwealth Publishing Company. It is rather late in the day to call attention to Dr. Maclaren's merits as a preacher. They are well known. He is at his best in this volume. Maturity of thought, depth of Christian experience, and beauty of language are to be found in it. The ripest fruits of life and thinking are to be met with in this garden of the Lord.

History of the Irish Presbyterian Church. By Rev. Thomas Hamilton. 2s. T. & T. Clark. This is the latest of the "Handbooks for Bible-classes" series, and we can give it no higher praise than that it is worthy of its predecessors. Those who wish to know the story of the struggles of Christians in Ireland to keep the lamp of truth burning in dense darkness, could not do better than read it as presented in these pages.

History of the Scottish Nation. By Rev. J. A. Wylie, LL.D. Vol. i. Pre-historic, Druidic, Roman, and Early Christian Scotland. Hamilton, Adams & Co. Dr. Wylie will be remembered as the historian of Protestantism. The service he rendered in that capacity entitles him to the respect and gratitude of all the Reformed Churches. He might well rest on his laurels, but he does not. His mind is as active and his pen as busy as ever. He has now turned his attention to his native land, and favours us with an account of its early experiences. Wide reading, laborious research, and graphic writing combine to make the misty ages of the past appear very real. We look forward with interest to the volume which will record the struggles of the Scottish Reformation. In it the venerable author is sure to be seen to advantage.

The Mystery of God. By T. Vincent Tymms. Elliot Stock. This volume, which has been already reviewed in our columns, has reached its second edition, a fact which is fully accounted for by its real merit. It is a substantial gain to the cause of Christian apologetics, and for its argumentative force cannot fail to command the respect of thoughtful readers of every class. The only change of importance in this new issue is the addition of about five pages on the subject of animal suffering, which will be found to contain suggestive reasoning helpful to faith in the Divine goodness and wisdom as associated with the problem of the groans of creation. Some may think that here and there the concessions made to opponents of evangelical truth are too free, but whether or not, the author has rendered essential service by the production of his scholarly, lucid, and readable book.

Emma Ennis. 1s. Elliot Stock. A simple story of humble life, inculcating the lesson of faithfulness in all things, and pointing the truth that the seat of all sin is in the heart.

The Reformatory and Refuge Journal (4d. 32, Charing-cross, S.W.) contains much information on the subject of these correctional homes. The Christmas number is especially good.

Bible Clock. 6d. per packet. Sunday-school Union. This Scripture exercise for young people will be found both interesting and instructive, and helpful in committing texts to memory.

The Lively Poll. By R. M. Ballantyne. 1s. Nisbet & Co. Under this title we are treated to a view of life amongst our fishermen in the North Sea, not only on board one smack, the Lively Poll, but a whole fleet of such vessels. The incidents and adventures peculiar to such a life are told with graphic power, that will secure the interest of all. The book is one of a series, "Ballantyne's Miscellany," in writing which the glory of God and the good of man are kept in view.

Life in a Look. By Maurice S. Baldwin. 4d. Hodder & Stoughton. A clear and able exposition on the necessity and nature of the new birth.

Light and Shade. 2d. This monthly representative of the Latymer-road Mission makes a strong appeal to all who can to aid in putting a little gladness and sunshine into the homes of the poor this Christmas season.

The Protestant Dissenters' Almanac. 6d. Banks & Son. This almanac contains a complete directory of Nonconformist ministers and places of worship. A photograph of the late Mr. Samuel Morley and sketch of his life add to its value.

Relation of Christians to Pre-Christian Morality. By Rev. George Matheson, D.D. 3d. Macniven & Wallace. A valuable treatise, defining true Christianity as distinguished by an absence of selfishness, and consequent love of and care for others.

"The First Advent" is the title of a pamphlet just issued, by Mrs. Goode, of Llandudno, in which is set forth the great truth that the revealed law of God is the only standard we have of right and wrong. This point her husband, Canon Goode, continually set forth in his preaching.

Sunset Glories. Compiled by E. A. L. 1s. Religious Tract Society. The object of this little book is to confirm the faith of God's children in view of death, by telling the story of death-beds full of peace and joy. The selection is good. That death is but the portal of life is clearly shown.

"Much Discouraged." By Miss S. M. Nugent. 1d. Partridge & Co. In this New Year Address the cause of soul-shrinking, of the shortening of spiritual discernment through forgetfulness of God, is well brought out; as well as the remedy, leading to soul expansion and enlargement.

Talks with the People. 1d. 7, Paternoster-square. The republication in pamphlet form of papers, by the late Lord Shaftesbury, which first appeared in Home Words, should be sown broadcast amongst the people. In them there is much weighty counsel on various matters of social import.

Facts to Expel Doubts. By C. F. Dowsett. 1d. Nisbet & Co. The resurrection of Jesus Christ is here shown, by a consideration of the incidental evidence in the Gospels and Epistles, to be proved beyond question, and in this demonstration is an answer to all contradictions—a miracle is proved!

Juvenile Smoking, and a Woman on Tobacco (1d. each), with a variety of tracts, leaflets, and pledge-cards issued by the Anti-Narcotic League, 56, Peter-street, Manchester, contain many strong arguments against the pernicious habit of smoking, indulged in to so great an extent and with so much injury, especially to the young.

Inspired Thoughts. 1s. Society for Distributing Scripture Truth, 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne. This Scripture Roll is a very effective exhibition of the Gospel in the Old Testament. It is printed in clear, bold type, and arranged for a month, and, unlike former issues, ranges over several books instead of confining itself to extracts from the Psalms.

Whitaker's Almanac. 2s. 6d. Warwick-lane. This well-known almanac, in its new issue, has been considerably enlarged, many fresh subjects of public interest having been incorporated. It contains a mass of information on almost every subject of general import, and that in reference to India, the colonies, and foreign countries, gives it a special value to many classes of the community.

The Mother's Companion. 1d. Partridge & Co. This new monthly will by its first number win a place amongst the many which appeal to the hearts of the people, and so do a great work amongst them. The serial story is of a high standard, and inculcates the grand lesson of unselfishness. Other articles, "Keep a Brave Heart," "Elizabeth Fry," by Rev. Chas. Courtenay, and Mrs. Henry Fawcett, "Notes on Health," and hints on dressmaking, &c., will all be helpful and valuable to the mothers of our land.

MISS EMMA PARKER, during the year that is closing, has conducted Gospel services at many places in different parts of the land, her last mission being at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road. In each place she met with many encouraging instances of the saving power of God in connection with the proclamation of the Gospel message. She may be addressed, care of Mr. D. M. Cameron, 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

CHILDREN'S HOME AND ORPHANAGE.—The Christmas festival of this well-known Institution, the principal of which is Dr. Stephenson, was held last week in Exeter Hall. The proceedings took the form of an entertainment by the children's band and choir, and their various efforts were most creditable. During the evening Dr. Stephenson stated that they had now 720 children under training, and that since the work was begun they had helped in various ways no fewer than 2077 children. The Doctor spoke of his recent trip to Canada, and gave an interesting account of his visits to old inmates of the Homes, who are now doing well in the Dominion. The work carried on by Dr. Stephenson and his friends is entirely unsectarian, and few methods of philanthropic enterprise are more deserving of aid than that directed towards the rescue of helpless and homeless little outcasts in this great city from misery and temptation, and training and turning them out well equipped to fight successfully the battle of life.—Echo.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE (marked thus *)

This Society organises and holds Gospel Missions by experienced Evangelists throughout Ireland, and has had very happy results in the awakening and conversion of large numbers in various places. It is not hindered in its work by the present state of Ireland, and the last report (which can be had on application to the Secretary) will show something of what God is doing by it. Its means are dependent on voluntary contributions, and never were so far behind as at this moment: hitherto for many years we have closed each year with a few pounds in hand, now £600 are needed to balance accounts.

ON THE DEEP SEA.

FIVE YEARS AGO a visit paid to the North Sea Trawling Fleets proved, by God's Providence the commencement of a new and happier epoch for the Deep-Sea Fishermen. Until the year 1881 thousands of our countrymen had toiled—not only in all weathers, at all seasons, and in daily perils of their lives, but —in complete isolation from all Christian or moral influences.

TO-DAY seven Mission Smacks cruise in the North Sea, serving as Church, Dispensary, Temperance Hall, and Club.

Two of these vessels were equipped at a cost of £4,550, and presented to the Institution by generous donors. The remaining five were originally private property, and merely lent for missionary purposes, and although a considerable portion of their purchase money has been defrayed during the current year, a sum of £6,000 still remains to be cleared off before they are free from mortgage and registered in the names of Trustees as the unencumbered property of the Mission.

Moreover, SEVEN VESSELS CANNOT MEET THE REQUIREMENTS OF TWELVE FLEETS, and all persons on shore who revere our beloved Queen (which every one DOES) and sympathise with the storm-tossed smacksmen (which every one OUGHT to do) are invited to contribute towards a special fund, to be styled the "Queen Victoria Purchase and Endowment Fund," in order that these Mission Smacks may be sent forth as at once a Memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee and as Heralds of Mercy from the King of kings, ministering healing and comfort to the bodies, and peace and gladness to the hearts, of the fishermen.

Sums received for this object will be paid to a special Deposit Account opened in the names of Trustees at Messrs. Gurney & Co.'s Bank, Great Yarmouth.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

Trustees: The Duke of GRAFTON, K.G.; and others.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JAN. 2.—JOB VIII.

Bildad feels aggrieved by Job's complaints which (seem to) involve the charge of injustice in God (3), and, admitting hypothetically the possibility of the Patriarch's righteousness, he infers the guilt of his children who had perished, and the certainty of his own restoration to happiness (4—7). In order to maintain the general principle that God never abandons the righteous, or gives permanent prosperity to evil-doers, he adduces the authority of ancient and universal tradition, and quotes three similes or proverbial sayings of singular beauty. The discourse winds up with an assurance that, notwithstanding Job's belief that he 'should no more see good' (vii. 7) he would still be happy as well as prosperous, supposing that his confident assertions of integrity and piety are well founded."—Sp. Com.

4.—If thy children have sinned against him.—The difference between Bildad and Eliphaz in their respective reference to Job's children is this: Eliphaz (iv. 11, v. 4) had hinted at the children's deaths having been on account of their parent's guilt rather than their own. Bildad, on the other hand, attributes the punishment to their own sin, and tries to comfort Job with the thought that if he is "pure and upright" it shall yet be well with him. Bildad has only one idea in his mind, and that is God's justice. As to God's dealings with his people, in which other elements appear, such as his sovereignty, his mercy, and his love, he seems in the dark.

MONDAY, JAN. 3.—JOB IX.

Job's first words at once meet Bildad's mistake. I know it is so of a truth, but how should man be just with God?—What had been said was true in the abstract, but if man has no claim upon God on the score of justice, how can the justice of God ever be a ground of hope or comfort to the sinner? Job's question, "How can man be just with God?" (R.V.) is answered by the Gospel, wherein the "righteousness of God is revealed," so that He is "just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus."

3.—If he will contend with Him, he cannot answer Him."—"Job thus admits a relative and inherent sinfulness in himself, but only that which he has in common with his fellow-men, thereby vindicating himself from the charge of special guilt supposed to be brought to light, and demonstrated by his terrible punishment."—S. C.

5.—Which removeth the mountains, &c.—In this grand description of the sovereignty of God in nature, Job vindicates the sovereignty of God in grace, and at the same time owns how inscrutable are his ways.

6.—Which maketh Arcturus, &c.—The Hebrew word here rendered Arcturus is, it is now generally admitted, the name of the constellation which we call the Great Bear, so R.V. The original word for Orion means "fool," alluding probably to the old tradition of "the leader of rebellion against God as suspended in heaven, bound in chains (xxxviii. 31), an object of scorn and warning to the universe."

20.—If I say I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse.—Twice in this and the following verses Job uses of himself, hypothetically, the word "perfect," which God uses twice of him in i. 8, and ii. 3. But whereas God asserts him to be "perfect" in his sight, Job repudiates all claim to perfection in himself.

33.—Neither is there any daysman (umpire, R.V. marg.) betwixt us."—"An aspiration, which was a true though unconscious prophecy."—S. C. But Moses, not Christ, answered to the mediator of whom Job felt the need. He was seeking to justify himself, and Moses was the mediator of the Covenant whose principle was, "Do and live."

TUESDAY, JAN. 4.—JOB X.

1—7.—"An expostulation with God. Job pleads for justice, on the fourfold ground that he is God's creature, that God cannot be subject to human infirmities, that he knows Job's innocence, and that no other deliverer is conceivable. This appeal, though full of bitterness and passion, shows the depth of Job's inner conviction: far from renouncing God, all he desires is that God would manifest his true attributes, and show Himself as He is."—S. C.

7.—Thou knowest that I am not wicked.—The word is the judicial word for guilty. Job merely denies his guilt of any specific transgression such as his friends laid to his charge as the cause why God afflicted him.

14.—If I sin, then Thou markest me.—"The words represent a struggle between the consciousness of sin, which Job never disguises, and the feeling that the sin not being wilful was not sufficient to account for his sufferings."—S. C.

18.—Wherefore hast Thou brought me forth, &c.—"Job thus repeats his first wish, adopting as it were deliberately, after full consideration of all God's dealings, the words which he had once admitted to be the idle wanderings and ravings of a maddened spirit."—Sp. Com.

21.—Before I go whence I shall not return, to the land of darkness, and the shadow of death.—We must remember, in reference to such descriptions of death, that Christ had not yet "brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel." The Old Testament saints "were, through fear of death, all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. ii. 15).

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 5.—JOB XI.

"First discourse of Zophar, the Naamathite. He pursues the same line of argument with the previous speakers, but with less dignity and earnestness than Eliphaz, less vigour and ingenuity than Bildad. 1—4: He expresses indignation at the vehemence, and what seems to him the falsehood and scornful irony, of Job's words. 5, 6: he wishes that God should refute the twofold claim to purity of doctrine and innocence of life, and asserts that Job's punishment would prove to be even less than his crime, were the truth made known. This assertion is the only new point in his discourse. 7—12: he meets Job's objections to the righteousness of God's dealings by asserting their unsearchableness; whatever his visitations may be, they are founded on his insight into man's heart, and are intended to bring about a complete reformation. 15: If his chastisements bring about a change of heart ...then guilt would be pardoned, peace granted, misery quite forgotten, and followed by a bright and secure old age, ending with a peaceful and hopeful rest. Persistence in wickedness, on the other hand, can but issue in darkness and despair."—Sp. Com.

12.—For vain man would be wise, though man be born like a wild ass's colt.—This is variously rendered. Canon Cook says:—"It seems probable that Zophar describes the effect of the Divine visitation, and asserts that by it a vain man acquires a new heart, and learns wisdom; and a character wild, stubborn, and untameable, like the wild ass of the desert (vi. 5, xxxix. 5—8), is born again, so to speak, and humanised;" he therefore renders it, "a vain man is made wise, and the colt of a wild ass is born a man." Hengstenberg calls attention to the anticipation, in this latter clause, of the New Testament doctrine of the new birth.

THURSDAY, JAN. 6.—JOB XII.

The chapter opens with a bitter reproof of the former speakers' arrogance and pitilessness, and with a re-assertion that the good suffer and the wicked prosper. Job then traces all results, whether good or evil, to God, upon whom all things living depend.

5.—He that is ready to slip with his feet, &c.—This is a difficult verse. It is thus rendered by R.V.:—"In the thought of him that is at ease there is contempt for misfortune. It is ready for them whose foot slippeth," and more concisely by Canon Cook: "Contempt for woe is the feeling of one at ease; it awaits them whose feet stumble."

6.—Into whose hand God bringeth abundantly.—This is rendered by Delitzsch: "Who taketh God into his hand," and explained to mean that "This his strength becomes God to him," i.e., he deifies his own power, and puts it in the place of God. So R.V., margin.

9.—The hand of the Lord hath wrought this.—The word "Lord" here is in Hebrew Jehovah, and it is the only place in the discourses of Job and his friends in which the name occurs, though found in the opening part of the book.

16.—The deceived and the deceiver are his.—"Job touches here with a bold hand the very deepest problem of existence. All evils are made to subserve the purposes of God. That they 'work together for food to them that love God' is a truth realised fully by those only who have learned it from Christ."—Sp. Com. "In the supremacy of his rule, and the wisdom of his counsels, God makes evil in every form subservient to his designs."—Delitzsch.

FRIDAY, JAN. 7.—JOB XIII.

3.—I desire to reason with God.—This desire is not contrary to God's mind, as Isaiah i. 18 teaches us: "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." "The desire to plead with God must be attributed to real inward faith. The plagues which had fallen on Job confound him; he cannot reconcile them...with what he believes of God, but they do not drive him from God. Far from 'renouncing' God, he turns away from all other things and comes to Him."—Sp. Com.

15.—Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him.—Canon Cook renders this: "Lo, He may slay me, yet will I wait for Him," and the latter clause is so rendered by R.V. The word for "trust" is generally rendered "wait" or "hope." It combines the ideas of waiting and hoping, and signifies trustful expectancy. In the prospect of death it expresses confident expectation as to what lies beyond.

26.—Thou writest bitter things against me.—"This refers to judicial proceedings in which the accusation was produced, in writing."—Sp. Com. The iniquities of my youth.—"Job's consciousness of integrity does not exclude a true estimate of his own character; like the Psalmist, he remembers the sins of his youth."—Ibid.

27.—Thou puttest my feet also in the stocks.—"He appears to himself to be like a prisoner whose feet are forced into the holes of the block of wood in which the feet of a criminal are fastened, and which he must shuffle about with him when he moves."—Delitzsch.

SATURDAY, JAN. 8.—JOB XIV.

1.—Man that is born of a woman, &c.—The form in which these touching words are most familiar to us—that of the Burial Service—is taken from an old translation, where, however, the last words of ver. 2, "never continueth in one stay," are not justified by the original, which is simply (as in A.V. and R.V.) "continueth not."

4.—Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one.—"The fact of original sin, not without what seems an allusion to its source, is thus distinctly recognised."—Sp. Com. The New Testament echo of these words is, "that which is born of the flesh, is flesh" (John iii. 6).

5.—Seeing his days are determined, &c.—This is the commencement of a sentence which goes on to the end of verse 6.

6.—Turn from him.—Better rendered as in R.V., "Look away from him;" it is the converse of "dost thou open thine eyes upon such a one?" of verse 3.

7.—For there is hope of a tree, &c.—The comparison between the death of the stock of a tree in the ground (8) while its branches revive is very suggestive of resurrection hope, but is expressed so hypothetically, and is thrown out (so to speak) so vaguely and dimly, that Delitzsch considers it to be an expression of Job's thought that "there is no life after death." It is, however, much more in accordance with other passages, and especially xix. 23—27, to regard it as Canon Cook does, as expressing a "longing which bears witness to a spiritual instinct, which could scarcely exist without some corresponding reality." The correspondence between Job's language and New Testament truth is very striking; compare ver. 12, "till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake," with Rev. xx. 11, 12; also ver. 15, "Thou shalt call," with John v. 28, 29.

Dear Friends,

I most earnestly plead for help, the present being a time of great need and difficulty. I am without funds to meet the responsibilities incurred, while cases of the most distressing kind are daily claiming aid and sympathy. I feel confident that, when the extreme need of the helpless children is made known to you, aid will be forthcoming as on former occasions.

Yours, in faith and hope,
MARIE HILTON.

TO MOTHERS!

WOODWARD'S
GRIPE WATER, OR INFANTS' PRESERVATIVE.

From Dr. GORDON STABLES, M.D., R.N.—"I have for many years lifted up my warning voice against the drugging of children, and I hope not ineffectually. 'Woodward's Gripe Water' is the only Safe Medicine for Infants. It contains NO OPIUM, and is therefore recommended by the Profession."

From Rev. W. WALKER JUBB, Independent Minister.—"It has been given to all my children. Its general beneficial results upon their health and vigour have convinced me that it is unequalled. Its administration to the youngest child is perfectly safe."

Bottles 1s. 1½d., from all Chemists.
